An EXPOSITION of the PSALMS of DAVID, the Latter Part.

PSALM LXXIII.

A Pſalm of Aſaph.

IT ſeems by the title that Aſaph was the penman of this pſalm, as it is certain that he was a compoſer of pſalms and hymns; ſee 2 Chron. xxix. 30. though it may be rendered, a pſalm for Aſaph, or unto Aſaph[a]; and might have David for its author, as ſome think, who having penned it, ſent it to Aſaph, to be made uſe of by him in public ſervice; ſee 1 Chron. xvi. 7. and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "a ſong by the hands of Aſaph;" the occaſion of it was a temptation the pſalmiſt fell into through the proſperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the righteous, to think there was nothing in religion, that it was a vain and uſeleſs thing; under which he continued until he went into the houſe of God, and was taught better; when he acknowledged his ſtupidity and folly, and penned this pſalm, to prevent others falling into the ſame ſnare, and to ſet forth the goodneſs of God to his people, with which it begins.

℣. 1. Truly God is good to Iſrael, &c.] To Iſrael, literally underſtood; in chuſing them to be his people above all people on earth; in bringing them into a good land; in favouring them with many external privileges, civil and religious; in giving them his word, ſtatutes, and ordinances, as he did not to other nations: or ſpiritually underſtood, the Iſrael whom God has choſen, redeemed, and called by his ſpecial grace; verily of a truth, God is good to theſe; there is abundant proof and evidence of it; ſee the note on Pſ. xxxiv. 8. or only God is good to ſuch; though he is good to all in a providential way, yet only to his choſen and redeemed ones in a way of ſpecial favour; the goodneſs others ſhare is but a ſhadow of goodneſs, in compariſon of what they do and ſhall partake of; they are bleſſed with bleſſings indeed, and are only bleſſed; ſo this particle is rendered in Pſ. lxii. 2, 4, 5. or but or notwithſtanding[b] God is good, &c. that is, though he ſuffers the wicked to proſper, and his own people are much afflicted, yet he is good to them; he ſupports them under their afflictions, and makes all to work for their good; gives them grace here, and glory hereafter; even to ſuch as are of a clean heart; this character excludes the carnal Iſraelites, who were pure in their own eyes, but not cleanſed from their filthineſs, and deſcribes the true Iſrael of God, and explains who are meant by them, ſuch as are pure in heart, inwardly Jews, Iſraelites indeed, in whom there is no guile; this is not natural to men, their hearts are by nature unclean, nor is it in their power to make them clean; this is God's work, he only can create a clean heart, and renew a right ſpirit; which is done by the ſanctifying influences of his grace, and by the ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus, and thus purifying their hearts by faith; yet ſo as not to be free from all impurity of ſpirit, but as to have a conſcience purged from the guilt of ſin, and to have the heart ſincere and upright towards God.

℣. 2. But as for me, &c.] Who am one of the Iſrael of God, whoſe heart has been renewed and purified by the grace of God, and to whom he has been kind and good in a thouſand inſtances; yet, ungrateful creature that I am, my feet were almoſt gone; out of the good ways of God, the ways of truth and holineſs; juſt upon the turn, ready to forſake them, and give up all religion as a vain thing: my ſteps had well nigh ſlipt, or poured out[c]; like water; the alluſion is to ſtanding on wet and ſlippery ground, where a man can ſcarcely keep upon his feet. It may be obſerved, that good men are liable to ſlips and falls, to fall into ſin, ſnares, and temptations, and from their ſteadfaſtneſs in the faith, but not totally and finally; their feet may be almoſt, but not altogether gone; their ſteps may well nigh ſlip, but not quite; they may fall, but not be utterly caſt down; at leaſt they riſe again, and are made to ſtand; for God is able to keep them, and does keep them, from a total and final falling away.

℣. 3. For I was envious at the fooliſh, &c.] The atheiſts, as in Pſ. xiv. 1. who deny the creation, as Arama; the wicked, as after explained, as all wicked men are, how wiſe ſoever they may be in things natural and civil, yet in religious things, in things of a ſpiritual nature, they have no underſtanding; they are proud, boaſters, glory in themſelves, and in their outward attainments, as the word [d] here uſed ſignifies; the external happineſs of theſe, their riches, health, and eaſe, were envied by the pſalmiſt, ſee Pſ. xxxvii. 1. when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked, or the peace of the wicked [e]; with an evil eye. This was the occaſion of his ſlip and fall, this was the temptation he was left unto for a while.

℣. 4. For there are no bands in their death, &c.] Nothing that binds and ſtraitens them, afflicts and diſtreſſes them; they have no pain of mind, nor of body, but die at once, ſuddenly, in a moment, wholly at eaſe and quiet, without any bitterneſs of ſoul; ſee Job xxi. 13, 23, 25. or there are no bands until their death [f]; they have no ſtraits nor difficulties all their life long, no diſtempers nor diſeaſes which may be called bonds, Luke xiii. 12, 13, 16. till they come to die; the Vulgate Latin verſion is, there is no reſpect to their death; they take no notice of it, they have no care or concern about it; or, as the Targum, "they are not terrified nor troubled, becauſe of the day of their death;" they put it away far from them, and think nothing about it: but their ſtrength is firm; they are hale and robuſt, healthful and ſound to the day of their death; their ſtrength is not weakened in the way by diſeaſes and diſtempers. Some take the word rendered ſtrength to ſignify a porch or palace, and tranſlate it, they are ſtrong as a palace, or in a palace, or their palace is ſtrong [g]; their houſes are well built, and continue long.

℣. 5. They are not in trouble, as other men, &c.] Either of body or of mind, as the ſaints are, who through many tribulations enter the kingdom; or are not in labour [h], don't labour for food and raiment, or get their bread by the ſweat of their brow, as poor men do; nor are weary, ſo Arama: neither are they plagued like other men; ſmitten of God, corrected, and chaſtiſed by him, as his children are; the rod of God is not upon them, Job xxi. 9.

℣. 6. Therefore pride compaſſeth them about as a chain, &c.] Which was the ſin of the devils, and of our firſt parents, and of Sodom, and is the ſin of antichriſt; and which of all ſins is moſt hateful to God; this ariſes from, at leaſt is encreaſed by outward proſperity. Jeſhurun waxed fat and kicked, pride and fulneſs of bread went together in Sodom; and where it is predominant, it binds as a chain; ſuch who are under the power of it are ſlaves unto it, they are chained and fettered by it, and it poſſeſſes them wholly; it ſhows itſelf in the ſeveral members of their bodies, in their eyes and feet, their walk and gait, and in their conduct and behaviour, and in the ſeveral actions of their lives, and is rightly called the pride of life: or rather they bind it about themſelves as a chain, fancying it to be an ornament to them, what ſets them off, and makes them look great in the eyes of others; whereas the reverſe is what is of great price, and in high eſteem with God and good men; namely, the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit: violence covereth them as a garment; wicked men that are proſperous and proud, are generally oppreſſive to others; and are very often open in their acts of violence, which are as openly done, and to be ſeen of all men, as the cloaths upon their backs; and frequently the cloaths they wear are got by rapine and oppreſſion, ſo that they may properly be called garments of violence; ſee Iſ. lix. 6.

℣. 7. Their eyes ſtand out with fatneſs, &c.] Or their face, the eyes being put for the whole face; ſo the Targum, "their face is changed, becauſe of fatneſs;" ſee Job xv. 27. otherwiſe through fatneſs the eyes are almoſt encloſed: or it goes forth out of the fatneſs of their eyes [i]; that is, either pride, which ſhows itſelf in haughty looks, and ſcornful airs, through the abundance poſſeſſed; or violence, ſeen in the fierceneſs of the eyes, and fury of the countenance: or their eyes go out through fatneſs [k]; that is, through the plenty they enjoy, their eyes go out in luſt after unlawful objects: they have more than heart could wiſh; that they themſelves could have wiſhed for heretofore, tho' not now; for what is it that a worldly covetous heart cannot, and does not wiſh for? if it had all the world, it would not ſatisfy it: or the imaginations of the heart go on [l]; that is, after more, not being content with ſuch things as they have; or they, i. e. their pride and violence, exceed the imaginations of the heart [m]; they are more than can be conceived of, they overpaſs the deeds of the wicked, Jer. v. 28. or they tranſgreſs by the imaginations of the heart [n]; which are evil, and that continually.

℣. 8. They are corrupt, &c.] In themſelves, in their principles, and in their practices, being ſhapen and conceived in ſin, and born of the fleſh; and are corruptors, or corrupt themſelves, and their ways, and alſo others by their corrupt ſpeech, evil communications, and bad examples: or they conſume away; like ſmoke, or into it, as Pſ. xxxvii. 20. or as wax melteth at the fire, Pſ. lxviii. 2. ſee Zech. xiv. 12. where the ſame word is uſed as here: or they cauſe to conſume away [o]; they melt or diſſolve others; they conſume them, and waſte their eſtates by their oppreſſion and violence; they make their hearts to melt with their threatening and terrifying words; or they make them diſſolute in their lives by keeping them company: and ſpeak wickedly concerning oppreſſion; they ſpeak oppreſſion and revolt, threaten with it, Iſ. lix. 13. and ſpeak in vindication of it, and in a boaſting glorying manner; ſo Arama; which is ſpeaking wickedly concerning it: they ſpeak loftily; proudly, arrogantly, in a haughty and imperious manner: or from on high [p]; as if they were in heaven, and above all creatures, and even God himſelf; and as if what they ſaid were oracles, and to be received as ſuch, without any ſcruple and heſitation. Thus Pharaoh, Pharaoh, Sennacherib, and Nebuchadnezzar ſpake, Exod. v. 2. Iſ. xxxvi. 20. Dan. iii. 15. and the little horn or antichriſt, Dan. vii. 20. 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Rev. xiii. 6.

℣. 9. They ſet their mouth againſt the heavens, &c.] Againſt God in heaven, ſee Dan. iv. 26. Matt. xxi. 25. Luke xv. 18. againſt his being, ſaying, there is no God; againſt his perfections, thinking him to be ſuch an one as themſelves; againſt his purpoſes and decrees, replying againſt him, and charging him with inſincerity, cruelty, and unrighteouſneſs; and againſt his providence, either denying it, or affirming it to be unequal; and againſt his doctrines, ordinances, and miniſters. Aben Ezra interprets it alſo of the angels of heaven, who are ſpoken againſt, when it is denied that there are any ſuch beings, as were by the Sadducees; and blaſphemed, when the worſhipping of them is introduced. The Targum underſtands it of the ſaints of heaven, with which compare Rev. xiii. 6. it may be applied to civil magiſtrates, the higher powers, who repreſent on earth God in heaven; and there are ſome that deſpiſe dominion, and ſpeak evil of ſuch dignities: and their tongue walketh through the earth; ſparing none, high nor low, but injures all ſorts of perſons with their lies and calumnies. This denotes the unbridled liberty which wicked men take with their tongues; there is no reſtraint upon them, no ſtopping of them; ſee Pſ. xii. 5. the univerſal miſchief they are continually doing, and the diabolical influence of their detraction and falſhood; like Satan, their tongues walk to and fro in the earth, doing all the injury to the credit and characters of men they poſſibly can.

℣. 10. Therefore his people return hither, &c.] Either the true people of God, and ſo the Targum, the people of the Lord, and whom the pſalmiſt owned for his people; for the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read my people; who ſeeing the proſperity of the wicked, and feeling their own afflictions, return to the ſame way of thinking, and fall by the ſame ſnare and temptation as the pſalmiſt did; or ſuch who were only the people of God by profeſſion, but hypocrites, who obſerving the trouble that attends a religious life, and the proſperity of wicked men, return from the good ways of God they have outwardly walked in for ſome time, to the converſation of theſe men, and join themſelves to them: or elſe his being put for their, the ſenſe is, the people of theſe wicked men, of every one of them, return unto them, and flock about them, and careſs and flatter them, becauſe of their proſperous circumſtances, and join with them in their evil practices of oppreſſion and ſlander; which ſenſe ſeems beſt to agree with what goes before and follows after: and waters of a full cup are wrung out to them; meaning either to the people of God, and to be underſtood either of the abundance of their tears, on account of their afflictions inward and outward; ſee Pſ. vi. 6. and xlii. 3. and cxix. 136. ſo the Targum, "and many tears flow unto them;" or of their afflictions themſelves, which are oftentimes compared to waters in ſcripture; ſee Pſ. xlii. 7. and lxvi. 12. Iſ. xliii. 2. which are given them in meaſure; it is a cup of them that is put into their hands, and in full meaſure; they have a full cup of them; many are their tribulations, through which they enter the kingdom, and they are all of God; it is he that wrings them out to them with his fatherly hand: or elſe taking the people to mean the followers and companions of the wicked, the words are to be underſtood of the plenty of good things which ſuch men enjoy in this life, their cup runs over; and indeed theſe ſeem to be the perſons who are introduced ſpeaking the following words.

℣. 11. And they ſay, how doth God know? &c.] Owning there is a God, but queſtioning his knowledge; for the words are not an enquiry about the way and manner of his knowing things; which is not by the ſenſes, as hearing and ſeeing, eyes and ears are improperly aſcribed to him; nor in a diſcurſive way by reaſoning, and inferring one thing from another; for he knows things intuitively, beholding all things in his own eternal mind and will; but they are a queſtion about his knowledge itſelf, as follows: and is there knowledge in the moſt high? they acknowledge God to be the moſt high, and yet doubt whether there is knowledge in him; and indeed the higher with reſpect to place, and at the greater diſtance he was from them, the leſs they imagined he knew of affairs below; ſee Job xxii. 13, 14. for the knowledge called in queſtion is to be underſtood of his providential notice of human affairs, which they thought he did not concern himſelf with, as being below his regard; ſee Ezek. ix. 9. Zeph. i. 12. and therefore concluded that their acts of oppreſſion and violence, and their inſolent words againſt God and men, would paſs unobſerved, and with impunity. If theſe are the words of good men, of the people of God under affliction, they are to be conſidered as under a temptation from their affliction, and the proſperity of the wicked, to call in queſtion the providence of God in the government of the world, and his love to them, which is ſometimes expreſſed by his knowledge of them, Pſ. i. 6. 2 Tim. ii. 19.

℣. 12. Behold, theſe are the ungodly, &c.] Who ſay and do as before declared; ſuch as theſe muſt be without the knowledge of God, the fear, love, and worſhip of him: who proſper in the world; in worldly and temporal things, in their bodies and outward eſtates, but not in their ſouls and ſpiritual things: in this world, as the Targum is; all their proſperity is here; their good things are in this life, their evil things will be in that to come; though ungodly, they proſper in the world, and as long as they are in it; or they are at peace and in eaſe, and are quiet; they have nothing to diſturb them, they are not in outward trouble, and their ſins don't diſtreſs them, and they have no concern about another world: they increaſe in riches; which they are in the purſuit of, and overtake and enjoy in great abundance; whereby they become mighty and powerful, as the word[*] for riches ſignifies: theſe words are the obſervation of the pſalmiſt, and which was the occaſion of the following temptation he was led into.

℣. 13. Verily, I have cleanſed my heart in vain, &c.] Which ſuppoſes that his heart had been unclean, as every man's is, and which appears by what is in it, and by what comes out of it; that it was now cleanſed, not in an abſolute and legal ſenſe, as if it was wholly free from ſin, for this no man can ſay; but in an evangelical ſenſe, being purified by faith in the blood of Chriſt; that he had himſelf ſome concern in the cleanſing of his heart, which ſeems to be contrary to Prov. xx. 9. and beſides this is the Lord's own work, Pſ. li. 10. Ezek. xxxvi. 25. wherefore this may be conſidered as a wrong and raſh expreſſion of his; for as he was wrong in one part of it, its being cleanſed in vain, ſo he might be in the other, in aſcribing it to himſelf; though it may be allowed conſiſtent with what is before obſerved, that a believer has a concern in the cleanſing of his heart; for being convinced of the impurity of it, he owns and laments it before the Lord; and ſeeing the fountain of the Redeemer's blood opened, he applies to it, and to him for cleanſing; and expreſſes a love unto, a great and ſtudious concern for purity of heart as well as life; and under the influence of divine grace, is enabled to keep a watch over it, whereby through the ſame grace, it is preſerved from much pollution; and by freſh application to the blood of Chriſt, is cleanſed from what it daily contracts: and waſhed my hands in innocency; that is, in vain, as before; which denotes the performance of good works, a courſe of holy life and converſation, which when right ſprings from purity of heart; ſee the note on Pſ. xxvi. 6. now the pſalmiſt under temptation concluded that all his religion and devotion were in vain, all his hearing, and reading, and attending on ordinances, all his concern for purity of heart and life; ſince thoſe who ſhewed no regard to theſe things, proſpered in the world, and increaſed in riches, abounded in eaſe and plenty, and ſeemed to be rather the favourites of heaven than religious men; and this temptation was ſtrengthened by the following obſervation.

[*] חיל vires, Junius & Tremellius; potentiam, Piſcator.

℣. 14. For all the day long have I been plagued, &c.] Smitten or ſcourged[p], as in ℣. 5. that is, afflicted of God; which is no ways inconſiſtent with his love, nor with his covenant, nor with an intereſt in him, as a Covenant-God and father; ſee Pſ. lxxxix. 29—34. Heb. xii. 5—8. and chaſtened every morning; not in wrath, but in love, and for good; not with the chaſtiſement of a cruel one, but of a loving and tender father; and therefore not to be improved in ſuch a manner, as if on this account there was nothing in religion; whereas the daily notices the Lord takes of his people this way, ſhow his regard unto them, and care of them.

℣. 15. If I ſay, I will ſpeak thus, &c.] Either as the wicked do, ℣. 8, 9, 11. or rather as he had thought in his own mind, ℣. 13, 14. wherefore he kept it all to himſelf, and did not make known to others the reaſonings of his mind, and the temptations he laboured under: behold, I ſhould offend againſt the generation of thy children; of whom care ſhould be taken, above all things that they be not offended, Matt. xviii. 6. or ſhould condemn, as the Targum; or as Jarchi, "I ſhould make them tranſgreſſors, and wicked perſons;" I ſhould repreſent them as if they were men hated, and rejected of God, becauſe of their afflictions: the words may be rendered, behold the generation of thy children, I have tranſgreſſed[q]; by giving way to the above temptation, which might have been prevented by conſidering the church, children, and people of God, and the care he has taken of them, the regard he has ſhewn to them, and the preſervation of them in all ages. The words are an apoſtrophe to God, who has children by adopting grace, and which appear ſo by their regeneration; and there is a generation of them in all ages; when one goes, another comes; there is always a ſeed, a ſpiritual offspring to ſerve him, which is counted for a generation.

℣. 16. When I thought to know this, &c.] How to reconcile the proſperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the righteous, to the perfections of God, and his wiſe providence in the government of the world, by the mere dint of reaſon, without conſulting the ſacred oracles, or his own and others experience: it was too painful for me; too laborious and toilſome, a work he was not equal to; hic labor, hoc opus; ſee Eccl. viii. 17.

℣. 17. Until I went into the ſanctuary of God, &c.] The tabernacle or houſe of God, where the word of God was read and explained, prayer was made, and ſacrifices offered up, and where fellowſhip was had with the ſaints, and communion with God himſelf; which for one hour or moment is preferable to all the proſperity of the wicked, during their whole life. This ſhews that though the pſalmiſt was beſet with the temptation, yet not overcome; it did not ſo far prevail as to cauſe him to neglect public worſhip, and relinquiſh the houſe of God, and the ordinances of it; and it is right under temptations, doubts, and difficulties, to attend the public miniſtrations, which is the way and means to have relief under temptations, to have doubts reſolved, and difficulties removed: ſome by the ſanctuary of God underſtand the ſcriptures, which are holy and of God, and are profitable for inſtruction, and are to be conſulted and entered into by a ſerious reading of and deep meditation on them; whereby may be known the happineſs that is prepared for the ſaints in the other world, and the miſery of the wicked, and hereby judgment may be made of the preſent caſe and condition of each: others interpret it of the world of ſpirits, which may be entered into by contemplation; when it may be obſerved, that the ſpirits of juſt men upon their diſſolution poſſeſs unſpeakable joys and glories, and the ſouls of the wicked are in unconceivable torments: then underſtood I their end; both of the godly and of the wicked; that the end of the righteous is peace, reſt, ſalvation, and eternal life, and the end of the wicked is ruin, deſtruction, and death; ſee Pſ. xxxvii. 35—38.

℣. 18. Surely, thou didſt ſet them in ſlippery places, &c.] In which a man can't ſtand long, and without danger; and the higher they are the more dangerous, being ſlippery, and ſuch are places of honour and riches. The phraſe denotes the uncertainty and inſtability of theſe things, and the danger men are in who are poſſeſſed of them of falling into deſtruction and miſery. The Targum is, "thou didſt ſet them in darkneſs;" to be in ſlippery places, and in the dark, is very uncomfortable, unſafe, and dangerous indeed; ſee Pſ. xxxv. 6. Jer. xxiii. 12. and it may be obſerved, that all this honour, promotion, and riches, are of God; it is he that ſets them in theſe places of honour and profit; and he that ſets them up can pull them down, as he does; ſo it follows, thou caſteſt them down into deſtruction; into temporal deſtruction, by removing them from their high ſtations, into a very low, mean, and contemptible ſtate, as were Shebna and Nebuchadnezzar, Iſ. xxii. 15, 19. Dan. iv. 24, 25. and into everlaſting deſtruction, from whence there is no recovery; ſee Pſ. lv. 23.

℣. 19. How are they brought into deſolation as in a moment? &c.] Very ſuddenly, which is often the caſe of wicked men, who cry peace and ſafety, and ſudden deſtruction comes upon them, 1 Theſſ. v. 3. ſo as in a moment were the puniſhment of Sodom and Gomorrah, of Pharaoh and his hoſt, and of Korah and his company, Lam. iv. 6. Exod. xiv. 28.

[q] הנה דור בניך בגדתי ecce generatio filiorum tuorum, prævaricatus ſum, Pagninus, Montanus.

Num. xvi. 21, 45. the words are expreſſed with admiration, as wondering at the ſudden and amazing turn of things: they are utterly conſumed with terrors; their deſtruction is not only ſudden, but entire; it is like the breaking in pieces of a potter's veſſel, a ſheard of which cannot be gathered up and uſed, or like the caſting of a milſtone into the ſea, which will never riſe more; ſuch will be the deſtruction of antichriſt; ſee Rev. ii. 27. and xviii. 21. and this is done with terrors; either by terrible judgments inflicted on them from without; or with terrors inwardly ſeizing upon their minds and conſciences; as at the time of temporal calamities, or at death, however at judgment, when the awful ſentence will be pronounced upon them; ſee Job xxvii. 20.

℣. 20. As a dream when one awaketh, &c.] So will be all the temporal felicity of wicked men, all an illuſion, all a dream; when they lift up their eyes in hell, and awake in the reſurrection, they'll find themſelves deſtitute of all their riches and honours, and it will be as if they had only dreamed of them, and never enjoyed them; ſee Job xx. 6, 7, 8. Iſ. xxix. 8. ſo O Lord, when thou awakeſt; to judgment, to take vengeance on wicked men, and vindicate his own people; and who ſeems ſometimes to be as it were aſleep, and to take no notice of things, when the judgment of the ungodly, and their damnation, ſeem to ſlumber, though it does not; ſee Pſ. vii. 6. 2 Pet. ii. 3. or when he awakes the dead at the time of the reſurrection. Death is often compared to ſleep in ſcripture, and the reſurrection to an awaking out of it, which is the Lord's work, Iſ. xxvi. 19. Dan. xii. 2. and ſo the Targum, "O "Lord, when thou ſhalt raiſe them from their "graves:" thou ſhalt deſpiſe their image; the image of the earthly man, of ſin and of Satan, which is upon both their ſouls and bodies; which will both be deſtroyed in hell: or their riches and honour, the vain ſhow in which they have walked, their outward pomp and ſplendor; which was only a ſhow, an outward appearance, and no ſolidity and ſubſtance; and which will not be eſteemed in the great day of account, but deſpiſed; ſee Job xxxvi. 18, 19. the wicked will awake, and ariſe to everlaſting ſhame and contempt, Dan. xii. 2.

℣. 21. Thus my heart was grieved, &c.] Not with his own ſins, nor with the ſins of the wicked, but at their proſperity; for this is an account of himſelf, whilſt under the temptation, and before he went into the ſanctuary of the Lord; or when he was leavened [r], with the old leaven of wickedneſs, and envy, and indignation; he was in a ferment, ſo Plautus [s] uſes the phraſe for being in anger and wrath; he ſwelled, as what is leavened does, againſt God and his providence: or was ſoured [t]; he was out of humour and angry with God, or was exaſperated and provoked at the favours beſtowed upon the wicked. Some render it inflamed [u], made hot; not with the love of God, and meditation upon it, but with wrath and indignation: and I was pricked in my reins; diſturbed and diſtracted in his thoughts, felt a great deal of pain in his mind, whilſt he was conſidering the proſperity of the wicked; which was as a ſword in his bones, and as an arrow ſhot into his reins; ſee Lam. iii. 13.

℣. 22. So fooliſh was I, &c.] To envy the proſperity of the wicked, which is of ſo ſhort a continuance; to arraign the providence and perfections of God, and to conclude ſo haſtily that there was nothing in religion: and ignorant; or, I knew not [w]; what he attempted to know, ℣. 16. nor the end of the wicked, till he went into the ſanctuary of the Lord; nor the counſel and deſign of God, in his methods of providence towards wicked men: I was as a beaſt before thee, or with thee [x]; in the knowledge of the ways and works of God, even thoſe of providence; ſee Pſ. xcii. 5, 6, 7. unteachable, untractable, kicking againſt God and his providential diſpenſations; not behaving like a man, much leſs like a ſaint; but even as the worſt of brutes, as the Behemoth in Job xl. 15. for the ſame word is here uſed; he concluded that God who ſaw all the wickedneſs of his heart, the workings and reaſonings of his mind, which were ſo vain and fooliſh, could eſteem him no other than as a beaſt; ſo the Targum, "as a beaſt I am accounted with thee:" the words may be rendered, I was the veriest beaſt before thee; there being no note of ſimilitude in the text; the word for beaſt being in the plural number, may be uſed for a ſuperlative; Plautus [y] uſes the word bellua, beaſt, for a ſtupid man.

℣. 23. Nevertheleſs, I am continually with thee, &c.] Upon the heart of God, in his hands, under his eye, under his wings of protection and care, and not ſuffered to depart from him finally and totally; he could not be diſunited and removed from him by the above temptation; nor was he left to caſt off the fear of the Lord, and to forſake his worſhip and ſervice; nor altogether to loſe his love and affection for him, which ſtill continued; ſee ℣. 25. or I ſhall be always with thee [z]; not now, for though the ſaints are always in union with the Lord, yet they have not always communion with him, but hereafter, in heaven to all eternity: thou haſt holden me by my right hand; as an inſtance of condeſcenſion, reſpect, and familiarity; ſee Acts xxiii. 19. as a parent takes his child by the hand, and learns it to go, ſo the Lord takes his children by the hand, and teaches them to walk by faith in him, Hoſ. xi. 3. or in order to keep them from falling, and bear them up under temptations and exerciſes; as well as to lead them into more intimate communion with himſelf in his ſanctuary, and to raiſe them up out of their low eſtate to an exalted one; ſee Iſ. xlv. 1. and likewiſe to put ſomething into their hands, to ſupply their wants, and fill them with his good things; ſee Ezek. xvi. 49.

℣. 24. Thou ſhalt guide me with thy counſel, &c.] Which is wiſe and prudent, wholeſome, ſuitable, and ſeaſonable, hearty, ſincere, and faithful, and which is freely given, and when taken, infallibly ſucceeds: or according to thy counſel [a]; the determinate counſels, purpoſes, and will of God, which were of old faithfulneſs and truth; who does all things after the counſel of his own will in providence and grace: or by thy counſel [b]; by the ſcriptures of truth, the revealed word, which contains the will of God; and directions for a holy walk and converſation; by the goſpel and truths of it, called the whole counſel of God, Acts xx. 27. and by his Holy Spirit, which is a ſpirit of counſel as well as of might; and by which the Lord guides his people in the ways of peace, truth, righteouſneſs, and holineſs through this world, to the heavenly glory, as follows: and afterward receive me to glory; into a glorious place, an houſe not made with hands, a city whoſe builder and maker is God, into a kingdom and glory, or a glorious kingdom; and into glorious company, the company of Father, Son, and Spirit, angels and glorified ſaints, where glorious things will be ſeen, and a glory enjoyed both in ſoul and body to all eternity; for this glory is eternal glory, a glory that paſſes not away: or in glory [c]; in a glorious manner: ſome render it, after glory thou wilt receive me [d]; that is, after all the glory and honour thou haſt beſtowed upon me here, thou wilt take me to thyſelf in heaven; ſo the Targum, "after the glory is completed, which thou ſaidſt thou wouldſt bring upon me, thou wilt receive me:" but rather the ſenſe is, after thou haſt led and guided me by thy counſel through the wilderneſs of this world; after all the afflictions and temptations of this preſent life are over; after I have paſſed through the valley of the ſhadow of death, or after death itſelf, thou wilt receive me into everlaſting joy and happineſs; ſee 1 Pet. v. 10.

ỳ. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee, &c.] Which includes God the Father, Son, and Spirit; God the Father, as his only Covenant-God and Father; Chriſt as his only mediator, ſaviour, and redeemer, head, huſband, advocate, and interceſſor; the Spirit as his only ſanctifier, comforter, earneſt, and ſealer; and is expreſſive of their being the one and only Lord God, the ſole object of worſhip, truſt, and confidence; his only helper and guide, and in whom his ſupreme happineſs and glory lay; and it excludes the ſun, moon, and ſtars, in the lower heavens, from being the object of worſhip and truſt; and angels and glorified ſaints in the higheſt heavens: the words may be rendered, who is for me in heaven [e]? on my ſide, my protector and defender; ſee Rom. viii. 31. and there is none upon earth, that I deſire beſides thee; or with thee [f]; there are many things on earth deſireable, as riches, health, friends, food, raiment, &c. but not to be compared with God and Chriſt, and the bleſſed Spirit; with the love of God, the grace of Chriſt, and the communion of the Holy Ghoſt; there are none to be loved and delighted in as they, nor any thing ſo deſireable as fellowſhip with them: or with thee I deſire not the earth [g]; the whole world, and all things in it, are nothing in compariſon of God; if a man was poſſeſſed of the whole of it, and had not intereſt in the Lord, he would be miſerable; and if he has an intereſt in him, he has enough without it; for all things are his, God is all in all; wherefore he is willing to leave all, and be with him for ever: the Targum is, "who is like unto thee, that is, mine in heaven but thee? and with thee I do not deſire a companion on earth." ſee Pſ. lxxxix. 6.

ỳ. 26. My fleſh and my heart faileth, &c.] Either through vehement deſires of communion with God deferred, ſee Pſ. lxxxiv. 2. or through afflictive diſpenſations of providence, being ſmitten and chaſtened continually, ỳ. 14. or through inward trials and exerciſes, by reaſon of indwelling ſin, temptations, and deſertions: or rather the words are expreſſive of the body being emaciated by ſickneſs and diſeaſes; and the heart fainting through fear of death, or rather failing at it, being at the point of death; the heart being, as philoſophers ſay, the firſt that lives, and the laſt that dies: but God is the ſtrength of my heart, or the rock of my heart [h]; when overwhelmed with diſtreſs through outward trouble, or in the loweſt condition with reſpect to ſpiritual things; when grace is weak, corruptions ſtrong, temptations prevail, and afflictions are many; then does the Lord ſupport and ſuſtain his people, and ſtrengthens them with ſtrength in their ſouls, and in the moment of death, by ſhewing them that its ſting is taken away, and its curſe removed; that their ſouls are going to their Lord, and about to enter into his joy; and that their bodies will riſe again glorious and incorruptible: and my portion for ever; both in life and at death, and to all eternity; this is a very large portion indeed; ſuch who have it inherit all things; yea it is immenſe and inconceivable; it is a ſoul-ſatisfying one, and is ſafe and ſecure; it can never be taken away, nor can it be ſpent, it will laſt always; ſee Pſ. cxlii. 5. Lam. iii. 24.

ỳ. 27. For lo, they that are far from thee, &c.] Who are alienated from the life of God, far from the law of God, and ſubjection and obedience to it; and from righteouſneſs either moral or evangelical, and from the love and fear of God, and worſhip of him: ſhall periſh; not merely at death, as even righteous men do, but be loſt eternally: thou haſt deſtroyed all them that go a-whoring from thee; that follow after other gods, and worſhip them; which is ſpiritual adultery and fornication, the ſcriptures often ſpeak of, and intend by it idolatry; ſee Deut. xxxi. 16. or who ſet their hearts and affections upon the creature, and have them alienated from God; and love the creature more and beſides the Creator: the paſt tenſe ſeems to be put for the future, and ſo ſome render it, thou ſhalt deſtroy, or cut off [i]; deſtroy them ſoul and body, and puniſh them with an everlaſting deſtruction in hell; the Targum is, "that wander from thy fear;" that is, from the worſhip of God.

ỳ. 28. But it is good for me to draw near to God, &c.] In prayer, and other acts of religious worſhip; to attend the word and ordinances in the ſanctuary, where the pſalmiſt had lately been delivered out of a ſore temptation, and ſo had a recent experience, which was freſh in his mind, of the advantages of ſuch exerciſes; for it is both an honourable good, what is becoming and commendable, and a pleaſant good, what yields delight and ſatisfaction, and a profitable good, to draw nigh to God by Chriſt, the new and living way, aſſiſted by the Holy Spirit; which when done aright is with faith, ſincerity, reverence, and a holy boldneſs: I have put my truſt in the Lord God; as the rock of his refuge and ſalvation, as his portion and inheritance: that I may declare all thy works; of providence and grace, by proclaiming the wiſdom, power, goodneſs, and faithfulneſs of God in them; by giving him the glory of them, and by expreſſing thankfulneſs for them, both by words and deeds.

PSALM LXXIV.

Maſchil of Aſaph.

SOME think that Aſaph, the penman of this pſalm, was not the ſame that lived in the times of David, but ſome other of the ſame name, a deſcendant of his [k], that lived after the Babyloniſh captivity, ſince the pſalm treats of things that were done at the time the Jews were carried captive into Babylon, or after; but this hinders not that it might be the ſame man; for why might he not under a ſpirit of prophecy, ſpeak of the ſufferings of the church in after ages, as well as David and others teſtify beforehand of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glory that ſhould follow? The pſalm is called Maſchil, becauſe it gives knowledge of, and cauſes to underſtand what afflictions ſhould befal the church and people of God in after-times. The Targum is, "a good underſtanding by the hands of Aſaph." Some think the occaſion of the pſalm was the Babyloniſh captivity, as before obſerved, when indeed the city and temple were burnt; but then there were prophets, as Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and after them Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi; which is here denied, ℣. 9. others think it refers to the times of Antiochus Epiphanes; but though prophecy indeed had then ceaſed, and the temple was prophaned, yet not burnt. The Jews apply it to their preſent captivity, and to the prophanation of the temple by Titus [l], and to the deſtruction both of the city and temple by him; ſo Theodoret: the title of it in the Syriac verſion is, "when David ſaw the angel ſlaying the people, and he wept and ſaid, on me and my ſeed, and not on theſe innocent ſheep; and again a prediction of the ſiege of the city of the Jews, forty years after the aſcenſion, by Veſpaſian the old man, and Titus his ſon, who killed multitudes of the Jews, and deſtroyed Jeruſalem; and hence the Jews have been wandering to this day." But then it is not eaſy to account for it, why a pſalm of lamentation ſhould be compoſed for the deſtruction of that people, which ſo righteouſly came upon them for their ſins, and particularly for their contempt and rejection of the Meſſiah. It therefore ſeems better with Calvin and Cocceius, to ſuppoſe that this pſalm refers to the various afflictions, which at different times ſhould come upon the church and people of God; and perhaps the ſuperſtition, wickedneſs, and cruelty of the Romiſh antichriſt, may be hinted at.

℣. 1. O God, why haſt thou caſt us off for ever, &c.] This the church ſuppoſed becauſe of the prevalence, oppreſſion, and triumph of the enemy, becauſe of the hardſhips and afflictions ſhe laboured under, and becauſe of the hidings of the face of God from her, which unbelief interpreted of a caſting off; ſee Pſ. lxxvii. 7. when in reality it was not ſo, only in appearance, and according to a wrong judgment made of things; for God never did, nor never will caſt off, nor caſt away, his people whom he foreknew, Rom. xi. 1, 2. why doth thine anger ſmoke againſt the ſheep of thy paſture? the people of God are called ſheep, becauſe ſubject to go aſtray, not only before converſion but after; and becauſe harmleſs and inoffenſive in their lives and converſations; and becauſe though expoſed to the inſults and perſecutions of men, and their butcheries and barbarities, and therefore called the flock of ſlaughter, Zech. xi. 4, 7. yet bear all patiently, as the ſheep before her ſhearers is dumb; and becauſe like ſheep they are weak and timorous, unable to defend themſelves; are clean, and ſo diſtinguiſhed from dogs and ſwine; and are profitable, though not to God, yet to men, and one another; and like ſheep are ſociable, and love to be together: and they are called the ſheep of the Lord's paſture; becauſe he provides good paſture for them, leads them into it, and feeds them himſelf with Chriſt, the bread of life, the tree of life, and hidden manna; with covenant-grace and promiſes, even the ſure mercies of David; with diſcoveries of his love and grace, and with his word and ordinances; and yet theſe, when under afflictions and deſertions, are ready to conclude that God is angry with them, yea is very angry; that his anger burns againſt them, and his fierce wrath goes over them, ſignified by ſmoking; ſee Deut. xxix. 20. alluding to men, who when they are angry, become hot, as Kimchi obſerves, and their breath like ſmoke comes out of their noſtrils.

℣. 2. Remember thy congregation, which thou haſt purchaſed of old, &c.] Alluding to the redemption of the congregation of Iſrael out of Egypt, when they were ſaid to be purchaſed, Exod. xv. 16. and as that people were typical of the people of God, they may be ſaid to be purchaſed then, even of old; tho' the purchaſe in reality was not made till the blood of Chriſt was ſhed, with which he purchaſed his church, Acts xx. 28. indeed he was the lamb, ſlain from the foundation of the world, in the purpoſe and promiſe of God, and in the typical ſacrifices ſo early offered up, Rev. xiii. 8. and beſides, the words may be conſidered as the words of the church of God groaning under antichriſtian oppreſſion and cruelty, hundreds of years ſince the death of Chriſt, and ſo may be ſaid to be of old purchaſed; and which is called a congregation, becauſe a ſelect number, choſen of God, and called out of the world, and brought into one body, and into fellowſhip with Chriſt and one another; and though they may not meet together in one place, they are all of one body, and will one day make one general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, called the congregation of the righteous, Pſ. i. 5. now it is deſired of the Lord for theſe, that they might be remembered with his loving kindneſs and tender mercies, with his covenant and promiſes, and be delivered and ſaved out of the hands of their enemies: the rod of thine inheritance, which thou haſt redeemed; the Targum adds, out of Egypt; but this is to be underſtood not of the redemption of the people of Iſrael, but of the redemption of the church of God from ſin, Satan, the law, the world, hell, and death; who are choſen by the Lord for his inheritance, his peculiar treaſure and portion; and which he highly values and eſteems, and is dear unto him as ſuch, as the redemption of them by the blood of Chriſt ſhews: this mount Sion wherein thou haſt dwelt; meaning the church of God, which often goes by this name, both in the old and in the new teſtament, comparable to the mount of Zion for its height, holineſs, and immoveableneſs; where the Lord has promiſed to dwell, and where he does dwell, and will for evermore. As the reference to Sion literally underſtood, it is called this Sion, becauſe well known, and becauſe the pſalm might be compoſed or ſaid in it, as Kimchi obſerves; and which ſhews that it was written before the deſtruction of the city and temple, and whilſt Zion was the ſeat of religious worſhip, and therefore a prophecy of future times.

[k] Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 3. c. 29. col. 984.

℣. 3. Lift up thy feet unto the perpetual deſolations, &c.] That is, ariſe, haſten, move ſwiftly, and in the greatneſs of ſtrength, and come and ſee the deſolations made by the enemy, which look as if they would remain for ever; meaning either the deſolations made in the city and temple of Jeruſalem, either by Nebuchadnezzar, or by Titus; or the havocks and devaſtations made in the church of God by the tyranny and perſecutions of antichriſt; which have continued ſo long, that an end of them has been almoſt deſpaired of. So Jacob is ſaid to lift up his feet; which we render went on his way, Gen. xxix. 1. Some take theſe words in a different ſenſe, as a prayer for the deſtruction of the church's enemies; ſo the Targum, "lift up thy feet or goings, to make deſolate the nations for ever;" and Kimchi makes but one ſentence of this and the following clauſe, and reads it thus, "lift up thy feet, to make deſolate for ever, every enemy that does wickedly in the ſanctuary:" but the accent Athnach, which divides propoſitions, and is upon the word נצח forbids ſuch a reading. The former ſenſe is beſt, and moſt agreeable to the context; even all that the enemy hath done wickedly in the ſanctuary; by prophaning and deſtroying the temple, as did Nebuchadnezzar, Antiochus, and Titus; or by antichriſt ſitting in the temple and church of God, ſetting up idolatrous worſhip in it, and blaſpheming the tabernacle of God, and them that dwell therein, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Rev. xiii. 6.

℣. 4. Thine enemies roar in the midſt of thy congregations, &c.] Particular churches, gathered out of the world in goſpel-order, and which meet together at particular times and places; in the midſt of theſe, and againſt them their enemies, and who are the Lord's enemies, roar like lions, as Satan, and bloody perſecutors, and particularly antichriſt, whoſe mouth is as the mouth of a lion, which is opened in blaſphemy againſt God and his people, Rev. xiii. 2, 5, 6. they ſet up their enſigns for ſigns; or ſigns, ſigns, falſe ones for true ones; meaning either military ſigns, as the Roman eagle, ſet as ſigns and trophies of victory; or idolatrous ſtatues and images, ſuch an one as Antiochus brought into the temple; or falſe miracles and antichriſtian marks, in the room of true miracles, and the true mark of Chriſt's followers; ſee 2 Theſſ. 2, 9. Rev. xiii. 14, 16. and xiv. 1. The Jewiſh writers generally interpret it of the divinations and ſuperſtitious rites uſed by the king of Babylon, when he was coming up againſt Jeruſalem, Ezek. xxi. 21.

℣. 5. A man was famous, &c.] Or, it was, or is known[m]; the deſolations the enemy made, the wickedneſs they committed, the terror they ſpread, and the ſigns they ſet in the ſanctuary of the Lord: according as he had lifted up, or as one that lifts up axes upon the thick trees[n]; that is, the above things were as viſible, and as well known, being as eaſy to be ſeen as ſuch an action is, a man being obliged to lift his ax above his head, to cut down a thick tree: or rather the ſenſe is, formerly a man was famous for, and it gave him ſome credit and eſteem, to be an hewer of wood in the foreſt of Lebanon, where he lifted up his ax, and cut down the thick trees for the building of the temple, as the ſervants of Hiram king of Tyre did; and ſuch an action was eſteemed as if a man brought an offering to God; agreeable to which is Kimchi's note, "when the temple was built, he who lifted up his ax upon a thick tree to cut it down for the building, was known, as if he lifted it up above in heaven before the throne of glory; all ſo rejoiced and gloried in the building:" and Aben Ezra interprets it of acclamations made above on that account. The words, according to the accents, ſhould be rendered thus, he or it was known, as he that lifteth up on high; even as he that lifteth up on high, axes upon the thick tree.

℣. 6. But now they break down the carved work thereof at once, with axes and hammers;] Formerly it was an honour to be employed in cutting down a tree for the building of the temple, but now ſo little regard was paid to it, that all its fine carved work which Solomon made, 1 Kings vi. 18, 29, 32. was demoliſhed at once in a rude and furious manner with axes and hammers; which was done either by the Chaldeans in Nebuchadnezzar's time, or by the Syrians in the times of Antiochus, or by the Romans in the times of Veſpaſian; the firſt ſeems intended; ſee Jer. xlvi. 22, 23.

℣. 7. They have caſt fire into thy ſanctuary, &c.] Or, thy ſanctuary into the fire[o]; which denotes the utter deſtruction of it by fire, which was done both by the Chaldean and Roman armies; ſee 2 Kings xxv. 9. Matt. xxii. 7. they have defiled by caſting down the dwelling place of thy name to the ground, or to the earth they have defiled the habitation of thy name[p]; that is, to the laſt and loweſt degree; this Antiochus did when he ſet up an idol in the temple, and Titus when he laid it level with the ground, not leaving one ſtone upon another, as our Lord predicted, Matt. xxiv. 1, 2. the aggravation of which was that it was the place where the Lord had put his name, where his name was called upon, and where was the ſymbol of his preſence.

℣. 8. They ſaid in their hearts, let us deſtroy them together, &c.] The Targum is, "their children are together;" or their kindred, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, and Arabic verſions, taking the word to be of נין, which ſignifies a ſon; and the ſenſe to be, that ſeeing they were all together, as the Jews were at the taking of Jeruſalem, they might be cut off at once. Jarchi explains it of their rulers; Marinus, as Aben Ezra obſerves, derives it from a word which ſignifies to afflict and oppreſs, to which he agrees; ſee Pſ. lxxxiii. 3, 4, 5. they have burnt up all the ſynagogues of God in the land; not only in Jeruſalem, where there were, the Jewiſh[q] writers ſay, 460, and others 480 of them, but alſo in all the land of Judea; of theſe ſynagogues there is much mention made in the new teſtament; they were places for public worſhip, in which prayer was made, and the ſcriptures were read and explained; ſee Matt. vi. 5. Luke iv. 16. Acts xv. 21. but it may be doubted whether they are meant here, ſince it does not appear that there were any until after the return of the Jews from Babylon[r]; the temple, and the parts of it, may be meant, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra; or the ſchools of the prophets; though the pſalm may refer to times after the Babyloniſh captivity, and ſo may deſign Jewiſh ſynagogues, and even take in places of worſhip among Chriſtians.

[q] T. Hieroſ. Cetubot, fol. 35. 3. & Megillah, fol. 73. 4.

℣. 9. We ſee not our ſigns, &c.] Either ſuch miracles as were formerly wrought to ſupport the faith of God's people in diſtreſs, and for their deliverance out of it, as when they were in Egypt, and brought forth from thence; ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 43. and cv. 27. or rather their ſabbaths and ſacrifices, the paſſover and circumciſion, and other ordinances and inſtitutions of divine worſhip; which were ſigns of the preſence of God with them, and of Chriſt, and bleſſings of grace, and good things to come by him; which ceaſed, or were interrupted in their captivity, and which the godly lament: or the ſigns of redemption, as Kimchi; and may be interpreted of the blindneſs and ſtupidity of the greater part of them, who could not diſcern the ſigns of the times, as before the deſtruction of the city and temple, Matt. xvi. 3. ſo after it, when theſe being deſtroyed, and they in the hands of the Romans, might eaſily have perceived that the ſcepter was departed from Judah, and therefore Shiloh muſt be come, or the meſſiah; who alſo muſt have been in his temple, and Daniel's weeks be up; but theſe ſigns they ſaw not, nor do they yet: and ſo though the ſigns of the latter day are upon us, we ſee them not, or at leaſt very few take notice of them, and lament them; ſuch as a very great departure from the faith of the goſpel, a neglect of goſpel-worſhip and ordinances, coldneſs and lukewarmneſs in matters of religion, want of love to Chriſt and his people, a general ſleepineſs and ſecurity, a form of religion without the power of it, a name to live and be dead, and iniquity abounding even among profeſſors of religion; beſides the frequent ſigns in heaven and in earth; ſee Matt. xxiv. 12, 23, 29. Luke xxi. 9, 10, 11, 25, 26, 28. 2 Tim. iii. 1—5. there is no more any prophet; there were but few in the Babyloniſh captivity, and after Malachi there were none; there were none in the times of Antiochus; there were none till John the fore-runner of Chriſt came; and in the latter day the two prophets that propheſy in ſackcloth will be ſlain, and there will be no propheſying for a while, Rev. xi. 7, 8, 9. Kimchi explains it, there is no prophet yet, and interprets it thus, Elijah the prophet is not yet come: neither is there among us any that knoweth how long; the calamity will endure, and ere deliverance will come; how long the Babyloniſh captivity would continue, was known, that it would be ſeventy years, and no longer; the prophets that ſearched after the time of ſalvation and redemption by Chriſt, knew how long it would be to it; Daniel fixed the exact time of it; but how long the preſent times will laſt, we know not, or how long it is to the end of wonders; or when will end the 1260 days of the reign of antichriſt, of the church's being in the wilderneſs, of the holy city being trodden under foot by the Gentiles, and of the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth.

℣. 10. O God, how long ſhall the adverſary reproach? &c.] The name of God, as in the next clauſe, the divine perſons and perfections, the purpoſes and providence of God, his people, ways, worſhip, truths, and ordinances: ſhall the enemy blaſpheme thy name for ever? The adverſary and enemy being in the ſingular number, may intend ſome particular one, as Antichriſt; who is emphatically and eminently the enemy of God, he oppoſing himſelf to, and exalting himſelf above all that is called God; and the adverſary of Chriſt, as his name ſhews; not only ſetting himſelf in his room and ſtead, but undermining him in all his offices; changing his laws as a king, diſhonouring his ſacrifice and interceſſion as a prieſt, and doing injury to his word and ordinances as a prophet; and who has a mouth ſpeaking blaſphemies againſt God, his name, and tabernacle, heaven, and they that dwell therein, angels and ſaints, Rev. xiii. 5. He reproaches and blaſphemes God himſelf, by ſhewing himſelf to be God, by ſuffering himſelf to be ſo called, and to be worſhipped as if he was God; by taking infallibility to himſelf, and ſetting up image-worſhip, and obliging perſons to it: he reproaches and blaſphemes the Son of God, in whom the name of God is, by pretending to be his vicar on earth, and head of the church; to tranſubſtantiate the bread and wine into the body and blood of Chriſt; and to offer him up again in the blaſphemous ſervice of the maſs: he reproaches and blaſphemes his goſpel, which is his name, Acts ix. 15. by introducing doctrines contrary to it, as the doctrines of merit, of works of ſupererogation and juſtification by works; and the ſcriptures, which bear the name and authority of God, by making them a noſe of wax, taking upon himſelf to be the infallible interpreter of ſcripture, and ſole judge of controverſies; by ſetting up his own unwritten traditions upon an equality with them, and forbidding the uſe of them to the people in their mother-tongue: and he reproaches and blaſphemes his name and authority by aſſuming it to himſelf in civil things, depoſing and ſetting up kings at his pleaſure; in religious affairs, diſpenſing with the laws of God, and teaching for doctrines the commandments of men; yea, in matters of ſalvation, giving out pardons and indulgences, pretending to open and ſhut heaven at pleaſure. Moreover, theſe terms may be underſtood of many enemies and adverſaries, even of all the enemies of the grace of God, and perſon of Chriſt; ſuch reproach and blaſpheme the name of God the father, by denying ſome of his perfections, as his ſovereignty, omniſcience, and punitive juſtice, and by charging his decrees with injuſtice, inſincerity and cruelty; they reproach and blaſpheme the name of Chriſt, by denying his deity, eternal ſonſhip, and diſtinct perſonality, and by ſpeaking contemptuouſly of his righteouſneſs, blood, and ſacrifice; and they do deſpight unto the ſpirit of grace, and ſpeak evil of his perſon, and the operations of his grace on the ſouls of men; and ſuch a day of rebuke and blaſphemy is the preſent one: and theſe things give good men that obſerve them a great concern for the name of God, who are ready to fear there will be no end to theſe reproaches and blaſphemies; but there will, the time is coming when the name of the Lord will be excellent in all the earth, and the Lord alone ſhall be exalted; but it is not known how long it will be to it.

[r] Vid. Vitringam de Synagog. vet. l. 1. par. 2. c. 9. Reland. Antiqu. Heb. par. 1. c. 16. §. 3. Burmannum de Synagogis diſp. 1. §. 9.

℣. 11. Why withdraweſt thou thy hand, even thy right hand? &c.] By which is meant the power of God; by which he made the heavens and the earth, and all things therein, and ſupports them in their beings; by which the work of his grace is wrought in the hearts of his people, and they are upheld; and by which he conquers their enemies, and ſaves them: this may be ſaid to be withdrawn when he denies his people the help and ſuccour they have had from him; when he ſeems to have forſaken the work of his hands; when there is not that ſucceſs in the miniſtry of the word, there formerly was, his arm being not revealed and made bare; and when the enemies of religion proſper and get ground; and when the Lord ſeems to be altogether unactive and unconcerned, like a man that folds up his arms under his arm-holes, or hides his hands in his boſom, ſee Pſ. xliv. 23—26. Pro. xix. 24 Lam. ii. 3—8. wherefore it follows: pluck it out of thy boſom; as he will one day, and ſtrike with a home-blow antichriſt and his followers, and deſtroy them with his rod of iron, with which he will break them in ſhivers as a potter's veſſel; and all his enemies ſhall feel the lighting down of his arm with the indignation of his anger; and then this requeſt will be fulfilled: the word uſed ſignifies to conſume[a]; and Kimchi interprets it, conſume the enemy out of thy boſom, which is the houſe of the ſanctuary; his ſecret place, as the boſom is to man; but both ſenſes of the word may be retained, and the meaning be, pluck it out of thy boſom to conſume them[b]: alſo it ſignifies to reſtrain[c]; and the ſenſe may be as the above writer obſerves, reſtrain it, that it may not return to thy boſom, till thou haſt executed judgment on the wicked.

℣. 12. For God is my king of old, &c.] or but God, or verily God, &c.[d] for theſe words contain the church's conſolation under all the above melancholy circumſtances, taken from what God was, and had been to her, even Chriſt, who is God over all; he was her king by the conſtitution and deſignation of his father, and ſo he had been of old, even from everlaſting; for ſo early was he ſet up as king; and he had in all ages been exerciſing his kingly office for the good of his church, and continued to do ſo; and this was her comfort, and is the comfort of ſaints in the worſt of times, that Zion's king reigneth, ſee Pſ. xlvi. 1, 2, 3, 5, 7. and xcvii. 1. Iſ. lii. 7. working ſalvation in the midſt of the earth; it is ſalvations[e] in the plural number, and means both ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, which the Lord has wrought out; and is continually applying to his people; and temporal ſalvation which the Lord has been and is daily working out; he continually protecting his people, and ſaving them from their enemies, and delivering them out of their afflictions and temptations; and which the church conſiders and improves into an argument to encourage her faith, and expect the time, when her walls would be ſalvation and her gates praiſe; and ſhe ſhould have reaſon to ſay, now is come ſalvation and ſtrength, and the Kingdom of our God and the power of his Chriſt; and give him all the glory of it; ſee Iſ. lx. 18. Rev. xii. 10. and xix. 1. which ſalvation as it has been, ſo will be wrought in the midſt of the earth; meaning not in the midſt of the land of Judea, or in Judea, the middle of the world, but openly and publickly in all the earth; tho' Cyril of Jeruſalem, ſays[f] Golgotha is the midſt of the earth where Chriſt ſuffered and wrought out alvation; and that it is here referred to.

℣. 13. Thou didſt divide the ſea by thy ſtrength, &c.] This and the following inſtances from hence o ℣ 18. are proofs of God's working ſalvation in the midſt of the earth; ſome of them ſeem peculiar to the people of Iſrael, and others are benefits common to mankind in general; which the church makes uſe of to encourage her faith and hope, in expectation of ſalvation, and deliverance out of her preſent diſtreſſed and melancholy circumſtances. This ſeems to refer to the Lord's dividing of the red ſea into parts by a ſtrong eaſt wind, whilſt Moſes lifted up his rod and ſtretched out his hand as he was ordered, as a token of the divine power, and ſo the children of Iſrael paſſed through it as on dry land, Exod. xiv. 21. and he that did this can make way for his redeemed ones to return to Zion with everlaſting joy, Iſ. li. 10. Some render the words, thou haſt broken the ſea by thy ſtrength[g]; ſubdued and conquered it, and ſo haſt the dominion over it, ruleſt the raging of it, ſetteſt bounds to it, and haſt ordered its proud waves to go ſo far and no farther; and thus the Arabic verſion, thou haſt made it to ſtand; and the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, thou haſt confirmed it; but our verſion is beſt, which refers it to the work of God at the red ſea, and with which the Targum agrees; and Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome refer it to the dividing of the red ſea: thou breakeſt the heads of the dragons in the waters; or great whales, as the word is rendered in Gen. i. 21. by which are meant Pharaoh and his generals, his captains and chief men who were deſtroyed in the waters of the red ſea; comparable to dragons for their ſtrength, for their cruelty to the children of Iſrael, and for their wrath and malice againſt them; and ſo for the ſame reaſon, another Pharaoh, king of Egypt, in after times, is called the great dragon, that lies in the midſt of his rivers, Ezek. xxix. 3. and xxxii. 2. and the King of Babylon or of Egypt, Iſ. xxvii. 1. So the Targum paraphraſes it: "thou haſt broken the heads of dragons, and haſt ſuffocated the Egyptians in the ſea." Rome Pagan is compared to a great red dragon with ſeven heads and ten horns, which have been broken and deſtroyed, Rev. xii. 3, 7, 8, 9. and Rome Papal has the power, ſeat and great authority of the dragon; and though the Romiſh antichriſt has two horns like a lamb, he ſpeaks as a dragon, who alſo has ſeven heads and ten horns, and which ere long will be broke in pieces, ſee Rev. xiii. 1, 2, 11. and xix. 15. and ii. 27. in the faith of which the church might be ſtrengthened, by conſidering what God had done to the heads of the dragon in the red ſea; to which may be added that ſatan is called a dragon, Pſ. xci. 13. Rev. xii. 9. and xx. 2. whoſe head was bruiſed, and his principalities and powers ſpoiled by Chriſt at his death, and will be utterly deſtroyed at his ſecond coming.

℣. 14. Thou breakeſt the heads of Leviathan in pieces, &c.] A large fiſh generally thought to be the whale, by ſome the crocodile, deſcribed in Job xli. to which the king of Egypt or Babylon is compared, Iſ. xxvii. 1. and ſo the Romiſh antichriſt in one of his characters is repreſented as a ſea-beaſt with many heads, which will all be broken in pieces in due time, Rev. xiii. 1. as here is one Leviathan with heads in the plural number. Aben Ezra thinks the word כל is wanting, and may be ſupplied thus, thou haſt broken the heads of every Leviathan; it may be interpreted as before of Pharoah and his chief men; ſo the Targum, “ thou haſt broken the heads of the mighty men of Pharaoh:” and gaveſt him to be meat to the people inhabiting the wilderneſs; either to the wild beaſts, called Tziim, the word here uſed, Iſ. xiii. 21. and may be called a people as the ants and conies are, Prov. xxx. 25, 26. to whom the dead bodies of Pharaoh and his hoſt, drowned in the red ſea, were given for food, when they were caſt upon the ſhore, where the Iſraelites ſaw them dead, Exod. xiv. 28. or to the Ichthyophagi, a ſort of people that dwelt by the red ſea, and lived on fiſhes; and ſo the Egyptians became their food, they living upon the fiſh which devoured their bodies, at leaſt ſome of them: the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions render it to the people, the Ethiopians; who it ſeems, living upon the borders of Egypt, took this opportunity when Pharaoh and his hoſt were drowned, and ſeized upon their country; but others refer it to the people of Iſrael themſelves, as the Targum, “ thou haſt given them for deſtruction to the people of the houſe of Iſrael, and their bodies to the dragons;” and ſo Jarchi, “ thou haſt given his mammon or riches to the people of Iſrael, to feed their companies and armies;” and Kimchi interprets it of the ſpoil of the ſea which the Iſraelites took from them; and they may be truly called the people inhabiting the wilderneſs, ſince they were in one, forty years; ſo the Romiſh Leviathan or antichriſtian whore will be given to the Chriſtian Kings, who will hate her, eat her fleſh, and burn her with fire; and to the Chriſtian church, which now is in the wilderneſs, where it is nouriſhed for a time and times, and half a time.

℣. 15. Thou didſt cleave the fountain and the flood, &c.] That is, the rocks at Horeb and at Kadeſh, from whence water flowed as out of a fountain, and became a flood, whereby the people of Iſrael were ſupplied with water in the wilderneſs, and alſo their beaſts; and from this inſtance it may be concluded, that God will not leave his people, nor ſuffer them to want, but will ſupply all their need while they are in the wilderneſs, and will open fountains and rivers for them, Iſ. xli. 17, 18. he himſelf is a fountain of living water; Chriſt is the fountain of gardens, and the Spirit, and his grace a well of living water ſpringing up unto everlaſting life: thou driedſt up mighty rivers; the river of Jordan, called mighty, as Kimchi ſays, becauſe by its ſtrength it overflowed all its banks and rivers, and becauſe other rivers flowed into it; this was dried up, or way was made through it, as on dry land, for the people of Iſrael to paſs into Canaan, Joſh. iii. 14, 15. the Targum is: “ thou haſt dried up the fords and brooks of Hermon, and the fords of Jabbok and Jordan;” ſee Numb. xxi. 14, 24. and the Lord that did this, is able to dry up, and will dry up the river Euphrates, as is foretold, Rev. xvi. 12. that is, deſtroy the Turkiſh empire, and make way for the ſpread of the goſpel in the eaſtern parts of the world; to which reference is had in Iſ. xi. 15, 16.

℣. 16. The day is thine, and the night alſo is thine, &c.] He made the one and the other, and divided the one from the other; and can make them longer or ſhorter, clear or cloudy as he pleaſes: and the day of proſperity, and night of adverſity are at his diſpoſal; all the times of his people, and of his church are in his hands; ſometimes it is a night of darkneſs, deadneſs, ſleepineſs and ſecurity, as it now is; ere long there will be no more night, but bright day; the light of the moon will be as the light of the ſun, and the light of the ſun will be ſeven-fold as the light of ſeven days; and this is to be expected from him whoſe is the day and the night alſo, Rev. xxi. 25. Iſ. lx. 1. and xxx. 26. Jarchi interprets the day, of the redemption of Iſrael; and the night, of diſtreſſes and afflictions: thou haſt prepared the light and the ſun; firſt the light and then the ſun; for the light was before the ſun; or the luminary, even the ſun. Aben Ezra interprets the light of the moon, and ſo the Targum; and Kimchi, both of the moon and of the ſtars; Jarchi takes the light figuratively to be meant of the light of the law; but it is much better to underſtand it of the light of the Goſpel, which God has prepared, and will ſend forth more largely in the latter day, whereby the whole earth ſhall be lightned; and when Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs will ariſe with healing in his wings, and who gives both the light of grace and glory to his people.

℣. 17. Thou haſt ſet all the borders of the earth, &c.] Of the whole world, and of the ſeveral nations, as of the land of Canaan, ſo of others. Deut. xxxii. 8. and even has fixed and ſettled the bounds of every man's habitation, Acts xvii. 26. thou haſt made ſummer and winter; ſee Gen. 8. 22. which, taken literally, are great benefits to the world; and figuratively underſtood, may repreſent the two diſpenſations, of the law and goſpel; ſee Cant. ii. 11, 12. and the different frames of God's people when under temptations, and clouds, and darkneſs, and when they enjoy peace and comfort; and the different ſtate of the church, when affected with affliction, perſecution, falſe doctrine, deadneſs and formality, which is now greatly the caſe; but there is a ſummer coming, when it will be otherwiſe; ſee Luke xxi. 30, 31.

℣. 18. Remember this, that the enemy hath reproached, O Lord, &c.] Or hath reproached the Lord, as the Septuagint verſion and others render it and very rightly; though not ſo well the former part of the clauſe, which it renders, or rather paraphraſes thus; remember this thy creation or creature; as if it referred to what goes before, as day and night, light and ſun, the borders of the earth, ſummer and winter; whereas it is to be connected with what follows, the reproach of the Lord by the enemy; and it is a prayer of the church, that God would remember the enemy and his reproaches, which ſeemed to be forgotten, and inflict deſerved puniſhments on him, which will be done in due time, Rev. xvi. 19. and xviii. 5, 6. and that the fooliſh people have blaſphemed thy name; the fooliſh people are not ſuch as want common ſenſe, or are idiots; the blaſphemers of God and Chriſt, and the bleſſed ſpirit, are generally the wiſe and prudent of this world, from whom the things of the goſpel are hidden; but wicked and prophane men: ſcoffers at religion, and blaſphemers of Chriſt, his truths and ordinances, are commonly ſuch who walk after their own ungodly luſts, who though wiſe to do evil, are fooliſh in matters of religion: perhaps the Gentiles, which know not God, are here meant, and are ſo called, Deut. xxxii. 21. and it is obſervable, that the Papiſts bear the name of Gentiles in Rev. xi. 2, 18. and may be the fooliſh people here chiefly deſigned, who worſhip images of gold, ſilver, braſs and wood, and are notorious for their blaſphemies; ſee the note on ℣. 10.

℣. 19. O deliver not the ſoul of thy turtle-dove, &c.] by which is meant the church, ſee Cant. ii. 14. and v. 2. and vi. 9. which is comparable to this creature for its cleanneſs and purity, for its amiableneſs and beauty, for its harmleſneſs and innocence, for its modeſty and meekneſs, for its affection and chaſtity to its mate, for its mournful and bemoaning voice for the loſs of it, for its being a timorous and fearful creature, a weak one, and expoſed to the prey of others; all which is true of the church, and may be applied to it: the Targum is, "do not deliver the "ſouls of them that teach thy law;" the word having ſome affinity with Torah the law; but Jarchi ſays, that Jonathan in his Targum (which is not now extant) interprets it a turtle; the Syriac verſion, by the change of a letter, renders it, the ſoul that confeſſeth thee; and the Arabic verſion, by a like change, and the addition of a letter, the ſoul that knows thee; all which indeed is applicable to the church of God; but our verſion expreſſes the true ſenſe of the word, with which agree Jarchi, Kimchi, Ben Melech, and others: and it is a prayer of the church for herſelf; that the life of her members, their corporal life (for not the ſoul, the better part, and its eternal concerns, are meant, which are ſafe in Chriſt's hands) might not be delivered unto the multitude of the wicked, or to the beaſt;[g] to perſecutors, comparable to lions and bears, and particularly the Romiſh antichriſt often called the beaſt in Rev. xi. 8. and xiii. 1, 11. and xvii. 3. and ſo the Targum, "don't deliver to the people, "who are like to the beaſts of the field, the ſouls "of, &c." forget not the congregation of thy poor for ever; the church of God is a congregation of men gathered out of the world by effectual grace, and conſiſts chiefly of ſuch who are literally poor, and all of them are ſpiritually ſo, and are ſenſible of it; for the moſt part they are a poor and afflicted[h] people, as the word may be alſo rendered, which the church is made up of; and may ſeem by themſelves and others to be forgotten of God, when under divine deſertions, or under afflictions, and immediate help is not given; but they are not forgotten, and ſtill leſs for ever, ſee Iſ. xlix. 14, 15, 16.

℣. 20. Have reſpect unto the covenant, &c.] The Targum adds: "which thou haſt made with our "fathers;" meaning not the convenant of works, which being broken, no good thing was to be expected from it, not liberty, life, nor eternal ſalvation, but all the reverſe; but the covenant of grace, made with Chriſt before the world was, and made manifeſt to Adam, to Noah, to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, to David and others: this God has a reſpect unto, and does look unto it; he looks to the ſurety and mediator of it, which is Chriſt, for the fulfilment of all conditions in it; to the promiſes of it, that they be made good; to the bleſſings of it, that they be beſtowed upon the perſons, to whom they belong; to the blood of it, for the delivering of the church's priſoners, and the ſalvation of them from wrath to come; and to the perſons intereſted in it, that they be all called and brought ſafe to glory; and particularly to the things in it, reſpecting the glory of the church in the latter day, and increaſe of its members and of its light, which ſeem chiefly deſigned here; and therefore it follows: for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty; many places of the earth are in groſs darkneſs as to the knowledge of ſpiritual and divine things; even all thoſe places which are inhabited by Pagans, Mahometans and Papiſts, which make a great part of the globe; and in theſe dark places cruelty reigns, and eſpecially in the antichriſtian ſtates; wherefore the church pleads the covenant of God and his promiſes, that he would ſend forth his light and his truth, and cover the earth with the knowledge of the Lord, which is now covered with groſs darkneſs, and under the tyranny and oppreſſion of the man of ſin.

℣. 21. O let not the oppreſſed return aſhamed, &c.] From the throne of grace, not having an anſwer of their prayer, but ſtill continuing under the oppreſſions of their enemies: let the poor and needy praiſe thy name; let them have occaſion for it, by the deſtruction of their enemies, and their deliverance from them, as they will have ere long; ſee Rev. xix. 1, 2.

℣. 22. Ariſe, O God, plead thine one cauſe, &c.] The church's cauſe being the cauſe of God; and therefore ſhe deſires that he would ariſe and exert himſelf, and take vengeance on his and her enemies: this is an intereſting argument, and a forcible one: remember how the fooliſh man reproacheth thee daily; this being ſo frequently repeated, as in ℣. 10, 18. Shews how much the name and glory of God lay near her heart; the Targum is, "re- "member the reproach of thy people by a fooliſh king all the day;" perhaps the man of ſin is meant, the king of the locuſts, and angel of the bottomleſs pit.

℣. 23. Forget not the voice of thine enemies, &c.] Their roaring in the midſt of the ſanctuary and the congregation, ℣. 4. their reproaching and blaſpheming voice, ℣. 10, 18, 22. the tumult of thoſe that riſe up againſt thee increaſeth continually, or aſcendeth[i]; goes up to God, and is taken notice of by him; the cry of their ſins like that of Sodom and Gomorrah, and of the city of Niniveh, Gen. xviii. 20, 21. Jon. i. 2. was continually going up to God; wherefore it might be hoped and expected, that vengeance in a little time would come down; ſee Rev. xviii. 5, 6, 7. the Septuagint, and the verſions that follow that, render it, the pride of thoſe, &c. all theſe petitions are prayers of faith, and are, or will be heard and anſwered; upon which will follow thankſgivings, with which the next pſalm begins.

OF the word Al-taſchith, ſee on Pſ. lvii. it ſignifies, do not deſtroy, or do not corrupt; the Targum renders it, "do not deſtroy thy people;" ſo Jarchi, "do not deſtroy Iſrael;" perhaps it may be conſidered as a petition, that God would not ſuffer the man of ſin to go on to deſtroy the earth, and corrupt the inhabitants of it with his falſe doctrine, idolatry and ſuperſtition, Rev. xi. 18. and

xix. 2. for the pſalm reſpects the times of the goſpel-diſpenſation, and includes both the firſt coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, and his ſecond coming to judgment; the argument of it with the Syriac verſion is, "the divinity of Chriſt, and a remem-"brance of the judgment;" it is ſaid to be a pſalm or ſong of Aſaph, but is thought to be written by David, and deliverd to Aſaph; for it may be rendered for Aſaph[k]; "and ſo the Targum, by "the hands of Aſaph;" though ſome think it was written after the Babyloniſh captivity; perhaps by ſome perſon whoſe name was Aſaph, or was of the family of him that lived in David's time. Theodoret ſuppoſes it was written in the perſon of the captives in Babylon.

℣. 1. Unto thee, O God, do we give thanks, &c.] Either David and his men, when he was delivered from Saul, and raiſed to the kingdom; or the Jews upon their return from the Babyloniſh captivity; or rather the churches of Chriſt under the goſpel-diſpenſation, for the coming of Chriſt and the bleſſings of grace through him, and in the view of the ſure and certain deſtruction of antichriſt and all the wicked of the earth; yea Chriſt himſelf may be conſidered as at the head of his people, joining with them in thankſgiving, to whom this action is ſometimes aſcribed, Matt. xi. 25, 26, and xxvi. 27. and the rather, ſince he is continued all along ſpeaking to the end of the pſalm: unto thee do we give thanks; which is repeated to ſhew the conſtancy, fervency and ſincerity with which this was performed: it may be rendered, unto thee do we confeſs[l]; ſins committed againſt God, unworthineſs to receive favours from him, and his grace and goodneſs in beſtowing them: for that thy name is near; or rather, for thy name is near[m]; and ſo the words are a reaſon of the above thankſgiving; for they belong not ſo much to what follows after, as to what goes before, ſince the accent Athnach is upon שמך, thy name; and are to be underſtood of God himſelf, for his name is himſelf; who is near to his people, both in relation, being their father, and as to preſence, communion and fellowſhip, which are matter of praiſe and thankſgiving; or his works and word, by which he is known and made manifeſt; his works which are throughout the earth, and ſo near at hand, and his word which is nigh, being in the mouths and in the hearts of his people; or rather his ſon, in whom his name is, his nature and divine perfections: he was at a diſtance in promiſe and prophecy, and only ſeen afar off; after the Babyloniſh captivity, at which time ſome think this pſalm was written, he was near; the prophets Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi ſpeak of him as juſt coming; and when he was made fleſh, and dwelt among men, he was near indeed, ſo as to be found of them, ſeen, heard and handled by them; on which account there was and is reaſon to give thanks to God: thy wondrous works declare; meaning either the miracles of Chriſt, which were proofs and evidences of his being come, and of his being the true Meſſiah; ſee Matt. xi. 3, 4, 5, or the wonderful works done by him, which to do were the principal end of his coming; as, the work of righteouſneſs, the buſineſs of reconciliation, and in general the affair of redemption and ſalvation; all which were amazing inſtances of his power, grace and goodneſs, and which are declared in the everlaſting goſpel by the miniſters of it; for the words, I think, may be better rendered, they declare thy wondrous works[n], or imperſonally, thy wondrous works are declared.

℣. 2. When I ſhall receive the congregation, &c.] Some render it from the Arabic ſignification of the word, the promiſe[o]; the ſpirit promiſed, the gifts of the ſpirit, which Chriſt received for men, and gave to men, whereby he executes the judgment or government of the church committed to him: others the time, ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, Syriac and Arabic verſions, to which agrees the Targum, the word ſignifying a ſet, appointed time, Pſ. cii. 14. and ſo may reſpect the time appointed for the judgment of the world, which when come, Chriſt will execute in a moſt righteous manner, as follows; ſee Acts xvii. 31. but whereas the people of Iſrael met at the door of the tabernacle, which from thence was called Ohel Moed, the tabernacle of the congregation, hence the word is uſed for a congregation, and here deſigns the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born written in heaven, even all the elect of God; theſe were received by Chriſt of his Father in eternity, when he eſpouſed them to himſelf, and undertook the care of them; and they are received by him, one by one, in effectual vocation; and in like manner are they received by him into glory at death; but when they are all gathered in, and are prepared for him as a bride for her huſband, then will he receive them all in a body, and preſent them to himſelf a glorious church during the thouſand years reign; upon which will proceed the judgment of the wicked; ſee Rev. xx. 5, 12. I will judge uprightly; in equity, in ſtrict juſtice, in the moſt righteous manner, rendering to every man according to his works; hence the future judgment is called a righteous one, and ſo is the judge; no injuſtice will be done to men, but the ſtricteſt integrity, uprightneſs and impartiality will be obſerved in pronouncing the ſeveral ſentences on the righteous and on the wicked, and in adjudging them to their ſeveral places and ſtates.

℣. 3. The earth and all the inhabitants thereof are diſſolved, &c.] Or melted[p]; the inhabitants, through fear and dread of the righteous judge, appearing in the clouds of heaven, and of the wrath that is coming on they are deſerving of; and the earth, through fire, when the heavens being on fire ſhall be diſſoved, the elements melt with fervent heat, and the earth and the works therein ſhall be burnt up, 2. Pet. iii. 10, 11, 12. I bear up the pillars of it. Selah; ſo that it ſhall not utterly periſh; for though by the fire at the general conflagration, the heavens and the earth will be ſo melted and diſſolved as to loſe their preſent form, and ſhall be purged and purified from all noxious qualities, the effects of ſin; yet the ſubſtance will remain, out of which will be formed new heavens and a new earth, and this through the power of Chriſt ſuſtaining it, and preſerving it from entire deſtruction or annihilation. R. Obadiah by pillars underſtands in a figurative ſenſe the righteous, for whoſe ſake the world is continued in its being; theſe at the general conflagration will be bore up and preſerved by Chriſt, whom they ſhall meet in the air, even the church, who is the pillar and ground of truth; and not only the miniſters of the goſpel, who are pillars in Chriſt's houſe, but alſo every believer, which is a pillar there, that ſhall never go out, 1 Tim. iii. 15. Gal. ii. 9. Rev. iii. 12. Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret the pillars of the mountains.

℣. 4. I ſaid unto the fools, &c.] To the vain glorioſo's, proud boaſters, mockers and ſcoffers at the day of judgment, and burning of the world: deal not fooliſhly; by glorying in themſelves, boaſting of their riches, and truſting in them; ſinging a requiem to themſelves on account of their abundance, and by putting away the evil day far from them: and to the wicked lift not up the horn; of power, grandeur and wealth, and uſe it to the injury of others; or be ſo elated with it, as to look with diſdain on others; or imagine they ſhall always continue in this exalted ſtate, as antichriſt the horned beaſt does, Rev. xviii. 7. the alluſion is to horned beaſts, particularly harts, which lift up their heads and horns in great pride [p]. the phraſe ſignifies to behave proudly and haughtily.

℣. 5. Lift not up your horn on high, &c.] Or againſt the moſt high [q]; as the little horn, or the beaſt with ten horns, antichriſt does, whoſe look is more ſtout than his fellows, and opens his mouth in blaſphemy againſt God, his name, his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven, Dan. vii. 8, 20. Rev. xviii. 1, 6. ſpeak not with a ſtiff neck; arrogantly, proudly and haughtily: or hard things with a neck [r]; hard ſpeeches againſt Chriſt and his people, with a ſtretched out neck, in an imperious and inſolent manner; for the righteous judge will convince ſuch of their hard ſpeeches, and condemn them for them. Jud. 14, 15.

℣. 6. For promotion cometh neither from the eaſt, nor from the weſt, nor from the ſouth.] It is not from men, from themſelves, or others, or from any quarter under the heavens, but from God; it is he that raiſes men to high places, and ſets them there, which are often ſlippery ones; by him kings reign, they have their crowns and ſcepters, thrones and kingdoms from him; there's is no power but what is of God; riches and honour come of him, and he can take them away when he pleaſes; and therefore men ſhould not be proud, haughty and arrogant: ſome take theſe words to be the words of the fools and wicked, when they ſpeak with a ſtiff neck, either as triumphing over the Meſſiah, his miniſters, cauſe and intereſt, reading the words thus, neither from the eaſt, nor from the weſt, nor from the ſouth, ſhall there be a lifting up [s], or an exaltation; that is, of Chriſt and his people, they are low, and ſhall never riſe more; but in this they are miſtaken, though now the ſon of God is trampled under foot in his perſon and offices, there is a day coming when the Lord, and he alone, ſhall be exalted; though his miniſters and witneſſes propheſy in ſackcloth, and ſhall be ſlain and lye unburied, yet they'll riſe again and aſcend to heaven, to the great terror and aſtoniſhment of thoſe their enemies; though Jacob is ſmall, and it is ſaid by whom ſhall he ariſe? yet he ſhall become great and numerous; the mountain of the Lord's houſe, the church, ſhall be eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills; and this enlargement of Chriſt's kingdom and intereſt ſhall be eaſt, weſt, north and ſouth; or elſe as flattering themſelves that no evil ſhall come to them from any quarter: neither from the eaſt, nor from the weſt, nor from the deſart of the mountains [t], cometh evil; meaning to themſelves, looking upon themſelves as ſecure, and putting the evil day far from them: but there will be an awful and righteous judgment; there is a judge ordained, a day appointed, in which the world will be judged in righteouſneſs, and deſtruction and ruin will come upon the ungodly, and at a time when they are crying, peace, peace; nor ſhall they eſcape; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders the words, for there is no eſcape from the weſt, nor from the deſart of the mountains; taking the word הרים, not to ſignify pro motion, elevation, or a lifting up, as Kimchi and others, whom we follow; but Montanus, and R. Aba obſerve, that the word always ſignifies mountains, but in this place: the Targum is, "for there is none beſides me from the "eaſt to the weſt, nor from the north of the wil-"derneſſes, and from the ſouth the place of the "mountains;" no Meſſiah to be expected from any quarter; ſee Matt. xxiv. 23, 26. no God beſides him, nor any other Saviour, Iſ. xliv. 6, 8. and xlv. 21, 22. nor any other judge, as follows.

℣. 7. But God is the judge, &c.] Or becauſe God is the judge [u]; and ſo this is another reaſon why fools ſhould not deal fooliſhly, nor wicked men lift up the horn, and ſpeak with a ſtiff neck, becauſe there is a judge to whom they are accountable for their words and actions; and this judge is God omniſcient, knows all perſons and things, ſearches the heart and tries the reins, will bring every ſecret thing into judgment, bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and make manifeſt the counſels of the heart; omnipotent, able to do all things, raiſe the dead, call to judgment, bring all before him, paſs the ſentences and execute them; omnipreſent, there is no fleeing from him, nor eſcaping his righteous judgment; holy, juſt and true, who will render to every man according to his works: he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another; he humbles or brings one low, ſuch as are proud, haughty and arrogant; and he exalts another, ſuch as are lowly and humble: this he does in providence, he removes kings, and ſets up kings; puts down the mighty from their ſeats, and exalts them of low degree, Dan. ii. 21. Luke i. 52. and xiv. 11. he has many ways to mortify the proud, by inflicting diſeaſes on their bodies, by ſtripping them of their honour and wealth, and by bringing them into diſgrace among men: and this he does in grace; ſuch as are ſtout-hearted and far from righteouſneſs, and will not ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, he brings them to it; and thoſe whom he makes humble by his grace, he raiſes to a high eſtate, to be kings and prieſts, and to ſit among princes, and to inherit a throne of glory. This might be exemplified in Jews and Gentiles; he has ſtript the one of their privileges, and put them down from their civil and church-ſtate, and raiſed up the other to be his church and people; and alſo in Antichriſt and the true church of Chriſt; he'll ere long put down the one that ſits as a queen, and exalt the other, when ſhe ſhall be as a bride adorned for her huſband, having the glory of God upon her.

℣. 8. For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, &c.] Another reaſon why men ſhould not act haughtily and arrogantly; for by the cup are meant afflictions, calamities and judgments, which are meaſured out in proportion to mens ſins, and are of God's appointing, and in his hands, and at his diſpoſal: and the wine is red; an emblem of the wrath of God, this cup is full of, as it is explained, Rev. xiv. 10. where there is a reference to this paſſage; for it is a cup of fury, of trembling, and of indignation: Iſ. li. 17. Jer. xxv. 15. it is full of mixture; has many ingredients in it, dreadful and ſhocking ones, though it is ſometimes ſaid to be without mixture, Rev. xiv. 10. without any allay, alluding to the mixing of wine with water in the eaſtern countries; ſee Prov. ix. 2. and he poureth out of the ſame; his judgments upon men in this world, in all ages; on ſome more, others leſs, as their ſins call for, or his infinite wiſdom judges meet and proper: but the dregs thereof all the wicked of the earth ſhall wring them out and drink them; the whole cup that God has meaſured out and filled up ſhall be poured out at laſt, and all be drank up; the very dregs of it by the wicked of the world, when they ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction in the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone: this will be the portion of their cup, Pſ. xi. 6.

℣. 9. But I will declare for ever, &c.] Theſe are not the words of the pſalmiſt, but of Chriſt, who is all along ſpeaking in the pſalm; what he would declare is not expreſſed, and is to be ſupplied in ſenſe thus; either that he would declare the wonderful works of God, v. 1. ſo the Targum, his thoughts, mercies and kindneſſes to his people, as in Pſ. lx. 5. or his judgments on his enemies, whom he ſhall paſs ſentence on, which will be for ever, or the name of the Lord, his purpoſes and decrees, his counſel and covenant, his mind and will, his goſpel and the truth of it; ſee Pſ. xxii. 22. I will ſing praiſes to the God of Jacob; the covenant-God of his people, Chriſt's God, and their God; of his ſinging praiſe to him, ſee Pſ. xxii. 22.

℣. 10. All the horns of the wicked alſo will I cut off, &c.] Therefore let them not lift up the horn on high: horns denote the power and authority of wicked men, their kingdoms and ſtates; both Rome pagan and Rome papal are ſaid to have ten horns, which are interpreted of ten kings or kingdoms; and which will be cut off when the vials of God's wrath are poured out on the antichriſtian ſtates; which vials will be filled from the cup which is in the hand of the Lord, Rev. xii. 1. and xiii. 1. and xvii. 12. and xvi. 1. the Jews[b] interpret this of the ten horns of the nations of the world, that ſhall be cut off in future time; and Jarchi particularly of the horns of Eſau, by whom he means Rome, or the Roman empire: but the horns of the righteous ſhall be exalted; either of the righteous one Chriſt, for the word is in the ſingular number; he who is the Lord our righteouſneſs, whoſe power and authority, kingdom and government ſhall be enlarged and increaſed, ſignified by the budding of the horn of David, and the exaltation of the horn of his Meſſiah, 1 Sam. ii. 10. Pſ. cxxxii. 17. or of every one of the righteous, which will be, when the kingdom and dominion, and the greatneſs of the kingdom under the whole heaven ſhall be given to the people of the ſaints of the moſt high, and they ſhall reign with Chriſt on earth at houſand years, Dan. vii. 27. Rev. v. 10. and xx. 5. Kimchi ſays, this will be in the war of Gog and Magog, which is expected by the Jews.

PSAL. LXXVI.

To the chief muſician on Neginoth, a pſalm or ſong of Aſaph.

THE Targum is, "by the hand of Aſaph:" concerning Neginoth; ſee the title of Pſ. iv. this pſalm is generally thought to be written on account of ſome great appearance of God for the Jews, or victory obtained by them over their enemies, either by the Ammonites in the times of David; ſo the firſt part of the Syriac inſcription is, "when Rabbah of the children of Ammon was "deſtroyed;" ſee 2 Sam. xii. 26—31. or in the time of Jehoſhaphat, when they came up againſt him, and were in a wonderful manner defeated, which occaſioned great joy and thankfulneſs, 2 Chron. xx. 1—29. The Septuagint verſion entitles the pſalm, an ode againſt the Aſſyrian, in which it is followed by the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions; and it is the opinion of many, that it was written on account of the defeat of Sennacherib, and his army, which came up againſt Jeruſalem in the times of Hezekiah, and was deſtroyed by an Angel in one night, and ſo ſlept their ſleep, and a dead one, with which agree, ℣. 5, 6. ſee 2 Kings xix. 35. ſo Arama and Theodoret; Jarchi gives this reaſon for ſuch an interpretation, becauſe we don't find that any enemy fell at or near Jeruſalem, but he, as is ſaid, ℣. 3. there brake he the arrows of the bow, &c. nor was one arrow ſuffered to be thrown into the city, 2 Kings xix. 32. Kimchi and Ben Melach interpret it of the war of Gog and Magog, yet to come; and the latter part of the Syriac inſcription is, "moreover it ſhews the vengeance of the "judgment of Chriſt againſt the ungodly;" and indeed it ſeems to point out the latter day when Chriſt ſhall deſtroy the antichriſtian kings and ſtates, and ſave his own people, and ſhall be feared and praiſed; as the former part of it may reſpect his incarnation, appearance and dwelling in the land of Judea, and ſo the whole is of the ſame argument with the preceding pſalm.

℣. 1. In Judah is God known, &c.] God is to be known, and is made known by his works of creation, and by his providences, and particularly by his judgments in the whole world, even among the Gentiles; and he was made known by his word and ordinances, his ſtatutes and his jugdments among the Jews, to whom theſe were ſpecially given; and he is made known by his Spirit, and in his Son in a ſpiritual and ſaving manner to ſuch who are Jews inwardly, or the true circumciſion: moreover this may be underſtood of Chriſt, God manifeſt in the fleſh, and regard his appearance in human nature in the land of Judea; he was according to prophecy of the tribe of Judah as man, and was born in Bethlehem, a city in that tribe, where David was, and of the family of David, that formerly lived there; and he was made known by John the baptiſt, who came preaching in the wilderneſs of Judea, and by his being baptized of him in Jordan; by his own miniſtry, and miracles in that land, and by the preaching of his apoſtles in the ſeveral cities of it, he was known in perſon to many; and by the fame of his doctrine and miracles to more, though ſeemingly but to few: his name is great in Iſrael; he himſelf is great, for his name is himſelf, being the great God, and poſſeſſed of all divine perfections; his offices and titles are great, he is a great ſaviour, a great high-prieſt, a great prophet riſen up in Iſrael, a great king, and the great ſhepherd of the ſheep; his works which make him known are great, his works of creation and providence, in which he is jointly concerned with his father; the mighty works he did on earth, and eſpecially the great work of our redemption; and his goſpel, which is called his name, Acts ix. 15. brings glad tidings of great and good things; by means of which and the wonderful things he did in the land of Iſrael, his fame was ſpread about in it, for he was ſent only to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; here his marvellous works were done, and his goſpel firſt preached, which afterwards went into all the earth.

℣. 2. In Salem alſo is his tabernacle, &c.] That is, in Jeruſalem, as the Targum expreſſes it, where the tabernacle of Moſes, and the ark of the covenant were, and afterwards the temple of Solomon, which the Targum here calls the houſe of the ſanctuary; and may be interpreted of the human nature of Chriſt, the true tabernacle which God pitched, and not man, in which the divine Word when he was made fleſh dwelt or tabernacled among the Jews at Jeruſalem, and in other parts of Judea, Heb. viii. 2. Joh. i. 14. Salem or Jeruſalem often ſignifies the church of God in goſpel-times, in the midſt of which Chriſt reſides, and where he grants his gracious preſence, Heb. xii. 22—24. and in the new Jeruſalem, the tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell among them, Rev. xxi. 2, 3. The Septuagint tranſlate the word, and render it in peace, as in Heb. vii. 2. the God of peace dwells among thoſe that live in peace, 2 Cor. xiii. 11. and his dwelling-place in Zion; where the ark was brought by David, and the temple was built by Solomon, into which, as rebuilt by Zerubbabel, Chriſt came, and here he preached; a figure of the church, which is his habitation.

℣. 3. There brake he the arrows of the bow, &c.] The Targum is, "there brake he the arrows and the bows of the people that make war;" the word רשפי tranſlated arrows ſignifies ſparks or coals of fire; ſee Job v. 7. Cant. viii. 6. and is uſed of arrows, becauſe they fly ſwiftly, as ſparks do, or becauſe of their brightneſs, or becauſe fiery; ſo we read of the fiery darts of Satan, Eph. vi. 16. and perhaps they may be meant here: when Chriſt our Lord ſuffered near Jeruſalem, he ſpoiled principalities and powers, and broke their ſtrength and might, and made peace by the blood of his croſs, in which he triumphed over them; for the deſtroying of theſe inſtruments of war with what follow: the ſhield, and the ſword and the battel, is expreſſive of making wars to ceaſe, and cauſing peace; and may include the peace which was all the world over at the birth of Chriſt, and was foretold and expreſſed in much ſuch language as here, Zech. ix. 9, 10. and alſo that which was made by his ſufferings and death, and which was publiſhed in his goſpel by his apoſtles, whom he ſent forth unarmed, whoſe weapons were not carnal but ſpiritual; and likewiſe the ſpiritual peace he gives to his people, quenching the fiery darts of Satan, and delivering them from the archers that ſhoot at them, and ſorely grieve them; as well as that peace which ſhall be in the world and churches in the latter day; ſee Pſ. xlvi. 11. of the word Selah, ſee the note on Pſ. iii. 2.

℣. 4. Thou art more glorious and excellent than the mountains of prey;] Which is to be underſtood not of Zion, as ſome interpret it; though it is true that the mountain of Zion, or the church of Chriſt, his kingdom and intereſt, ſhall in the latter day be more glorious and excellent than all other mountains, kingdoms, and intereſts; ſee Iſ. ii. 2. but of God or Chriſt before ſpoken of; and ſo the Targum, "bright, to be feared art thou, O God, to be praiſed from the houſe of thy ſanctuary." Chriſt, who is God over all, is bright[z], ſplendid, and glorious, in his divine nature, being the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon: and excellent, in his office as mediator, and in all his works as ſuch; and in human nature, as he is exalted at his Father's right hand, far above all principality, power, might, and dominion, ſignified here by mountains of prey: the kingdoms of this world, becauſe of their eminence and ſtrength, are compared to mountains; ſee Iſ. xli. 15. Jer. l. 25. Zech. iv. 7. and may be called mountains of prey, in alluſion to mountains inhabited by beaſts of prey, as lions and leopards; ſee Cant. iv. 8. becauſe obtained and poſſeſſed by tyranny and oppreſſion. Chriſt is more glorious and excellent than the kings of the earth; he is higher than they, and is king of kings; he is richer than they, the earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof, the world, and they that dwell therein; he is wiſer than they, by him kings reign, and princes decree juſtice; he is more powerful than they, and all muſt ſubmit to him, and all will ſerve him hereafter; and his kingdom will be greater than theirs, more large, and more laſting; it will be an everlaſting one, and reach from ſea to ſea, and even to the ends of the earth.

℣. 5. The ſtout-hearted are ſpoiled, &c.] The Aſſyrian army, its officers and generals, that came up againſt Jeruſalem, with great reſolution and courage, and with daring impiety, and blaſphemy againſt the God of heaven, as Rabſhakeh, and others; theſe were ſpoiled and their armour and riches became a prey to thoſe they thought to have made a prey of. So principalities and powers were ſpoiled by Chriſt upon the croſs, and Satan the ſtrong man armed, has in the converſion of a ſinner his armour taken from him, and his ſpoils divided by him that is ſtronger than he; and ſuch as are ſtout-hearted, and far from true righteouſneſs, are ſtripped of their own, and made willing in the day of Chriſt's power upon them, to ſubmit to his; and as for antichriſt, whoſe look is more ſtout than his fellows, that exalts himſelf above all that is called God, and opens his mouth in blaſphemy againſt him and his followers, he ſhall be deſtroyed with the breath of Chriſt's mouth, and the brightneſs of his coming: or the ſtout-hearted have ſpoiled ſpoiled themſelves[a]; as the Midianites did, or gave themſelves for a prey; ſo the Targum, "the ſtout-hearted have caſt off from them the weapons of war;" threw away their armour, and ran away, ſuch of them as were not deſtroyed by the angel. It is obſervable, that the Hebrew word tranſlated ſpoiled, is in the Syriac form: they have ſlept their ſleep; the ſleep of death, as did the Aſſyrians when ſmitten by the angel, which was done in the night, when probably they were faſt aſleep, and ſo never awoke more, as the Babylonians, Jer. li. 57. So Jezebel, or the Romiſh antichriſt, ſhall be caſt into a bed, and her children killed with death, Rev. ii. 22, 23. Death is often in ſcripture ſignified by a ſleep, both the death of the righteous and of the wicked; but there is a difference between the one and the other; wherefore the death of the wicked here is called their ſleep: the one ſleep in Jeſus, in his arms, and under his guardianſhip, the other not; to the one death is a true and proper reſt from toil and labour, to the other only a ceſſation from doing miſchief, Job iii. 17. the one reſt in hope of a glorious reſurrection, the other not; the one will awake in Chriſt's likeneſs, and to everlaſting life; the other in the image of Satan, and to everlaſting ſhame and contempt: and none of the men of might have found their hands; none of the valiant ſoldiers in the Aſſyrian army could find their hands to fight their enemies, or defend themſelves; as men in a deep ſleep can't find their hands to do any thing, and are as if they had none, and ſtill leſs in a dead ſleep. The Targum is, they "were not able to lay hold on their armour with their hands." This was the caſe of them that were killed; and as for thoſe that remained alive, they were ſtruck with ſuch a panic, that their hearts could not endure, nor their hands be ſtrong when God thus dealt with them; and ſo it will be with the antichriſtian army at the battle of Armageddon; and ſo it is with the wicked at death, they can't find their hands ſo as to prevent it; and when it has ſeized upon them, they can't find their hands to do any more miſchief.

℣. 6. At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, &c.] The God of Jacob perſonally, and of his poſterity, the children of Iſrael, and of the church often ſo called; who rebukes his people in love, but his enemies with furious rebukes, with rebukes in flames of fire; with ſuch he rebukes the heathen, deſtroys the wicked, and puts out their name for ever: both the chariot and horſe are caſt into a dead ſleep; that is, the riders in chariots and on horſes; ſuch there were doubtleſs in the Aſſyrian army, it being uſual to have ſuch in great armies. Kimchi obſerves, that the word נרדם, tranſlated caſt into a dead ſleep, is in the ſingular number, and interprets it of the king, the head of the men of might; but Sennacherib, king of Aſſyria, was not ſlain, he departed to his own country; wherefore he applies it to Gog and Magog, the chief prince of Meſhec and Tubal, Ezek. xxxix. 1. and may very well be underſtood of the head of the apoſtacy, the king of the bottomleſs pit, the beaſt or falſe prophet, who being deſtroyed, the fleſh of his captains and horſemen ſhall be the food of the fowls of the air, at the ſupper of the great God, Rev. xix. 17, 18, 19, 20.

℣. 7. Thou even thou art to be feared, &c.] By his own people with reverence and godly fear, becauſe of his greatneſs and goodneſs; and to be dreaded by his enemies; which ſeems to be the ſenſe here, as appears by what follows: and who may ſtand in thy ſight, when once thou art angry? or from the moment thou art angry[b]; ſo the Targum, from the time, and Jarchi, from the hour; that is, as ſoon as ever his anger begins, when it is kindled but a little, and how much leſs when it burns in its full ſtrength; there is no ſtanding before his juſtice, and at his judgment-ſeat, with boldneſs and confidence, and ſo as to ſucceed, or come off acquitted, without having on his righteouſneſs; and much leſs is there any ſtanding before his wrath and fury, when his hand takes hold on judgment to execute it; ſee Nah. i. 6. Rev. vi. 16, 17.

℣. 8. Thou didſt cauſe judgment to be heard from heaven, &c.] When an angel was ſent down from heaven, and deſtroyed the Aſſyrian army, a judgment of God upon them; at which time ſome think there was a violent clap of thunder, which is the voice of God: and it may refer to the judgments which God has decreed to execute on the antichriſtian ſtates, the ſeven vials of his wrath he'll pour upon them; for all decrees, as Aben Ezra on the place obſerves, come from heaven; or to the laſt judgment, when Chriſt the judge ſhall deſcend from heaven, the voice of the arch-angel ſhall be heard, the laſt trumpet ſhall ſound, the dead in their graves ſhall hear it, and riſe and ſtand before the judgment-ſeat, and hear the ſentence pronounced: the earth feared and was ſtill, or trembled and was quiet[c]; that is, again: ſome think there was an earthquake when the angel ſmote the Aſſyrian camp, but was quickly over. It may regard the panic the other nations were in when they heard of it, and therefore were ſtill and quiet, and never offered to give the Iſraelites any diſturbance. Some underſtand this of the remainder of the army that eſcaped with Sennacherib; theſe were ſeized with fear, and quickly withdrew, and ſilently departed into their own land. Aben Ezra obſerves it as the ſenſe of ſome, the earth feared, theſe are the wicked; and was ſtill, they are the righteous; ſo the Targum, "the land of the people feared, the land of Iſrael was ſtill;" reference may be had to the conſternation, fear, and dread, that will fall on them that eſcape the judgments inflicted on the antichriſtian party, Rev. xi. 13. and the fear and ſilence that will attend the laſt and awful judgment; ſee Zech. ii. 13.

℣. 9. When God aroſe to judgment, &c.] He may ſometimes ſeem to be aſleep, and to defer judgment, but he will ariſe and haſten it in his own time, and will take vengeance on all his and his people's enemies, as he did upon the army of the Aſſyrians, and will upon the antichriſtian powers, and upon all the wicked, and at the ſame time will ſave his own people, as follows: to ſave all the meek of the earth, Selah; the quiet in the land, who are afflicted in this world, deſpiſed by the men of it, are lowly and humble, and mean in their own eyes; theſe the Lord takes notice of and care for them, he'll beautify them with ſalvation; theſe, all of them, even every one of them, ſhall be ſaved in him with an everlaſting ſalvation: this verſe is by ſome connected with the preceding; ſo Kimchi, the earth feared and was ſtill, when God aroſe to judgment, &c. and by others, as R. Moſes in Aben Ezra with the following.

℣. 10. Surely, the wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee, &c.] Either the wrath, which comes from God, and has man for its object; and that either as it regards the people of God, ſo the Targum, "when thou art angry with thy people, thou haſt mercy on them, and they ſhall confeſs unto thy name;" or praiſe thee; ſee Iſ. xii. 1. they are deſerving of the wrath of God, but are not appointed to it, and are delivered from it by Chriſt, who bore it for them as their repreſentative; by which as the juſtice of God is glorified, it is matter of praiſe to them; when the law enters into their conſciences, it works wrath there, which being removed by the application of pardoning grace, is an occaſion of praiſe to God; and whereas under afflictive diſpenſations, they apprehend and deprecate the wrath of God, when they are delivered from them, their mouths are filled with ſongs of praiſe: or, as it regards wicked men, ſo it came forth upon the old world, and drowned it, upon Sodom and Gomorrah, and reduced them to aſhes, upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians, in the plagues inflicted on them; all which turned to the praiſe and glory of God; of the laſt inſtance, ſee Rom. ix. 17. and Exod. xv. 1. it came upon the wicked Jews to the uttermoſt in the deſtruction of their nation, city, and temple, and upon Rome pagan, in the entire demolition of it as ſuch; and ſo it will come upon Rome papal, which will be attended with great joy, praiſe, and thankſgiving in the ſaints; ſee Rev. xi. 17, 18. and xv. 1, 2, 3, 4. and xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2. or elſe this is to be underſtood of the wrath which is in man, and comes forth from him, and has him for its ſubject; which though it don't work the righteouſneſs of God, yet the righteouſneſs of God is glorified both in checking and puniſhing it; and the more it rages and burns againſt the people of God, the greater reaſon have they to praiſe the Lord when delivered from it; ſee Pſ. cxxiv. 1, 2, 3. ſo the wrath of the Aſſyrian monarch, and of railing and blaſpheming Rabſhakeh gave the people of the Jews a greater occaſion to praiſe the Lord for their wonderful deliverance; ſo the wrath of men againſt Chriſt, his church and people, his miniſters, goſpel, and ordinances, will all turn to the glory of his name, when in the iſſue it will be ſeen that theſe are eſtabliſhed, maugre all the rage and malice of men: the remainder of wrath ſhalt thou reſtrain; that which remains in a man's breaſt, he has not yet vented, God can and does keep in, that it may not break forth; this very likely was verified in Sennacherib, who might breathe revenge, and threaten the Jews with a ſecond viſit; but was prevented by a ſudden and violent death. Some read the words, the remainder of wraths thou wilt gird[d]; that is, thoſe that remain and are not deſtroyed through the rage and fury of men, God will gird with ſtrength to defend themſelves, and reſiſt their enemies that may riſe up againſt them, or with gladneſs, becauſe of deliverance from them; ſee Pſ. xviii. 32. and xxx. 11, 12. Some underſtand this of the wrath of God, which he has in reſerve and ſtore for wicked men, and render the words thus, with the remainder of wrath wilt thou gird thyſelf[e]; and ſo come forth like an armed man, clad with zeal, and arrayed with the garments of wrath and vengeance; ſee Iſ. lix. 17, 18.

℣. 11. Vow and pay unto the Lord your God, &c.] Not monaſtic vows, which the papiſts would infer from theſe and ſuch like words; nor ceremonial ones, but ſpiritual ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving, ſuch as men ſometimes make in times of diſtreſs, or when delivered, Pſ. lxvi. 13, 14. Jon. i. 16. and which when vowed ought to be paid, Eccl. v. 4, 5. not to creatures, angels, or ſaints, but to God, from whom the mercy deſired muſt be expected, and from whence it comes, Pſ. l. 14. theſe words are an addreſs to ſuch who were delivered from wrath, either of God or man: let all that be round about him; who ſurround the throne of his grace, gather together in his houſe to attend his word and ordinances, who are his ſervants, and conſtantly and faithfully adhere to him; among whom he grants his preſence, they are near to him, and he to them. It is a periphraſis of the aſſembly of the ſaints; ſee Pſ. lxxxix. 7. The Targum is, "all ye that dwell round about his ſanctuary;" the alluſion is to the ſituation of the camp of Iſrael, and the tabernacle in the wilderneſs, Numb. ii. compare with this Rev. iv. 4. bring preſents unto him that ought to be feared, or to the fear[f], which is one of the names of God; ſee Gen. xxxi 42. and who is and ought to be the object of the fear and reverence of men; the preſents to be brought to him are the ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe, yea the whole perſons, the ſouls, and bodies of men; ſee Pſal. lxxii. 10. compare with this 2 Chron. xxxii. 22, 23. The Targum is, "let them bring offerings into the houſe of the ſanctuary of the terrible one;" of him that is to be feared, with a godly fear by good men, and to be dreaded by evil men, as follows.

℣. 12. He ſhall cut off the ſpirit of princes, &c.] The pride of their ſpirits, as the Targum, humble their proud ſpirits, and bring them down; or diſpirit them, take away their courage from them, upon which they flee apace to rocks and mountains to cover them; or confound them, blaſt their ſchemes, and carry their counſel headlong, and even take away their breath, or life; which he can as eaſily do, as a man can cut off a bunch of grapes from the vine, as the word[g] here uſed ſignifies; the deſtruction of the wicked is expreſſed by cutting down the vine of the earth, and caſting it into the wine-preſs of God's wrath, Rev. xiv. 17, 18, 19. he is terrible to the kings of the earth; as he was to the king of Aſſyria, when he ſent his angel, and deſtroyed his army; and as he has been to others in all ages, ſo he will be to the kings of the earth that have committed fornication with the whore of Rome, who will be in the utmoſt panic at the time of her deſtruction, Rev. xviii. 9, 10. and who will themſelves be overcome by the lamb, Rev. xvi. 14, 16. and xvii. 12, 14. and xix. 19, 20, 21. The Targum is, he is to be feared above all the kings of the earth.

PSAL. LXXVII.

To the chief muſician, to Jeduthun, a pſalm of Aſaph.

JEDUTHUN was the name of the chief muſician, to whom this pſalm was inſcribed and ſent; ſee 1 Chron. xxv. 1, 3, 6. though Aben Ezra takes it to be the firſt word of ſome ſong, to the tune of which this was ſung; and the Midraſh interprets it of the ſubject of the pſalm, which is followed by Jarchi, who explains it thus, "concerning the decrees and judgments which paſſed upon Iſrael;" that is, in the time of their preſent captivity, to which, as he, Kimchi, and Arama think, the whole pſalm belongs. Some interpreters refer it to the affliction of the Jews in Babylon, ſo Theodoret; or under Ahaſuerus, or Antiochus; and others to the great and laſt diſtreſs of the church under Antichriſt; though it ſeems to expreſs the particular caſe of the pſalmiſt, and which is common to other ſaints.

℣. 1. I cried unto God with my voice, &c.] Which is to be underſtood of prayer, and that vocal, and which is importunate and fervent, being made in diſtreſs; ſee Pſ. iii. 4. or my voice was unto God[h], and I cried; it was directed to him, and expreſſed in a very loud and clamorous way: even unto God with my voice; or my voice was unto God; which is repeated to ſhew, that he prayed again and again, with great eagerneſs and earneſtneſs, his caſe being a very afflicted one: and he gave ear unto me; his prayer was not without ſucceſs; God is a God hearing and anſwering prayer, according to his promiſe, Pſ. l. 15.

℣. 2. In the day of my trouble I ſought the Lord, &c.] Not the creature, for help, and creature-amuſements to drive away trouble, but the Lord, in private by prayer and ſupplication; a time of trouble is a time for prayer, Jam. v. 13. all men have their trouble, but the people of God more eſpecially; and there are ſome particular times in which they have more than uſual, and then it may be ſaid to be a day of trouble with them; which ſometimes ariſes from themſelves, the ſtrength of their corruptions, the weakneſs of their graces, their backwardneſs to duties, or poor performance of them; ſometimes from others, from the prophaneneſs or perſecutions of the men of the world, from the heretical notions or wicked lives of profeſſors; ſometimes from the temptations of Satan, and at other times from the Lord himſelf more immediately, by his withdrawing his preſence from them, or by laying his afflicting hand upon them; but let the trouble come from what quarter it may, it is always right to ſeek the Lord. Some think reference is had to the time of trouble mentioned in Dan. xii. 1. my ſore ran in the night; my ſtroke, or wound[i]; ſo Kimchi interprets it; the wound that was made in his ſoul, and the pain and anguiſh, grief, and trouble, which flowed from it; ſee Jer. vi. 7. though the word may be literally rendered my hand[k]; and the ſenſe is, either that his hand flowed or was wet with wiping his eyes, or with the tears that flowed from his eyes, which ran down to his fingers ends; ſo the Targum, "in the night my eye dropped with tears;" or rather, that his hand was ſtretched out, as waters, that are poured out and run, are ſpread, that is, in prayer; the ſtretching out of the hand being a prayer-geſture: and ceaſed not; was not remiſs and feeble, or was not let down, as Moſes's, Exod. xvii. 11, 12. it denotes the conſtancy of prayer, and his continuance in it; he prayed without ceaſing: my ſoul refuſed to be comforted; ſuch was the greatneſs of his diſtreſs, like that of Jacob's and Rachel's, Gen. xxxvii. 35. Jer. xxxi. 15. it is right to refuſe comfort and peace, which men ſpeak to themſelves upon the falſe foundation of their own merit and works; or any but what comes from the God of all comfort, and through Chriſt, in whom is all ſolid conſolation, and by his Spirit, who is the comforter; but it is wrong to refuſe any that comes from hence, and by means of the promiſes, the word and ordinances, and miniſters of the goſpel, or Chriſtian friends; this ſhews the ſtrength of unbelief.

℣. 3. I remembered God, and was troubled, &c.] Either the mercy, grace, and goodneſs of God, as Jarchi; how ungrateful he had been to him, how ſadly he had requited him, how unthankful and unholy he was, notwithſtanding ſo much kindneſs; and when he called this to mind, it troubled him; or when he remembered the grace and goodneſs of God to him in time paſt, and how it was with him now, that it was not with him as then; this gave him uneaſineſs, and ſet him a praying and crying, that it might be with him as heretofore, Job xxix. 2, 3, 4. or rather he remembered the greatneſs and majeſty of God, his power and his juſtice, his purity and holineſs, and himſelf as a worm, a poor weak creature, ſinful duſt and aſhes, not able to ſtand before him; he conſidered him not as his father and friend, but as an angry judge, incenſed againſt him, and demanding ſatisfaction of him: I complained; of ſin and ſorrow, of affliction and diſtreſs: or I prayed, or meditated[l]; he thought on his caſe, and prayed over it, and poured out his complaint unto God, yet found no relief: and my ſpirit was overwhelmed; covered with grief and ſorrow, preſſed down with affliction, ready to ſink and faint under it: Selah; ſee Pſ. iii. 2.

℣. 4. Thou holdeſt mine eyes waking, &c.] Or, the watches, or rather, keepers of the eyes[m]; the eye-brows, which protect the eyes; theſe were held, ſo that he could not ſhut them, and get any ſleep; ſo R. Moſes Haccohen interprets the words, as Jarchi obſerves; and ſo the Targum, "thou holdeſt "the brows of my eyes;" a perſon in trouble, when he can get ſome ſleep, it interrupts his ſorrow, weakens it at leaſt, if it does not put a ſtop to it; wherefore it is a great mercy to have ſleep, and that refreſhing, Pſ. cxxvii. 1. but to have this denied, and to have weariſome nights, and be in continual toſſing to and fro is very diſtreſſing : I am ſo troubled that I cannot ſpeak ; his ſpirits were ſo ſunk with wearineſs, and want of ſleep in the night, that he could not ſpeak in the morning ; or his heart was ſo full with ſorrow, that he could not utter himſelf ; or it was ſo great, that he could not expreſs it ; or his thoughts were ſuch, that he durſt not declare them ; or he was ſo ſtraitened and ſhut up in himſelf, that he could not go on ſpeaking unto God in prayer.

℣. 5. I have conſidered the days of old, &c.] Either the former part of his life, the various occurrences of it, how it had been with him in time paſt, what experience he had had of the divine goodneſs ; ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, I have conſidered my days of old ; or the preceding age, and what has happened in that, which his anceſtors had acquainted him with ; or rather many ages paſt, from the days of Adam to the then preſent time ; at leaſt it may include the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt, their paſſage through the Red Sea and wilderneſs, the times of the judges, and what befel them in their days, and how they were delivered out of their troubles ; as appears from the latter part of the pſalm, and with which agrees the following clauſe : the years of antient times ; or, of ages [n] ; of times long ago paſt ; it is very uſeful to read the hiſtory of the bible, with reſpect to antient times, and ſo the eccleſiaſtical hiſtory of ages paſt, and obſerve the faith and dependence of the Lord's people upon him, and their deliverance out of trouble by him ; which may be a means of ſtrengthening faith in him, and of relief under preſent trials ; but frequently the goodneſs of former times is only obſerved as an aggravation of the badneſs of the preſent ones, and of trouble in them ; ſee Eccl. vii. 10. the Targum interprets the whole of happy days and times, paraphraſing it thus, "I have mentioned the good days which were of old, the good years which were of ages paſt."

℣. 6. I call to remembrance my ſong in the night, &c.] What had been an occaſion of praiſing the Lord with a ſong, and which he had ſung in the night-ſeaſons, when he was at leiſure, his thoughts free, and he retired from company ; or it now being night with him, he endeavoured to recollect what had been matter of praiſe and thankfulneſs to him, and tried to ſing one of thoſe ſongs now, in order to remove his melancholy thoughts and fears, but all to no purpoſe : I commune with mine own heart ; or meditate [o] with it ; looked into his own heart, put queſtions to it, and converſed with himſelf, in order to find out the reaſon of the preſent diſpenſation : and my ſpirit made diligent ſearch ; into the cauſes of his troubles, and ways and means of deliverance out of them, and what would be the iſſue and conſequence of them ; the reſult of all which was as follows.

℣. 7. Will the Lord caſt off for ever ? &c.] The Syriac verſion of this, and the two following verſes, is not by way of interrogation but affirmation : the Lord hath forgotten me for ever, nor will he, &c. and ſo expreſſes the language of unbelief ; but the Arabic verſion, in connexion with the laſt words, with which it begins this verſe, is, and I weighed in my ſpirit, whether the Lord, &c. and ſo makes it a ſubject of enquiry, and at moſt of queſtioning or doubting. The Targum, different from either, begins this and each of the verſes thus, is it poſſible that the Lord, &c. ſuggeſting that it was not poſſible that he ſhould do this and the other, and ſo ſpeaks the language of faith. Unbelief in the pſalmiſt ſaid, the Lord will caſt me, or his people off, for either or both may be underſtood ; which ſo appears when God hides his face, or does not immediately ariſe to help ; or ſuffers the enemy to prevail, and difficulties and diſcouragements to obtain and continue ; but faith ſays, he will not caſt off his people whom he foreknew, from having a ſhare in his affections, from being intereſted in his covenant, from his ſight, and being the objects of his care, from enjoying the privileges of his houſe and family, or ſo as to periſh eternally : and will he be favourable no more ? or bear goodwill, ſhew kindneſs, be propitious, graciouſly accept as the word [p] ſignifies ; this queſtion ſuppoſes that he had been favourable, and bore a good will, as the gracious purpoſes and kind intentions of his heart, the well ſtored covenant of his grace, and the miſſion of his ſon to be a ſaviour, ſhew ; that he has been propitious through the propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt, and has accepted of the perſons and ſervices of his people, and indulged them with near communion with himſelf ; but that now he is not, he having withdrawn the ſenſe of his love, and the communications of his divine favours ; and unbelief ſays he'll be ſo no more, and adds, I am cut off from before his eyes, and am as the ſlain, that are remembered no more ; and ſhall go ſoftly all my years, in the bitterneſs of my ſoul : but faith ſays, he'll be favourable again ; that joy will come in the morning ; that the Lord will hear, and be a light unto the ſouls of his people, though in darkneſs ; and will bring to the light, and cauſe to behold his righteouſneſs.

℣. 8. Is his mercy clean gone for ever, &c.] Or his grace [q] ; and mercy is no other than grace to objects in miſery ; unbelief ſays it is gone, that no more will be ſhewn, and that the treaſures of it are exhauſted ; but faith ſays, it is not gone, and obſerves that God is the God of all grace, is rich in mercy, and abundant in goodneſs ; that his Son is full of grace and truth, and ſo is the covenant ; and that though there is an abundance of it given in converſion, and there are continual ſupplies of it afterwards ; yet this grace is ſtill ſufficient, and this mercy abundant ; ſalvation is by it, as for millions paſt, ſo for millions preſent and to come ; the mercy of God is new every morning, it endures for ever, it is from everlaſting to everlaſting : doth his promiſe fail for evermore ? or word [r] ; his words of conſolation, as Kimchi interprets it ; the ſenſe may be, will he ſpeak never a word of comfort more ? unbelief ſays he will not, but faith ſays he will ; and that though he brings into the wilderneſs, yet he'll ſpeak comfortably there ; and as he anſwered the angel of the covenant with good and comfortable words, ſo he orders his miniſters to ſpeak, and by them he does ſpeak comfortably to his people : or in general, the word of the goſpel is meant ; which though it may be ſometimes ſcarce and rare, and there may be few preachers of it ; yet it lives and abides for ever, it is the everlaſting goſpel ; or in particular, the promiſe or promiſes of the goſpel : faith ſays, not one of theſe ſhall fail, grounding it upon the ability of God, and his power to perform; and upon his faithfulneſs, which he will never ſuffer to fail; and the promiſes of God are ſo far from failing for evermore, that they never fail at all; there never was any inſtance of any; not one of the good things which God has ſpoken of, from the creation of the world to this preſent time, have ever failed; the promiſes are yea and amen in Chriſt; ſee Joſh. xxiii. 14. 2 Cor. i. 20. The Targum interprets it differently of his evil word being fulfilled on every generation.

℣. 9. Hath God forgotten to be gracious, &c.] He has not, is it poſſible that he ſhould? as the Targum; it is not; he cannot forget the purpoſes of his grace and mercy, nor the covenant and promiſes of it, nor his people the objects of it; and much leſs can he forget his grace and mercy itſelf, ſo agreeable to his nature, what he delights in, and which he has proclaimed in Chriſt: hath he in anger ſhut up his tender mercies? ſelah; as an avaritious man ſhuts up his hand, and will not communicate liberally; or as the ſea is ſhut up with doors, that its waters may not overflow; no, the mercies of God are not reſtrained, though unbelief ſays they are, at leaſt queries if they are not, Iſ. lxiii. 15. but faith ſays they flow freely through Chriſt, and the people of God are crowned with loving kindneſs and tender mercies; God gives liberally, and upbraideth not; and though he may hide his face in a little ſeeming wrath for a moment, yet with great mercies will he gather, and with everlaſting kindneſs will he have mercy.

℣. 10. And I ſaid, this is my infirmity, &c.] Referring either to what he had ſaid in the preceding verſes; and which is to be conſidered either as checking and correcting himſelf for what he had ſaid, and acknowledging his evil in it; and it is as if he had ſaid, this is a ſin againſt God, that I am guilty of in queſtioning his love, and diſbelieving his promiſes; it is an iniquity I am prone unto, a ſin that eaſily beſets me; it flows from the corruption of my nature, and the plague of my heart, and ſhews a diſtempered mind; it is owing to the weakneſs of my faith and judgment; I have ſaid this raſhly, and in haſte, without well weighing and conſidering things, and I am ſorry for it, I'll ſtop and proceed no further: or elſe as comforting and encouraging himſelf in his melancholy circumſtances; and the ſenſe is, this is an infirmity, an affliction and trouble that I am at preſent exerciſed with; but it is but a temporal one, it will not always laſt; I ſhall get over it, and out of it; it is a ſickneſs, but not to death; and it is mine, what is allotted to me; every man has his affliction and croſs, and this is mine, and I muſt bear it patiently; ſee Jer. x. 19. or elſe this refers to what follows, which ſome render, the changes of the right hand of the moſt high[s]; and the meaning may be, this is my affliction and trouble, that there are changes in the right hand of the moſt high; that is, that that hand which uſed to be exerted in his favour, and againſt his enemies, was now withdrawn, and hid in his boſom; ſee Pſ. lxxiv. 11. and that which liberally diſtributed favours to him was now laid upon him in an afflictive way; and to this ſenſe is the Targum, "this is my infirmity, the change of the power of the right hand, (or the powerful right hand) of the moſt high;" though another Targum is, "this is my prayer, &c. the years of the end from the right hand;" and Aben Ezra makes mention of ſome as ſo interpreting the firſt clauſe, to which De Dieu agrees, who renders the whole, and I ſaid, this is my prayer, that the right hand of the moſt high might be changed; that is, that his diſpenſations of providence might be changed; that he would bring him out of theſe afflicted, ſorrowful, and melancholy circumſtances, into a more comfortable one: as theſe words may be underſtood as what the pſalmiſt comforted himſelf with, that there are changes of the right hand of the moſt high; I have been greatly troubled and diſtreſſed, and I have been ſo weak as to call in queſtion the mercy and favour of God, and his promiſes to me, which I own is my ſin; but I have reaſon to believe it will not be always thus with me, God will take off his hand, it ſhall not always lie thus heavy upon me; though he cauſe grief, he will have compaſſion, and turn again to me; there will be a change, and I'll wait till that comes: but Kimchi thinks the word אזכור I will remember, which ſtands at the beginning of the next verſe, belongs to that and this; and is to be ſupplied here, as it is in our tranſlation, and interprets the whole to the like ſenſe; but I will remember the years of the right hand of the moſt high; which the pſalmiſt propoſed to do as a means to remove his doubts, deſpondency, and unbelief, and to relieve and ſtrengthen his faith; as that God was the moſt high in all the earth, and above his enemies; that he had a right hand of power, which in years paſt had been exerted on the behalf of his people, and on his behalf; which was not impaired and ſhortened, but the ſame as ever, and ſooner or later would be again uſed in his favour.

℣. 11. I will remember the works of the Lord, &c.] His works of creation and providence, his government of the world, and particularly his regard for his own people, and his preſervation of them, eſpecially the people of Iſrael, whom he had not caſt off, nor would; and ſo might ſerve to ſtrengthen his faith, that he would not caſt him off for ever: and in like manner, what God has done for his people in a way of grace, in their redemption by Chriſt, and in a work of grace upon their ſouls, may be improved to the removing of doubts and fears, and unbelief, and for the ſtrengthening of faith: there is a double reading of this clauſe, that in the margin is followed by us; but in the text it is written, I will cauſe to remember; that is, I will declare and ſhew forth to others the works of the Lord: ſurely, I will remember thy wonders of old; ſuch as were done in Egypt, at the Red-ſea, and in the wilderneſs; which exceeded the power and reaſon of man, and which ſhewed antient love and old friendſhip ſubſiſting between God and his people; ſo the remembrance of God's everlaſting love, his antient covenant, and the grace and bleſſings given in Chriſt before the world was, may be of uſe againſt deſpondency, and for the ſupport and encouragement of faith.

℣. 12. I will meditate alſo of all thy work, &c.] Or works[t], which were many; he deſired not to forget any of them, but remember the multitude of his tender mercies, and not only call them to mind, but dwell upon them in his meditations and contemplations, in order to gain ſome relief by them under his preſent circumſtances: and talk of thy doings; for the good of others, and ſo for the glory of God, as well as to imprint them on his own mind, that they might not be forgotten by him; for things that are talked of, and eſpecially frequently, are better remembered, ſee Pſ. cxlv. 4, 5, 6, 7, 11, 12. the Targum is, "I will meditate on all thy good works, and ſpeak of the cauſes of thy wonders."

[t] בכל פעלך [illegible] quoque opere tuo, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

℣. 13. Thy way, O God, is in the ſanctuary, &c.] Or in holineſs[y]; that is, is holy, ſo the Syriac verſion, and to which the Targum agrees: "O God, how holy are thy ways," ſee Pſ. cxlv. 17. or in the ſanctuary, the temple, the church of God, where he takes his walks, and manifeſts himſelf, and where the reaſons of his providence, and dealings with his people are opened and made known unto them, ſee Pſ. lxviii. 24. and lxxiii. 17. who is ſo great a God as our God? the Targum is, as the God of Iſrael; he is great in his perſons, perfections and works, and is greatly to be loved, feared and praiſed.

℣. 14. Thou art the God that doeſt wonders, &c.] In nature, providence and grace, it ſeems chiefly to regard what was done for the Iſraelites in Egypt, and in the wilderneſs, ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 12, 43. thou haſt declared thy ſtrength among the people; the nations of the world, who heard what the Lord did for Iſrael by his mighty power, and with a ſtretched out arm, as follows.

℣. 15. Thou haſt with thine arm redeemed thy people, &c.] The people of Iſrael out of Egypt, which was typical of the redemption of the Lord's people by Chriſt, the arm and power of God: the ſons of Jacob and Joſeph. Selah. Joſeph is particularly mentioned for honour's ſake, and becauſe he was the means of ſupporting Jacob and his family in Egypt; and had ſpecial faith in their deliverance from thence; the Targum is, "the ſons whom Jacob begot, and Joſeph nouriſhed."

℣. 16. The waters ſaw thee, O God, &c.] The waters not of Jordan, but of the Red Sea; theſe felt and perceived the power of God, in cauſing a ſtrong eaſt-wind, which dried it up, and made way for the children of Iſrael to paſs through it as on dry land: compare with this, Pſ. cxiv. 3. Hab. iii. 10. the waters ſaw thee; which is repeated for the confirmation of it, and to excite attention to it, as well as to expreſs the pſalmiſt's admiration at it; the Targum is, "they ſaw thy majeſty in the midſt of the ſea, O God! they ſaw thy power upon the ſea;" not the Egyptians, but the ſons of Jacob and Joſeph; the old Syriac church underſtood theſe waters of the waters of Jordan, at the baptiſm of Chriſt, when in their way they ſaw the incarnate God, and felt his ſacred body laid in them, by which he was made manifeſt to Iſrael; but Jerom better interprets them by the help of Rev. xvii. 15. of people, nations and tongues; ſome of which ſaw Chriſt corporally, others ſpiritually, and by faith, as preached in the goſpel to the gentile world: they were afraid; of the majeſty of God, obeyed their ſovereign, of whom they ſtood in awe, gave way unto him, and fled at his rebuke, ſee Pſ. cxiv. 5. or were in pain[z], as a wowan in travail, as were the Gentile world at the preaching of the Goſpel of redemption and ſalvation by Chriſt, Rom. viii. 22. the depths alſo were troubled; not only the ſuperficies, or top of the waters were moved, bythe ſtrong eaſt-wind through the power of God, but the bottom of the ſea was reached by it; the depths were congealed in the midſt of it, the channels of water were ſeen, and the foundation of the world diſcovered, and the children of Iſrael went through the deep as on dry land, ſee Exod. xv. 8. Pſ. xviii. 15.

℣. 17. The clouds poured out water, &c.] This, with ſome other circumſtances which follow, are not related by Moſes in the hiſtory of this affair; but as they are here recorded by an inſpired penman, there is no doubt to be made of the truth of them; beſides Joſephus[a] relates the ſame things; he ſays, that at the time when the Egyptians were drowned in the red ſea, rains deſcended from heaven, and there were terrible thunders, lightnings and thunder-bolts; this was when the Lord looked through the cloud, and troubled the hoſt of the Egyptians, Exod. xiv. 24. the ſkies ſent out a ſound; or the airy clouds, the lighter ones, and which were higher in the heavens, as the others before-mentioned were thick clouds, full of water, and hung lower; theſe were thunder-clouds, and thunder is the ſound which they ſent forth, as in the following verſe: thine arrows alſo went abroad; that is, lightnings, as in Pſ. xviii. 14. ſo Aben Ezra; but Kimchi interprets them of hail-ſtones.

℣. 18. The voice of thy thunder was in the heaven, &c.] Thunder is the voice of God, Job. xxxvii. 5. and xl. 9. this is heard in the orb[b], or the air, ſo called, becauſe ſpherical; the Targum is "the voice of thy thunder was heard in the wheel;" ſo the word here uſed, ſometimes ſignifies; ſo Ezek. x. 13. and is ſo rendered here by ſome[c]; ſome think this refers to the wheels of the chariots of the Egyptians which were taken off, it may be by the force of thunder and lightning, ſo that they drove on heavily, Exod. xiv. 25. the lightnings lightened the world, not only that part of the world where the Iſraelites and Egyptians were, but the whole world; for lightning comes out of the Eaſt, and ſhines to the weſt, Matt. xxiv. 27. this was in the night, and a very dark night it was, as Joſephus[d] affirms; ſee Pſ. xcvii. 4. the earth trembled and ſhook; there was an earthquake at the ſame time; unleſs this is to be underſtood of the panic which the inhabitants of the earth were put into on hearing of this wondeful event, Joſh. ii. 9, 10.

℣. 19. Thy way is in the ſea, &c.] In the ſea of Suph, as the Targum, the red ſea; it was the Lord that made the way in the ſea for the Iſraelites, and went before them, and led them through it: and thy path in the great waters; becauſe the word rendered path is written with Yod, and is in the plural number, though the Maſorites obſerve, that that letter is redundant, and ſo the word is ſingular; hence the Jews imagine there were more paths than one, even twelve, according to the number of the tribes, and which they think is intimated in Pſ. cxxxvi. 13. and thy footſteps are not known; not by the Egyptians, who aſſayed to follow after the people of Iſrael with the Lord at the head of them, nor by any ſince; for the waters returned and covered the place on which the Iſraelites went as on dry ground; ſo that no footſteps or traces were to be ſeen at all ever ſince; and ſuch are the ways of God, many of them in providence as well as in grace, Rom. xi. 33. it may be rendered thy heels, which made the foot-ſteps or impreſſions; which latter being the works of God, may be ſeen and known, but not the former, he being inviſible; ſo Guſſetius[e] obſerves.

℣. 20. thou leddeſt thy people like a flock, &c.] Either through the red ſea, according to R. Moſes Hacohen, as Aben Ezra obſerves; ſee Iſ. lxiii. 11—13. or rather as he and Kimchi, thro' the wilderneſs, after they were led through the ſea; the people of Iſrael are compared to a flock of ſheep, the Lord is repreſented as the ſhepherd of them, who took care of them, protected and preſerved them from their enemies: by the hand of Moſes and Aaron; the one was their civil, and the other their eccleſiaſtical governor, and both under the Lord, and inſtruments of his, in guiding and conducting the people in all things needful for them. The Arabic verſion adds Allelujah; from all this the pſalmiſt concluded, though it is not mentioned, that as God had delivered his people of old out of their ſtraits and difficulties, ſo he hoped and believed, that as he could, he would deliver him in his own time and way; and by this means his faith was relieved and ſtrengthened.

PSAL. LXXVIII.

Maſchil of Aſaph.

OR for Aſaph [*]; a doctrinal and inſtructive pſalm, as the word Maſchil ſignifies; ſee Pſ. xxxii. 1. which was delivered to Aſaph to be ſung; the Targum is, "the underſtanding of the "Holy Spirit by the hands of Aſaph." Some think David was the penman of it; but from the latter part of it, in which mention is made of him, and of his government of the people of Iſrael, it looks as if it was wrote by another, and after his death, though not long after, ſince the account is carried on no further than his times; and therefore it is probable enough it was written by Aſaph, the chief ſinger, that lived in that age: whoever was the penman of it, it is certain he was a prophet, and ſo was Aſaph, who is called a Seer, the ſame with a prophet, and who is ſaid to propheſy, 2 Chron. xxix. 30. and 1 Chron. xxv. 1, 2. and alſo that he perſonated Chriſt; for that the Meſſiah is the perſon that is introduced ſpeaking in this pſalm, is clear from Matt. xiii. 34, 35. and the whole may be conſidered as a diſcourſe of his to the Jews of his time; giving them an hiſtory of the Iſraelites from their firſt coming out of Egypt to the times of David, and in it an account of the various benefits beſtowed upon them, of their great ingratitude, and of the divine reſentment; the deſign of which is to admoniſh and caution them againſt committing the like ſins, leſt they ſhould be rejected of God, as their fathers were, and periſh: ſome Jewiſh writers, as Arama obſerves, interpret this pſalm of the children of Ephraim going out of Egypt before the time appointed.

℣. 1. Give ear, O my people, &c.] The Jews were Chriſt's people, he deſcending from their fathers according to the fleſh; they were his own, to whom he came, though rejected by them; they were his nation and people that delivered him up into the hands of the Romans; ſee Rom. ix. 4, 5. John i. 11. and xviii. 35. thus it is uſual with perſons to call thoſe who are of the ſame nation with them, their people, Eſther vii. 3, 4. Jer. ix. 1, 2. and eſpecially for kings to call their ſubjects ſo; ſee 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. and xxix. 14. and ſuch was Chriſt; he was king of the Jews, tho' they would not have him reign over them; and therefore he here ſpeaks, as one having royal authority, and requires attention to him, and obedience to his word, which he calls his law: to my law; meaning neither the moral nor the ceremonial law, but the doctrine of the goſpel, or law of faith, called the Meſſiah's law, Iſ. ii. 3. and xlii. 4. Rom. iii. 27. This is the doctrine which he as man received of his father, and which he taught and delivered to his diſciples, and which concerns himſelf, his perſon, office and grace, and is ſometimes called the doctrine of Chriſt, 2 John ℣. 9. incline your ears to the words of my mouth; the ſeveral doctrines of the everlaſting goſpel preached by him, which were words of wiſdom and of grace, of righteouſneſs and eternal life, of peace, pardon and everlaſting ſalvation: theſe ought to be heard and diligently attended to; the matter contained in them requires attention; the office Chriſt bears demands it of men; all that have ears to hear ſhould hear; all Chriſt's ſheep do hear his voice, underſtand it, and act according to it: hear ye him was the inſtruction of Moſes, and the direction of Chriſt's heavenly Father, Deut. xviii. 15. Matt. xvii. 5. and great is the danger ſuch incur who hear him not, but neglect and deſpiſe his word, Heb. ii. 2, 3, and xii. 25.

℣. 2. I will open my mouth, &c.] Speak freely, boldly, and without reſerve, Eph. vi. 19. ſo Chriſt opened his mouth, Matt. v. 2. in a parable; not that what follows in this pſalm was ſuch, but what were delivered by our Lord in the days of his fleſh, who ſpake many parables; as of the ſower, and of tares, and of the grain of muſtard-ſeed, and many others, and without a parable he ſpake not, and ſo fulfilled what he here ſaid he would do, Matt. xiii. 34, 35. Mark iv. 33, 34. I will utter dark ſayings of old; ſayings that relate to things of old; meaning not to the coming of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and what follows in the pſalm, delivered, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi obſerve, in figurative and tropical terms, as in ℣. 19, 21, 23, 24, 25, 61. but to the things which were from the foundation of the world, as the phraſe is rendered in Matt. xiii. 35. ſpoken of Chriſt in his miniſtry, ſuch as the fall of the angels, the ruin of man by Satan, the murder of Abel, Abraham's ſight of his day with joy, and many things that were ſaid by them of old, Luke x. 18. John viii. 44, 56. Matt. xxiii. 35. and v. 21, &c. or rather this refers to the goſpel, and the ſayings and doctrines of it, which were kept ſecret ſince the world began, Matt. xiii. 35. Rom. xvi. 25. yea, which were ordained before the world was, and therefore called the everlaſting goſpel, 1 Cor. ii. 7. Rev. xiv. 6. and here in the Arabic verſion, eternal myſteries; ſuch as concerning the everlaſting love of God to his people, his everlaſting choice of them, and everlaſting covenant with them: and the ſayings or doctrines of the goſpel may be called dark, becauſe ſecret, hidden and myſterious; and were ſo under the legal diſpenſation, in compariſon of the more clear light under the goſpel-diſpenſation; they having been wrapt up in types and ſhadows, and in the rites and ceremonies of the law, but now held forth clearly and plainly in the miniſtry of Chriſt and his apoſtles, as in a glaſs: theſe Chriſt ſays he would utter or deliver out as water from a fountain, in great plenty, as he did; he came in the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the goſpel; and being full of grace and truth, the doctrines of grace and truth, theſe came by him and were delivered from him in all their fulneſs and glory.

[*] לאסף τω Ασαφ, Sept. ipſi Aſaph, Pagninus, Montanus; tradita Aſapho, Piſcator.

℣. 3. Which we have heard and known, &c.] The change of number from I to we, have made ſome think that the diſciples of Chriſt are here introduced ſpeaking; but there is no need to ſuppoſe that, ſince our Lord uſes the ſame form of ſpeech, John iii. 11. and our fathers have told us; this may not only regard the Jewiſh anceſtors, from whom our Lord deſcended according to the fleſh, and ſo refer to the following account of the wonderful things done for the people of Iſrael; but alſo the divine Father of Chriſt, from whom, as his only begotten ſon that lay in his boſom, and as mediator, and the angel of the great council, he heard and became acquainted with the ſecrets and myſteries of grace, and with his father's mind and will; all which he declared and made known to his apoſtles, and in ſo doing, uſed them as his friends, John i. 18. and xv. 15. and ſo the apoſtles of Chriſt, what they had from him their everlaſting father, and who had uſed to call them his children, even what they had ſeen, and heard, and learned, they made known to others, Acts iv. 20.

℣. 4. We will not hide them from their children, &c.] The children of the Jewiſh fathers, but faithfully publiſh and declare them, as Chriſt and his apoſtles did; or the children of God and Chriſt, their ſpiritual ſeed and offſpring: ſhewing to the generation to come; and ſo in all ſucceſſive ages, by the miniſtration of the word, and the ſpirit attending it; ſee Pſ. xxii. 30, 31. and xlviii. 13. the praiſes of the Lord; what he has done in predeſtination, redemption, and effectual vocation, which is to the praiſe of the glory of his grace, Eph. i. 6. and ſo all other truths of the goſpel, which are to the praiſe of Father, Son and Spirit, and engage men to ſhew it forth: and his ſtrength diſplayed; in Chriſt, the man of his right hand, made ſtrong for himſelf, and in the redemption wrought out by him, as well as in the converſion of ſinners by his mighty grace, and in the preſervation of them by his power: and his wonderful works that he hath done; in providence and grace; the miracles wrought by Chriſt, which were the wonderful works given him to finiſh, as proofs of his deity and meſſiahſhip, and are teſtified in the goſpel for the confirmation of it; and eſpecially the wonders of redeeming love, and calling grace, which are peculiarly to be aſcribed unto him as the works his hands have wrought, and the wonderful decrees of God he made in eternity concerning theſe things.

℣. 5. For he eſtabliſhed a teſtimony in Jacob, &c.] So the law is called, being a teſtification of the divine will, Exod. xxv. 16, 22. and the ſcriptures, the writings of the old teſtament, which teſtify of Chriſt, his perſon, office, ſufferings and death, Iſ. viii. 20. John v. 39. and particularly the goſpel, which is the teſtimony of God, of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and of his apoſtles, 2 Tim. i. 8. which bears witneſs to the love and grace of God in the ſalvation of men by Chriſt; to the dignity of Chriſt's perſon, to the fulneſs of his grace, to the ſeveral offices and relations he bears and ſtands in to his people; to the virtue of his obedience, ſufferings and death; to redemption, righteouſneſs, peace and pardon by him: this is eſtabliſhed in the houſe of Jacob, as the Targum; in the church, which is the pillar and ground of truth, among the ſaints and people of God to whom it is delivered, and by whom it will be kept, and with whom it will remain throughout all ages; for it is the everlaſting goſpel: and appointed a law in Iſrael; the law given on mount Sinai was peculiar to them, and ſo were the word and oracles, they were committed to them; and not only the writings of Moſes, but the prophets are called the law, John x. 34. ſee Deut. iv. 8. Pſ. cxlvii. 19, 20. Rom. iii. 1, 2. and ix. 4. but the goſpel ſeems to be here meant, as in ℣. 1. ſee the note there; this was ordained before the world for our glory, and is put and placed in the hands and hearts of the faithful miniſters of it, and is publiſhed among, and received by, the true Iſrael of God: which he commanded our fathers that they ſhould make them known to their children; that is, the teſtimony and the law, and the things contained in them; the Jewiſh fathers were frequently commanded to teach their children the law of Moſes, Deut. iv. 9, 10. and vi. 6, 7. and xi. 19. and it was their practice to inſtruct them in the knowledge of the ſcriptures, 2 Tim. iii. 15. and it becomes chriſtian parents to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, by making known to them the principles of the chriſtian religion, and the truths of the goſpel, Eph. vi. 4.

℣. 6. That the generation to come might know them, &c.] not only notionally but ſpiritually and experimentally; which is the caſe, when human teachings are attended with the ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of divine truths; for the truths of the goſpel are unknown to men; the goſpel is hidden wiſdom, the wiſdom of God in a myſtery; the bible is a ſealed book, the doctrines of it are riddles and dark ſayings; the miniſtry of the word is the means of knowledge, which become effectual when attended with the ſpirit and power of God: even the children which ſhould be born, who ſhould ariſe and declare them to their children; and ſo be tranſmitted from age to age: it is the will of God, that beſides private inſtructions, there ſhould be a ſtanding miniſtry kept up in all ages, to the end of the world; and he will have ſome that ſhall receive the goſpel, and profeſs his name; there has been and will be a ſucceſſion of regenerate perſons; inſtead of the fathers come up the children, a ſeed to ſerve the Lord, accounted to him for a generation; the ſeed and the ſeed's ſeed of the church, from whoſe mouth the word of God ſhall never depart; but they ſhall declare it one to another, by which means it ſhall be continued to the lateſt poſterity, Pſ. xxii. 30, 31. Iſ. lix. 21.

℣. 7. That they might ſet their hope in God, &c.] And not in the creature, nor in any creature-enjoyment; ſee Job xxxi. 24. the Lord is the only proper object of hope and confidence; Chriſt, who is truly God, is the hope of his people, and in him they place it, as they have great reaſon to do; ſince with him there is mercy, the mercy of God is proclaimed in him; and with him there is redemption, which includes the bleſſings of peace, pardon, and righteouſneſs; and a plenteous one, a redemption from all ſin; and it is the goſpel which points out theſe things in Chriſt, and encourages a firm and ſettled hope and truſt in him: and this ſhews, that that is meant by the law and teſtimony; ſince the law of Moſes gives no encouragement to hope in God; it convinces of ſin, but does not direct to a Saviour, and ſo leaves without hope; it works wrath, terror and deſpair; 'tis in the goſpel only Chriſt is ſet before men, as the object of hope to lay hold on, and which is as an anchor ſure and ſtedfaſt, where they may ſecurely place it: and not forget the works of God; which the goſpel declares; not only the miracles of Chriſt recorded by the evangeliſts, but the works of grace, redemption, and ſalvation; the remembrance of which is kept up by the miniſtry of the word, and the adminiſtration of ordinances: but keep his commandments; the commandments of Chriſt, and which are peculiar to the goſpel-diſpenſation; and are to be kept in faith, from a principle of love, through the grace and ſtrength of Chriſt, and to the glory of God by him; ſee Joh. xiv. 15, 21, 23.

℣. 8. And might not be as their fathers, &c.] This chiefly reſpects the Jews in Chriſt's time; though it alſo is an admonition to them in ſucceeding ages, and eſpecially in the latter day, when they ſhall be inſtructed, called, and converted; and even to us, to whom the goſpel is preached, on whom the ends of the world are come, not to be diſobedient, as the Jewiſh fathers were, and to take care we do not fall after the ſame example of unbelief; this opens the whole ſcope and general deſign of the pſalm; ſee 1 Cor. x. 6—11. Heb. iii. 7—14. and iv. 1—11. a ſtubborn and rebellious generation; as the generation in the wilderneſs was, Deut. ix. 6, 7, 24. and ſo were their poſterity in Chriſt's time, Matt. xii. 34, 39. Acts vii. 51. a generation that ſet not their heart aright; to ſeek the Lord, ſerve and obey him; their hearts were removed far from him, and they were hypocritical in their prayers to him, and ſervice of him: and whoſe ſpirit was not ſtedfaſt with God; did not continue in the faith of God, in the true religion, but departed and apoſtatized from him; ſee ℣. 37, 57. Apoſtacy is generally the fruit and effect of hypocriſy; all the following facts ſupport the character which is here given of them.

℣. 9. The children of Ephraim being armed, and carrying bows, &c.] Or caſting arrows out of the bow[a]; they went out well armed to meet the enemy, and they truſted in their armour, and not in the Lord, and being ſkilful in throwing darts, or ſhooting arrows, promiſed themſelves victory: but turned back in the day of battle; fled from the enemy, could not ſtand their ground when the onſet was made: what this refers to is not eaſy to determine; ſome think this with what follows reſpects the defection of the ten tribes in Rehoboam's time, which frequently go under the name of Ephraim; but we have no account of any battel then fought, and loſt by them; and beſides the hiſtory of this pſalm reaches no further than the times of David; others are of opinion, that it regards the time of Eli, when the Iſraelites were beaten by the Philiſtines, the ark of God was taken, Eli's two ſons ſlain, and thirty thouſand more, 1 Sam. iv. 1—11. Ephraim being put for the reſt of the tribes, the ark being in that tribe; others ſuppoſe that the affair between the Gileadites and Ephraimites, in the times of Jephthah, is referred to, when there fell of the Ephraimites forty and two thouſand, Judg. xii. 1—6. many of the Jewiſh[b] writers take it to be the hiſtory of a fact that was done in Egypt before the children of Iſrael came out from thence; ſee 1 Chron. vii. 20, 21, 22. ſo the Targum; "when they dwelt in Egypt, the children of Ephraim grew proud, they appointed the end, (or term of going out of Egypt) and they erred and went out thirty years before the end, with warlike arms, and mighty men carrying bows, turned back, and were ſlain, in the day of battle;" though it ſeems moſt likely to have reſpect to what was done in the wilderneſs, as Kimchi obſerves, after they were come out of Egypt, and had ſeen the wonders of God there, and at the Red-ſea, and in the wilderneſs; and perhaps reference is had to the diſcomfiture of the Iſraelites by the Amalekites, when they went up the hill they were forbid to do, and in which it may be, the Ephraimites were moſt forward, and ſuffered moſt; ſee Numb. xiv. 40—45.

℣. 10. They kept not the covenant of God, &c.] Either the covenant of circumciſion, which was neglected during their travels through the wilderneſs, Joſh. v. 5. or the covenant made with the people of Iſrael at mount Sinai, Exod. xxiv. 7. and this is to be underſtood not of the children of Ephraim only, but of the Iſraelites in general, who in many inſtances broke the covenant, and were not ſtedfaſt in it, ℣. 37. ſee Jer. xxxi. 32. and refuſed to walk in his law; the law of God, which was given forth by him, by the diſpoſition of angels, through the hands of a mediator, Moſes, as a rule of their walk and converſation; but they refuſed to order their converſation according to it, being unwilling to be ſubject to it, but deſpiſed and caſt it away; a ſad inſtance of the corruption of human nature, and the depravity of man's will, boaſted of for its freedom, yet what is common, and to be obſerved in all mankind.

℣. 11. And forgat his works, and his wonders, &c.] That is, his wonderful works, the miracles he wrought in their favour, and for their deliverance, afterwards particularly mentioned; theſe were not only forgotten in the next generation, Judg. ii. 10. but in a few years, yea in a few months, nay in a few days, when they had been but three days journey in the wilderneſs, after their paſſage through the Red-ſea, ſee Exod. xv. 1, 22, 24. which occaſioned the obſervation of the pſalmiſt, Pſ. cvi. 12, 13. that he had ſhewed them; being done in their ſight, and in the ſight of their fathers, as follows.

℣. 12. Marvellous things did he in the ſight of their fathers, &c.] The Targum is, "before Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and the tribes of their fathers, he did marvellous things;" but theſe were dead before this time; the Jews have a fancy, that theſe were brought to the ſea, and placed upon it; and the Lord ſhewed them what he would do for their children, and how he would redeem them; but this is to be underſtood of the plagues which were brought upon the Egyptians, and which are called wonders, Exod. xi. 10. and were ſo to the Egyptians themſelves; and theſe were done by the hands of Moſes and Aaron, and in their ſight: in the land of Egypt; where the Iſraelites were in bondage, and whilſt they were there, and on their account were theſe things done: in the field of Zoan; that is, in the territory of Zoan, which was an antient city of Egypt, Numb. xiii. 22. the metropolis of the land where Pharaoh kept his court; hence we read of the princes of Zoan, Iſ. xix. 11, 13. it is the ſame with Tanis, and ſo it is called here in the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, and alſo in the Targum; it is ſaid to have been two miles from Heliopolis, and one from Memphis; and at this day theſe three cities are become one, which is fifteen miles in compaſs, and goes by the name of Alcair. In this great city, the metropolis of the nation, before Pharaoh and all his court, were the above wonders done.

℣. 13. He divided the ſea, &c.] The Targum adds, "by the rod of Moſes their maſter;" which he was ordered to lift up, and to ſtretch out his hand over the ſea; which he did, and at the ſame time a ſtrong eaſt-wind was raiſed, which cauſed the ſea to go back, and divided the waters of it; ſee Exod. xiv. 16, 21. and cauſed them to paſs through; that is, he cauſed the Iſraelites to paſs through the ſea; this they did in faith, Heb. xi. 29. in the faith of the power and promiſe of God, and of future grace and bleſſings, which this was an emblem of; for it was a repreſentation of baptiſm, and is ſo called, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2. and of the ſea of Chriſt's blood, or of his ſufferings and death; whereby all enemies are overcome and deſtroyed, as ſin and Satan, ſignified by the Egyptians, and ſalvation is wrought, and every bleſſing of grace procured; and of the paſſage of God's people through the ſea of this world, and afflictions in it, ſafe to glory: and he made the waters to ſtand as an heap; and were as a wall on the right hand and on the left, and ſo they continued until the Iſraelites had paſſed through; and then they returned, and covered the Egyptians, and drowned them, Exod. xiv. 22, 28.

℣. 14. In the day-time alſo he led them with a cloud, &c.] Which was in the form of a pillar, and went before them, and the Lord in it, and directed their way, and protected them from heat; ſee Exod. xiii. 21, 22. Neh. ix. 12, 19. this was typical of Chriſt, who is a ſhadow and ſecurity from the heat of a fiery law, the flaming ſword of juſtice, the wrath of God, which is poured forth like fire, the fiery darts of Satan, and from hurt by any enemy whatever; ſee Iſ. iv. 5, 6. and xxv. 4. and who leads his people through the wilderneſs of this world by his ſpirit, by his word, and by his own example; and who is the beſt and ſafeſt guide to follow: and all the night with a light of fire; which alſo was in the form of a pillar, and went before them, and gave light in the night, and the Lord was in it; and this alſo was typical of Chriſt, who is the light of his people amidſt all their darkneſs in this world.

℣. 15. He clave the rocks in the wilderneſs, &c.] The one at Rephidim, Exod. xvii. 1—6. and the other at Kadeſh, Numb. xx. 1—11. both to be ſeen at this day; ſee the notes on the above places; though of the latter no modern traveller makes mention but one, yet Jerom[b] from Euſebius affirms that it was ſhewn in his day: they were typical of Chriſt, 1 Cor. x. 4. who is frequently compared to one for height, ſtrength, and duration, ſhade, ſhelter, and protection; and is called the rock of Iſrael, the rock of offence to both houſes of Iſrael, the rock of ſalvation, the rock of refuge, the rock of ſtrength, the rock that is higher than the ſaints, and on which the church is built, and who is the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary land. The cleaving of the rocks is aſcribed to God, which was done by the hands of Moſes; and ſo the Targum adds, "by the rod of Moſes their maſter;" but Moſes was only the inſtrument, it was the Lord that did it; Moſes with his rod could never have done it, had not the power of God went along with it. This ſmiting and cleaving the rocks were an emblem of the ſufferings of Chriſt, who was ſmitten of God with the rod of juſtice, according to the law of Moſes, in a judicial way, for the ſins of his people, and in order to obtain ſalvation for them: and gave them drink as out of the great depths; ſuch a large quantity of water flowed out of the rocks when ſmitten, as if it came out of the great ſea, which furniſhed them with drink ſufficient, and more than enough for them and their cattle; this was typical of the large abundance of grace, and the bleſſings of it, which flow freely and plentifully from Chriſt and his fulneſs, and through his ſufferings and death.

℣. 16. He brought ſtreams alſo out of the rock, &c.] Which is expreſſed in the ſingular number, as alſo in ℣. 20. becauſe the children of Iſrael were not come to Kadeſh, and the ſecond rock was not ſmitten when they luſted after fleſh, and murmured againſt God, and tempted him, as is after related: and cauſed waters to run down like rivers; from the deſcent of the rock, which followed them all the way in the wilderneſs; this was a moſt marvellous thing, that water ſhould flow from a flinty rock upon ſtriking it, from whence fire rather than water might have been expected; and that it ſhould flow in ſuch great abundance, and that from a rock in a wilderneſs.

℣. 17. And they ſinned yet more againſt him, &c.] Or, and they added yet to ſin againſt him[c]; which was great ingratitude; they had ſinned before, and it might have been hoped, that the goodneſs of God to them would have engaged them to have ſinned no more, at leaſt at ſuch a rate, and in ſuch a manner, as they had done; but inſtead of ſinning leſs, they ſinned more and more, they added ſin to ſin; ſuch is the corrupt heart of man, notwithſtanding the grace of God, and the bleſſings of it vouchſafed unto him: by provoking the moſt high in the wilderneſs; every thing is aggravating; the object againſt whom they ſinned was the moſt high, which betrays their impiety, folly, and vanity; and they did not ſlightly ſin againſt him, but did thoſe things which were highly provoking and exaſperating; and that in the wilderneſs, where they received ſo many favours, and where they muſt have been ſtarved and periſh, and could not have lived without immediate proviſion, ſupport, and protection, from the hand of the Lord.

℣. 18. And they tempted God in their heart, &c.] Which is deſperately wicked, and from whence all impiety flows; they entertained hard thoughts of God; they inwardly fretted at their preſent circumſtances, and ſecretly repined and murmured againſt God, and wiſhed for things they ſhould not; not being contented with what they had, and thankful for them, as they ought to have been: by aſking meat for their luſt; or, for their ſoul; ſuch as their ſouls luſted after, and their ſenſitive appetites craved; for they were not ſatisfied with the bread they had, which was ſufficient for their ſuſtenance and ſupport; they wanted food for pleaſure and wantonneſs; to aſk for daily bread is right, but to aſk for more to conſume on our luſts, is wrong, James iv. 3.

℣. 19. Yea, they ſpake againſt God, &c.] Not only thought ill of him, and tempted him in their hearts, but they expreſſed with their mouths what was in their hearts, and ſpoke againſt him, his power and his providence, in plain words, though he had been ſo good and gracious to them, and had done ſuch wonderful things for them: they ſaid, can God furniſh a table in the wilderneſs? theſe are the words which they ſpoke againſt him, and by which they tempted him, queſtioning his power and his goodneſs, and expreſſing their diſſatisfaction with their preſent and daily allowance; they were not content with the manna they had every day, but they wanted to have a table ordered and ſpread with all kind of dainties. The ſenſe of the queſtion is, can the Lord do this for us? give us a plentiful table in the wilderneſs, as well as drop the manna about our tents? if he can, why don't he? if he does not, it muſt be either for want of power in himſelf, or want of good will to us; and thus they tried and tempted the Lord.

[b] De loc. Heb. fol. 93. L.

[c] ויוסיפו עוד לחטא לו : & addiderunt adhuc ad peccandum ei, Montanus, vel peccare, Muſculus, Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 20. Behold, he ſmote the rock, that the waters guſhed out, and the ſtreams overflowed, &c.] This they allow was done by him, for theſe are their words continued; ſuggeſting that though the waters did guſh out upon ſmiting the rock, yet they might have been in the caverns of it before, and had remained there a long time, and might have come out of themſelves; and therefore this was no ſuch great matter, and might eaſily be accounted for; but can he give bread alſo? ſolid, ſubſtantial bread, and not like this light bread, the manna, as they called it, Numb. xxi. 5. can he give us bread of corn, in a wilderneſs which is not a place of ſeed, where no corn grows? can he do this? this would ſhew his power indeed: can he provide fleſh for his people? for ſo great a multitude, and in a place where no cattle are? let him do this, and we'll believe his power; or elſe the words intimate that the ſmiting of the rock, and the waters flowing in ſuch large ſtreams, were an inſtance of his power, and therefore he that could do the one could do the other; he that could bring ſuch large quantities of water out of a rock, could give them ſolid bread, and ſuitable fleſh, and fulneſs of both; and ſhould he not do ſo, they muſt conclude that he bore no good will to them, and had no love and kindneſs for them.

℣. 21. Therefore the Lord heard this, &c.] What they ſaid in their hearts, and what they expreſſed with their mouths, all their murmurings againſt him, their diſtruſt of his power and providence, and diſbelief of his promiſes; ſee Numb. xi. 1. and was wroth; exceeding wroth; he was highly diſpleaſed; there was an overflow of his indignation, as the word[a] ſignifies; it was running upon him, upon the thick boſſes of his buckler, to arraign his perfections, call in queſtion any of his attributes, and diſbelieve his word; this muſt greatly exaſperate him, and provoke the eyes of his glory: ſo a fire was kindled againſt Jacob; the poſterity of Jacob; or in Jacob[b], in the camp of Iſrael; which was literally true, becauſe of the murmurings of the people againſt the Lord, fire came down from heaven, and burnt among them, and conſumed the uttermoſt parts of the camp; wherefore the name of the place was called Taberah, which ſignifies a burning, Numb. xi. 1, 2, 3. or it may be taken figuratively for the wrath of God, which is oftentimes compared to fire; ſee Nah. i. 6. hence it follows, and anger alſo came up againſt Iſrael; the people of Iſrael, the ſame with Jacob before; the alluſion is to men when angry, in whoſe breaſts anger burns, and from thence it riſes up, and ſhews itſelf in their countenance, in their eyes, and by the words of their mouth.

℣. 22. Becauſe they believed not in God, &c.] That he was able to give them bread, and provide fleſh for them, or bring them through the wilderneſs to Canaan's land, as he had promiſed. God and he only is the object of faith, and he is to be believed in at all times, and for all things temporal and ſpiritual; and nothing is more diſpleaſing to him than unbelief; for as faith gives glory to him, unbelief reflects diſhonour upon him; faith ſets its ſeal to him as true, but unbelief makes him a liar; and what is more provoking to man, than to have his veracity called in queſtion, and to be counted a liar? in ſhort, as faith has ſalvation annexed to it, unbelief has damnation, and to whom did the Lord ſwear that they ſhould not enter into his reſt, but to them that believed not? ſo great an evil is unbelief, and is the ſin which eaſily beſet[c] the Iſraelites, as appears from the context; ſee Heb. iii. 12—18. and truſted not in his ſalvation; which he promiſed them, and bid them ſtand ſtill and ſee, Exod. xiv. 13. and of which they had had ſome proofs and inſtances in leading them thro' the Red-Sea, and thus far guiding them through the wilderneſs, and providing for them; and therefore had reaſon and encouragement to truſt in the Lord, that he would yet be with them, and ſave them, and compleat the mercy promiſed unto them.

℣. 23. Though he had commanded the clouds from above, &c.] Which were round about him, his chariots, and the duſt of his feet; and which were at his command, to go here and there, and carry and let down proviſions for his people, as they did: and opened the doors of heaven; as a large granary, from whence the manna, afterwards called the corn of heaven, was given out in great abundance, which is ſignified by opening the doors; ſee Mal. iii. 10.

℣. 24. And had rained down manna upon them to eat, &c.] So called either from מנה manah, which ſignifies to prepare, appoint, and diſtribute, becauſe this was food prepared of God for the Iſraelites without them, and was their demenſum, their appointed portion, and which was daily diſtributed to them in meaſure; or from the words מן הו man hu, what is it? which they uſed at firſt ſight of the manna, they not knowing what it was, and hence called it man, or manna; this the Lord rained down from heaven, as he promiſed he would, that they might have food to eat; ſee Exod. xvi. 4, 15. and had given them of the corn of heaven; bread-corn ſprings out of the earth, but this was corn from heaven, very unuſual and wonderful; this greatly aggravated the unbelief of the Iſraelites, and ſhews their great ingratitude, that after all this they ſhould diſbelieve the Lord, and not truſt in his ſalvation; the manna was a type of Chriſt, who is called the hidden manna, 1 Cor. x. 3. Rev. ii. 17. ſee the note on John vi. 32.

℣. 25. Man did eat angel's food, &c.] Or, the bread of the mighty[d]; ſuch as Moſes and Elijah eat of; ſo Arama; but Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it of the clouds, or ſkies, ſaid to be ſtrong, Job xxxvii. 18. in which the manna was prepared, and let down; but rather the words may be read, every man did eat the bread of the mighty ones; of princes and nobles, and the great men of the earth; it was royal food, it was princely fare; and indeed the common people of Iſrael eat the ſame as their princes and nobles did; they all fared alike; but the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, render the word angels, and ſo Jarchi interprets it, and who are called mighty angels, and are creatures that excel in ſtrength, 2 Theſſ. i. 7. Pſ. ciii. 20. now the manna may be ſaid to be their food, as it is in Wiſdom, ch. xvi. 20. becauſe it might be prepared in the air by the miniſtry of angels, and given by their diſpoſition, as the law was, Acts vii. 53. or becauſe it came down from heaven, where they dwell, and ſo the Targum, "the children of men did eat food, which came down from the habitation of angels;" or becauſe it was moſt excellent food, as the tongue of angels is the moſt excellent and eloquent, 1 Cor. xiii. 1. or becauſe it was ſuch food, that if angels eat any, it was fit for them, and not at all unworthy of them. Cocceius thinks, and ſo Guſſetius[e], that by the mighty ones are meant the mighty God, Father, Son, and Spirit, by whom this food was prepared and given; ſo the word is uſed in the ſingular number, of Jehovah, who is called the mighty one of Jacob, Gen. xlix. 24. and of the Redeemer, Iſ. xlix. 26. he ſent them meat to the full; which may be underſtood either of the manna, of which they had great plenty, ſo that there was no lack for any man, and this continued with them, till they came to the land of Canaan; or of the quails, of which in the following verſes.

℣. 26. He cauſed an eaſt-wind to blow in the heavens, &c.] In the airy heaven; or he cauſed it to go[f]; to go forth out of its place, out of the repoſitories and treaſures of it, from whence he brings the wind, Pſ. cxxxv. 7. the winds are under the power and government of God, they are his ſervants that obey him; he ſays to one go and it goes, and to another come and it comes; ſtormy wind fulfils his word of command, and obeys its Creator: and by his power he brought in the ſouth-wind; into the heavens, into the air, as before, and with it he brought the quails; and which made his power to appear the greater, ſince they do not fly with the ſouth-wind, which is too moiſt and heavy for them, as naturaliſts obſerve[g]; it looks as if firſt one wind blew, and then another was uſed for the bringing of them from the place where they were; perhaps about the Red-ſea, where they are ſaid to have been in great numbers; and that the eaſt-wind brought them to a certain point, and then the ſouth-wind blew to bring them into the camp of Iſrael, where by the moiſtneſs of it they fell; hence fowlers, as the above naturaliſts relate, obſerve the ſouth-wind, in order to take them; though it may be that only one wind is intended, namely, the ſouth-eaſt-wind; and ſo Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech underſtand it.

℣. 27. He rained fleſh alſo upon them as duſt, &c.] By fleſh is meant fowl, as the following clauſe ſhews; for there is fleſh of birds, as well as of other creatures, ſee 1 Cor. xv. 39. and the quails which are here meant may be very fitly called fleſh, ſince they are for their bigneſs a very plump, fat, and fleſhy bird: and feathered fowls like as the ſand of the ſea; or fowl of wing[h]; winged fowls, ſo the Targum; fowl that flies; and therefore it was the more remarkable that theſe ſhould be rained and fall, and be taken by the Iſraelites; and which fell in great numbers, as is ſignified by theſe phraſes, the duſt and the ſand of the ſea; for there fell enough to feed ſix hundred thouſand men, beſide women and children, for a month together; they lay in heaps, two cubits high, on one another, and every one that gathered them brought in ten homers; ſee Numb. xi. 19, 20, 21, 31, 32. which is the hiſtory referred to; and quails are uſed to fly together in large bodies; and ſometimes, as Pliny[i] relates, will light on ſhips at ſea, and ſink them with their numbers. Some think one ſort of locuſts is meant, which were uſed for food, and was very delicious food; and the circumſtances of bringing them with an eaſt or ſouth-eaſt wind, their falling in heaps, and being gathered in buſhels, and ſpread about to be dried in the ſun, ſeem to favour ſuch a ſenſe; ſee the notes on the place above-mentioned. The antients interpret this myſtically, of the fleſh of Chriſt, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, delicious food for faith, as the quails were a rich food; and as they were rained down from heaven, ſo Chriſt is the bread of life which came down from heaven, and the bread he gave for the life of the world was his fleſh: and as theſe came up, however the firſt quails, in the evening, Exod. xvi. 13. ſo Chriſt came in the fleſh, in the evening or end of the world, to put away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf; to which may be added, that theſe creatures ſit upon their young, and cheriſh and protect them, as an hen her chickens[k]; with which compare Matt. xxiii. 37. but ſeeing the quails are never called ſpiritual meat, as the manna is, 1 Cor. x. 3. but were given in wrath and judgment; they are rather an emblem of riches, or worldly goods, things given to carnal men; theſe are of God, as the quails were, and are by ſome perſons enjoyed without care or trouble, as theſe were; their meat, as it is ſometimes ſaid, falls into their mouth, as theſe quails did into the mouths of the Iſraelites as it were; and are in wrath, their bleſſings are curſed to them, and whilſt they have a great affluence of worldly things, have leanneſs in their ſouls, as the Iſraelites now had, Pſ. cvi. 15. moreover, as theſe were feathered or winged fowl, ſo riches have wings, and ſometimes flee away, and are very uncertain things to truſt to, Prov. xxiii. 5.

℣. 28. And he let it fall in the midſt of their camp, &c.] Or, his camps[l]; the four camps of Iſrael; for ſo many there were, Numb. ii. or the camp of God, where he dwelt, and before which he went as the general, leader, and commander of them; in the midſt of this, or by it, by the ſide of it, Numb. xi. 31. the fleſh or feathered fowl fell, ſo that they had no trouble to fetch it in; and here it fell by the order and direction of the Lord himſelf; he cauſed it to fall, without whoſe knowledge and will a ſparrow does not fall to the ground, Matt. x. 29. Theſe creatures fell either, as ſome think, being wearied with their flight over the Red Sea; or through their wings being broken by the vehemency of the wind that brought them, as others; or by the moiſtneſs of the ſouth wind, which wetted their wings, and made them flag and fall; but by whatever means this was done, it was ſo ordered by the Lord that they ſhould fall, and fall juſt in the place where they did: round about their habitations; for the ſpace of a day's journey on every ſide, where they lay in heaps, here and there, two cubits high, Numb. xi. 31. ſo that they could gather them with great eaſe, and had no need of arrows to ſhoot at them, nor nets to ſpread for them; they were ready at hand, and in great plenty.

℣. 29. So they did eat, and were well filled, &c.] Or exceedingly filled[m], or too much, as ſome verſions render it; they eat to exceſs, not merely to ſatisfy nature, but to gratify their ſenſual appetite: gluttony is a ſin; it is an abuſe of the creatures; it hurts the body by filling it with groſs humours, and bringing diſeaſes on it; it is injurious to the mind; the heart may be overcharged by it; it diſpoſes it to ſin; it leads to impiety, to atheiſm, and diſbelief of a future ſtate, which often go along with it, and ends in deſtruction, which is the caſe of thoſe whoſe god is their belly: for he gave them their own deſire; or their luſt[n], what they luſted after, fleſh; and they had as much of it as they would, though this was given in judgment; and a ſad thing it is, when God gives men a fulneſs of this world's things, and leaves them to the abuſe of them, or ſends leanneſs into their ſouls, and gives them up to their own hearts luſts.

℣. 30. They were not eſtranged from their luſt, &c.] By the goodneſs and liberality of God unto them, they were not brought to repentance for their ſin of luſting; nor did they abſtain from their fleſhly luſts, or deny themſelves of them, which the grace of God teaches to do; or elſe the ſenſe is, what they luſted after, fleſh, was not withheld from them, or they reſtrained from eating it; they were indulged with it for a whole month together; to which agrees what follows: but while their meat was yet in their mouths; the meat of the quails while it was between their teeth, ere it was chewed, and before it was ſwallowed down, while they were rolling this ſweet morſel under their tongues, and were gorging themſelves with it, deſtruction came upon them, as follows; juſt as Belſhazzar, while he was feaſting with his nobles, in the midſt of his mirth and jollity, was ſlain by the Perſians, Dan. v. 1. 30.

℣. 31. The wrath of God came upon them, &c.] Either by cauſing fire to come down from heaven, or by ſuffering them to be ſurfeited by exceſſive eating, or by ſending a plague among them; ſee Numb. xi. 33. and ſlew the fatteſt of them; ſuch perhaps who had been moſt guilty of the ſin of gluttony, and had fed the moſt inordinately upon the fleſh that was ſent them; or this deſigns the chief among their princes and nobles, though not only them, but them as well as the common people; ſo the Targum, "and ſlew their mighty ones:" or the words may be rendered, and ſlew them among their fatneſs, or fat things[o]; whilſt they were feeding on their feaſt of fat things, the fat quails, which were brought among them in ſuch plenty; for the quail is a very fat bird, as Kimchi obſerves[p]: and ſmote down the choſen men of Iſrael; or the young men, as the Targum, who were within the 20th and 50th year of their age; who were choſen and fit for war within that time, as well as were the choiceſt for comelineſs, ſtrength and ſervice; or made them to bow[q] to death and the grave; whoſe power they could not withſtand, though in the prime and vigour of youth, and while they were freely and heartily feeding upon the food they luſted after.

℣. 32. For all this they ſinned ſtill, &c.] Thoſe that ſurvived, not being brought to repentance by mercies, nor by judgments; not by mercies, ſuch as before mentioned, though they were great and many, and ſome of them continued, and of which they were very unworthy; the goodneſs of God ſhould, but it does not always, lead perſons to repentance: mercies, unleſs they are ſanctified, often prove ſnares and temptations to ſin yet more and more; nothing ſhort of the grace of God will bring perſons to repentance for ſin, or keep them from it: nor by judgments, which were laſt mentioned, and ſeem chiefly deſigned; theſe have no more effect than the other, unleſs the power of divine grace goes along with them; ſee Amos iv. 6. 11. it could not be thought, nor was it expected, that they ſhould, after all theſe mercies and judgments, have lived without ſin, which no man does, or can do; but then they went on in a courſe of ſin, and were continually repeating their tranſgreſſions, and were guilty of ſins of a very heinous nature, many of which are on record; as Aaron and Miriam, by ſpeaking againſt Moſes, the faithful ſervant of the Lord, which brought upon the latter the plague of leproſy; the ſpies which were ſent to ſearch the land, and brought an evil report of it, which ſet the people a-murmuring, and put them on thoughts of returning to Egypt; thoſe that were concerned in the buſineſs of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, who were ſwallowed up in the earth, or burnt with fire from heaven; the whole congregation which murmured at Kadeſh, whom Moſes called rebels, and who afterwards expreſſed their loathing of the manna, for which fiery ſerpents were ſent among them, Numb. xii. 1. 10. and xiii. 32. and xiv. 2, 3, 4. and xvi. 1, 2, 3. 31, 35. and xx. 2, 3, 4, 5. and xxi. 5, 6. but their prevailing ſin was unbelief, as follows: and believed not for his wonderous works; not in them, though the words will bear to be ſo rendered; for they did believe in them when they were wrought, and that they were wrought by the Lord; though they ſoon forgot them, and fell into diſtruſt and unbelief; but by them[r], or by means of them; though ſuch wonderful things were done for them in providence, as before related, which ſhould have engaged their faith and truſt in the Lord; yet, notwithſtanding theſe, they called in queſtion his providence, power and goodneſs.

℣. 33. Therefore their days did he conſume in vanity, &c.] They were not immediately cut off by the hand of God, though ſome were; but the greater part ſpent their time, for about eight and thirty years together, in fruitleſs marches to and fro in the wilderneſs, and never entered into the land of Canaan, where they were gradually waſted and conſumed, 'till at length all their carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs; ſee Numb. xiv. 32. 35. time ſpent in ſin is all waſte time, and is ſpent in vanity; let a man enjoy ever ſo much of worldly things, it is all vanity and vexation of ſpirit; if he does not get to heaven at laſt, his life here is lived in vain; it had been better if he had never been born: and their years in trouble; or in terror[a] and conſternation; through their enemies, who ſmote and diſcomfited them, Numb. xiv. 45. through the earth's opening and ſwallowing many of them up; through fire coming from heaven on ſome of them, and fiery ſerpents being ſent among them all, Numb. xvi. 31. 35. and xxi. 6, 7. It is an awful conſideration, and yet it is true, of ſome wicked men, though not all, that they have nothing but trouble here, by what their ſins bring upon them, and hell at laſt. Kimchi renders the word here uſed ſuddenly, and interprets it of the ſudden death of the ſpies; ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions ſwiftly, following the Vulgate Latin, which renders it with haſte.

℣. 34. When he ſlew them, &c.] Some of them, the ſpies particularly; or when he threatened to ſlay them, or was about to do it: then they ſought him; that is, thoſe who either ſurvived the ſlain, or were threatened with deſtruction; theſe ſought the Lord by prayer and ſupplication, that he would not deſtroy them; the Targum is, "they repented and ſought him;" ſee Numb. xiv. 37. 39, 40. and they returned; from their evil ways, and by repentance, at leaſt in ſhew and appearance: and enquired early after God; but not earneſtly, and with their whole hearts and ſpirits; the Targum is, "they prayed before God;" which is often done by carnal profeſſors in trouble; ſee Iſ. xxvi. 16. Hoſ. v. 15.

℣. 35. And they remembered that God was their rock, &c.] Who had delivered them out of the hands of their enemies, had ſtrengthened them againſt them, and ſupported and protected them, as well as ſupplied them with all good things, of whom they had been greatly unmindful; but affliction was a means of refreſhing their memory; ſee Deut. xxxii. 15. 18. and the high God their redeemer; who had redeemed them out of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage, with a high hand and a mighty arm, and thereby ſhewed himſelf to be the moſt high God: between this and the following verſe the Maſorah puts this note, "half of the book," i. e. half of the book of pſalms ends here.

℣. 36. Nevertheleſs, they did flatter him with their mouth, &c.] In prayer to him, they only drew nigh to him with their mouths, and honoured him with their lips; they ſhewed much love to him and his ways and ordinances hereby; but their hearts were not with him, but after their luſts; they made fine ſpeeches and fair promiſes, but their hearts and mouths did not agree; they ſpoke with a double heart, thinking and endeavouring to deceive the Lord, as the word[b] here uſed ſignifies; but he is not to be deceived, nor will he be mocked; the Targum is, "they allured (or perſuaded) him with their mouth;" they attempted to do ſo; the Syriac and Arabic verſions are, they loved him with their mouth; profeſſed great love and ſincere affection to him, when they had none: and they lied unto him with their tongues; to lye unto men is bad, but to God is worſe; and it is a moſt vain and fooliſh thing, ſince there is not a word in the tongue of any but is known to him.

℣. 37. For their heart was not right with him, &c.] Neither prepared and ready to any good work, but reprobate thereunto; nor ſteady, fixed, and eſtabliſhed, as a good man's heart is, truſting in the Lord; but wavering, fickle, and inconſtant; nor true, faithful, and upright; but turning aſide like a deceitful bow, as is afterwards ſaid ℣. 57. neither were they ſtedfaſt in his covenant; which was made with them at Sinai, though they promiſed to be obedient, and to do all the Lord ſaid unto them; but this covenant they broke, though he were an huſband to them; ſee Exod. xxiv. 7. Jer. xxxi. 32.

℣. 38. But he being full of compaſſion, &c.] Or merciful; having bowels of mercy, as a tender mother to the ſon of her womb; a word from the ſame root as this, ſignifies the womb: the mercies of God are tender and abundant; there is a multitude of them; he is rich and plenteous in mercy, and ſo ready to forgive; hence it follows, forgave their iniquity; forgiveneſs of ſin flows from the tender mercy of God; it is according to the multitude of his mercies, and the riches of his grace; yet is through the blood and atoning ſacrifice of his ſon; and the word[c] that is here uſed ſignifies to expiate or atone; God never intended to pardon ſinners, but through the propitiation of his ſon, whom he ſet forth in his purpoſe, and ſent forth in the fulneſs of time to be the propitiatory ſacrifice for ſin; he forgave the ſins of old teſtament-ſaints with a view to that; and it is for Chriſt's ſake he forgives any; for without ſhedding of blood there is no remiſſion; though perhaps, ſince theſe perſons were impenitent, unbelievers and hypocrites, no more may be meant here by the forgiveneſs of their ſins, than averting a threatened judgment, or a removing of one, and putting a ſtop to the further execution of it, which is ſometimes meant by forgiving ſin; ſee Numb. xiv. 19, 20. 1 Kings viii. 30. 34. 36. 39. 50. which ſenſe the following words incline to: and deſtroyed them not; though they deſerved it, and he was able to do it, he did not deſtroy them immediately and at once, nor all of them, at leaſt not their ſeed and poſterity, who were preſerved and brought into the land of Canaan: yea, many a time turned he his anger away; he does not retain it for ever, or always carry on a reſentment, or the appearance of it; though he cauſes grief, he has and ſhews compaſſion; he is ſaid to turn away his anger from his own people, when he forgives their ſins, and comforts their ſouls, Pſ. lxxxv. 2, 3. Iſ. xii. 1. ſo when he cauſes the effects of his diſpleaſure to ceaſe, or ſtays a plague, or ſtops a judgment, by means of any of his ſervants; ſee Numb. xxv. 8. 10. and did not ſtir up all his wrath; which their ſins deſerved, and was laid up among his treaſures: the wrath of a temporal king is as the roaring of a lion, Prov. xix. 12. much more that of the King of kings; and the alluſion here ſeems to be to the arouſing of ſome fierce creature; the wrath of God is intolerable, and, even when it is kindled but a little, it can't be endured; and much leſs, ſhould it be all ſtirred up; but here in wrath he remembered mercy.

℣. 39. For he remembered that they were but fleſh, &c.] Or children of fleſh, as the Targum; poor, frail, weak, mortal creatures, unable to bear the weight of his diſpleaſure, the ſtroke of his hand, and the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his wrath; that they muſt be cruſhed before him, and would ſink, and fail, and die; ſee Pſ. ciii. 14. Iſ. lvii. 16. or that they were naturally ſinful and corrupt, prone to evil, eaſily drawn into ſin; it was what their depraved natures inclined unto; they were impotent to that which is good, and unable to withſtand temptations to evil; all which was taken notice of and conſidered by the Lord in his condeſcending goodneſs, and therefore he dealt gently with them; ſee Gen. vi. 3. and viii. 21. a wind that paſſeth away, and cometh not again; ſuch is the life of man; it may be fitly compared to the wind, which moves ſwiftly, and, paſſing on, loſes its ſtrength and ſubſides; ſo the life of man is quickly gone, his days move ſwiftly on, he dies, and returns not again to his former ſtate, to a mortal life; and though the ſpirit returns to the body again, yet not 'till the reſurrection; and then not of itſelf, but by the power of God; ſee Job vii. 7.

℣. 40. How oft did they provoke him in the wilderneſs, &c.] Where they were not only at his mercy, having nothing to help themſelves with, but had many ſingular mercies beſtowed upon them; and yet were continually committing ſuch ſins againſt God, as provoked the eyes of his glory; ten times they tempted him, the Lord ſays, Numb. xiv. 22. therefore that diſpenſation is called the provocation and day of temptation; for it was a ſeries of rebellion and ſin, Pſ. xcv. 8. and grieve him in the deſart; which ſignifies the ſame as before, and is ſpoken after the manner of men, Gen. vi. 6. and like a tender parent grieved at the diſobedience of his child, and that he is obliged to take the rod and chaſtiſe it. The prophet Iſaiah ſays, they vexed or grieved his holy ſpirit, Iſ. lxiii. 10. the ſame word is there uſed as here; compare with it Eph. iv. 30.

℣. 41. Yea, they turned back, and tempted God, &c.] They talked of going back to Egypt, and of chuſing a captain to lead them back thither, Numb. xiv. 3, 4. and they turned back from the Lord, and from his good ways, and choſe their own ways, and followed after idols; or the ſenſe is, they again tempted God, not only at Meribah, but elſewhere; they tempted him again and again, even ten times, as before obſerved: and limited the Holy One of Iſrael; or ſigned[d] him; ſigned him with a ſign, ſo the Targum; they tempted him by aſking a ſign of him, as Jarchi interprets it; inſiſting that a miracle be wrought, by which it might be known whether the Lord was among them or not, Exod. xvii. 7. with which compare Matt. xvi. 1. or they ſet bounds, ſo Kimchi; to his power and goodneſs, ſaying, this he could do, and the other he could not; ſee ℣. 19, 20. and ſo men limit the Lord, when they fix on a bleſſing they would have, even that, and not another; and the meaſure of it, to what degree it ſhould be beſtowed on them, as well as ſet the time when they would have it; whereas the bleſſing itſelf, and the degree of it, and the time of giving it, ſhould be all left with the Lord; who knows which and what of it is moſt convenient for us, and when is the beſt time to beſtow it on us.

℣. 42. They remembered not his hand, &c.] Which brought them out of Egypt, and daſhed their enemies in pieces, and which had been ſo often opened to ſupply their wants in the wilderneſs; the Targum renders it the miracles of his hand: nor the day when he delivered them from the enemy; Pharaoh king of Egypt; that very memorable day in which they were delivered out of his hands, that ſelf-ſame day which had been fixed by promiſe and prophecy many hundreds of years before, in which the hoſts of the Lord went out of Egypt, Exod. xii. 41. Gen. xv. 13, 14. times when as well as places where deliverances and ſalvation have been wrought, ſhould not be forgotten; and forgetfulneſs of the goodneſs of God in times paſt, is often the cauſe and occaſion of ſinning againſt him, which, by a remembrance of his kind appearances, might be prevented.

℣. 43. How he had wrought his ſigns in Egypt, &c.] The plagues which he brought upon the Egyptians, for refuſing to let Iſrael go: and his wonders in the field of Zoan; or in the country of Zoan, that is Tanis, as the Targum renders it; ſo the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions; ſee ℣. 12. an enumeration of theſe ſigns and wonders follows; but not of all, nor in the order in which they were: only ſeven are mentioned, with which compare the ſeven vials or laſt plagues, Rev. vi. 1.

℣. 44. And had turned their rivers into blood, &c.] The river Nile and its ſeven ſtreams; this was the firſt of the plagues of Egypt, Exod. vii. 20, 21. and was a juſt retaliation for drowning the infants of the Iſraelites in their river, Exod. i. 22. a like plague will be inflicted on ſpiritual Egypt, and with equal juſtice; ſee Rev. xi. 8. and xvi. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. and their floods that they could not drink; the rivulets that flowed from the Nile, and every ſpring or confluence of water; or rather by theſe rivers and floods are meant the canals and ditches, which, as Jarchi[e] obſerves, were made by the hands of men, from the banks of the river Nile, to water their fields with.

℣. 45. He ſent divers ſorts of flies among them, &c.] This was the fourth plague; ſee Exod. viii. 24, 25. the word ſignifies a mixture[f], and the Targum renders it "a mixture of wild beaſts;" ſo Joſephus[g] underſtood this plague of various ſorts of beaſts of different forms, and ſuch as had never been ſeen before. Aben Ezra, on Exod. viii 24. interprets it of evil beaſts mixed together, as lions, wolves, bears and leopards; and Jarchi, on the ſame place, of ſerpents and ſcorpions: the Syriac and Arabic verſions here, following the Septuagint, render the word dog-flies; ſo called becauſe they were, as Pliny[h] ſays, very troubleſome to dogs, and ſo might give the Egyptians greater uneaſineſs, becauſe they worſhipped dogs. God can make uſe of very mean and contemptible inſtruments, the leaſt of inſects, to plague and diſtreſs the moſt powerful enemies of his people: which devoured them; corrupted their land, Exod. viii. 24. perhaps produced a peſtilence, which deſtroyed many of the inhabitants, or conſumed the vegetables of the land; as but a few years ago in New England, a ſort of inſects came out of little holes in the ground, in the form of maggots, and turned to flies, which, for the ſpace of 200 miles, poiſoned and deſtroyed all the trees in the country[i]: and frogs, which deſtroyed them; with their ſtench; ſee Exod. viii. 5, 6. with this plague compare Rev. xvi. 13. this was the ſecond plague.

℣. 46. He gave alſo their increaſe unto the caterpiller, &c.] A kind of locuſt, and the ſame with the locuſt in the next clauſe; for we read but of the locuſt only in Exod. x. 13. and their labour unto the locuſt; which devoured the increaſe of the field, all green graſs and trees, all ſorts of corn, wheat, barley and rye, and the increaſe of vineyards and all fruit-trees, on which much labour had been uſed to manure and cultivate; ſee Rev. ix. 3, 4. this was the eighth plague.

℣. 47. He deſtroyed their vines with hail, &c.] Or killed[k] them; for there is a vegetative life in plants: this was the ſeventh plague of Egypt, attended with thunder and lightning, and was very terrible to Pharaoh, Exod. ix. 23. 28. with this compare Rev. xvi. 21. and their ſycamore-trees with froſt; ſycamore-trees, according to Kimchi, were a ſort of wild figs, and theſe with the vines are only mentioned; though the plague of hail deſtroyed all ſorts of trees; becauſe there were many of theſe in Egypt, and are put for all others; and who alſo obſerves, that the word חנמל rendered froſt, which is only uſed in this place, ſignifies a kind of hail; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it, of great hail-ſtones which beat off the fruit of the ſycamore-trees: but R. Saadiah Gaon explains it by the Arabic word Al-Jakia, which ſignifies a ſtrong froſt which breaks the buds of trees, and dries up their moiſture. Jarchi will have it to be, according to the Midraſh, a kind of locuſt, which comes and ſits and cuts off the green of the trees and graſs, and eats it. Aben Ezra makes mention of this ſenſe; but rejects it.

℣. 48. He gave up their cattle alſo to the hail, &c.] For the hail fell upon man and beaſt, as well as upon herbs and trees, Exod. ix. 22. 25. and their flocks to hot thunderbolts; which were killed by them: this is to be underſtood of the fire that was mingled with the hail, and ran upon the ground, and deſtroyed their flocks, Exod. ix. 23, 24. Jarchi, out of the Midraſh, interprets the words, of fowls which devoured the ſheep killed by the hail.

℣. 49. He caſt upon them the fierceneſs of his anger, &c.] This with the following words, wrath, and indignation, and trouble, are thought by ſome to intend the other plagues which are not particularly mentioned; or rather, they expreſs the manner in which they were all inflicted, in great wrath and hot diſpleaſure for their ſins and iniquities, and which particularly were ſhewn by ſending evil angels among them; not evil in themſelves, but becauſe they were the inſtruments God made uſe of to bring evil things upon the Egyptians, as good angels often are; though ſome think that dæmons, devils, or wicked ſpirits, were ſent among them at that time; the darkneſs was over all the land, and frighted them; ſee Wiſdom xvii. 3, 4. According to Arama, the three laſt plagues are meant: the words may be rendered meſſengers of evil things[l], as they are by ſome, and be underſtood of Moſes and Aaron, who were ſent time after time with meſſages of evil things to Pharaoh, in which were expreſſed his wrath and fury againſt them.

℣. 50. He made a way to his anger, &c.] Or for it, ſo that nothing could obſtruct it, or hinder the execution of it; or he weighed a path for his anger[m]; he weighed it in the balance of juſtice, and proportioned his anger to their crimes, and puniſhed them according to their juſt deſerts: he ſpared not their ſoul from death, but gave their life over to the peſtilence; which ſome underſtand of their cattle, and of the murrain that came upon them, by which they were deſtroyed, and which was the fifth plague of Egypt, Exod. ix. 3. ſo the Targum, "their beaſts he delivered unto death;" but Aben Ezra interprets it of the ſlaughter of the firſt-born, expreſſed in the following verſe; and ſo others.

℣. 51. And ſmote all the firſt-born in Egypt, &c.] From the prince to the peaſant; and not only the firſt-born of men, but of beaſts alſo, Exod. xii. 29. the chief of their ſtrength; or firſt of it, as the firſt-born is called, Gen. xlix. 3. in the tabernacles of Ham; in the ſeveral cities, towns, villages and houſes of the Egyptians, the deſcendants of curſed Ham; for Mizraim, from whom the Egyptians have their name, and from whence they ſprung, was a ſon of Ham's, Gen. x. 6. Perhaps No Ammon may be particularly meant, Nahum iii. 8. the ſame with Memphis, and which ſignifies the manſion or palace of Ammon, that is, Ham; and ſo Chemmis, another city in Egypt, ſignifies the ſame[n]; of which ſee Pſ. cv. 23. this was the tenth and laſt plague: according to Suidas[o], the plagues of Egypt continued 40 days.

℣. 52. But made his own people to go forth like ſheep, &c.] The people of Iſrael, whom the Lord choſe to be his peculiar people above all others; theſe he cauſed to go forth out of Egypt, with a mighty hand and ſtretched-out arm; like ſheep, weak, timorous, unarmed, harmleſs and inoffenſive, not a dog daring to move his tongue at them: the power of God was wonderfully diſplayed in the delivery of his poor, helpleſs and oppreſſed people: well may it be aſcribed to him; for it was not their arm but his that brought them out: and guided them in the wilderneſs like a flock; by the hands of Moſes and Aaron, Pſ. lxxvii. 20; he alſo going before them as the ſhepherd of the flock in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night; he kept them together as a flock from ſcattering, ſtraying, and being loſt; and directed their way in the untrodden wilderneſs, through all the windings and turnings of it, and protected them from all dangers and enemies.

℣. 53. And he led them on ſafely, &c.] Through the ſea, where the waters were on each ſide; and through the wilderneſs, in which were ſerpents and ſcorpions, and where they were attacked by many powerful enemies: ſo that they feared not; for tho' they feared for a while at the Red Sea, yet their fears were ſoon ſilenced, and they by faith paſſed thro' the Red Sea as on dry land; and eſpecially their fears were gone, when they ſaw the Egyptians dead on the ſea-ſhore; wherefore it follows: but the ſea overwhelmed their enemies; or covered them[p]; the waters returned, and overflowed and drowned the Egyptians, who were their implacable enemies, and vowed their deſtruction, and were ſure of it; but now the Iſraelites had nothing to fear from them.

℣. 54. And he brought them to the border of his ſanctuary, &c.] Of the land of Canaan, which the Lord had ſanctified, and ſet apart for them; and of Jeruſalem, the holy city, the city of the great God, and of the temple where his reſidence was to be; ſo the Targum, "to the border of the place of the houſe of his ſanctuary:" even to this mountain, which his right hand purchaſed; the mount Moriah, on which the temple was built; this pſalm being compoſed, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi think, after it was made known to David by the prophet Gad, the place where the temple ſhould be built; namely, on the very mountain, on part of which David had his palace; and this was obtained and poſſeſſed, not by the power, nor through the merits of the Iſraelites, but through the power and goodneſs of God; ſee Pſ. xliv. 3.

℣. 55. He caſt out the heathen alſo before them, &c.] The ſeven nations, the Hittites, Girgaſhites, Amorites, Canaanites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebuſites, Deut. vii. 1. and divided them an inheritance by line; the land of Canaan was divided among the nine tribes and a half by Joſhua, the other two and a half having had their portion aſſigned them on the other ſide; this diſtribution was made very exactly by lot, by line, and meaſure, ſo that every tribe had their proper portion and inheritance; ſee Joſh. xiii. 6, 7, 8, 32. and xiv. 1—5. and made the tribes of Iſrael to dwell in their tents; in the cities, towns, villages, and houſes of the heathen caſt out before them.

℣. 56. Yet they tempted and provoked the moſt high God, &c.] After the death of Joſhua, and in the times of the judges, by worſhipping and ſerving the gods of the nations, and forſaking the Lord their God, who had done ſuch great things for them, Judg. ii. 11—14. and kept not his teſtimonies; the laws of God, which teſtified and declared his mind and will; nor obſerved his word and ordinances, which teſtified of his grace, and of the way of ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt.

℣. 57. But turned back, &c.] From God and his worſhip, apoſtatized from the true religion, and turned to idols: and dealt unfaithfully like their fathers; in the wilderneſs; ſee ℣. 8, 36, 37. they were turned aſide like a deceitful bow; that promiſes well to carry the arrow right, but drops it at the feet of the archer; or carries it another way, ſo that it miſſes the mark. The Targum is, "as a bow caſting arrows;" to the ground, and not to the mark; ſee Hoſ. vii. 16. or being too much ſtretched is ſuddenly broken, and kills the archer; or returns to its own nature; ſo Arama.

℣. 58. For they provoked him to anger with their high places, &c.] Which they built to Baal, and other heathen deities: and moved him to jealouſy with their graven images; which they worſhipped, ſee Judg. x. 6. which idolatry was ſpiritual adultery, and ſo made the Lord jealous of them, who ſtood in the relation of a huſband to them, as a man becomes jealous by the unchaſte and laſcivious conduct of his wife; and ſuch a courſe of life the Iſraelites lived, throughout the reigns of the judges, at certain ſeaſons, until the times of Eli and Samuel, when the ark was carried captive, of which mention is made in the following verſes.

℣. 59. When God heard this, &c.] Their building high places, and ſacrificing on them, their making and worſhipping graven images, and the language which ſuch actions ſpoke; who alſo heard what they ſaid to their idols, when they paid their devotion to them, acknowledging them to be their gods; he took notice of and obſerved all this, for nothing could paſs his all-ſeeing eye and hearing ear; and who acted as a righteous judge, firſt heard, and then proceeded to give and execute the ſentence; by which he let them know, that he did hear and obſerve what they ſaid and did: he was wroth, and greatly abhorred Iſrael; not his remnant among them, according to the election of grace, which he in all ages had; for this would be contrary to his everlaſting love, which always continues; to the immutability of his nature, who changes not; to his word, who ſays, fury is not in me; and to his oath, who has ſworn that he will not be wroth with his people: he may indeed, and does abhor their ſins, but not their perſons; he may ſeem to them and others in the diſpenſations of his providence to be wroth with them and abhor them; but does not in reality. This is to be underſtood of the bulk of the people in general, and is to be explained and illuſtrated by thoſe ſeveral inſtances of his diſpleaſure with them in the times of the judges; when his anger waxed hot againſt them for their idolatries and other ſins, and he delivered them up into the hands of their enemies, Judg. iii. 7, 8, 12, 13, 14. and iv. 1, 2. and x. 6, 7, 8. and xiii. 1.

℣. 60. So that he forſook the tabernacle of Shiloh, &c.] The tabernacle which Moſes built in the wilderneſs by the command of the Lord, and according to the pattern ſhewed him; and which when the Iſraelites were ſettled in the land of Canaan, was ſet up in Shiloh; ſee Joſh. xviii. 1. and here it was in the times of Eli and Samuel, which are here referred to: the tent which he placed among men; it was as a tent, moveable from place to place, and was to continue at longeſt but for a while, as the whole tabernacle-worſhip and ſervice was to do; here the divine majeſty dwelt, and among men, vile, ſinful, wicked, and ungrateful men; which was a wonderful inſtance of his condeſcenſion and goodneſs, 1 Kings viii. 27. but when their iniquities grew to ſuch a degree as were intolerable, he forſook it and removed it elſewhere; ſee Jer. vii. 12, 14. rather the words may be rendered, on the tent, or tabernacle which he had fixed in Adam; as they are by Dr. Lightfoot[q]; that is, in the city Adam, which was in the center of the parting of the waters of Jordan, and where was the ſtation of the tabernacle and ark of the covenant, when Iſrael entered into them, and paſſed through them; which is mentioned as a wonderful circumſtance, both with reſpect to the tabernacle, and to the people of Iſrael.

℣. 61. And delivered his ſtrength into captivity, &c.] That is, the ark called his ſtrength, and the ark of his ſtrength, Pſ. cv. 4. and cxxxii. 8. becauſe it was a token of his ſtrength, and by means of which he diſplayed it, as when the Iſraelites paſſed through Jordan into Canaan's land, and encompaſſed the city of Jericho; and beſides, it was typical of Chriſt, the man of God's right hand, made ſtrong for himſelf, and in whom is ſtrength as well as righteouſneſs for his people; now this was delivered up into the hands of the Philiſtines, and carried captive, 1 Sam. iv. 11.

[q] See his Works, Vol. 2. p. 82.

The Targum renders it, his law, becauſe the two tables of the law were in the ark; ſo Jarchi interprets it, the ark and the tables: and his glory into the enemies hand; which deſigns the ſame thing, the ark being the glory of God, over which upon the mercy-ſeat the glorious majeſty of the Lord was; hence Phinehas's wife, when ſhe heard the ark was taken, fell into labour, her time being near, and brought forth a ſon, and called him Ichabod, ſaying, the glory is departed from Iſrael, for the ark of God is taken, 1 Sam. iv. 21, 22.

℣. 62. He gave his people over alſo to the ſword, &c.] To thoſe that kill with the ſword, as the Targum; that is, to the Philiſtines, when there fell of them thirty thouſand men at once, 1 Sam. iv. 10. and was wroth with his inheritance; and the above ſhowed that he was, though they were his inheritance, his portion, and poſſeſſion, and he had choſen them for it, Pſ. xxxiii. 12.

℣. 63. The fire conſumed their young men, &c.] Not Nadab and Abihu, as ſome of the Jewiſh Rabbins interpret it, of which Jarchi makes mention; but the young men, the choice, the flower of the Iſraelitiſh army, which engaged with the Philiſtines in the times of Eli; and the fire that conſumed them is not to be underſtood of material fire, or of extraordinary fire from heaven, but either of the wrath of God, as Jarchi, or of the flaming glittering ſword of the enemy, which conſumed them like fire; ſee Numb. xxi. 28. Iſ. xxvi. 11. and their maidens were not given to marriage; the young men to whom they ſhould have been married, and to whom they might have been eſpouſed, being ſlain in battle: or, were not honoured[a]; that is, with marriage, which is honourable to all, Heb. xiii. 4. or were not praiſed[b]; were not attended with epithalamies and nuptial ſongs, ſuch as uſed to be ſung at the time of marriage; hence, as Kimchi obſerves, the nuptial chamber is called בית הלולא the houſe of praiſe; and ſo frequently when a great calamity is threatened or deſcribed, it is ſaid, the voice of the bride and bridegroom is not heard; ſee Jer. xvi. 9. and xxv. 10. Rev. xviii. 23.

℣. 64. Their prieſts fell by the ſword, &c.] Hophni and Phinehas, the ſons of Eli, and other prieſts; which ſhews the cruelty of the enemy, not to ſpare men unarmed, as the prieſts were; and the juſtice of God, which purſued theſe men, who were very wicked, and whoſe character and office could not ſecure them from divine wrath: and their widows made no lamentation; for their huſbands the prieſts, who fell by the ſword; particularly the widow of Phinehas, who upon the news fell into labour, and as ſoon as ſhe brought forth her child died, and while ſhe lived took no notice of the death of her huſband, nor lamented that, only that the ark of the Lord was taken, 1 Sam. iv. 19—22. and which might be the caſe of others; nor could they attend their funerals, or follow them to the grave with lamentations, they falling in battel; and ſuch was their concern for the public loſs, that their private ſorrow was ſwallowed up in it. Some underſtand it of the diſreſpect and neglect of others, who came not to lament with them, and comfort them, as was uſual: one of the Targums paraphraſes the whole thus, "at the time that the Philiſtines carried captive the ark of the Lord, the prieſts of Shiloh, Hophni and Phinehas, fell by the ſword, and at the time they brought their wives the news of it, they wept not, for they died even the ſame day."

℣. 65. Then the Lord awaked as one out of ſleep, &c.] He ſeemed to be aſleep, while he ſuffered the ark to be taken, and the Iſraelites to be ſlain; and he may be ſaid to awake when he exerted his power in ſmiting the Philiſtines, and cauſing their idol to fall before his ark; ſee Pſ. vii. 6. and xliv. 23. and like a mighty man that ſhouteth by reaſon of wine; who having taken a free draught of generous wine, not to exceſs, goes forth with great courage and chearfulneſs to meet his adverſary, ſhouting as he goes, being ſure of victory; which muſt be applied to God with decency, conſiſtent with the glory of his majeſty, and the perfections of his nature; and ſeems deſigned to expreſs his power and readineſs to help his people, and avenge himſelf on his enemies; ſee Iſ. xlii. 13. Zech. ix. 15.

℣. 66. And he ſmote his enemies in the hinder parts, &c.] Not the Iſraelites, as Kimchi interprets it, but the Philiſtines, who in another battle were put to flight, and turned their backs, and ſo were ſmitten in their hinder parts; or rather this has reference to the Philiſtines being ſmitten with hæmorrhoids, or piles in their poſteriors, whilſt the ark was retained a captive by them, 1 Sam. v. 6, 12. and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "and he ſmote them that troubled them with hæmorrhoids in their poſteriors:" the Greek verſion as quoted by Suidas[c] is, he ſmote his enemies on the back parts of the ſeat; ſignifying, he ſays, a diſeaſe, modeſtly expreſſed: he put them to a perpetual reproach; either by cauſing their idol Dagon to fall before his ark, and be broken upon the threſhold of the houſe of the idol; in memory of which the prieſts ever after, nor any that came in thither, trod upon the threſhold, 1 Sam. v. 3, 4, 5. or rather through their ſending golden images of their hæmorrhoids, and golden mice along with the ark, which were reſerved to their perpetual reproach: other inſtances of the Lord's regard to Iſrael follow, in providing a proper place for the ark, and appointing a ſuitable governor over the people.

℣. 67. Moreover, he refuſed the tabernacle of Joſeph, &c.] That is, the tabernacle of Moſes, which had been for a long time at Shiloh, a city in the tribe of Ephraim, the ſon of Joſeph; when the ark was brought back by the Philiſtines, it was not returned to Shiloh, but carried to Kirjath-jearim, where it remained twenty years, and after that was had to Zion, the city of David, 1 Sam. vii. 1, 2. 2 Sam. vi. 3, 4, 12. ſo the Targum, "and he rejected the tabernacle which he had ſtretched out in the border of Joſeph;" he did not refuſe the tabernacle, or remove his preſence from it; but he refuſed the place it had been in, or refuſed that it ſhould be any more there: and choſe not the tribe of Ephraim; the ſame thing is deſigned as before; the meaning is, not that he rejected the tribe of Ephraim from being one of the tribes of Iſrael; nor does it refer to the revolt of Ephraim, or the ten tribes, from the pure worſhip of God to idolatry, and their ſeparation from the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin; or to their being carried captive into Aſſyria; ſince this hiſtorical narration reaches no farther than the reign of David, or the time of Solomon at fartheſt; whereas the facts mentioned were a long time afterwards; nor does it at regard the removal of government from the tribe of Ephraim, which was the ſeat of it in the times of Joſhua, of which tribe he was, Numb. xiii. 8. though this tribe was overlooked in the choice of a king, one of the tribe of Benjamin being firſt choſen; and when he was rejected, then one of the tribe of Judah; but this purely, at leaſt principally, intends that it was the will of God, that the ſeat of worſhip ſhould not be in this tribe any longer; that the ark and tabernacle ſhould be no more there: perhaps the Ephraimites were more culpable, and more provoked the Lord with their idolatry, than the other tribes, ſince they are firſt and laſt taken notice of as the objects of the divine reſentment in this account; ſee ℣. 9, 10, 11.

℣. 68. But choſe the tribe of Judah, &c.] Both to be the ſeat of kingly power and government, and of religious worſhip; the latter is chiefly deſigned. Jeruſalem was, at leaſt part of it, in the tribe of Judah: here David, who was of that tribe, dwelt, and Solomon his ſon, and all the kings of Judah afterwards; here the temple was built, into which the ark of the covenant was put, and whither the tribes went up to worſhip: the mount Zion which he loved; where was the city of David, into which the ark was brought when removed from Gibeah, and on part of which the temple was built: the choice of this place, for ſuch a purpoſe, was from love, Pſ. lxxxvii. 2. it was typical of the church, the choice of which alſo ariſes from the everlaſting and unchangeable love of God to it.

℣. 69. And he built his ſanctuary like high palaces, &c.] The temple at Jeruſalem, called a ſanctuary, or holy place, becauſe ſeparated and dedicated to holy uſe and ſervice; where the holy God had his reſidence, and was worſhipped, and was a figure of the holy place not made with hands: this is ſaid to be built by the Lord, becauſe the materials provided for it, and which David and his people ſo willingly offered, were his own; of his own they gave him, as well as the pattern after which it was made, was had from the Spirit of God; and it was the Lord that put it into the heart of David to ſet ſuch a work a-foot, and encouraged Solomon to begin and finiſh it, and gave wiſdom, health, and ſtrength to the workmen to accompliſh it; and in reference to this are the words in Pſ. cxxvii. 1. except the Lord build the houſe, &c. and this he built, not like the high places, where idolatry was committed; the temple was not built in imitation of them; but like what high and eminent men, like ſuch buildings as they erect; like ſtately palaces, ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi, built for kings and great perſonages; and ſuch a building was the temple, the moſt magnificent in all the world, as built by Solomon, and even as rebuilt by Zerubbabel, and repaired by Herod; ſee Mark xiii. 1. or it was built on high, as the Syriac verſion, on a high hill, mount Moriah: the Targum is, "as the horn of the unicorn;" and ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions. Jarchi interprets it as the high heavens, of which it was a figure; it was like them for magnificence and glory, and like the earth for ſtability, as follows: like the earth which he hath eſtabliſhed for ever; as to the ſubſtance of it; though as to the qualities of it, it will be done away, and a new one ariſe; otherwiſe it will abide for ever, Eccl. i. 4. this reſpects the continuance of the temple during the Jewiſh diſpenſation, when the goſpel-temple or goſpel-church ſhould take place, which will continue to the end of the world: this is oppoſed to the frequent removes of the tabernacle and ark before the temple was built, when there was no abiding habitation provided for it.

℣. 70. He choſe David alſo his ſervant, &c.] To be king of Iſrael, the youngeſt of his father's family, when he rejected all the reſt; ſee 1 Sam. xvi. 6. 11. an eminent type of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is called by his name, Pſ. lxxxix. 3. 19. Ezek. xxxiv. 23. and xxxvii. 24. Hoſ. iii. 5. and the ſignification of his name Beloved agrees with him, who is beloved of God, as his ſon, and as man and mediator; and beloved of men, of all the ſaints: and ſo likewiſe his character as a ſervant ſuits with him; who not only frequently has the name of a ſervant, Pſ. lxxxix. 19, 20. Iſ. xlii. 1. Zech. iii. 8. but appeared in the form of one, Phil ii. 7. had the work of a ſervant to do, which he has accompliſhed, even the great work of our ſalvation, John xvii. 4. in doing which, and all things leading on and appertaining to it, he took the utmoſt delight and pleaſure, and uſed the greateſt diligence and aſſiduity, John iv. 34. and ix. 4. and juſtly acquired the character of a faithful and righteous ſervant, Iſ. liii. 11. and to this work and office he was choſen and called by his Father, Iſ. xlii. 1. and xlix. 3. and took him from the ſheep-folds; from whence he was fetched when Samuel was ſent by the Lord to anoint him, 1 Sam. xvi. 11. ſo Moſes whilſt he was feeding his father's ſheep was called to be the ſaviour and deliverer of Iſrael, Exod. iii. 1—10. and Amos was taken from following the flock to be a prophet of the Lord, Amos vii. 13, 14. and as David was a type of Chriſt, this may expreſs the mean condition of our Lord, in his ſtate of humiliation, previous to his exaltation, and the more open exerciſe of his kingly office.

℣. 71. From following the ewes great with young, &c.] Or, from after them [a]; it was uſual with the ſhepherd to put them before him, and to follow them, and gently drive them, which is expreſſive of his care and tenderneſs of them; ſee Gen. xxxiii. 13, 14. the ſame is obſerved of David's antitype, the great and good ſhepherd of the ſheep, Iſ. xl. 11. David was a type of Chriſt as a ſhepherd; as he kept his father's ſheep, ſo Chriſt keeps thoſe that the Father has given him, John x. 29. as David kept his flock with great care and courage, and in ſafety, 1 Sam. xvii. 34, 35, 36. ſo does the Lord Jeſus Chriſt keep his flock in ſafety, and preſerves it from Satan, the roaring lion, and from grievous wolves that enter into it, and every beaſt of prey that would devour it; and particularly as David took ſpecial care of thoſe that were with young, ſo does the Lord take ſpecial care of ſuch that are new-born babes, that have Chriſt formed in them, and are big with deſires after him, carry a burthen, and are weary, and heavy laden: the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi interpret the word [b] of ſuch that give ſuck, and ſo it moſt properly ſignifies: he brought him to feed Jacob his people, and Iſrael his inheritance; that is, to rule over them: this is ſaid in alluſion to his having been a ſhepherd; and nothing is more common than for kings to be repreſented as ſhepherds, and their acts of government by leading and feeding; and one and the ſame word in the Greek language ſignifies to feed and rule; and ſo the Targum, "he brought him to rule over Jacob his people:" this was a great honour indeed, to be the governor of the Lord's people, a ſpecial people above all people on the face of the earth, and whom he had choſen to be his inheritance; and in this alſo he was a type of Chriſt, who has the throne of his father David given him, and who reigns over the houſe of Jacob, one of whoſe titles is king of ſaints; for as the government of the world in general, ſo of the church in particular, is on his ſhoulders, Luke i. 32. 33. Rev xv. 4. Iſ. ix. 6, 7.

℣. 72. So he fed them according to the integrity of his heart, &c.] Or, reigned over them, as the Targum; that is, over the people of Iſrael, and which he did in ſuch manner as ſhewed uprightneſs of heart, and that he was, as his character is, a man after God's own heart: it appeared, by his adminiſtration of government, that he ſought not his own honour and intereſt, and the aggrandizing of his family, but the good of his people and the glory of God; and this character, in the fulleſt extent and higheſt ſenſe of it, beſt agrees with Chriſt, the righteous branch raiſed unto David, Jer. xxiii. 5. Rev. xv. 3, 4. John vii. 18. and guided them by the ſkilfulneſs of his hands; or by the prudence of his hands, as the Targum; or by the prudencies[c], as in the original text; with the moſt conſummate wiſdom and ſkill: hands are made mention of, partly in alluſion to the ſhepherd, as David had been, who carries a ſtaff in his hand, and guides his flock with it; and partly with reſpect to the acts and adminiſtration of government, which were wiſely performed by him: he made wiſe laws for his people and ſoldiers, and put them in execution; he behaved wiſely in the court, and in the camp; but was greatly and infinitely exceeded by his antitype, the ſervant of the Lord, that ſhould deal prudently, Iſ. lii. 13. and who is abundantly qualified for it, as being not only the wiſdom of God, and the all-wiſe God, but, even as mediator, has the ſpirit of wiſdom on him, and the treaſures of wiſdom in him.

PSALM LXXIX.

A pſalm of Aſaph.

THIS pſalm was not written by one Aſaph, who is ſuppoſed to live after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, or, according to ſome, even after the times of Antiochus, of whom there is no account, nor any certainty that there ever was ſuch a man in thoſe times; but by Aſaph the ſeer and prophet, that lived in the time of David, who, under a prophetic ſpirit, foreſaw and foretold things that ſhould come to paſs, ſpoken of in this pſalm: nor is it any objection that what is here ſaid is delivered as an hiſtory of facts, ſince many prophecies are delivered in this way, eſpecially thoſe of the prophet Iſaiah. The Targum is, "a ſong by the hands of Aſaph, concerning the deſtruction of the houſe of the ſanctuary (or temple), which he ſaid by a ſpirit of prophecy." The title of the Syriac verſion is, "ſaid by Aſaph concerning the deſtruction of Jeruſalem." The argument of the pſalm is of the ſame kind with the 74th. Some refer it to the times of Antiochus Epiphanes; ſo Theodoret; but though the temple was then defiled, Jeruſalem was not utterly deſtroyed; and others to the deſtruction of the city and temple by Nebuchadnezzar; and why may it not refer to both, and even to the after deſtruction of both by Titus Veſpaſian? and may include the affliction and troubles of the chriſtians under Rome pagan and papal, and eſpecially the latter; for Jeruſalem and the temple may be underſtood in a myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe; at leaſt the troubles of the Jews in the times referred to, were typical of what ſhould befal the people of God under the new teſtament, and in antichriſtian times.

℣. 1. O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance, &c.] The land of Canaan, divided among the children of Iſrael by lot and line for an inheritance, out of which the heathen were caſt, to make room for them; but now would come into it again; ſee Pſ. lxxix. ℣. 55. and this is called the Lord's inheritance, becauſe he gave it as ſuch to the people of Iſrael, and dwelt in it himſelf; and the rather, this is obſerved as ſomething marvellous, that he ſhould ſuffer heathens to poſſeſs his own inheritance; or the city of Jeruſalem, which was the place the Lord choſe to put his name in; or the temple, where he had his reſidence, called the mountain of his inheritance, Exod. xv. 17. and into which it was always accounted a prophanation for heathens to enter; ſee Acts xxi. 28, 29. into each of theſe places the heathen came; the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar, the Syrians under Antiochus, 1 Maccab. i. 38. and iii. 45. the Romans under Pompey, Veſpaſian, and Titus; and the papiſts have ſince entered among the people of God, who are his heritage or inheritance, and have lorded it over them, and made havock of them, and who are called heathens and gentiles, Pſ. x. 16. Rev. xi. 2. 18. thy holy temple have they defiled; this was done in the times of Antiochus, by entering into it, taking away the holy veſſels out of it, ſhedding innocent blood in it, and ſetting up the abomination of deſolation on the altar, and ſacrificing to it, 1 Maccab. i. 21. 37. 46. 54. and iii. 51. 2 Maccab. viii. 2. and by burning it in the times of Nebuchadnezzar and Titus; ſee Pſ. lxxiv. 7. and the church, which is the holy temple of God, has been defiled by antichriſt ſitting in it, and ſhewing himſelf there as if he was God, by his dreadful blaſphemies, idolatrous worſhip, and falſe doctrines, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. they have laid Jeruſalem on heaps; the walls and buildings being pulled down, and made a heap of ſtones and rubbiſh: in the times of Antiochus and of the Maccabees, it was ſet on fire, and the houſes and the walls pulled down on every ſide, and was greatly defaced, and threatened to be laid level with the ground, 1 Maccab. i. 31. 2 Maccab. viii. 3. and ix. 14. and this was thoroughly done in the times of Nebuchadnezzar and Titus, when the city was broke up and burnt with fire, and laid utterly deſolate; ſo the Targum renders the word for deſolation; it ſometimes ſignifies a grave; ſee Job xxx. 24. and the ſenſe may be here, that the city of Jeruſalem was made graves to many, and multitudes were buried under the ruins of it. Aben Ezra interprets it, low places which were dug to find hidden things; the Septuagint tranſlate it a watch, or cottage for apple-orchards, and ſo the verſions that follow it; ſignifying to what a low condition the city was reduced. Jarchi and Kimchi interpret the word as we do, heaps: this as it is true of Jeruſalem, which has been trodden under foot by the gentiles, and remains ſo to this day, Luke xxi. 24. ſo likewiſe of myſtical Jeruſalem, the holy city, given to the gentiles or papiſts, to be trodden down for the ſpace of forty and two months, the exact time of the reign of antichriſt, Rev. xi. 2.

℣. 2. The dead bodies of thy ſervants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, &c.] For ſuch there were, both at the time of the Babyloniſh captivity, and in the times of Antiochus, who were good men, and ſerved the Lord, and yet ſuffered in the common calamity. Nicanor, a general of Demetrius, in the time of the Maccabees, ſeems to have been guilty of ſuch a fact as this, ſince, when he was ſlain, his tongue was given in pieces to the fowls, and the reward of his madneſs was hung up before the temple, 2 Maccab. xv. 33. the fleſh of thy ſaints unto the beaſts of the earth; this clauſe and the following verſe are applied to a caſe in the times of the Maccabees, when threeſcore men of the Aſſideans were ſlain, religious, devout, and holy men, ſo called from the very word here tranſlated ſaints, 1 Maccab vii. 13. 17.

℣. 3. Their blood have they ſhed like water round about Jeruſalem, &c.] Without any concern of mind, or remorſe of conſcience; without any fear of God or man; as if it had been ſo much water only; and this they ſhed in great abundance; ſee 1 Maccab. i. 24. 30. 37. and ii. 38. in like manner the blood of the ſaints has been ſhed by the antichriſtian beaſt of Rome, for which he and his followers will be righteouſly retaliated, Rev. xvii. 6. and xviii. 24. and xvi. 6. and there was none to bury them; either the number of the ſlain was ſo great, that there were not left enow to bury the dead, or they that did remain were not ſuffered to do it; this will be the caſe of the two witneſſes, when ſlain, Rev. xi. 7, 8, 9.

℣. 4. We are become a reproach to our neighbours, &c.] That is, thoſe that remained; ſo the Jews were to the Edomites, eſpecially at the time of the Babyloniſh captivity, Pſ. cxxxvii. 7. a ſcorn and deriſion to them that are round about us; as the Chriſtians in all ages have been to the men of the world, and eſpecially will be inſulted and triumphed over when the witneſſes are ſlain, Rev. xi. 10.

℣. 5. How long, Lord, wilt thou be angry? for ever? &c.] That is, how long wilt thou be angry? ſhall it be for ever? ſee Pſ. lxxxv. 4, 5. for though what was done, or to be done, as before related, was or will be done by the enemies of the Lord's people, yet by his permiſſion, and as a token of his anger and diſpleaſure againſt them; at leaſt it might be ſo underſtood, both by them and by their enemies; and hence this expoſtulation, ſhall thy jealouſy burn like fire? ſo jealouſy does; its coals are coals of fire, Cant. viii. 6. there were, at the times referred to, ſuch among the people, who did evil things, and provoked the Lord to jealouſy and wrath; ſee 1 Maccab. i. 64. 2 Maccab. viii. 29.

℣. 6. Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee, &c.] Who had poured out the blood of the ſaints like water, and therefore it was a righteous thing with God to pour out the cup of wrath in his hands, and cauſe them to drink the dregs of it: theſe words though they are in the form of an imprecation, yet regard not private revenge, but public juſtice, and the honour of God; and, beſides, may be conſidered as a prophecy of what would be, and particularly of God's pouring out the vials of his wrath on the antichriſtian ſtates; who, though they profeſs chriſtianity, are no other than heathens, and have no ſpiritual and ſerious knowledge of Chriſt: and upon the kingdoms that have not called upon thy name; but upon their idols of gold, ſilver, braſs and ſtone, on the virgin Mary, angels, and ſaints departed; for theſe, beſides the kingdoms of Babylon, Syria, and Rome pagan, are the kingdoms of the ten kings, that gave their kingdoms to the beaſt, and committed fornication, i. e. idolatry, with the whore of Rome; ſee Rev. xvii. 2. 12, 13, 14. theſe words are referred to in Jer. x. 25. and alſo the following.

℣. 7. For they have devoured Jacob, &c.] The poſterity of Jacob, the people of the Jews, typical of the church of God, made havock of by the Romiſh antichriſt: and laid waſte his dwelling place; both Jeruſalem and the temple, which was done both by the Chaldeans and by the Romans, and alſo in the times of Antiochus; ſee 1 Maccab. i. 38, 39. and iii. 4, 5. which were types of the goſpel-church made deſolate by the papiſts: the word [d] uſed ſignifies a ſheep-coat, the dwelling place of thoſe ſheep that are worried by the beaſt of Rome.

℣. 8. O remember not againſt us former iniquities, &c.] Or, our antient iniquities, as the Septuagint; the moſt antient ſin of all is that of our firſt parents, in which we are involved, and by which we are made ſinners, and for which judgment comes upon all men; and from thence flows the corruption of nature, or that original ſin of our nature in which we are all conceived and born, and ſo are tranſgreſſors from the womb; or iniquities of former times, of our youth, as Kimchi, ſins done of old, committed long ago, in the youthful age, ſee Pſ. xxv. 7. or the ſins of former perſons, of our fathers, as Aben Ezra, which the Lord viſits ſometimes upon the children; ſome think reference is had to the ſin of their forefathers in making and worſhipping the golden calf; the Jews [e] have a ſaying, that there is no puniſhment happens to Iſrael, but there is an ounce in it for the ſin of the calf; their meaning is, that this is always remembered and viſited, according to Exod. xxxii. 34. the phraſe may take in all the ſins of former perſons their anceſtors, and of former times, from age to age, they had continued in, which had brought ruin upon them; and all their own ſins, of nature and of youth, all paſt ones to the preſent time: and it is deſired that God would not remember theſe againſt them; that is, that he would not chaſtiſe or puniſh them for them, but that he would pardon them; for forgiveneſs of ſin is ſometimes expreſſed by a non-remembrance of it, Iſ. xliii. 25. Jer. xxxi. 34. or that he would not remember unto [f] them; that is, put them in mind of them, lay them home and heavy upon their conſciences, charge them with the guilt of them, and demand ſatisfaction for them; which is cauſing them to poſſeſs the ſins of their youth, or former ones, Job xiii 26. let thy tender mercies ſpeedily prevent us; the mercy of God is rich, plenteous, and abundant; many are the acts, and manifold the inſtances of it; and there are bowels of compaſſion, and a tenderneſs expreſſed in it; and which is free, and prevents the merits of men, goes before them, and,

and is not cauſed by them; and the phraſe denotes the early and timely application of it, the caſe being deſperate, and requiring haſte, and the danger ſuch, that nothing but mercy could prevent; and indeed it is mercy that prevents both our temporal and eternal ruin. The reaſon given for this requeſt is, for we are brought very low; ſin brings men into a low eſtate, and only the grace and mercy of God can raiſe them up, and that exalts to an high eſtate; or are become very weak[g] and helpleſs; ſin ſtrips men of their ſtrength, leaves them without any, and uncapable of helping themſelves out of that eſtate into which it has brought them: or are quite exhauſted[h] and dried up, no good thing in them, no comfort left them; but are poor, and wretched, and miſerable.

℣. 9. Help us, O God of our ſalvation, for the glory of thy name, &c.] Help us out of the troubles in which we are; enable us to bear them with patience, and without murmuring, whilſt it is thy pleaſure to continue them; aſſiſt us againſt our powerful enemies, and ſtrengthen us to do our duty; afford us more grace, and freſh ſupplies of it in our time of need: the arguments enforcing theſe petitions are, becauſe God is the God of ſalvation, to whom it belongs, of whom it is, and of him only to be expected; he is the ſole author and giver of it; and becauſe to help and ſave is for the glory of his name, which is great in the ſalvation of his people: and deliver us; out of the hands of all our enemies, and out of all our afflictions, and out of this low eſtate in which we are: and purge away our ſins for thy name's ſake; which were the cauſe of all calamities and diſtreſs, and which can only be purged away by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, Heb. i. 3. and ix. 14. the word ſignifies to expiate[i] ſin, or atone for it; which was the work and buſineſs of Chriſt our high-prieſt, who has made reconciliation for ſin, finiſhed, made an end of it, and put it away by the oblation of himſelf, for the ſake of which God is propitious; and ſo the words may be rendered, be propitious to our ſins[k]; or merciful to our unrighteouſneſſes, for the ſake of Chriſt the great propitiation; or through the propitiatory ſacrifice to be offered up by him; or, in other words, cover our ſins[l]; which is alſo the ſenſe of the phraſe, that they may be ſeen no more; pardon and forgive them for Chriſt's ſake; ſee Pſ. xxxii. 1.

℣. 10. Wherefore ſhould the heathen ſay, where is their God, &c.] They boaſt of, and put their confidence in, and expect ſalvation from? he does not appear for them, he's not with them; he has forſaken them, and will not help them; than which nothing can be more afflicting and diſtreſſing to the Lord's people; ſee Pſ. xlii. 3. let him be known among the heathen in our ſight; in his holineſs and juſtice, as a God of power, and to whom vengeance belongs; let him be known by his judgments executed upon the heathen, openly and publickly in our ſight, and in the view of the whole world; ſee Pſ. ix. 16. ſo it follows, by the revenging of the blood of thy ſervants which is ſhed; as in ℣. 3. which blood God will revenge according to the requeſt of his people, and give them blood to drink by way of retaliation; by which means his vindictive juſtice will be known, and it will be ſeen where the God of his people is, that he is with them, and maintains their cauſe; ſee Rev. vi. 9. and xvi. 6, 7. and xix. 2. The words may be rendered in connection with the preceding clauſe thus; let it be known among the heathen in our ſight, even the revenging of the blood of thy ſervants which is ſhed; though Kimchi ſupplies the words as we do, by a revenging, &c.

℣. 11. Let the ſighing of the priſoner come before thee, &c.] Such as were ſo in a literal or ſpiritual ſenſe; and the ſighs and groans of ſuch are not hid from the Lord; they come up into his ears as did the ſighing and groaning of the children of Iſrael when in Egypt, Exod. ii. 23, 24. according to the greatneſs of thy power, preſerve thou thoſe that are appointed to die; not by the Lord, as all men are, but by men; who are under a ſentence of condemnation, who are ready to die, being appointed to deſtruction, Prov. xxxi. 6, 8. or are in danger of death, as Jarchi obſerves; the phraſe is uſed in Talmudic writings; whoſe lives are expoſed to danger, who are killed all the day long, and are accounted as ſheep for the ſlaughter, Pſ. xliv. 22. theſe it is deſired the Lord would keep from dying, or cauſe them to remain in life; or not ſuffer their lives to be taken away from them, which he was able to do through the greatneſs of his power; tho' theſe words, according to the accents belong to the preceding clauſe. The Targum, and ſo Jarchi, and other Jewiſh writers, render the words, looſe thou thoſe, &c. mention being made before of priſoners, or of perſons bound.

℣. 12. And render unto our neighbours ſevenfold into their boſom, &c.] Not ſevenfold for one, as the Targum paraphraſes it, or a ſeven-fold puniſhment for one ſin; but that he would recompenſe their ſins, or puniſh for them, and take vengeance on them, largely, abundantly, though not beyond meaſure, or exceeding the rules of juſtice; ſee Gen. iv. 15. Luke vi. 38. the reproach with which they have reproached thee, O Lord; by denying his being, or calling in queſtion his perfections of power, truth, and goodneſs, to help his people; ſpeaking ill of his providence, deſpiſing his word and ordinances, and even reproaching his people in reproaching him, Pſ. lxxxix. 50, 51. and this is what a righteous recompence is deſired for; ſee Lam. iii. 64.

℣. 13. So we thy people, and ſheep of thy paſture, &c.] Who were the people of God, not by creation and providence only, as all men are, being his creatures, and provided for by him; but by ſpecial choice, and by covenant-grace; and the ſheep of his paſture; whom he feeds as a ſhepherd does his flock, provides good paſture for them, and leads them into it: will give thee thanks for ever, we will ſhew forth thy praiſe to all generations; the above petitions being anſwered and fulfilled; the work of praiſe is acceptable unto God, what he is well-pleaſed with, being glorified thereby; and is what becomes his people to do, and which they are formed for, and that for evermore, as long as they live in this world, and to all eternity in another; and who will and do take care, that the wonders of divine grace and providence be tranſmitted and told to their poſterity in ſucceeding ages, that ſo thanks may be given him, and his praiſe ſhewn forth in one generation after another.

PSAL. LXXX.

To the chief muſician upon Shoſhannim, Eduth, A pſalm of Aſaph.

OF the word Shoſhannim, ſee the title of Pſ. xlv. and of Shuſhan Eduth, the title of Pſ. lx. which ſeems to be the ſame with this here, and is thought by ſome to be the name of a muſical inſtrument now unknown, as Kimchi and Ben Melech; though theſe two words are not to be read together as one, for there is a dividing accent on Shoſhannim, and which may be rendered concerning the lilies[a]; and ſo may denote the ſubject-matter of the pſalm, or reſpect the people of God, comparable to lilies for their beauty, purity, and holineſs in Chriſt, Cant. vi. 2, 3. and to lilies among thorns, Cant. ii. 2. being in great afflictions and perſecutions, as appears from ℣. 5, 6, 12, 13. the word Eduth is to be read not along with Shoſhannim, but with what follows thus, Eduth unto Aſaph a pſalm; ſome render the word Eduth an ornament or glory, as R. Marinus in Aben Ezra; and take the ſenſe to be, that the pſalm was a glorious one, and deſireable to Aſaph; but it rather ſignifies a teſtimony, and is by the Targum interpreted of the teſtimony of the law; but it is rather to be underſtood of the teſtimony of the goſpel, which is the teſtimony of Chriſt, and bears witneſs of him; and there is a teſtimony of him in this pſalm, ℣. 17. and there ſeem to be in it many breathings after his coming, and appearance in the fleſh. Some take this pſalm to be of the ſame argument with the foregoing, and think it refers to the deſtruction of the Jews, the two tribes, by the Chaldeans; ſo Theodoret; but there is no mention made of the temple, nor of Jeruſalem, as in the preceding pſalm; and beſides, why ſhould Manaſſeh and Ephraim be mentioned? wherefore others are of opinion, that it has regard to the captivity of the ten tribes by Salmaneſer; but then it may be aſked, why is Benjamin taken notice of, which had no concern in the affliction? this has led others to conclude, that it reſpects ſome time of affliction before either of theſe captivities, or between them both; and it may be applied to any affliction of the people of God in any age or period of time; and no doubt was written by Aſaph, or by David, and put into his hands before the diſtreſs was, under a ſpirit of prophecy. Kimchi interprets it of the preſent captivity of the Jews, and Jarchi of their three captivities.

℣. 1. Give ear, O ſhepherd of Iſrael, &c.] The title of a ſhepherd for the moſt part belongs to the Meſſiah, and who is expreſsly called the ſhepherd and ſtone of Iſrael, as diſtinct from the God of Jacob, Gen. xlix. 24. and may be ſo called becauſe he was to be, and was of Iſrael, according to the fleſh, and ſent to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, and appointed by his Father as a ſhepherd over them; and it is on the mountains of Iſrael he provides a good fold, and paſture for his ſheep, Rom. ix. 4, 5. Matt. xv. 24. Ezek. xxxiv. 14, 23. and it is for the ſpiritual Iſrael, his ſheep, his elect, both among Jews and Gentiles, for whom he laid down his life; by which it appears, that he is the good ſhepherd, as he alſo is the great, the chief, the only one; though this character alſo may be given, and agrees unto God the Father, who rules, and governs, and feeds his people, his ſpiritual Iſrael, as a ſhepherd his flock; and who is addreſſed by his people, and is deſired to give ear to their cries and prayers in their affliction and diſtreſs: God has an ear to hear his people's prayers, though ſometimes they think he does not hear them; but he not only hears, but anſwers ſooner or later, and in his own way; and the conſideration of his character as a ſhepherd, may be an encouragement to their faith, that he will hear, and will not withhold any good thing from them, Pſ. xxiii. 1, 2, 3. and xcv. 6, 7. thou that leadeſt Joſeph like a flock; the poſterity of Joſeph, the ſame with Iſrael, the ſpiritual Iſrael, who are like a flock of ſheep, a ſeparate people, diſtinguiſhed by the grace of God, and purchaſed by the blood of Chriſt; and as there is but one ſhepherd, ſo one fold, and one flock, and that but a little one neither; and which is ſometimes called a flock of ſlaughter, becauſe expoſed to the rage and fury of men; yet a beautiful one in the eye of Chriſt, which he undertook to feed: and this he leads on gently and ſoftly, gradually, and proportionate to their ſtrength, or as they are able to bear; he leads in and out, and they find paſture; he leads them out of their former ſtate and condition, in which he finds them, out of the paſtures of ſin and ſelf-righteouſneſs into the green paſtures of his love, grace, word, and ordinances: thou that dwelleſt between the cherubim; which were over the mercy-ſeat, and were either emblems of angels, among whom Jehovah dwells, and is ſurrounded by them; by whom Chriſt was miniſtered to on earth, and now in heaven, and among whom he was when he aſcended thither, and where they are ſubject to him: or of the two teſtaments, which look to Chriſt, the mercy-ſeat, and agree with each other in their teſtimony of him, and in other things; and where theſe are truly opened and explained, there the Lord dwells: or rather of the ſaints of both diſpenſations, who look to Chriſt alone for ſalvation, and expect to be ſaved by his grace; are both partakers of it, as they will be of the ſame glory; and among theſe the Lord dwells as in his temple; though it ſeems beſt of all to conſider them as emblems of goſpel-miniſters, ſince Ezekiel's four living creatures are the cherubim, Ezek. x. 20. and theſe the ſame with John's four beaſts, or living creatures, who were certainly men, being redeemed by the blood of Chriſt; and were miniſters, being diſtinguiſhed from the four and twenty elders, Rev. iv. 6—11. and v. 8—14. and among theſe the Lord dwells, and with them he has promiſed his preſence ſhall be unto the end of the world: ſhine forth; either God the Father, who dwelt between the cherubim, over the mercy-ſeat, who ſits upon a throne of grace, from whence he communes with his people, and communicates to them; and then the requeſt is, that he would ſhine forth in the perfections of his nature, as he has done in his Son, the brightneſs of his glory, and in redemption and ſalvation by him, where they are all illuſtriouſly diſplayed; and particularly in his loving kindneſs through him, which has appeared and ſhone forth in the miſſion of Chriſt, and in giving him up for us all; and by granting his gracious preſence unto his people in Zion, in his houſe and ordinances; ſee Pſ. l. 2. or the meſſiah, the ſhepherd of Iſrael, and the leader of his flock, and under whom the living creatures and cherubim are, Ezek. i. 26—28. that he would ſhine forth in human nature; that this bright morning ſtar would appear; that the day-ſpring from on high would viſit men, and that the ſun of righteouſneſs would ariſe with healing in his wings; and that the glorious light of his goſpel would break forth, and the grace of God, the doctrine of it, appear and ſhine out unto all men, Jews and Gentiles.

℣. 2. Before Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manaſſeh, ſtir up thy ſtrength, &c.] Which Chriſt did in the public miniſtry of the word, ſpeaking as one having authority, and not as the ſcribes and Phariſees; and in the performance of miracles, openly, and in the ſight of all; and in his ſufferings and death for the ſalvation of his people; in which he appeared to be the mighty God, travelling in the greatneſs of his ſtrength, and mighty to ſave. Theſe tribes deſign all Iſrael, before whom the above things were done; and the alluſion is to theſe three tribes marching immediately after the Kohathites, who carried the ark on their ſhoulders in journeying, Numb. ii. 17—24. and x. 21, 22, 23, 24. which is called the Lord's ſtrength, and the ark of his ſtrength, Pſ. lxxviii. 61. and cxxxii. 8. The Targum in the king's bible reads, to the children of Ephraim, &c. reading לבני inſtead of לפני; ſee the Maſorah, and Prov. iv. 3. and come and ſave us; come from heaven to earth, not by change of place, but by aſſumption of nature; this was promiſed and expected, and is here prayed for; Chriſt is now come in the fleſh, which to deny is antichriſtian; and his end in coming was to ſave his people from their ſins, from the curſe and condemnation of the law, and wrath to come; and as he came on this errand, he is become the author of eternal ſalvation, in working out which he has ſhewn his great ſtrength.

℣. 3. Turn us again, O God, &c.] From our captivity, as the Targum, into our own land; or return us backſliding ſinners to thyſelf by repentance; turn us, and we ſhall be turned; for the prayer ſhews it was not in their power, but muſt be effected by the grace of God; or reſtore our ſouls, which have been wandering, and them to their former flouriſhing and comfortable condition: and cauſe thy face to ſhine; grant thy gracious preſence, lift up the light of thy countenance; favour with the manifeſtations of thyſelf, the enjoyment of thee, and communion with thee through Chriſt; indulge us with the diſcoveries of thy love, the joys of ſalvation, the comforts of the Spirit, and larger meaſures of grace: and we ſhall be ſaved; be in a very happy and comfortable condition; ſee Pſ. iv. 6, 7.

℣. 4. O Lord God of hoſts, &c.] Aben Ezra and Kimchi obſerve, that the word Elohe is here underſtood, and the words to be read, O Lord God, the God of hoſts; of the armies above and below, againſt whom there is no ſtanding, nor any before him when he is angry: how long wilt thou be angry againſt the prayer of thy people? which muſt be put up in a wrong manner, in a very cold and lukewarm way, without faith and love, and with wrath and doubting; or otherwiſe God is not angry with, nor ſets himſelf againſt the prayer of his people; nor does he deſpiſe, but is highly delighted with it: or how long wilt thou be angry with thy people, and continue the tokens of thy diſpleaſure, though they pray, and keep praying unto thee? it is in the Hebrew text, how long wilt thou ſmoke[m] at the prayer of thy people? that is, cauſe thine anger to ſmoke at it; in which 'tis thought there is an alluſion to the ſmoke of the incenſe, to which prayer is compared; ſee Pſ. cxli. 2. Rev. viii. 3, 4. and denotes the acceptance of it with God through the mediation of Chriſt; but here his diſplicency at it, not being offered up through him, and by faith in him; ſuch were the prayers of the Phariſees, Matt. vi. 5, 7. and xxiii. 14.

℣. 5. Thou feedeſt them with the bread of tears, &c.] With tears inſtead of bread, having none to eat; or their bread is mingled with their tears, dipped therein, as the Targum; ſuch was their conſtant grief, and the occaſion of it, that they could not ceaſe from tears whilſt they were eating their meals, and ſo eat them with them[n]: and giveſt them tears to drink in great meaſure; or the wine of tears threefold, as the Targum. Jarchi interprets it of the captivity of Babylon, which was the third part of the two hundred and ten years of Iſrael's being in Egypt; which expoſition, he ſays, he learned from R. Moſes Hadarſan; but he obſerves, that ſome interpret it of the kingdom of Grecia, which was the third diſtreſs; and ſo Kimchi and Arama explain it of the third captivity; but Menachem, as Jarchi ſays, takes Shaliſh to be the name of a drinking veſſel, and ſo does Aben Ezra; the ſame it may be which the Latins call a Triental, the third part of a pint; unleſs the Hebrew meaſure, the ſeah, which was the third part of an ephah, is meant; it is tranſlated a meaſure in Iſ. xl. 12. and ſeems to deſign a large one, and ſo our verſion interprets it; compare with this Iſ. xxx. 20.

℣. 6. Thou makeſt us a ſtrife unto our neighbours, &c.] Either obligeſt us to contend with them for our defence and ſafety; or having given us into their hands, they ſtrive and contend one with another about dividing the ſpoil: and our enemies laugh among themſelves; at us, and becauſe there is no help for us in God, as they imagine; or at God himſelf, as Kimchi, ſaying he cannot ſave us.

℣. 7. Turn us again, O God of hoſts, &c.] The ſame with ℣. 3. only inſtead of God there, here it is the God of hoſts; the repetition of theſe words ſhews what was uppermoſt on the minds of God's people; what they were longing for, and moſt deſirous of, namely the light of God's countenance.

℣. 8. Thou haſt brought a vine out of Egypt, &c.] The houſe of Iſrael, who are like unto a vine, as the Targum paraphraſes it; and to a vine or vineyard are they often compared; ſee Iſ. v. 1, 7. and xxvii. 2, 3. Jer. ii. 21. Hoſ. x. 1. Theſe were in Egypt a while, where they were grievouſly oppreſſed and trampled upon; and yet the more they were afflicted, the more they grew and multiplied; tiplied; and from hence the Lord brought them in due time, with a mighty hand and ſtretched out arm; he cauſed them to go out; the word [o] uſed fitly expreſſes their journeyings from thence, and through the wilderneſs; they were a type of the church of Chriſt, and ſpecial people of God, who alſo are frequently compared to vines and vineyards; ſee Cant. ii. 13, 15. and vi. 11. and vii. 12. and viii. 11, 12. the vine-tree is fruitful, and bears fruit in cluſters; but its wood is very uſeleſs and unprofitable, Ezek. xv. 2, 3. and it is a tree very weak, and can't riſe and ſupport itſelf, it muſt be propped up; ſo believers in Chriſt, though fruitful through the grace of God, yet are unprofitable to him, and very weak in themſelves, and are upheld with the right hand of his righteouſneſs, on whom they lean and ſtay themſelves; and theſe in their nature-ſtate are in worſe than Egyptian bondage, darkneſs, and idolatry, out of which they are brought in effectual vocation into goſpel-liberty, marvellous light, and the true worſhip and ſervice of God; and out of the antichriſtian Egypt, will all the Lord's people be brought one day; ſee Rev. xi. 8. and xviii. 4. thou haſt caſt out the heathen; the Targum adds, out of the land of Iſrael, that is, Canaan; it deſigns the expulſion of the ſeven nations from thence, to make way for the Iſraelites, Deut. vii. 1. and was an emblem of the ejection of Satan out of the Gentile world, and out of the ſouls of men, through the miniſtry of the word; and of ſin, and the luſts of it, when the King of glory enters in, ſo as that they ſhall not any more have dominion; though as the Canaanites were left in the land to be pricks and thorns in the eyes and ſides of the Iſraelites, ſo indwelling ſin remains in God's people to the diſtreſs of their ſouls, and the trial of their graces. The Papiſts are ſometimes called the Heathens and Gentiles; and there will be a time when they ſhall be caſt out, and be no more in the land, Pſ. x. 16. Zech. xiv. 21. and planted it; the vine, the Iſraelites, in the land of Canaan; ſee Exod. xv. 17. So ſaints are planted not only in Chriſt, the true vine, of which they are branches; but in a goſpel-church-ſtate, where they flouriſh and become fruitful and pleaſant plants, plants of renown; and being of the Lord's planting, he is glorified by them, and they ſhall never be rooted up, nor wither, but proſper and thrive; ſee Pſ. i. 5. and xcii. 14. Iſ. lxi. 3. Matt. xv. 13.

℣. 9. Thou preparedſt room before it, &c.] By ſending the hornet before the Iſraelites, and driving the Canaanites out of the land, Exod. xxiii. 28. and ſo the Targum, "thou didſt remove from before thee the Canaanites;" which made way and room for them: and thus the Lord prepared room for his intereſt, church, and people, in the Gentile world, in the firſt times of Chriſtianity, by ſending the goſpel into all parts of it, and making it ſucceſsful, and ſtill there is room, Luke xiv. 22. and didſt cauſe it to take deep root; which denotes the ſettlement of the people of Iſrael in Canaan, in church and ſtate, as a body eccleſiaſtic and politic; ſo believers being rooted in Chriſt, are grounded, ſettled, and eſtabliſhed in him, and in a goſpel-church-ſtate, and ſo become fruitful; ſee Col. ii. 7. Iſ. xxvii. 6. and it filled the land; with people, who in the days of Solomon were as the ſand of the ſea, 1 Kings iv. 20. and ſo the Gentile world was filled with Chriſtian converts in the firſt times of the goſpel; and the intereſt and church of Chriſt will fill the whole world another day, Iſ. xi. 9. Dan. ii. 35.

℣. 10. The hills were covered with the ſhadow of it, &c.] Alluding to the land of Canaan, which was a mountainous and hilly country, at leaſt ſome part of it; hence we read of the hill country of Judea, Luke i. 39. and to the nature of vines, which delight to grow on hills and mountains [p]: in a figurative ſenſe this may denote the ſubjection of kings and kingdoms, comparable to hills, to the Iſraelites in the times of David and Solomon, 2 Sam. viii. 1. &c. 1 Kings iv. 21, 24. and the exaltation of the church of Chriſt in the latter day over the hills and mountains, Iſ. ii. 2. The Targum is, "the mountains of Jeruſalem were covered with the ſhadow of the houſe of the ſanctuary, and of the houſes of the ſchools:" and the boughs thereof were like the goodly cedars; to theſe the righteous are compared, Pſ. xcii. 13. the Targum is, "the doctors, the mighty preachers, who are like to the ſtrong cedars:" the words may be rendered, the boughs thereof cover the goodly cedars, or cedars of God [q]; that is, over-run and over-top the goodly cedars; alluding to vines running and growing upon high and goodly trees; and ſo may denote as before the power of Iſrael over the princes and potentates of the earth, comparable to cedars, the moſt excellent; as things moſt excellent have often the name of God added to them; ſee Pſ. civ. 16.

℣. 11. She ſent out her boughs unto the ſea, &c.] The Mediterranean, or midland ſea, which was the border of the land of Canaan to the weſt: and her branches unto the river; the river Euphrates, which was its border to the eaſt; ſee Deut. xi. 24. This in the ſpiritual ſenſe of it will have its accompliſhment in the church of Chriſt, when he ſhall have dominion from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, Pſ. lxxii. 8. The Targum is, "ſhe ſent out her diſciples to the great ſea, and to the river Euphrates her babes;" or ſucklings.

℣. 12. Why haſt thou then broken down her hedges, &c.] After having done all this for her; which ſignifies the Lord's removing his preſence, power, and protection from Iſrael; which were the hedge he ſet about them, and by which they were ſecured and defended from their enemies; but theſe being gone, they became an eaſy prey to them; ſee Job i. 10. Iſ. v. 2, 5. the hedge about the church and people of God are the angels that encamp about them; ſalvation, which is as walls and bulwarks to them; and the Lord himſelf, who is a wall of fire around them; which may be ſaid to be broken down when he withdraws his preſence, and does not exert his power in the protection of them; but ſuffers them to be expoſed to the perſecutions of men: ſo that all they which paſs by the way do pluck her? the hedge being broken down, all paſſengers and travellers plucked the fruit of the vine as they paſſed along, there being nothing to keep them off from it: this may denote the plunder of the Iſraelites by their enemies, when left of God, they fell into their hands; and the havock perſecutors make of the church of Chriſt, and their ſpoiling them of their goods and ſubſtance, when they are permitted to do it.

℣. 13. The boar out of the wood doth waſte it, &c.] As Salmaneſer, king of Aſſyria, who carried the ten tribes captive; the title of this pſalm in the Septuagint verſion is, a pſalm for the Aſſyrian. Vitringa on Iſ. xxiv. 2. interprets this of Antiochus Epiphanes, to whoſe times he thinks the pſalm refers; but the Jews[r] of the fourth beaſt in Daniel vii. 7. which deſigns the Roman empire: the wild boar is alluded to, which lives in woods and foreſts[s], and waſtes, fields and vineyards: and the wild beaſt of the field doth devour it; as Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who carried the two tribes captive, and who for a while lived among and lived as the beaſts of the field; both theſe in their turns waſted and devoured the people of Iſrael; ſee Jer. l. 17. Jarchi interprets this of Eſau or Edom, that is, Rome; and ſays the whole of the paragraph reſpects the Roman captivity; that is, their preſent one; but rather the words deſcribe the perſecutors of the Chriſtian church in general, comparable to wild boars and wild beaſts for their fierceneſs and cruelty; and perhaps in particular Rome Pagan may be pointed at by the one, and Rome Papal by the other; though the latter is ſignified by two beaſts, one that roſe out of the ſea, and the other out of the earth; which have made dreadful havock of the church of Chriſt, his vine, and have ſhed the blood of the ſaints in great abundance; ſee Rev. xii. 3, 4. and xiii. 1, 2, 7, 11, 12. unleſs we ſhould rather by the one underſtand the pope, and by the other the Turk, as the Jews interpret them of Eſau and of Iſhmael.

℣. 14. Return we beſeech thee, O God of hoſts, &c.] The Lord had been with his vine, the people of Iſrael, when he brought them out of Egypt, and planted and ſettled them in the land of Canaan, and made them a flouriſhing people; but had departed from them when he ſuffered the hedges about them to be broken down, and the boar and wild beaſt to enter and devour them; and here he is intreated to return and reſtore them to their former proſperity. So the Lord ſometimes departs from his church and people, and hides his face from them; and may be ſaid to return, when he manifeſts himſelf, ſhews his face and his favour again, and grants his gracious preſence, than which nothing is more deſireable; and if he, the Lord of hoſts and armies, above and below, is with his people, none can be againſt them to their hurt; they have nothing to fear from any enemy: look down from heaven; the habitation of his holineſs, the high and holy place where he dwells, and his throne is, from whence he takes a ſurvey of men and things; where he now was at a diſtance from his people, being returned to his place in reſentment, and covered himſelf with a cloud from their ſight; and from whence it would be a condeſcenſion in him to look on them on earth, ſo very undeſerving of a look of love and mercy from him: and behold; the affliction and diſtreſs his people were in, as he formerly beheld the affliction of Iſrael in Egypt, and ſympathized with them, and brought them out of it: and viſit this vine; before deſcribed, for whom he had done ſuch great things, and now was in ſuch a ruinous condition; the viſit deſired is in a way of mercy and kind providence; ſo the Targum, "and remember in mercies this vine;" ſo the Lord viſits his choſen people by the miſſion and incarnation of his ſon, and by the redemption of them by him, and by the effectual vocation of them by his ſpirit and grace through the miniſtration of the goſpel; and which perhaps may in the myſtical ſenſe be reſpected here; ſee Luke i. 68, 78. Acts xv. 14.

℣. 15. And the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted, &c.] The word Cannah is only uſed in this place, and the firſt letter of it is larger than uſual, to keep in perpetual remembrance, as is thought by ſome[t], the bringing of this vine out of Egypt, and the great things done for it in the land of Iſrael; and the letter being crooked, may denote the oppreſſion of this vine by various calamities. The Targum renders the word, a branch or ſhoot; and Kimchi, according to the ſcope of the place, a plant; and obſerves, that others interpret it an habitation or dwelling-place; and ſo may be underſtood of Jeruſalem, or the temple. Aben Ezra takes it to be an adjective, and to ſignify prepared, or eſtabliſhed, which is ſaid of this vine, ℣. 9. It is an Egyptian word uſed by the pſalmiſt, treating of the vine brought out of Egypt, and ſignifies a plant; hence the ivy is by the Greeks called χενοσιρις the plant of Oſiris[u]; the clauſe carries in it a reaſon or argument, enforcing the above petition, taken from this vine being of the Lord's planting, as in ℣. 8. and therefore his own honour and glory were concerned in it: and the branch that thou madeſt ſtrong for thyſelf; meaning the ſame thing, and the ſame people whom he confirmed in the land of Canaan, and made ſtrong for his ſervice and glory. The word[w] tranſlated branch ſignifies a ſon, as Iſrael was, to the Lord, his ſon and firſt-born. The Targum underſtands it of Chriſt, and paraphraſes it thus, "and for the king Meſſiah, whom thou haſt ſtrengthened for thyſelf;" that is, for the ſake of Chriſt, whom thou haſt appointed to work out the ſalvation of thy people by his great ſtrength, and who was to come from this vine, or deſcend from Iſrael; for the ſake of him deſtroy it not, nor ſuffer it to be deſtroyed; and is the ſame with the Son of man, ℣. 17. and ſo it is read in a manuſcript.

℣. 16. It is burnt with fire, it is cut down, &c.] That is, the vine of Iſrael, and the branch before ſpoken of, alluding to a vine, and its branches; which when become unprofitable, are cut down or cut off, and caſt into the fire; ſee John xv. 6. ſo Jeruſalem and the temple were burnt with fire by Nebuchadnezzar, and afterwards by Veſpaſian: they periſh at the rebuke of thy countenance; that is, the Iſraelites, ſignified by the vine, whoſe deſtruction was owing to the wrath of God upon them for their ſins; he frowned upon them, and rebuked them in his hot diſpleaſure, and to that their ruin was owing; others were only inſtruments in his hands. Some underſtand this as a wiſh or imprecation, let them that cut down the vine, and burn it with fire, periſh at the rebuke of thy countenance; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 1, 2. ſo the Targum.

℣. 17. Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of the people of Iſrael in general, beloved, ſupported, and ſtrengthened by the Lord; and others of the then king of Iſrael, or Judah, the vine-dreſſer, or keeper of the vineyard under God; praying that he might be directed, ſupported, and protected by the Lord; but it ſeems better to underſtand it with R. Obadiah on the place, and Abarbinel[x] of the Meſſiah.

Meſſiah; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it, either of Iſrael, or of Meſſiah the ſon of Ephraim. Chriſt is called the man, though as yet he was not really man, becauſe it was purpoſed and promiſed that he ſhould; and he had agreed to become man, and had appeared often in an human form; and it was certain that he would be incarnate: and alſo the man of God's right hand, which is expreſſive of the power of God, becauſe by him, who, in time, became man, even the ſon of God, the world, and all things in it, were made; and by him all things are upheld in their being; by him his people were to be redeemed, and have been redeemed from all their enemies; and by him they are upheld, kept, and preſerved from a final and total falling away, and will be raiſed at the laſt day: and the phraſe may deſign the ſupport and ſtrength the human nature of Chriſt, which was weak in itſelf, was to have, and had, not only from its union in the ſon of God, but from God the Father; who promiſed and gave ſupport and ſtrength to it, under all the ſufferings endured in it: to which may be added, that this phraſe is expreſſive of love and affection; ſo Benjamin had his name, which ſignifies the ſon of the right hand, from the great affection of his father; ſo Chriſt is the ſon of God's love, his dear and well-beloved ſon; as appears by hiding nothing from him, by putting all things into his hands, and appointing him the head and ſaviour of his people, and the judge of the world; and his love to him is a love of complacency and delight, is everlaſting and unchangeable: moreover, he may be ſo called, becauſe he was to be, and now is, exalted at the right hand of God, in human nature, as a prince and ſaviour, above angels, authorities and powers, and above every name whatever: and the prayer is either, that the hand of vindictive juſtice might not be upon the vine, or the church of God, but upon Chriſt their ſurety, who was able to bear it, and had engaged to do it; or the hand of divine power and ſupport might be upon him, to ſtrengthen him for the work of redemption and ſalvation, that ſo that might proſper in his hand; and the hand of love, grace, and mercy might be turned upon his people: 'tis added, upon the ſon of man whom thou madeſt ſtrong for thyſelf; for the accompliſhment of his purpoſes, promiſes and covenant, for the bringing about the ſalvation of his own people, and for ends of his own glory: the ſame perſon is here meant as before; and his being called the ſon of man, which is a very uſual phraſe for Chriſt in the new teſtament, and which ſeems to be taken from hence, and from Dan. vii. 13. ſhews, that he could not be really from eternity, ſince he was to be the ſon of man, as he was, of Abraham, David, &c.

ỳ. 18. So will not we go back from thee, &c.] From thy fear, as the Targum; or from thy ſervice, as Kimchi; doing as above, would encourage them to ſtand before the Lord, and worſhip him; which they could not do, if he marked their ſins, and demanded ſatisfaction from them for them; but if he looked to his ſon and their ſurety, and took it from him, this would encourage their faith and hope, and give them boldneſs in his preſence, and attach them to his ſervice: quicken us, and we will call upon thy name; the people of God are ſometimes dead and lifeleſs in their frames, and in the exerciſe of grace and diſcharge of duty, and have need of the quickening influences of the ſpirit and grace of God; and which are neceſſary to a fervent calling upon the name of the Lord in prayer, and without which none will ſtir up themſelves ſo to do. Kimchi interprets this of quickening, or of raiſing to life, from the death of the captivity; and ſo Abarbinel, who thinks alſo that it reſpects the reſurrection of the dead, in the times of the Meſſiah.

ỳ. 19. Turn us again, O Lord God of hoſts, &c.] This is a repetition of ỳ. 3. 7. in which may be obſerved an increaſe of the names or titles of the Divine Being: in ỳ. 3. it is only O God; in ỳ. 7. O God of hoſts; and here, Lord God of hoſts: ſome have thought, that the doctrine of the Trinity is here ſuggeſted; which is a better thought than that of Jarchi's, who ſuppoſes that three captivities of Iſrael are pointed at: but as it follows, cauſe thy face to ſhine, and we ſhall be ſaved; it appears that this was the burden of their ſong, being in darkneſs and diſtreſs, that they might have the light of God's countenance, and therefore repeat it again and again.

PSALM LXXXI.

To the chief muſician upon Gittith, a pſalm of Aſaph.

OF Gittith, ſee the note on the title of Pſ. viii. The Targum renders it, "upon the harp which came from Gath;' and ſo Jarchi ſays it was a muſical inſtrument that came from Gath. The Septuagint, and the verſions which follow that, render it, for the wine-preſſes. This pſalm, according to Kimchi, is ſaid concerning the going out of the children of Iſrael from Egypt; and was compoſed in order to be ſung at their new moons and ſolemn feaſts, which were typical of goſpel-things in goſpel-times; ſee Col. ii. 16, 17. and ſo the Syriac verſion, "a pſalm of Aſaph, when David by him prepared himſelf for the ſolemnities."

ỳ. 1. Sing aloud unto God our ſtrength, &c.] The ſtrength of Iſrael, who, by ſtrength of hand, and a mighty arm, brought Iſrael out of Egypt, protected and upheld them in the wilderneſs, and brought them to, and ſettled and eſtabliſhed them in the land of Canaan; and who is the ſtrength of every true Iſraelite, from whom they have both their natural and ſpiritual ſtrength; ſo that they can exerciſe grace, perform duty, bear afflictions, withſtand temptations, fight with and conquer enemies, and hold on, and out unto the end; and therefore have reaſon to ſing the praiſes of God with great fervour, zeal, and affection: make a joyful noiſe unto the God of Jacob; or Iſrael, being the God that had made a covenant with them, had choſen them for his peculiar people, and had redeemed them out of the houſe of bondage, and beſtowed peculiar favours upon them; and therefore were under obligation to ſhew forth his praiſe vocally and audibly, and with ſtrong expreſſions of joy; and the ſpiritual Iſrael of God much more ſo, who have an intereſt in the covenant of grace, and ſhare in electing, redeeming, and calling grace, by all which he appears to be their God and Father, in a ſpecial ſenſe.

℣. 2. Take a pſalm, &c.] Or lift one up[y]; hold up the book, and read and ſing it; or rather, lift up the voice in ſinging a pſalm: and bring hither the timbrel; or give one[z], put the hand to one: the pleaſant harp with the pſaltery; make uſe of all theſe muſical inſtruments in ſinging, and ſo make an agreeable melody: theſe were uſed in the times of the old teſtament, and were typical of the ſpiritual joy and melody in the heart, expreſſed by vocal ſinging, under the new teſtament; ſee Rev. v. 8. and xiv. 2, 3. and xv. 2.

℣. 3. Blow up the trumpet in the new moon, &c.] Either in every new moon, or firſt day of the month, which was religiouſly obſerved by the Jews, 2 Kings iv. 23. or rather the new moon, or firſt day of the ſeventh month, the month Tiſri, which day was a memorial of blowing of trumpets, Lev. xxiii. 34. and ſo the Targum, "blow the trumpet in the month of Tiſri," when their new year began, and was typical of the year of the redeemed of the Lord, of the acceptable year of our God, of the famous new year, the goſpel-diſpenſation, when old things paſſed away, and all things became new. The Jews ſay this blowing of trumpets was in commemoration of Iſaac's deliverance, a ram being ſacrificed for him, and therefore they ſounded with trumpets made of rams horns; or in remembrance of the trumpet blown at the giving of the law; though it rather was an emblem of the goſpel, and the miniſtry of it, by which ſinners are arouſed, awakened and quickened, and ſouls are charmed and allured, and filled with ſpiritual joy and gladneſs: in the time appointed; ſo Aben Ezra, Jarchi, and Kimchi, interpret the word of a ſet fixed time; ſee Prov. vii. 20. the word[a] uſed has the ſignification of covering; and the former of theſe underſtand it of the time juſt before the change of the moon, when it is covered, which falls in with the former phraſe; and ſo the Targum, "in the moon that is covered;" though the Latin interpreter renders it, "in the month which is covered with the days of our ſolemnities," there being many feſtivals in the month of Tiſri; the blowing of trumpets on the firſt day of it, the atonement on the tenth, and the feaſt of tabernacles on the fifteenth. But De Dieu has made it appear, from the uſe of the word in the Syriac language, that it ſhould be rendered in the full moon, and ſo directs to the right underſtanding of the feaſt next mentioned; on our ſolemn feaſt-day, which muſt deſign a feaſt which was at the full of the moon; and ſo muſt be either the feaſt of the paſſover, which was on the fourteenth day of the month Niſan, and was a type of Chriſt, our paſſover, ſacrificed for us, on which account we ſhould keep the feaſt, Exod. xii. 6. 1 Cor. v. 7, 8. or elſe the feaſt of tabernacles, which was on the fifteenth of the month Tiſri, kept in commemoration of the Iſraelites dwelling in booths, Lev xxiii. 34. 42, 43. and which is called the feaſt, and the ſolemn feaſt, emphatically; ſee 1 Kings viii. 2. Hoſ. xii. 9. and was typical of the ſtate of God's people in this world, who dwell in the earthly houſes of their tabernacles, and have no continuing city; and of the churches of Chriſt, which are the tabernacles in which God and his people dwell, and will abide in this form but for a time, and are moveable; and alſo of Chriſt's tabernacling in human nature, John i. 14. Heb. viii. 2. and ix. 11.

℣. 4. For this was a ſtatute for Iſrael, &c.] It was not a piece of will-worſhip, or device of the children of Iſrael, but was of divine inſtitution; that the paſſover ſhould be kept at the time it was; and that the trumpets ſhould be blown on the new moon, or firſt of Tiſri; and that the feaſt of tabernacles ſhould be kept on the fifteenth of the ſame month: and a law of the God of Jacob; and therefore to be obſerved by Jacob's poſterity: the law for the one is in Exod. xii. 18, 19. and for the other is in Lev. xxiii. 24. 34. and ſo all the ordinances of Chriſt, and of the goſpel-diſpenſation, are to be regarded on the ſame account, becauſe they are the ſtatutes and appointments of God; and the feaſt of tabernacles is particularly put for them all, Zech. xiv. 16.

℣. 5. This he ordained in Joſeph for a teſtimony, &c.] That is, this law concerning the blowing of trumpets on the new moon, and the keeping the ſolemn feaſt at the full of the moon, was made to be obſerved by all Iſrael, who are meant by Joſeph, for a teſtimony of God's good-will to them, and of their duty and obedience to him: when he went out through the land of Egypt, or over it[b]; which ſome underſtand of Joſeph, who is ſaid to go over all the land of Egypt, to gather in proviſion againſt the ſeven years of famine, Gen. xli. 45, 46. and Jarchi ſays, that his deliverance from priſon was at the beginning of the year, and was advanced in Pharaoh's court: and the meaning is, either when he, the Lord, went out againſt the land of Egypt, ſo Arama, in order to ſlay their firſt-born; and when he paſſed over Iſrael, and ſaved them; marched through the land in his indignation, and went forth for the ſalvation of his people, Exod. xi. 4. Hab. iii. 12, 13. then was the ordinance of the paſſover appointed: or when Iſrael went out of Egypt, deſigned by Joſeph, ſome little time after, whilſt in the wilderneſs, and dwelling in tents, the feaſt of tabernacles was inſtituted; but rather this ſhews, that the feaſt of paſſover is before meant, which was inſtituted at the time of Iſrael's going out of Egypt, and was the ſolemn feaſt-day ordained for a ſtatute-law and teſtimony in Iſrael; and that the new moon, or month rather, on which the trumpet was to be blown, was the month Abib, the beginning of months, by an ordinance of God, Exod. xii. 2. and xiii. 3, 4. where I heard a language that I underſtood not; here the prophet perſonates the people of Iſrael in Egypt; though the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, he heard, and he underſtood not; and the language is either the voice of God out of the fire, which before was never heard in this unuſual manner, nor underſtood, Deut. v. 24. 26. or the ſpeech of Moſes, who had Aaron for his mouth and ſpokeſman; or rather the Egyptian language, which was not underſtood by the Iſraelites without an interpreter, Gen. xlii. 23. which ſenſe is confirmed by Pſ. cxiv. 1. and this is mentioned as an aggravation of their affliction in Egypt; ſee Jer. v. 15.

℣. 6. I removed his ſhoulder from the burden, &c.] Theſe are the words of God, declaring how he had delivered the Iſraelites from the oppreſſion and cruelty of the Egyptians; who made their lives bitter in hard bondage, and obliged them to carry heavy loads of bricks upon their ſhoulders: his hands were delivered from the pots, or baſkets[c]; into which the bricks were put when made, and carried on their ſhoulders; or from making of pots, as Kimchi, who thinks the Iſraelites were employed in making pots of clay as well as bricks; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 13. the Targum is, "his hands withdrew themſelves from caſting clay into the pots:" the whole is typical of the ſaints deliverance by Chriſt from the bondage of ſin, Satan, and the law.

℣. 7. Thou calledſt in trouble, and I delivered thee, &c.] That is, when Iſrael were in trouble in Egypt, as the Targum adds, and they cried unto the Lord in their diſtreſs, he heard them, and anſwered them, and ſent them a deliverer, and brought them out of all their troubles, Exod. iii. 7, 8, 9, 10. I anſwered thee in the ſecret place of thunder; by bringing the plague of thunder and lightnings upon the Egyptians, when the Iſraelites were hidden from them; a ſenſe given by ſome, as Kimchi obſerves: or rather, this was done when the Lord looked out of the pillar of cloud at the Red Sea upon the Egyptian hoſt, and troubled them; at which time the voice of his thunder was heard in heaven, Pſ. lxxvii. 16, 17, 18. Some think this has reference to the thunder at the giving of the law on mount Sinai; but the ſenſe before given is beſt: I proved thee at the waters of Meribah, Selah; by withholding water from them to try them, and ſee whether they would behave patiently, and put their truſt and confidence in the Lord, or not; ſee Exod. xvii. 4—7.

℣. 8. Hear, O my people, and I will teſtify unto thee, &c.] Of himſelf, his being, and perfections; what he was unto them, had done for them, and would do for them, as in the following verſes: or teſtify in thee[d], bear witneſs to their ſpirits, that they were his people, and he was their God; this is a witneſs which the people of God have in themſelves; it is the inward teſtimony of the ſpirit; beſides which, there is the outward teſtimony of the word, and which alſo may be here meant; for it may be rendered, I will give a teſtimony to thee: the law is a teſtimony of the will of God to his people, what he would have done, or not done; and the goſpel is a teſtimony of his grace, and the whole word teſtifies of Chriſt, his perſon, offices, obedience, ſufferings, and death: ſome render it, teſtify againſt thee[e], for their murmurings, rebellion and idolatry, as in Pſ. l. 7. and they are called upon to hear the voice of God in his word, and in his providences, being his people; and as ſuch he addreſſes them, which beſpeaks intereſt in them, affection to them, and an acknowledgment of them, and carries in it a reaſon why they ſhould hear him: O Iſrael, if thou wilt hearken unto me; this explains who are meant by the Lord's people, Iſrael, the poſterity of Jacob, a choſen and ſpecial people, who are exhorted not only to hear, but to hearken and obey; ſuggeſting, it would be well with them, if they did, as in ℣. 13, 14. and ſome[f] take theſe words to be a wiſh, as there; Iſrael, O that thou wouldſt hearken unto me: ſee Iſ. xlviii. 18.

℣. 9. There ſhall no ſtrange god be in thee, &c.] Or in the midſt of thee, owned and worſhipped as God; or in thine heart, for whatever engroſſes the affection, or a man puts his truſt and confidence in, that he makes his god, and is a ſtrange one: thus, if any friend or relation, father or mother, wife or children, are loved more than God, they are ſet up as ſuch in his room; thus the epicure, that ſeeks the gratification of his carnal luſts, makes his belly his god; and the covetous man his money, in which he truſts, and therefore is called an idolater; and the ſelf-righteous man his righteouſneſs, on which he depends for ſalvation: hence we read of idols ſet up in the heart, from which they are diſengaged in converſion, and kept from, Ezek. xiv. 7. and xxxvi. 25. Hoſ. xiv. 8. 1 John v. 21. neither ſhalt thou worſhip any ſtrange god; only the Lord God is to be worſhipped, Matt. iv. 10. and there is but one God; though this is to be underſtood not to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit, who are with the Father the one God, and to be worſhipped equally with him, and are; ſee Matt. xxviii. 19. 2 Cor. xiii. 14. Rev. i. 4, 5.

℣. 10. I am the Lord thy God, &c.] The true Jehovah, the being of beings, in whom all live and move and have their beings, the Covenant-God of his people; and is a reaſon why they ſhould hear him, and worſhip him, and no other: which brought thee out of the land of Egypt; this, with what goes before, is the preface to the ten commands, the firſt and principal of which is urged in the preceding verſe; and this is another reaſon why the Lord God ſhould be had and worſhipped, and not a ſtrange god; and redemption from worſe than Egyptian bondage, from the bondage of ſin, Satan, and the law, and a deliverance from worſe than Egyptian darkneſs, and from a ſtate of wickedneſs and impiety, ſhould lay under greater obligations ſtill to ſerve the Lord, and worſhip him only; who adds, as a further reaſon for it, open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it; which may be underſtood of opening the mouth either in prayer or in praiſe: to open the mouth wide in prayer, is to pray with great freedom, to pour out the ſoul to God, lay open its whole caſe, and tell him all its mind and wants; to pray with great boldneſs, and with much importunity and fervency, and in full aſſurance of faith, pleading with great ſtrength the promiſes of God, and aſking in faith for much, according to them; and God may be ſaid to fill this wide mouth of faith in prayer, when he grants the deſires of the heart, gives his people what they will, even very largely and abundantly, yea, more than they can aſk or think: to open the mouth wide in praiſe, is to be abundantly thankful for mercies received; and when perſons are ſo, the Lord fills them with more abundant matter for praiſe and thankſgiving; ſee Pſ. lxxi. 8. or this may be interpreted of opening the mouth wide in expreſſions of deſire after ſpiritual food, hungering and thirſting after ſpiritual things, when the Lord fills or ſatisfies the mouths of his people with good things, Pſ. ciii. 5. Matt. v. 6. with the ſincere milk of the word which they deſire, and with the ordinances, the breaſts of conſolation they long for, and ſo ſatisfies them with the goodneſs and fatneſs of his houſe, Pſ. lxv. 4. the metaphor ſeems to be taken from the young of birds[g], which open their mouths, and are filled by the old ones: the Targum is, "open thy mouth to the words of the law, and I will fill it with every good thing."

℣. 11. But my people would not hearken to my voice, &c.] Neither as exhorting them to the above duties, nor as promiſing the above favours; would neither hearken to the voice of the law, nor to the voice of the goſpel; but were like the deaf adder, which ſtops its ear to the voice of the charmer, charming ever ſo wiſely: and Iſrael would none of me; would not attend to his word, acquieſce in his will, nor delight themſelves in him, and in his worſhip and ſervice; would have none of his ſalutary doctrines, or wholeſome reproofs, nor of his laws and government; would not have him to reign over them, nor to be their ſaviour, though the only one, and there is none beſide him; though the chiefeſt good, and from whom all good things come, and is the portion and exceeding great reward of his people: ſee Prov. i. 25. 30.

[f] So Michaelis, and Guſſetius, and Genevenſes, in ib. Comment. Ebr. p. 431.

℣. 12. So I gave them up unto their own hearts luſt, &c.] Sometimes God gave them up, when they ſinned, into the hands of the Moabites, or Ammonites, or Philiſtines, or other neighbouring nations, for their chaſtiſement; but to be delivered up unto their own hearts luſt, is worſe than that; nay, than to be delivered to Satan: ſalvation may be the conſequence of that, but damnation of this; and yet it is a righteous judgment; for as men like not to retain God in their knowledge, it is but juſt with him to give them up to vile affections, to a reprobate mind, to do things not convenient, Rom. i. 24. 26. 28. there is nothing men are more deſirous of, than to have their hearts luſts; and there is no greater judgment can befal them, than to be left to the power of them, which muſt unavoidably iſſue in their ruin here and hereafter: and they walked in their own counſels; which were bad; after the imagination of their own evil hearts, and not after the counſels and directions of God in his word, and by his ſervants.

℣. 13. O that my people had hearkened unto me, &c.] This might have been expected from them, as they were his profeſſing people; and it would have been to their advantage if they had hearkened to him, as well as it would have been well pleaſing to him; for that is what is deſigned by this wiſh, which does not expreſs the purpoſing will of God; for who hath reſiſted that? if he had ſo willed, he could have given them ears to hear; but his commanding will, and what is his approving one: to hearken to him, is not only to hearken to what he commands, but to what he approves of; it is the good and acceptable will of God, that men ſhould hearken to the declarations of his will in the law, and to the declarations of his grace in the goſpel; and indeed it is the voice of Chriſt, the angel of God's preſence, who went before the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, which they were to hearken to and obey, that is here meant; ſee Exod. xxiii. 20, 21, 22 and Heb. iii. 6, 7, 8. and Iſrael had walked in my ways; which he marked out and directed them unto, meaning his ordinances and commandments; which to walk in, as it denotes progreſs and continuance, and ſuppoſes and requires life and ſtrength, ſo it is both pleaſant and profitable.

℣. 14. I ſhould ſoon have ſubdued their enemies, &c.] The Canaanites, and others: this he would have done in a very little time, or at once, and that eaſily, and without any trouble; he would quickly have humbled them, and brought them on their knees, as the word [g] ſignifies, to terms of peace; for when a man's ways pleaſe the Lord, he makes his enemies to be at peace with him, Prov. xvi. 7. ſo thoſe that hearken to the voice of Chriſt, and walk in his ways, he ſubdues their iniquities, and will bruiſe Satan under their feet ſhortly, and make them more than conquerors, through himſelf, over the world; the men and things of it he has overcome: and turned my hand againſt their adverſaries; that troubled, diſtreſſed, and oppreſſed them; and it is a righteous thing with God to render tribulation to them that trouble his people; he turns his chaſtiſing hand off of them, which ſometimes is heavy upon them, and preſſes them ſore, and turns it in a way of wrath and vindictive juſtice againſt their adverſaries; and ſo the Targum, "and turned the ſtroke of my power againſt their adverſaries;" this is the lighting down of his arm with the indignation of his anger, which is intolerable, Iſ. xxx. 30.

℣. 15. The haters of the Lord ſhould have ſubmitted themſelves unto him, &c.] Or, lied unto him [h]; feignedly ſubmitted to him, flattered him, pretended friendſhip to him, and entered into a league with him; either Iſrael, mentioned ℣. 13. or God, whom and whoſe worſhip and people they hated; as every natural man is an hater of God, and all that is good, and enmity itſelf unto him; but theſe ſhall all ſubmit to Chriſt, ſooner or later, in one way or another, and acknowledge him Lord, and that he is ſuperior to them, and themſelves not a match for him; as Julian the emperor, when wounded, ſaid, Thou haſt overcome me, O Galilean: but their time ſhould have endured for ever; which Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret of the calamities and vengeance that ſhould come upon the haters of God, who will be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction; their worm will never die, nor their fire be quenched; it is everlaſting, and the ſmoke of their torment will aſcend for ever and ever; in which ſenſe the word is uſed, Iſ. xiii. 22. or rather this is to be underſtood of the time, or happy ſtate and condition of the Iſraelites, which would have been of long continuance, had they hearkened to the Lord, and walked in his ways; particularly, they would have long enjoyed the land of Canaan, which was given to Abraham and his ſeed for an everlaſting poſſeſſion, and which they held by the tenure of their obedience, Gen. xvii. 8. Iſ. i. 19. and ſo all truly gracious ſouls, that hearken to the voice of Chriſt, and walk in his ways, are in a happy ſtate, which will endure for ever; they are bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings, and thoſe are for ever; the heavenly land of Canaan they ſhall dwell in for ever; their manſions or habitations in Chriſt's father's houſe are everlaſting; their houſe, not made with hands, is eternal in the heavens; their eſtate, poſſeſſion, and inheritance is an eternal one; it is incorruptible, and fades not away; their being with Chriſt is for ever; and their happineſs is often expreſſed by eternal life and eternal glory.

℣. 16. He ſhould have fed them alſo with the fineſt of the wheat, &c.] Or the fat of the wheat [i]; ſee Deut. xxxii. 14. with the fineſt flour of it: the Targum is, "with the beſt bread of wheat;" with the beſt of wheat, and the beſt bread that can be made of it: Aben Ezra interprets it of the manna, which was better than the fat or fineſt of the wheat, being the corn of heaven, and angels food, Pſ. lxxviii. 24, 25. but it rather reſpects what the Iſraelites would have been continued to be fed with in the land of Canaan, which was a land of wheat, Deut. viii. 8. and ſuch who hearken to the Lord, and walk in his ways, are fed by him with the goſpel, which is comparable to wheat, and the fineſt of it, for its choiceneſs and excellency, for its ſolidity and ſubſtantiality, for its purity and cleanneſs, and for its being of a nouriſhing and ſtrengthening nature; ſee Jer. xxiii. 28. and eſpecially Chriſt, the ſum and ſubſtance of the goſpel, may be figuratively meant, with whom the ſaints are fed, and who is compared to a corn of wheat, John xii. 24. for his preciouſneſs and excellency, for his purity and fruitfulneſs, and for being the food of his people, the bread of life, for which he was prepared by his ſufferings and death; which may be fitly expreſſed by the threſhing, winnowing, and grinding of wheat, and then of kneading the flour, and baking the bread: and with honey out of the rock would I have ſatisfied thee; the land of Canaan abounded with hills and rocks, in which bees had their hives, and from whence honey dropped to lower places; and hence the land is ſaid to flow with milk and honey, Exod. iii. 8. Deut. xxxii. 13. 1 Sam. xiv. 25, 26. nor is it unuſual in other places to find honey in rocks; at Guadalupe, in the Weſt Indies, we are told[z], honey was found in trees and caves of rocks. Aben Ezra interprets this of the water which flowed out of the rock at Horeb, which was ſweeter than honey; but the former ſenſe is beſt: the rock ſpiritually and myſtically deſigns Chriſt, the rock of ſalvation, 1 Cor. x. 4. the honey out of the rock, the fulneſs of grace in him, and the bleſſings of it, the ſure mercies of David, and the precious promiſes of the everlaſting covenant; and the goſpel, which is ſweeter than the honey or the honey-comb; and with theſe ſuch are filled and ſatisfied, who hearken to Chriſt, and walk in his ways; for as the whole of what is here ſaid ſhews what Iſrael loſt by diſobedience, it clearly ſuggeſts what ſuch enjoy who hear and obey.

PSAL. LXXXII.

A pſalm of Aſaph.

THIS pſalm was written for the uſe of perſons in power, for the inſtruction of kings and princes, judges, and civil magiſtrates; according to Kimchi, it was written about the times of Jehoſhaphat, who appointed new judges throughout the land; thoſe that were before having been very corrupt, to whom he gave a charge agreeable to the purport of this pſalm, 2 Chron. xix. 5, 6, 7. but it ſeems rather to be written by Aſaph, in the times of David, under a ſpirit of prophecy, and has reſpect to the times of Chriſt, when there was a great corruption among the judges and rulers of the Jews, both civil and eccleſiaſtic. The Syriac verſion calls it, a reproof of the ungodly Jews; our Lord cites a paſſage out of it in vindication of himſelf from their charge of blaſphemy, John x. 34, 35, 36.

℣. 1. God ſtandeth in the congregation of the mighty, &c.] The Syriac verſion renders it, in the congregation of angels; they are mighty, and excel in ſtrength, and there is a large company of them, even an innumerable one, and who ſurround the throne of the majeſty on high. Chriſt, who is God over all, was among thoſe on mount Sinai, and when he aſcended to heaven; and with theſe he'll deſcend when he comes a ſecond time, Pſ. lxviii. 17, 18. 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8. The Targum interprets it of the righteous thus, "God whoſe majeſty (or Shekinah) dwells in the congregation of the righteous that are ſtrong in the law." It may be better underſtood of ſuch as are ſtrong in the Lord, in the grace that is in Chriſt, and in the exerciſe of grace upon him; who are gathered out of the world unto him, and into diſtinct ſocieties and congregations; in the midſt of which God is, where he grants his preſence, beſtows the bleſſings of his grace, and affords his divine aid and protection; and where Chriſt the Son of God is, and will be to the end of the world. The words may be rendered, God ſtandeth in the congregation of God[a]; that is, in his own congregation, his church and people; but it ſeems beſt of all to underſtand the words of rulers and civil magiſtrates, of the cabinet-councils of princes, of benches of judges, and courts of judicature; in all which God is preſent, and obſerves what is ſaid and done; perhaps reference may be had to the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, the chief court of judicature with the Jews, conſiſting of ſeventy-one perſons; in the midſt of which Chriſt, God manifeſt in the fleſh, God in our nature, ſtood, and was ill uſed, and moſt unjuſtly judged by them, of whoſe unjuſt jndgment complaint is made in the next verſe: he judgeth among the gods; which the Syaiac verſion renders angels again; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it of them, who are ſo called, Pſ. viii. 5. and xcvii. 7. but rather civil magiſtrates are meant, the rulers and judges of the people, who go by this name of Elohim, or gods, in Exod. xxi. 6. and xxii. 18. and are ſo called becauſe they are the powers ordained of God, are repreſentatives of him, are his vicegerents and deputies under him; ſhould act in his name, according to his law, and for his glory, and are clothed with great power and authority from and under him; and therefore are before ſtiled the mighty. Among theſe Chriſt, the Son of God, judges, to whom all judgment is committed; he qualifies theſe for the diſcharge of their office, he directs them how to judge, and all the right judgment they make and do is from him, by whom kings reign, and princes decree juſtice; by whom princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth; and to whom they are all accountable, and will be themſelves judged by him another day, Prov. viii. 15, 16. ſo the Targum, "in the midſt of the judges of truth he judges."

℣. 2. How long will ye judge unjuſtly, &c.] Theſe are the words not of the pſalmiſt, but of the divine perſon that ſtands in the congregation of the mighty, and judges among the gods; calling the unjuſt judges to an account, and reproving them for their unrighteous proceedings, and perverſion of juſtice, in which they had long continued, and which was an aggravation of their ſin: this is very applicable to the rulers and judges of the Jewiſh nation in the times of Chriſt, who had long dealt very unjuſtly, and continued to do ſo; they judged wrong judgment, or judgment of iniquity, as Aben Ezra renders it, both in civil and eccleſiaſtical things; their judgment was depraved concerning the law, which they tranſgreſſed and made void by adhering to the traditions of the elders; they paſſed an unrighteous judgment on John the Baptiſt, the fore-runner of Chriſt, rejecting his baptiſm, and calling him a devil; and upon Chriſt himſelf, adjudging him to death for crimes he was not guilty of; and upon his followers, whom they caſt out of the ſynagogue; the character of an unjuſt judge ſee in Luke xviii. 2. and accept the perſons of the wicked, Selah; gave the cauſe in favour of them, and againſt the righteous, becauſe they were rich, or related to them, or had bribes from them, contrary to the law in Deut. xvi. 19. ſo the judges among the Jews, in Chriſt's time, judged according to appearance, the outward circumſtances of men, and not righteous judgment, as our Lorld ſuggeſts, John vii. 24.

℣. 3. Defend the poor and fatherleſs, &c.] Or, judge[d] them; ſuch as have no money to enter and carry on a ſuit, and have no friends to aſſiſt and adviſe them, and abide by them; theſe ſhould be taken under the care and wing of judges; their cauſe ſhould be attended to, and juſtice done them; their perſons ſhould be protected, and their property defended and ſecured; for ſince they are called gods, they ought to imitate him whoſe name they bear, who is the father of the fatherleſs, the judge of the widows, and the helper of the poor that commit themſelves to him, Pſ. x. 14. and lxviii. 5. ſuch a righteous judge and good magiſtrate was Job; ſee ch. xxix. 12. do juſtice to the afflicted and needy; or juſtify[e] them, pronounce them righteous, give the cauſe for them, not right, or wrong, nor becauſe they are poor and needy, but becauſe they are in the right; for if wicked, they are not to be juſtified, this is an abomination to the Lord; ſee Lev. xix. 15. Deut. xxv. 1. Prov. xvii. 15.

℣. 4. Deliver the poor and needy, &c.] From his adverſary and oppreſſor, who is mightier than he, and draws him to the judgment-ſeat; when it is not in his power to defend himſelf againſt him, and get out of his hands, unleſs a righteous judge will ſhew a regard to him, and his cauſe; and ſometimes even an unjuſt judge, through importunity, will do this, as every one ought, and every righteous one will: rid them out of the hand of the wicked; this was what the poor widow importuned the unjuſt judge for, and obtained, Luke xviii. 3, 4, 5.

℣. 5. They knew not, &c.] The Targum adds, to do well. This is to be underſtood of unjuſt judges, and wicked magiſtrates, who know not God, and have not the fear of him before their eyes, though he ſtands in the midſt of them, and judges among them; which is the ſource of their unjuſt judging and unrighteous proceedings; for becauſe they know not God, nor fear him, therefore they regard not men: nor do ſuch know themſelves; they are called gods, and they think they are ſo, and don't conſider they are but men; they are the miniſters of God, deputies under him, and are accountable to him: nor do they know their duty before pointed out; it is for them to know judgment, what is right, and what is wrong, that they may pronounce righteous judgment, Mic. iii. 2. but they do not know it, at leaſt ſo as to practiſe it: nor did the Jewiſh rulers know Chriſt, which was the reaſon of their unrighteous dealing with him and with his followers; they put him to death, and ſo they did them, becauſe they knew him not, 1 Cor. ii. 8. John xvi. 2, 3. neither will they underſtand; the Targum adds by way of explanation the law, the rule of judgment, which judges ought to underſtand; ſo the Jewiſh rulers, Phariſees and Sadducees, were upbraided by Chriſt, with ignorance of the ſcriptures, and the law of God, their falſe gloſſes of which he refutes, Matt. ch. v. ſee ch. xxii. 29. and their ignorance was wilful and affected, they ſhut their eyes againſt light and evidence, eſpecially with reſpect to Chriſt; they could diſcern the face of the ſky, but not the ſigns of the times, Matt. xvi. 3. who ſo blind as they that will not ſee? and ſuch were the Jewiſh rulers; ſee Iſ. xlii. 19. they walk on in darkneſs; they choſe darkneſs rather than light, and ſo were blind leaders of the blind, and were wilfully ſo, having their eyes blinded with gifts, Deut. xvi. 19. all the foundations of the earth are out of courſe; or ſhaken or moved[f]; by the perverſion of juſtice, towns, cities, common-wealths, kingdoms, and ſtates, are thrown into the utmoſt diſorder and confuſion: as the king by judgment ſtabliſheth the land, Prov. xxix. 4. ſo when judgment is not executed, it is unſettled, and thrown into confuſion; or though[g] the foundation, &c. though this is the caſe, yet unjuſt judges will go on, perverting judgment, even though as at the deluge the foundations of the earth were ſhaken and moved, for the violence, rapine, and oppreſſion, the earth was then filled with, which Kimchi thinks is here referred to; and though a diſſolution of the Jewiſh polity, civil and eccleſiaſtical, was threatened, becauſe of ſuch injuſtice; that God would once more ſhake the heavens and the earth, remove their church and civil ſtate, when they ſhould ceaſe to be a nation, their city be deſtroyed, and their temple, not one ſtone left upon another; and yet ſuch was the obſtinacy of their wicked judges, that they would perſiſt in their wicked ways.

℣. 6. I have ſaid, ye are gods, &c.] In the law, Exod. xxi. 6. and xxii. 28. or they were ſo by his appointment and commiſſion; he conſtituted them judges and magiſtrates, inveſted them with ſuch an office, by which they came to have this title; ſee Rom. xiii. 1. and ſo our Lord interprets theſe words, that they were gods to whom the word of God came, which gave them a commiſſion and authority to exerciſe their office, John x. 35. or rather againſt whom it came, pronouncing the ſentence of death on them as in ℣. 7. to which the reference is; declaring that though they were gods by office, yet were mortal men, and ſhould die. The Targum is, I ſaid, as angels are ye accounted; and ſo judges and civil magiſtrates had need to be as angels, and to have the wiſdom of them; ſee 2 Sam. xiv. 20. Jarchi interprets it of angels, but magiſtrates are undoubtedly meant: and all of you are children of the moſt high; the Targum here again renders it, "the angels of the moſt high;" and ſo Aben Ezra explains it of them, who are called the ſons of God, Job xxxviii. 7. but men in power are meant, who becauſe of their eminency and dignity, their high office, poſt, and place, are ſo called; ſee Gen. vi. 2. Pſ. lxxxix. 6.

℣. 7. But ye ſhall die like men, &c.] As men in common do, to whom it is appointed to die, Heb. ix. 27. or as common men, as men in the loweſt claſs of life: the wiſe man dies as the fool, the king as the peaſant, high as the low, rich as the poor; death levels and makes all alike: or as Adam, as the firſt man, ſo Jarchi, who was Lord of the whole univerſe; but being in honour, abode not, but became like the beaſts that periſh; ſinning he died; and ſo all his poſterity, even thoſe who have the greateſt power and authority on earth; ſee Pſ. xlix. 2. 10. 12. and not only die a corporal death, but an eternal one, dying in their ſins; as Chriſt threatened the Jewiſh rulers, ſcribes, and phariſees, if they believed not in him, John viii. 21. 24. and fall like one of the princes; or the chief of them, Satan, who fell like lightning from heaven, Luke x. 18. or rather as one of the giants that lived in the old world, famous for their injuſtice and oppreſſion, that fell in the deluge, Gen. vi. 4. or any of the heathen princes, tyrants and oppreſſors, ſuch as are mentioned in the following pſalm, Pſ. lxxxiii. 9, 10. This may have reſpect to the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, which is called the falling of them, Rom. xi. 11, 12. and the words may be rendered, and ye ſhall fall together, equally and alike, O ye princes[a]; when the Jewiſh ſtate, civil and eccleſiaſtical, fell, they fell with it, and together; the princes of this world then came to nought, or were aboliſhed; they and their authority, as the apoſtle Paul ſays they ſhould, 1 Cor. ii. 6. the ſceptre then departed from Judah, and the lawgiver from between his feet; all rule and authority ceaſed among them, as Jacob foretold it would, Gen. xlix. 10.

℣. 8. Ariſe, O God, &c.] Theſe are the words of the prophet, or of the church, whom he perſonates, addreſſing Chriſt, who is God over all; that ſeeing there was ſuch a corruption and degeneracy in the world, and ſuch wretched perverſion of juſtice, that he would ariſe and exert himſelf, and ſhew himſelf ſtrong on the behalf of his people: judge the earth; who is the judge of the whole earth, to whom all judgment is committed, and who will judge the world in righteouſneſs: for thou ſhalt inherit all nations; which he will do in the latter day, when he ſhall be king over all the earth, and the heathen ſhall be given him for his inheritance, he being heir of all things; and univerſal juſtice will not take place in the world, till that time comes; and therefore it is to be wiſhed and prayed for, as by the prophet and church here.

PSAL. LXXXIII.

A ſong or pſalm of Aſaph.

THIS is the laſt of the pſalms that bear the name of Aſaph, and ſome think it was written by him on occaſion of David's ſmiting the Philiſtines, Moabites, Syrians, Edomites, and others, 2 Sam. viii. 1.—14. but theſe did not conjunctly but ſeparately fight with David, and were overcome by him; whereas thoſe this pſalm makes mention of, were in a confederacy together; and beſides, the Tyrians in David's time were in friendſhip with him; but are here mentioned as joining with others againſt Iſrael, ℣. 7. others are of opinion, that this was prophetically delivered out with reſpect to future times, either to the conſpiracy of the enemies of the Jews againſt them in the times of the Maccabees, ſee 1 Maccab. v. 1. &c. or rather to the confederacy of the Moabites, Ammonites, and others, in the times of Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 1. ſo Kimchi, Arama, and the generality of interpreters: perhaps reference is had to the enemies of God's people, from age to age, both in the old and in the new teſtament; R. Obadiah underſtands it of the war of Gog and Magog.

℣. 1. Keep not thou ſilence, O God, &c.] Which he is thought and ſaid to do, when he does not anſwer the prayers of his people, nor plead their cauſe, nor rebuke their enemies; when he does not ſpeak a good word to them, or one for them, or one againſt thoſe that hate and perſecute them: hold not thy peace; or be not deaf[b] to the cries and tears of his people, and to the reproaches, menaces and blaſphemies of wicked men: and be not ſtill, O God; or quiet[c], at reſt and eaſe, unactive and unconcerned, as if he cared not how things went; the reaſon follows.

℣. 2. For lo, thine enemies make a tumult, &c.] Or a noiſe[d]: wicked men are commonly noiſy, roaring out their blaſphemies againſt God, belching out oaths and curſes, and breathing threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the ſaints; eſpecially a numerous army of them, conſiſting of many people and nations, as this did; who are called the Lord's enemies, being the enemies of his people, and their cauſe and his are one and the ſame; and beſides, all wicked men are enemies to God, and all that is good, in their minds, and which appears by their actions; yea, they are enmity itſelf unto him: and they that hate thee, have lift up the head; are haughty, proud, and arrogant; ſpeak loftily, and with a ſtiff neck; ſet their mouth againſt heaven, and God in it; and their tongue walks through the earth, and ſpares none; they exult and rejoice, as ſure of victory, before the battle is fought; ſuch then were, and ſuch there are, who are haters of God, hate his being, perfections, purpoſes, and providences; hate his Son without a cauſe, and even do deſpite unto the Spirit of grace; hate the law and its precepts, the goſpel and its doctrines and ordinances, and the ways, worſhip, and people of God; as appears by what follows.

℣. 3. They have taken crafty counſel againſt thy people, &c.] The people of Iſrael, hereafter named, whom God had choſen and avouched to be his people; theſe they dealt ſubtilly with, as the king of Egypt had done with their forefathers; and this, agreeable to their character, being the ſeed of the old ſerpent, more ſubtile than any of the beaſts of the field; theſe deviſed cunning devices, formed crafty ſchemes for the deſtruction of the Lord's people; but often ſo it is, that the wiſe are taken in their own craftineſs, and their counſel is carried headlong: and conſulted againſt thy hidden ones; not hidden from the Lord, and unknown unto him, though from their enemies, and unknown by them, and ſo the object of their hatred and perſecution; but hidden by him as his jewels and peculiar treaſure, which he takes care of; hidden under the ſhadow of his wings, in the ſecret of his preſence and tabernacle, as in a pavilion; and therefore it was a daring piece of inſolence in their enemies to attack them: ſo the life of ſaints is ſaid to be hid with Chriſt in God, which denotes both its ſecrecy and ſafety; ſee Col. iii. 3. the Targum is, "againſt the things hidden in thy treaſures;" meaning the riches of the temple.

℣. 4. They have ſaid, &c.] Secretly in their hearts, or openly to one another, and gave it out in the moſt public manner, as what they had conſulted and determined upon; ſee Pſ. lxxiv. 8. come, and let us cut them off from being a nation; they were not content to invade their country, take their cities, plunder them of their ſubſtance, and carry them captives, but utterly to deſtroy them, root and branch; ſo that they might be no more a body politic, under rule and government, in their own land, nor have ſo much as a name and place in others; this was Haman's ſcheme, Eſth. iii. 8, 9. that the name of Iſrael may be no more in remembrance; but this deſperate and dreadful ſcheme, and wretched deſign of their's, took not effect; but, on the contrary, the ſeveral nations hereafter mentioned, who were in this conſpiracy, are no more, and have not had a name in the world for many hundreds of years; whilſt the Jews are ſtill a people, and are preſerved, in order to be called and ſaved, as all Iſrael will be in the latter day, Rom. xi. 25. So Diocleſian thought to have rooted the chriſtian name out of the world; but in vain: the name of Chriſt, the name of Chriſtianity, the name of a chriſtian church, will endure to the end of the world; ſee Pſ. lxxii. 17. Prov. x. 7. Compare with this Jer. xi. 19.

℣. 5. For they have conſulted together with one conſent, &c.] Or heart[e]; wicked men are cordial to one another, and united in their counſels againſt the people of God, and his intereſt: whatever things they may diſagree in, they agree in this, to oppoſe the cauſe and intereſt of true religion, or to perſecute the church and people of God: Herod and Pontius Pilate are inſtances of this: they are confederate againſt thee; or have made a covenant againſt thee[f]; the covenant they had entered into among themſelves, being againſt the Lord's people, was againſt him; and ſuch a covenant and agreement can never ſtand; for there is no wiſdom, nor underſtanding, nor counſel againſt the Lord, Prov. xxi. 30. This the pſalmiſt mentions to engage the Lord in the quarrel of his people, and not be ſtill, and act a neutral part; ſince thoſe were his enemies, and confederates againſt him, and they are next particularly named.

℣. 6. The tabernacles of Edom, &c.] Or the Idumeans, as the Targum; the poſterity of Eſau, who, with the reſt that joined with them, hereafter mentioned, and made the confederate army, brought their tents with them, pitched them, and encamped in them againſt Iſrael: and the Iſhmaelites; or Arabians, as the Targum, who deſcended from Iſhmael, the ſon of Abraham: of Moab, and the Hagarenes; the Moabites, who ſprung from Lot by one of his daughters, in an inceſtuous way; and the Hagarenes are the ſame with the Hagarites, 1 Chron. v. 10. 19, 20. who dwelt to the eaſt of the land of Iſrael, ſo called from Hagar, the hand-maid of Abraham, but not by him, but by another huſband, after ſent away from him, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi think; or by him, ſuppoſing Hagar to be the ſame with Keturah, as ſome do: the Targum calls them Hungarians; the Syriac verſion renders it Gadareans, or Gadarenes; of which ſee Mark v. 1.

℣. 7. Gebal, &c.] Gubleans, or Gebalites, as the Targum; the ſame with the Giblites, Joſh. xiii. 5. 1 Kings v. 18. or men of Gebal, Ezek. xxvii. 9. the ſame with Byblus: theſe dwelt in Phœnicia, near Tyre, where Pliny[g] makes mention of a place called Gabale: the Syriac verſion joins it with Ammon, and renders it the border of Ammon: and Ammon and Amalek, the Philiſtines, with the inhabitants of Tyre; theſe are well known in ſcripture, and as the enemies of Iſrael.

℣. 8. Aſſur alſo is joined with them, &c.] Before mentioned, or Aſſyria, though at ſo great a diſtance from Iſrael, and unprovoked by them: according to R. Joſeph Kimchi, the ſenſe is, that the Aſſyrians joined them, continuing in their wickedneſs, tho' their army had been deſtroyed by an angel in Hezekiah's time, of which they were unmindful; but this, as his ſon obſerves, makes this confederacy and war to be after the times of Hezekiah; whereas it was long before it: the Targum is, "Sennacherib, king of Aſſyria, is joined with them;" and ſo ſome refer this to his invaſion of Judea, and beſieging Jeruſalem, with an army conſiſting of many nations, in Hezekiah's time; but he was the principal there, and not an auxiliary, as here: they have holpen the children of Lot, Selah; or were an arm[h] unto them, aſſiſted and ſtrengthened them: theſe were the Moabites and Ammonites, who were the principals in the war, and the reſt auxiliaries, as it appears they were in the times of Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 1. 10. 22. 23. here were ten different nations, which joined in confederacy againſt the people of Iſrael; to which anſwer the ten horns of the beaſt, or ten antichriſtian kings, who agreed to give their kingdom to the beaſt, and to make war with the Lamb and his followers, Rev. xvii. 12, 13, 14. and it may be obſerved, that theſe were on all ſides of the land of Iſrael; the Edomites, Iſhmaelites, and Amalekites, were on the ſouth; the Moabites, Ammonites, and Hagarenes, were on the eaſt; the Aſſyrians on the north; and the Philiſtines, Gebalites, and Tyrians, on the weſt; ſo that Iſrael was ſurrounded on all ſides with enemies, as the Lord's people are troubled on every ſide, 2 Cor. iv. 8. and ſo the Gog and Magog army, of which ſome underſtand this, will encompaſs the camp of the ſaints about, and the beloved city, Rev. xx. 9.

℣. 9. Do unto them as unto the Midianites, &c.] In the times of Gideon, who deſtroyed one another, and in whoſe deſtruction the hand of the Lord was very viſible, Judg. vii. 20, 21, 22. and much in the ſame manner was the confederate army of the Moabites, Ammonites, and others, deſtroyed in the times of Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 22, 23, 24. as to Siſera, as to Jabin; Jabin was a king of Canaan, who oppreſſed Iſrael, and Siſera was his general; the latter was ſlain by a woman, Jael, the wife of Heber; and the former the hand of Iſrael prevailed againſt, until they deſtroyed him, Judg. iv. 2. 21, 22, 24. the great victory which they obtained over them was at the brook of Kiſon, or Kiſhon, Judg. iv. 7. and v. 21. with this compare 2 Chron. xx. 16.

℣. 10. Which periſhed at En-dor, &c.] Aben Ezra and Kimchi underſtand this of the Midianites; but rather it is to be underſtood of Jabin and Siſera, and the army under them, who periſhed at this place, which is mentioned along with Taanach and Megiddo, Joſh. xvii. 11. which are the very places where the battle was fought between Jabin and Iſrael, Judg. v. 19. according to Jerom[i], it was four miles from mount Tabor to the ſouth, and was a large village in his days, and was near to Naim, the place where Chriſt raiſed the widow's ſon from the dead, Luke vii. 11. ſee 1 Sam. xxviii. 7. they became as dung for the earth; being unburied, they lay and rotted on the earth, and became dung for it; ſee Jer. viii. 2. or were trodden under foot, as dung upon the earth; ſo the Targum, "they became as dung trodden to the earth."

℣. 11. Make their nobles like Oreb, and like Zeeb, &c.] Two princes of Midian, who were ſlain, the one at the rock Oreb, and the other at the wine-preſs of Zeeb, ſo called after their names, Judg. vii. 25. yea, all their princes as Zebah, and as Zalmunna; kings of Midian, ſlain by Gideon, Judg. viii. 21.

℣. 12. Who ſaid, &c.] Not the kings and princes of Midian juſt mentioned, but the confederate enemies of Iſrael, named ℣. 6, 7, 8. to whom the like things are wiſhed as to the Midianites and others, becauſe they ſaid what follows: let us take to ourſelves the houſes of God in poſſeſſion; not only the temple, which was eminently the houſe of God, but all the habitations of the Iſraelites in Jeruſalem, and other places, where the Lord vouchſafed to dwell; unleſs this ſhould be ironically ſpoken by their enemies calling them ſo, becauſe they pretended, as they reckoned it, to have and to hold them by the gift of God; whereas, of right, they belonged to them, at leaſt ſome of them: ſuch a claim was made by the Ammonites in the times of Jephtha, Judg. xi. 13. and to diſpoſſeſs the Iſraelites was the intention of the Ammonites and Moabites in the times of Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 10, 11.

℣. 13. O my God, make them like a wheel, &c.] Which, as the Targum adds, is rolled, and goes on, and reſts not in a declivity; let them be as fickle and inconſtant as a wheel; being in high, let them be in ſlippery places, and brought down to deſolation in a moment; like a wheel ſet a-running down hill, ſo let them ſwiftly and ſuddenly come to ruin; or be in all kind of calamities, and continual troubles[k], as the wheel is always turning: ſome think there is an alluſion to the wheel by which bread-corn was bruiſed; ſee Iſ. xxviii. 28. Prov. xx. 26. but the word[l] ſignifies a rolling thing before the wind, as a whiſp of ſtraw or ſtubble, which is eaſily carried away with it: Jarchi interprets it of the tops or down of thiſtles, which fly off from them, and roll up, and are ſcattered by the wind; ſee Iſ. xvii. 13. and which agrees with what follows: as the ſtubble before the wind; which cannot ſtand before it, but is driven about by it here and there; and ſo wicked men are, as chaff and ſtubble, driven away in their wickedneſs, with the ſtormy wind of divine wrath and vengeance, and chaſed out of the world, which is here imprecated.

℣. 14. As the fire burneth the wood, &c.] Or foreſt[m]; which is ſometimes done purpoſely, and ſometimes through careleſſneſs, as Virgil[n] obſerves; and which is done very eaſily and ſwiftly, when fire is ſet to it; even all the trees of it, great and ſmall, to which an army is ſometimes compared, Iſ. x. 18, 19. and as the flame ſetteth the mountains on fire; either the mountains themſelves, as Ætna, Veſuvius, and others; or rather the graſs and trees that grow upon them, ſmitten by lightning from heaven, which may be meant by the flame: in like manner 'tis wiſhed, that the fire and flame of divine wrath would conſume the confederate enemies of Iſrael, above mentioned; as wicked men are but as trees of the foreſt, and the graſs of the mountains, or as thorns and briars, to the wrath of God, which is poured out as fire, and is ſignified by everlaſting burnings.

℣. 15. So perſecute them with thy tempeſt, &c.] Purſue them with thy fury, follow them with thy vengeance; cauſe it to fall upon them like a mighty tempeſt: and make them afraid with thy ſtorm; God has his ſtorms and tempeſts of wrath and vengeance, which he ſometimes cauſes to fall upon wicked men in this life, to their inexpreſſible terror, and with which he takes them out of this world; and he has ſtill more horrible ones to rain upon them hereafter: ſee Job xxvii. 20, 21. Pſ. xi. 6.

℣. 16. Fill their faces with ſhame, &c.] For their ſins, or rather through diſappointment, not being able to put their deſperate and deep-laid ſchemes into execution: or with lightneſs[o]; inſtead of a weight of honour and glory upon them, let them be deſpiſed. R. Joſeph Kimchi renders it, fill their faces with fire; let their faces be as if they were on fire, as mens faces are, who are put to an exceeding great bluſh, or are moſt ſadly confounded and aſhamed: that they may ſeek thy name, O Lord; not they themſelves, who are filled with ſhame; for it is imprecated, that they may be aſhamed, and troubled for ever, and ſo as to periſh, ℣. 17. but others; for the words may be ſupplied, as in ℣. 18. that men may ſeek thy name, or that thy name may be ſought: the judgments of God upon wicked men are ſometimes the means of arouſing others, and putting them upon ſeeking the Lord, his face, and his favour; that God would be merciful to them, pardon their iniquities, avert judgments from them, and preſerve them from threatened calamities; and this is a good end, when anſwered; ſee Iſ. xxvi. 9. 16.

℣. 17. Let them be confounded and troubled for ever, &c.] As long as they are in this world, and to all eternity in another; a dreadful portion this: yea, let them be put to ſhame, and periſh; wholly and eternally, in ſoul and body, for evermore.

℣. 18. That men may know that thou, whoſe name alone is Jehovah, &c.] Or, that thou, thy name alone is Jehovah[p], a ſelf-exiſtent being, the being of beings, the everlaſting I am, the immutable God; for this name is expreſſive of the being, eternity, and unchangeableneſs of God, who is, and was, and is to come, invariably the ſame, Rev. i. 4. which is to be underſtood not to the excluſion of the Son or Spirit, who are with the Father the one Jehovah, Deut. vi. 4. and to whom this name is given; ſee Exod. xvii. 6. compared with 1 Cor. x. 9. Iſ. xl. 3. Jer. xxiii. 6. Iſ. vi. 8, 9. compared with Acts xxviii. 25, 26. but to the excluſion of all nominal and fictitious deities, the gods of the heathens; and the being and perfections of God are known by the judgments he executes, Pſ. ix. 16. art the moſt high over all the earth; or, and that thou art, &c.[q], being the maker and the poſſeſſor of it, and the ſovereign Lord of its inhabitants, doing in it what ſeems good in his ſight; ſee Gen. xiv. 22. Dan. iv. 35. for the accents require two propoſitions in the text: the heathens[r] give the title of moſt high to their ſupreme deity: the Targum is, "over all the inhabitants of the earth."

PSAL. LXXXIV.

To the chief muſician upon Gittith, A pſalm for the ſons of Korah.

OF Gittith, ſee the title of Pſ. viii. The Targum renders it here, as there, "to praiſe upon the harp that was brought from Gath;" and of the ſons of Korah, ſee the title of Pſ. xlii. and the argument of this pſalm is thought to be much the ſame with that and the lxiiid. It was, very probably, written by David; to whom the Targum, on ℣. 8. aſcribes it; though it does not bear his name, the ſpirit it breathes, and the language in which it is written, ſhew it to be his; though not when he was an exile among the Philiſtines, in the times of Saul, as ſome in Kimchi think; for then the ark was not in Zion, as is ſuggeſted ℣. 7. but elſewhere; for it was brought thither by David, after he was king of Iſrael, 2 Sam. vii. 2. 16. but rather when he fled from his ſon Abſalom; though there is nothing in it that neceſſarily ſuppoſes him to be baniſhed, or at a diſtance from the houſe of God; only he expreſſes his great affection for it, and his earneſt deſires for returning ſeaſons and opportunities of worſhipping God in it; and the general view of it is to ſet forth the bleſſedneſs of ſuch who frequently attend divine ſervice: the inſcription of it, in the Syriac verſion, is, "for the ſons of Korah, when David meditated to go out of Zion, to worſhip in the houſe of God: and it is called a prophecy concerning Chriſt, and concerning his church," as it undoubtedly is. Biſhop Patrick thinks it was compoſed by ſome pious Levite in the country, when Sennacherib's army had blocked up the way to Jeruſalem, and hindered them from waiting upon the ſervice of God at the temple; and others refer it to the times of the Babyloniſh captivity; and both Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it of the captivity, when the temple and altars of God were in ruins; but this does not agree with the lovelineſs of them, in which they were at the time of writing this pſalm.

℣. 1. How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hoſts!] Which were erected in the wilderneſs by Moſes at the command of God, and brought into the land of Canaan, where the Lord took up his dwelling: here he was worſhipped, and ſacrifices offered to him; here he granted his preſence, and commanded his bleſſing; here it was in David's time; for as yet the temple was not built: it is called tabernacles in the plural number, becauſe of its ſeveral parts: hence we read of a firſt and ſecond tabernacle, Heb. ix. 2, 3. there was the holy place, and the holy of holies, beſides the court of the people; unleſs it can be thought to refer to the tabernacle David had built for the ark in Zion, and to the old tabernacle which was at Gibeon, 2 Sam. vi. 17. 1 Chron. xxi. 19. the whole was a repreſentation of the church of God, and the ordinances of it; which is the dwelling place of God, Father, Son, and Spirit, where he is worſhipped, his preſence enjoyed, his word is preached, ordinances adminiſtered, and the ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe offered up; on account of all which it is very amiable: what made the tabernacle of Moſes lovely, was not the outſide, which was very mean, as the church of God outwardly is, through perſecution, affliction, and poverty; but what was within, having many golden veſſels in it, and thoſe typical of things much more precious: moreover, here the prieſts were to be ſeen in their robes, doing their duty and ſervice, and, at certain times, the high prieſt in his rich apparel; here were ſeen the ſacrifices ſlain and offered, by which the people were taught the nature of ſin, the ſtrictneſs of juſtice, and the neceſſity and efficacy of the ſacrifice of Chriſt; here the Levites were heard ſinging their ſongs, and blowing their trumpets: but much more amiable are the church of God and its ordinances in goſpel-times, where Chriſt, the great high prieſt, is ſeen in the glories of his perſon, and the fulneſs of his grace; where Zion's prieſts, or the miniſters of the goſpel, ſtand cloathed, being full fraught with ſalvation, and the tidings of it; where Chriſt is evidently ſet forth, as crucified and ſlain, in the miniſtry of the word, and the adminiſtration of ordinances; here the goſpel-trumpet is blown, and its joyful ſound ecchoed forth, and ſongs of love and grace are ſung by all believers: beſides, what makes theſe tabernacles ſtill more lovely are, the preſence of God here, ſo that they are no other than the houſe of God, and gate of heaven; the proviſions that are here made, and the company that are here enjoyed; to which may be added, the properties of thoſe dwellings; they are lightſome, like the habitations of Iſrael in Goſhen; they are healthful, no plague comes nigh them; the inhabitants of them are not ſick; their ſins are forgiven them; they are ſafe, ſure, and quiet dwelling places; ſee Iſ. xxxii. 18. and xxxiii. 20. 24. and they are lovely to ſuch, and to ſuch only, who have ſeen the unamiableneſs of ſin, and are ſick of its tents, and of enjoying its fading pleaſures, and to whom Chriſt is precious, and altogether lovely: theſe have an intenſe affection for him, and for his houſe, word, worſhip and ordinances, and with admiration ſay, how amiable, &c.

℣. 2. My ſoul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord, &c.] The courts of the tabernacle now at Gibeon, though the ark was in Zion, 2 Chron. i. 3—6. as the court of the prieſts, and the court of the Iſraelites, in which latter the people in common ſtood: after theſe David longed; he longed to enter into them, and ſtand in them, and worſhip God there; which ſoul-longings and hearty deſires were the fruits and evidences of true grace, of being born again; ſo new-born ſouls deſire the ſincere milk of the word, and the breaſts of goſpel-ordinances, as a new-born babe deſires its mother's milk and breaſt; and he even fainted, through diſappointment, or length of time, being impatient of the returning ſeaſon and opportunity of treading in them; ſee Pſ. xlii. 1. and lxiii. 1. my heart and my fleſh crieth out for the living God; he not only inwardly deſired, and ſecretly fainted, but audibly cried out in his diſtreſs, and verbally expreſſed, with great vehemence, his deſire to enjoy the living God: it was not merely the courts, but God in them, that he wanted; even that God which has life in himſelf, with whom is the fountain of life; who gives life to others, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal, and in whoſe favour is life; yea, whoſe loving kindneſs is better than life, and which was the thing longed and thirſted after: and theſe deſires were the deſires of the whole man, ſoul and body; not only he cried with his mouth and lips, ſignified by his fleſh, but with his heart alſo, ſincerely and heartily; his heart went along with his mouth.

℣. 3. Yea, the ſparrow hath found an houſe, &c.] One or other of the houſes of men, where to build its neſt; or its neſt itſelf is called an houſe, as it ſeems to be explained in the next clauſe: the word here uſed ſignifies any bird; we tranſlate it a ſparrow, and ſo Kimchi; the Targum renders it the dove; but the Midraſh is, "it is not ſaid as a dove, but as a ſparrow: the dove takes its young, and returns to its place; not ſo the ſparrow:" and the ſwallow a neſt for herſelf, where ſhe may lay her young; the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions, have it the turtle, the ſtock, or ring-dove; and ſo the Targum, which paraphraſes this clauſe, in connection with the following, thus; "and the turtle a neſt for herſelf, whoſe young are fit to be offered up upon thine altars:" it is tranſlated a ſwallow in Prov. xxvi. 2. and has its name in Hebrew from liberty, it not loving confinement, or becauſe it freely viſits the houſes of men without fear: even thine altars, O Lord of hoſts; that is, as ſome underſtand it, there the ſwallow builds a neſt, and lays her young; but it can hardly be thought that this could be done in them, ſince the prieſts were ſo often officiating at them, and there were ſo much noiſe, fire, and ſmoke there: it muſt be at the ſides of them, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, or near unto them; or rather in the rafters of the houſe where they were; and the rafters and beams of the temple were of cedar, and in ſuch turtles have their neſts[s]; or in the houſes adjoining to the tabernacle; or in the trees that might be near it; ſee Joſh. xxiv. 26. and ſo the pſalmiſt ſeems to envy and grudge the place theſe birds had, and wiſhes he had the ſame nearneſs as they. Kimchi obſerves, that if this is to be underſtood of David, when in the land of the Philiſtines, at that time high places and altars were lawful every where, and there birds might build their neſts; but if of the captivity, the birds found a place and built their neſts in the ruins of the temple and altars; and ſo Jarchi; for as for the temple, it was not built in the times of David; beſides, when built, had a ſcare-crow on it[t]: tho' the words may be conſidered as in connection with ℣. 3. and what goes before be read in a parentheſis, as they are by R. Judah Ben Balaam, cited by R. Aben Ezra; my ſoul longeth for the courts of the Lord—crieth out for the living God: even thine altars, O Lord of hoſts; that is, for them; or may be ſupplied thus, I deſire thine altars, O Lord of hoſts[u]: as the birds above mentioned ſeek for a neſt, and deſire to find one, and have what they want, and nature prompts them to; ſo I deſire a place in thine houſe and courts, and near thine altars; ſee Matt. viii. 20. or thus; as theſe birds rejoice, when they have found an houſe or neſt for themſelves and young; ſo ſhould I rejoice, might I be favoured once more with attendance on thine altars, O Lord of hoſts: mention is made of altars, referring both to the altar of burnt-ſacrifice, and the altar of incenſe, both typical of Chriſt, Heb. xiii. 10. and of his ſacrifice and interceſſion; both which believers have to do with: 'tis added, my King, and my God; when, by attending at his tabernacle, courts, and altars, he would teſtify his ſubjection to him as his king, and his faith in him, and thankfulneſs to him as his God; ſee John xx. 28.

℣. 4. Bleſſed are they that dwell in thy houſe, &c.] The houſe of God, in his tabernacles and courts; referring to the prieſts and Levites, who were frequently officiating there, in their turns, night and day; and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem and Gibeon, where the ark and tabernacle were, who had frequent opportunities of attendance on divine worſhip: and happy are thoſe who have a name and place in the church of God, who abide there, and never go out; ſee Pſ. lxv. 4. the Targum is, "bleſſed are the righteous, &c." and the Arabic verſion, bleſſed are all they that dwell, &c. they are happy on account of their ſettlement, and alſo on account of their work, as follows: they will be ſtill praiſing thee, Selah; which is delightful employment; for praiſe is pleaſant and comely; and in which they are continually and conſtantly engaged, as their mercies return upon them, as they do every day; and eſpecially on Lord's days, or at the ſtated times of public worſhip; ſuch will bleſs and praiſe the Lord, both for temporal and ſpiritual bleſſings, as long as they live; ſee Heb. xiii. 15.

℣. 5. Bleſſed is the man whoſe ſtrength is in thee, &c.] Or, for thee, as ſome chuſe to render the words; who have bodily ſtrength from the Lord, for his worſhip and ſervice, to go up to his houſe, and ſerve him: this, with what follows in the two next verſes, ſeem to refer to the males in Iſrael going up from different parts of the land to Jeruſalem to worſhip, who had ſtrength ſo to do; when the women and children, for want thereof, ſtayed at home, which was their infelicity, as it was the happineſs of the males that they had ability for ſuch a journey and ſervice: the Targum is, "whoſe ſtrength is in thy word;" the eſſential Word, the Meſſiah, who have ſpiritual ſtrength in and from him; ſee Iſ. xlv. 24. without this, there is no heart to go up to the houſe of God; and this will carry through a great deal of bodily weakneſs; and by it ſaints overcome the temptations of Satan to the contrary, and perform the ſeveral duties of religion: in whoſe heart are the ways of them; or thy ways[x]; the ways of God, the ways of Zion, the ways to the houſe of God; who have theſe ways at heart, who aſk the way to Zion with their faces thitherwards; who have not only ability, but inclination and and readineſs of mind to walk in them; whoſe hearts are bent upon them, regarding no objection, difficulty, and diſcouragement; who ſtir up themſelves and others to go up to the houſe of God, and are heartily deſirous of being taught his ways, and walking in them, and take great pleaſure and delight therein; they are ways of pleaſantneſs, and paths of peace to them; the word properly ſignifies highways[y], ways caſt up. Some render it aſcenſions in his heart[z]; the affections of whoſe heart go up to God, like pillars of ſmoke perfumed with frankincenſe, are after God, his ways and worſhip, and are ſet on things above.

℣. 6. Who paſſing through the valley of Baca, &c.] Kimchi interprets it a valley of ſprings, or fountains, taking the word to be of the ſame ſignification as in Job xxxviii. 16. and mention being made of a well and pools in it, or of mulberry-trees, which grow as he ſays in a place where there is no water, and ſuch a place was this; and therefore pools or ditches were dug in it, and built of ſtone, to catch rain-water for the ſupply of travellers; and ſo Aben Ezra ſays, it is the name of a place or valley where were trees, called mulberries; and is by ſome thought to be the ſame with the valley of Rephaim, where we read of mulberry-trees, 2 Sam. v. 22, 23. the Septuagint render it the valley of weeping, and the Vulgate Latin verſion the valley of tears; which have led ſome interpreters to think of Bochim, a place ſo called from the children of Iſrael weeping there, Judg. ii. 1, 5. it does not ſeem to deſign any particular place, through which all the males could not paſs from the different parts of the land of Iſrael, as they came to Zion at the three grand feſtivals; but any difficult and troubleſome place, any rough valley, or dry and thirſty land, where there was no water: ſo ſaints are paſſengers, travellers, or pilgrims in this world, and often paſs through a valley; are in a low valley, through the weakneſs of grace; a rough one, through affliction; and a dark one, through deſertion and temptation; and a valley of weeping and tears on account both of outward and inward trials. The way to Zion, or to the houſe and ordinances of God below, lies through the valley of weeping; none come rightly thither, but who come weeping over their ſins and unworthineſs; or by repentance towards God, and by looking by faith to Chriſt whom they have pierced, and mourning for it; ſee Jer. l. 4, 5. and the way to Zion above lies through a vale of tears, ſhed in plenty by reaſon of ſin, a man's own, original and actual, the ſins of profeſſors and prophane, by reaſon of Satan's temptations, the hidings of God's face, and the diſtreſſes, diviſions, and declenſions of Zion; yet relief is afforded, ſuccour is given, refreſhment is had in this valley for ſuch paſſengers: they make it a well; either the valley a well with their tears, an hyperbolical expreſſion, like that in Lam. ii. 18. or they account it as ſuch, a dry valley, as if it was a well watered place; look upon all their toil and labour in going to the houſe of God as a pleaſure; and eſteem all reproach, afflictions, and perſecutions, they meet with from the world, or relations, for the ſake of religion, as riches and honours; or they find a ſupply, which is kindly and graciouſly given, even rivers in high places, and fountains in the midſt of valleys, ſtreams of divine love, and precious promiſes in a wilderneſs, Iſ. xli. 18. and xxxv. 6. or make him a well[a]; that is, God himſelf; they account of him as ſuch; they find him to be ſo, and make uſe of him as one, who is a well of living waters; ſuch are his love, his covenant, and his grace; ſuch are his Son and his fulneſs, his Spirit, the gifts and graces of it; all which yield a rich ſupply: the rain alſo filleth the pools; of the word and ordinances: or the rain covereth with bleſſings[b]; the rain of divine love covers the paſſengers with ſpiritual bleſſings, which flow from it; Chriſt, whoſe coming is compared to the rain, brings a train of bleſſings with him to his people; and the goſpel, which drops as the rain, and diſtils as the dew, is full of the bleſſings of Chriſt; is a glorious revelation of them, and is the means of conveying them to the ſaints: or the teacher covereth, or is covered with bleſſings[c]; the great teacher of all, God, Father, Son, and Spirit; the Father teaches all his children to great profit and advantage, and covers or bleſſes them with all ſpiritual bleſſings; the Son is a teacher come from God, and is covered or prevented with the bleſſings of goodneſs, and communicates them to his diſciples and followers; and the Spirit teacheth all things, and takes of the things of Chriſt, the bleſſings of his grace, and covers his people with them; and all under-teachers, miniſters of the goſpel, are clothed with ſalvation, and come forth in the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the goſpel of Chriſt.

℣. 7. They go from ſtrength to ſtrength, &c.] Whoſe ſtrength is in the Lord, and in whoſe heart are his ways, and who paſs through the valley of Baca, and find a well of ſupply, and pools of bleſſings there; they renew their ſpiritual ſtrength; they grow ſtronger and ſtronger every ſtep they take; the way of the Lord is ſtrength unto them: or from army to army, or from company to company[d], as Kimchi, alluding to the companies in which they went up to the feaſts; ſee Luke ii. 44. when thoſe who were more zealous, or more able to undergo journeys, would outgo the reſt, and firſt overtake one company, and then another, and get to Zion firſt: or from victory to victory; firſt overcoming one enemy, and then another, as ſin, Satan, and the world, being more than conquerors through him that has loved them: or from doctrine to doctrine[e]; being led firſt into one truth, and then into another, as they were able to bear them; and ſo following on to know the Lord, and increaſing in the knowledge of him: or from claſs to claſs[f]; from the lower to an higher form in the ſchool of Chriſt; ſo Jarchi interprets it, from ſchool to ſchool; and the Targum, from the ſanctuary to the ſchool; compare with this Rom. i. 17. 2 Cor. iii. 18. every one of them in Zion appeareth before God; three times in the year, but not empty, Exod. xxxiv. 20, 23, 24. ſo the ſaints appear before God in his church below, preſenting their perſons, ſouls and bodies, prayers and praiſes, as holy and ſpiritual ſacrifices unto him; than which nothing is more deſireable to them. This is the wiſhed-for happineſs, and the iſſue of their travel, toil, and labour; ſee Pſ. xlii. 2. and they ſhall appear before him, and in his preſence, in the church above; when Chriſt ſhall appear, they ſhall appear with him in glory, and be like him, and ſee him as he is; even every one of them, not one ſhall be wanting; becauſe he is great in power, not one of them ſhall fail; and he'll preſent them to his Father, ſaying, lo, I and the children thou haſt given me: ſome render the words, the God of Gods will appear, or be ſeen in Zion[g]; there Jehovah manifeſts himſelf, and grants his gracious preſence; this is the mount of the Lord, in which he is and ſhall be ſeen, Gen. xxii. 14.

℣. 8. O Lord God of hoſts, hear my prayer, &c.] For the redemption of the captives, ſays Kimchi; for the building of the houſe, the temple, according to Jarchi; but rather for the courts of God, an opportunity of attending them, and for the preſence of God in them; ſee ℣. 2. in which he might hope to ſucceed, from the conſideration of the Lord's being the God of hoſts, or armies, in heaven and in earth; and ſo was able to do every thing for him, and more for him than he could aſk or think; his arm was not ſhortened, nor his ear heavy, Iſ. lix. 1. and as this character is expreſſive of his power, the following is of his grace: give ear, O God of Jacob; ſelah; he being the Covenant-God of the people of Iſrael in general, and of David in particular; from whence he might comfortably conclude he would give ear to him, and it carries in it an argument why he ſhould.

℣. 9. Behold, O God our ſhield, &c.] Which may be conſidered either as the character of God, who is addreſſed, who was David's ſhield, and the ſhield of his people, to protect and defend them from their enemies, and is the ſhield of all the ſaints; his favour encompaſſes them as a ſhield, and his truth is their ſhield and buckler; his veracity and faithfulneſs, in keeping covenant and promiſes; and ſo is his power, by which they are kept unto ſalvation; ſee Pſ. iii. 3. and v. 12. and xci. 4. or elſe it belongs to other perſons and things the pſalmiſt deſires God would behold, in agreement with the following clauſe. Jarchi interprets it of the houſe of the ſanctuary, as a ſhield unto them; much better Aben Ezra of the king their protector; and makes the ſenſe of the petition to be, that God would ſave our king; it is beſt to apply it to Chriſt, afterwards called a ſun and ſhield; ſee on v. 11. and to whom the following clauſe belongs: and look upon the face of thine anointed; meaning either himſelf, David, the anointed of the God of Jacob, who was anointed with oil, in a literal ſenſe, king of Iſrael, by the appointment and order of the Lord himſelf; and his requeſt is, that God would look upon his outward ſtate and condition, which was a diſtreſſed and an afflicted one, with an eye of pity and compaſſion, he being deprived of ſanctuary-worſhip and ſervice, and of the preſence of God there; ſee Pſ. cxxxii. 1. or rather he has a view to the Meſſiah, the Lord's Chriſt, or anointed, the anointed prophet, prieſt, and king, anointed with the oil of gladneſs, the grace of the Spirit without meaſure; and ſo the ſenſe is, that though he and his petitions were unworthy of notice, yet he intreats that God would look upon his Son the Meſſiah, and for his ſake hear and anſwer him; look upon his perſon, and accept him in him, the beloved; upon his future obedience and righteouſneſs, and impute it to him; upon his ſufferings, and death he was to endure, to ſave him from his ſins; upon his blood to be ſhed for the remiſſion of them, as he had looked upon the blood of the paſſover, upon the door-poſts of the Iſraelites, and ſaved them when he deſtroyed the firſt-born of Egypt; and upon his ſacrifice, which is of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour; and upon his fulneſs, for the ſupply of his wants. Kimchi takes it to be a prayer for the ſpeedy coming of the Meſſiah.

℣. 10. For a day in thy courts is better than a thouſand, &c.] One day, ſo the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; and ſo the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi interpret it; one day in the houſe of God, in the world to come, ſo Arama; though rather reference is had to the ſeventh-day-ſabbath, then in being; and which with the pſalmiſt was a delight, holy and honourable; and though now aboliſhed, as to the time of it, with the reſt of the ceremonial law, there is yet a day of public worſhip, called the Lord's day, and the day of the Son of man; and one of theſe days ſpent in the courts of the Lord, in an attendance on the word and ordinances, in worſhipping in the fear of God, in ſpirit and in truth; in divine ſervice, aſſiſted by the Spirit of God, doing every thing in faith, from love, and with a view to the glory of God; a day thus ſpent in religious exerciſes is better than a thouſand; that is, than a thouſand days; not than a thouſand days ſpent in like manner, but than a thouſand other days, common days of the week; or than a thouſand in other places, eſpecially in places of ſin, and in the company of wicked men; one day in God's houſe employed in ſpiritual exerciſes, and enjoying communion with him, is better than a thouſand days in any of the houſes of Satan, of ſinful pleaſure, or in the houſes of ſinful men; better as to peace of mind, ſolid pleaſure, real profit, and true honour: I had rather be a doorkeeper in the houſe of my God; in the meaneſt poſt and place there; alluding to the Levites, who were ſome of them porters, and kept the doors of the Lord's houſe, 1 Chron. xxvi. 1. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 9. or to the beggars that lay at the gates of the temple for alms; ſee Acts iii. 1, 2. or to be fixed to the door-poſt of it, alluding to the ſervant that was deſirous of continuing in his maſter's houſe, and ſerving him for ever; who was brought to the door-poſt, and had his ears bored through with an awl, Exod. xxi. 5, 6. Such a willing ſervant was the pſalmiſt; and this ſenſe the Targum ſeems to incline to, which renders it, "I have choſe to cleave to the houſe of the ſanctuary of God;" or to be a waiter there, to watch daily at wiſdom's gates, and to wait at the poſts of her doors; ſuch lye in the way of converſion, and of finding Chriſt; in the way of ſpiritual healing, as the man at the pool; and of ſpiritual inſtruction, and of ſpiritual ſtrength, and an increaſe of it: or to be, or ſit upon the threſhold; or to be threſholding of[l] it; that is, to frequent the houſe of God, to be often going over the threſhold of it; this the pſalmiſt took delight to do, even to be the threſhold[k] itſelf, for men to tread upon as they go into the houſe of God: than to dwell in the tents of wickedneſs; meaning not houſes built by wicked men, or with money ill got; but where wicked men dwelt, and who were ſo bad as to be called wickedneſs itſelf; perhaps the pſalmiſt might have in his mind the tents of Kedar, where he had ſometimes been; ſee Pſ. cxx. 5. now to live in the meaneſt place in the houſe of God, to wait at the door as a porter, to lye there as a beggar, to ſit upon the threſhold, and much more to go often over it, or be that itſelf, was abundantly preferable than to dwell an age[l] in the houſe of princes and great men, being wicked; than to live in the moſt pompous manner, at eaſe and in plenty, enjoying all the good things of life that heart can wiſh for; one hour's communion with God in his houſe is better than all this, and that for the reaſon following.

℣. 11. For the Lord God is a ſun and ſhield, Chriſt is the ſun of righteouſneſs, and it is in the houſe of God that he ariſes upon his people with healing in his wings, Mal. iv. 2. he's like the ſun, the great light, the fountain of light, the light of the world, that diſpels darkneſs, makes day, and gives light to all the celeſtial bodies, moon and ſtars, church and miniſters; he is a ſun to enlighten his people with the light of grace, to warm them with the beams of his love, to chear and refreſh their ſouls with the light of his countenance, and to make them fruitful and flouriſhing: and he is a ſhield to protect them from all their enemies; he is the ſhield of faith, or which faith makes uſe of, againſt the temptations of Satan; he is the ſhield of ſalvation, and his ſalvation is a ſhield which ſhelters from divine juſtice, and ſecures from wrath to come: the Lord will give grace and glory; he gives converting grace, the firſt grace, and all after ſupplies of it; he gives ſanctifying grace, all ſorts of it, faith, hope, love, and every other; he gives juſtifying, pardoning, adopting, and perſevering grace, and all freely; he gives honour and glory among men, fellow-creatures, and fellow-chriſtians; and he gives eternal glory, the glory his Father gave him, the crown of glory, life, and righteouſneſs: this is the gift of God through Chriſt; Chriſt gives a right unto it, meetneſs for it, and the thing itſelf; and in his houſe and ordinances, as he gives more grace to the humble waiters upon him, ſo he encourages and increaſes their hope of glory; and he that gives the one will certainly give the other; for theſe two are inſeparably connected together, ſo that he that has the one ſhall enjoy the other: no good thing will be withold from them that walk uprightly; that walk by faith, and on in Chriſt, as they have received him; who have their converſation according to the goſpel of Chriſt, and walk in the uprightneſs and ſincerity of their hearts; from ſuch the Lord will not withold any good thing he has purpoſed for them, promiſed to them, or laid up for them in covenant; no ſpiritual good thing appertaining to life and godlineſs, and no temporal bleſſing that is good for them; he'll deny them no good thing they aſk of him, not any thing that is good for them; and he'll not draw back any good things he has beſtowed on them, his gifts are without repentance.

℣. 12. O Lord of hoſts, bleſſed is the man that truſteth in thee, &c.] For grace and glory, and every good thing; that truſts in the Lord at all times, and not in the creature, or in an arm of fleſh; but in the Lord of hoſts and armies, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength, and is the ſun and ſhield of his people: happy are ſuch that truſt in him, whether they have ability or opportunity of going up to the houſe of the Lord, or not; they are happy that have and make uſe thereof, and ſo are they that truſt in the Lord, whether they have or no; they are ſafe, being as mount Zion, which can never be removed; and do and ſhall enjoy perfect peace and ſolid comfort here, and eternal happineſs hereafter; ſee Jer. xvii. 5, 7. Iſ. xxvi. 3, 4. The Targum is, "bleſſed is the man that truſteth in thy Word;" in Chriſt the eſſential Word.

PSAL. LXXXV.

To the chief muſician, a pſalm for the ſons of Korah.

THIS pſalm is generally thought to have been compoſed after the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon; and yet when they were in ſome diſtreſs from their neighbours, either in the times of Ezra and Nehemiah, or in the times of Antiochus; but then this deliverance from captivity muſt be conſidered as typical of redemption by Chriſt; for as the title of the Syriac verſion is, "it is a prophecy concerning Chriſt;" it ſpeaks of his dwelling in the land, of his ſalvation being near, and of the glory of the divine perfections as diſplayed in it; and perhaps ſome parts of it may reſpect the converſion of the Jews in the latter day; and Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſay, it is concerning the captivity of Babylon, yet alſo of their preſent captivity.

℣. 1. Lord, thou haſt been favourable unto thy land, &c.] The land of Canaan, which the Lord choſe for the people of Iſrael, and put them into the poſſeſſion of it; and where he himſelf choſe to dwell, and had a ſanctuary built for him; and therefore though the whole earth is his, yet this was his land and inheritance in a peculiar manner, as it is called Jer. xvi. 18. the inhabitants of it are meant, to whom the Lord was favourable, or whom he graciouſly accepted, and was well pleaſed with and delighted in, as appears by his chooſing them above all people to be his people; by bringing them out of Egyptian bondage, by leading them through the Red-ſea and wilderneſs, by feeding and protecting them there; and by bringing them into the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey, and ſettling them in it; and by many temporal bleſſings, and alſo ſpiritual ones, as his word and ordinances; but eſpecially by ſending his own Son, the Meſſiah and Saviour, unto them; and which perhaps is what is here principally intended: thou haſt brought back the captivity of Jacob; or, the captives[m] of Jacob; in a temporal ſenſe, both out of Egypt, and out of Babylon; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe from ſin, Satan, and the law; the ſpecial people of God often go by the name of Jacob, and theſe are captives to the above-mentioned; and redemption by Chriſt is a deliverance of them from their captivity, or a bringing of it back, for he has led captivity captive; and in conſequence of this, they are put into a ſtate of freedom, liberty is proclaimed to theſe captives, and they are delivered, and all as the fruit and effect of divine favour.

℣. 2. Thou haſt forgiven the iniquity of thy people, &c.] Took it from them, and laid it on Chriſt, who has bore it, and took it away, ſo as it ſhall never return more to their deſtruction; and by the application of his blood it is taken away from their own conſciences; for this denotes the manifeſtation and diſcovery of forgiveneſs to themſelves; it is a branch of redemption, and is in conſequence of it; and is a fruit of the free favour and good will of God through Chriſt; and it only belongs to the Lord's ſpecial people, the people he has taken into covenant with him, and for whoſe iniquity Chriſt was ſtricken: thou haſt covered all their ſin, Selah; this is but another phraſe for forgiveneſs, ſee Pſ. xxxii. 1. and this is done by the blood and righteouſneſs, and propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt, the antitypical mercy-ſeat, the covering of the law and its tranſgreſſions, and the people of God from its curſe and condemnation; whoſe ſins are ſo covered by Chriſt, as not to be ſeen by the eye of avenging juſtice, even all of them, not one remains uncovered.

℣. 3. Thou haſt taken away all thy wrath, &c.] Or gathered [n] it; ſin occaſions wrath, and the people of God are as deſerving of it as others; but the Lord has gathered it up, and poured it forth upon his Son, and their ſurety; hence nothing of this kind ſhall ever fall upon them, either here or hereafter; and it is taken away from them, ſo as to have no ſenſe, apprehenſion, or conſcience of it, which before the law had wrought in them, when pardon is applied unto them, which is what is here meant; ſee Iſ. xii. 1. thou haſt turned thyſelf from the fierceneſs of thine anger; the anger of God is very fierce againſt ſin and ſinners; it is poured forth like fire, and there's no abiding it; but with reſpect to the Lord's people, it is pacified by the death of his Son; or he is pacified towards them for all that they have done, for the ſake of his righteouſneſs and ſacrifice; and which appears to them when he manifeſts his love and pardoning grace to their ſouls; ſee Ezek. xvi. 63.

℣. 4. Turn us, O God of our ſalvation, &c.] Who appointed it in his purpoſes, contrived it in council, ſecured it in covenant, and ſent his Son to effect it; the prayer to him is for converting grace, either at firſt, for firſt converſion is his work, and his only; or after backſlidings, for he it is that reſtores the ſouls of his people; and perhaps it is a prayer of the Jews, for their converſion in the latter day; when ſenſible of ſin, and ſeeking after the Meſſiah they have rejected, when the Lord will turn them to himſelf, and turn away iniquity from them, and they ſhall be ſaved, Hoſ. iii. 5. 2 Cor. iii. 16. Rom. xi. 26. and cauſe thine anger towards us to ceaſe; the manifeſt tokens of which are now upon them, being ſcattered up and down in the world, and made a proverb, a taunt, and a jeer; but will be removed, and ceaſe, when they ſhall be converted.

℣. 5. Wilt thou be angry with us for ever? &c.] God is angry with the wicked every day, their life being a continued ſeries of ſin, without repentance for it, or confeſſion of it; and he will be ſo for ever, of which they will have a conſtant ſenſe and feeling; and is the worm that never dies, and the fire that is inextinguiſhable; but he does not retain his anger for ever with his own people; though he is diſpleaſed with them, and chaſtizes them for their ſins, his anger endures but for a moment; he is pacified towards them, and turns away his anger from them, by diſcovering his pardoning love, and withdrawing his afflicting hand: wilt thou draw out thine anger to all generations? out of his heart, where it is ſuppoſed to be conceived; and out of his treaſury, where it is thought to be laid up: this has been drawn out to a great length of time upon the Jewiſh nation; it has been upon them for almoſt ſeventeen centuries, or ages, and ſtill remains, and will until the fulneſs of the Gentiles is brought in; but it will not be drawn out to all ages or generations; for they ſhall return to the Lord, and ſeek him; and he will come to them, and turn away iniquity from them, and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved

℣. 6. Wilt thou not revive us again, &c.] Their return from the Babyloniſh captivity, was a reviving of them in their bondage, Ezr. ix. 8, 9. and the converſion of them in the latter day will be a reviving them again, be as life from the dead; they are like the dry bones in Ezekiel's viſion, or like the dead in the graves; and their being turned to the Lord will be a reſurrection, or quickening of them, as every inſtance of converſion is; ſee Rom. xi. 15. Ezek. xxxvii. 1—10. men are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and they are quickened by the ſpirit and grace of God, ſo that they revive, and live a life of ſanctification; they are dead in law, and find themſelves to be ſo, when ſpiritually enlightened; when the ſpirit of God works faith in them, to look to and live upon the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, for juſtification; and who, after ſpiritual decays, declenſions, and deadneſs, are revived again, and are made cheerful and comfortable by the ſame ſpirit; all which may be here intended: that thy people may rejoice in thee; it was a time of rejoicing in the Lord, when the Jews were returned from their captivity in Babylon; but their future converſion will be matter of greater joy, both to themſelves and to the Gentiles; everlaſting joy will be upon their heads, and in their hearts, when they ſhall return to Zion, Pſ. xiv. 7. Iſ. xxxv. 10. and ſo is the converſion of every ſinner joyful to himſelf and to others; ſuch rejoice in Chriſt, in his perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs; and every view of him afterwards, as it is a reviving time, it fills with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory: the Targum is, "and thy people ſhall rejoice in thy word;" Chriſt, the eſſential Word.

℣. 7. Shew us thy mercy, O Lord, &c.] Or, thy grace [o] and goodneſs, the riches of which are ſhewn forth in Chriſt; the mercy promiſed to Abraham and others long expected, wiſhed, and prayed for; his pardoning mercy, juſtification, ſalvation, and eternal life, by his free grace: and grant us thy ſalvation; Jeſus, the Saviour, and ſalvation by him, an intereſt in it, and the joys of it; which is all a free gift, a grant of divine favour, and not according to the merits and works of men.

[o] חסדך bonitatem tuam, Tigurine verſion, Muſculus; benignitatem tuam, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; gratiam tuam, Cocceius, Gejerus.

℣. 8. I will hear what God the Lord will ſpeak, &c.] This the pſalmiſt ſays in the name of the people of the Jews, whom he repreſents, in all the foregoing expoſtulations and petitions, refuſing to be ſtill and quiet, and wait and liſten for an anſwer to the above requeſt from the Lord, who ſpeaks by his providences, word, and ſpirit; ſee Hab. ii. 1. for he will ſpeak peace unto his people, and to his ſaints; as he does in his word, which is the goſpel of peace; and by his miniſters, who bring the good tidings of it, and publiſh it; and by the blood and righteouſneſs of his Son, which both procure, call for, and produce it; and by his Spirit, the fruit of which is peace: it is an anſwer of peace, or of good and comfortable words, that the Lord returns to his people ſooner or later; and it is only to his own people he ſpeaks peace, to his covenant-ones, with whom the covenant of peace is made; and to his ſaints, his holy ones, whom he has ſet apart for himſelf, and ſanctified by his Spirit: as for the wicked, there is no peace unto them, nor any ſpoken to them by him: Kimchi underſtands by the ſaints, the godly among the Gentiles, as diſtinct from the Lord's people, the Jews: but let them not turn again to folly; to doubt of and queſtion the providence of God; ſo Arama; or to idolatry, which there was danger of, upon the Jews return from Babylon; and it is obſervable, that they afterwards never did return to it, to which they were ſo much addicted before; or to a vicious courſe of life, to ſin and iniquity, which is the greateſt folly, after mercy has been ſhewn; or to ſelf-righteouſneſs, and a dependence on it, to the neglect of Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, which is the great folly of the Jews to this day; and when the Lord ſhall quicken them, and convert them, ſhew them his mercy and ſalvation, ſpeak peace and pardon to them, it would be very ungrateful in them to turn again to this folly.

℣. 9. Surely his ſalvation is nigh them that fear him, &c.] That have a true ſenſe of ſin and folly, are humbled for it, hate it, and depart from it, and don't return unto it; have a reverential affection for God, a ſenſe of his goodneſs, particularly his pardoning grace and mercy, and fear him on account of it, and to offend him; and that ſerve him with reverence and godly fear: to theſe his ſalvation is nigh; temporal ſalvation, for that is his, it is of him, and from him; and he is a preſent help in time of trouble: ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation is his; it is of his contriving, ſettling, appointing and giving; and was now near being accompliſhed by Chriſt; who alſo may be meant by God's ſalvation, being the ſaviour of his providing, chuſing, and ſending; who, in a ſhort time, would appear, and ſuddenly come to his temple, as Haggai and Malachi foretold, and as was fixed by Daniel's weeks, Hagg. ii. 6, 7. Mal. iii. 1. Dan. ix. 24. and therefore the pſalmiſt ſpeaks of it with the utmoſt certainty; ſurely, verily of a truth it is ſo; there can be no diſpute about it; for this pſalm, as is generally thought, was written after the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity; ſo that the coming of the Saviour was at hand, and the impetration of ſalvation not afar off; and the revelation of it in the goſpel was juſt ready to be made, or in a little time; ſee Iſ. lvi. 1. and this may be ſaid to be nigh, to ſenſible ſinners, when it is brought unto them by the goſpel, and applied to their hearts by the ſpirit of God, and they ſee their intereſt in it, the full poſſeſſion of which in heaven is ſtill nearer than when they believed; but then it is only ſo to them that fear the Lord; not to the wicked, from whom it is afar off, Pſ. cxix. 155. this character ſeems to deſign converted perſons among the Gentiles, as well as among the Jews; ſee Acts xiii. 26. and x. 35. that glory may dwell in our land; Chriſt, who is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, having the ſame nature, names, worſhip and honour; whoſe glory is the glory of the only begotten of the Father, and who alſo is the glory of his people Iſrael; who, when he was incarnate, dwelt among men, particularly in the land of Judea, where the writer of this pſalm dwelt, and therefore calls it our land; and though his appearance was then but mean, in the form of a ſervant, yet he had a glory, which was manifeſt in his doctrine and miracles; and he was the Lord of glory, even when he was crucified; ſee Heb. i. 3. John i. 14. Luke ii. 32. Phil. ii. 6, 7. 1 Cor. ii. 8. or elſe the goſpel may be meant, which has a glory in it excelling that of the law; it containing glorious truths, and glorious promiſes; and which is the glory of a land where it is, and when it departs, an Ichabod may be written on it: this came in conſequence of Chriſt, the Saviour, and ſalvation by him, which it is a revelation of; and dwelt and abode in the land of Judea, till it was utterly deſpiſed and rejected: the whole of goſpel-worſhip and ordinances may be intended alſo, together with a holy life and converſation becoming it.

℣. 10. Mercy and truth are met together, &c.] Or, grace and truth[*], which are in Chriſt, and come by him; and ſo may be ſaid to meet in him, the glorious perſon, the author of ſalvation, before mentioned, John i. 14. 17. theſe may be conſidered as perfections in God, diſplayed in ſalvation by Chriſt: mercy is the original of it; it is owing to that, that the day-ſpring from on high viſited us, or glory dwelt in our land, or Chriſt was ſent and came to work ſalvation for us; 'twas pity to the loſt human race which moved God to ſend him, and him to come, who is the merciful as well as faithful high prieſt, and who in his love and pity redeemed us; and though there was no mercy ſhewn to him, he not being ſpared in the leaſt, yet there was to us; and which appears in the whole of our ſalvation, and in every part of it, in our regeneration, pardon, and eternal life; ſee Luke i. 72. 78. Tit. iii. 5. 1 Pet. i. 3. Pſ. li. 1. Jude, ℣. 21. or grace, the exceeding riches of which are ſhewn forth in the kindneſs of God to us, through Chriſt; and to which our ſalvation, in whole and in part, is to be attributed, Eph. ii. 7, 8. truth may ſignify the veracity and faithfulneſs of God, in his promiſes and threatnings: his promiſes have their true and full accompliſhment in Chriſt, Luke i. 72. Rom. xv. 8. 2 Cor. i. 20. ſo have his threatnings of death to ſinful men, he being the ſurety for them, Gen. ii. 17. Phil. ii. 8. and ſo mercy is ſhewn to man, and God is true to his word: righteouſneſs and peace have kiſſed each other; as friends at meeting uſed to do: righteouſneſs may intend the eſſential juſtice of God, which will not admit of the pardon and juſtification of a ſinner, without a ſatisfaction; wherefore Chriſt was ſet forth to be the propitiation for ſin, to declare and manifeſt the righteouſneſs of God, his ſtrict juſtice; that he might be juſt, and appear to be ſo, when he is the juſtifier of him that believes in Jeſus; and Chriſt's blood being ſhed, and his ſacrifice offered up, he is juſt and faithful to forgive ſin, and cleanſe from all unrighteouſneſs, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. Rom. iii. 25, 26. 1 John i. 9. and thus the law being magnified, and made honourable by the obedience and ſufferings of Chriſt, an everlaſting righteouſneſs being brought in, and juſtice entirely ſatisfied, there is peace on earth, and good-will to men: peace with God is made by Chriſt the peace-maker, and ſo the glory of divine juſtice is ſecured, and peace with God for men obtained, in a way conſiſtent with it, Luke ii. 14. and Chriſt's righteouſneſs being imputed and applied to men, and received by faith, produces a conſcience-peace, an inward peace of mind, which paſſeth all underſtanding, Rom. v. 1. and xiv. 17. Phil. iv. 7.

℣. 11. Truth ſhall ſpring out of the earth, &c.] Either the goſpel, the word of truth, which ſprung up at once in the land of Judea, as if it came out of the earth; and from Zion and Jeruſalem it came forth into the Gentile world: or elſe the truth of grace God deſires in the inward parts, and which ſprings up in ſuch who are like cultivated earth, or good ground, being made ſo by the Spirit and grace of God, particularly the grace of faith; by which ſome render the word [b] here, which ſprings up in the heart, and, with it, man believes to righteouſneſs: or rather Chriſt himſelf, who is the way, the truth, and the life; who though he is the Lord from heaven, yet may be ſaid, with reſpect to his incarnation, to ſpring out of the earth, he taking fleſh of the virgin: hence his human nature is ſaid to be curiouſly wrought in the loweſt parts of the earth; and that new thing created in the earth, Pſ. cxxxix. 15. Jer. xxxi. 22. and righteouſneſs ſhall look down from heaven; the juſtice of God, or the righteous God, ſhall look down from heaven on Chriſt, the truth, in our nature on earth, with pleaſure beholding his obedience, ſufferings and death, ſacrifice and righteouſneſs; being well pleaſed with him, and with all he did and ſuffered, and with all his people, conſidered in him: theſe upright and righteous ones his countenance beholds with delight, as they are cloathed with Chriſt's righteouſneſs, waſhed in his blood, and their ſins expiated by his ſacrifice, and as they are hoping in his mercy, and truſting in his ſon.

℣. 12. Yea, the Lord ſhall give that which is good, &c.] Meaning not merely temporal good, as rain in particular, as ſome think, becauſe of the following clauſe; but that which is ſpiritually good, his good ſpirit and his grace, grace and glory: nor will he withold any good thing from his people; every good and perfect gift comes from him: and our land ſhall yield her increaſe; ſuch who are like to the earth, which receives bleſſing of God, and oft drinks in the rain that comes upon it, and brings forth herbs to the dreſſer of it, Heb. vi. 2. theſe increaſe with the increaſe of God, bring forth fruits of righteouſneſs, and grow in grace and in the knowledge of Chriſt; though the whole may be interpreted of the incarnation of Chriſt, which agrees with what goes before, and follows after; ſee Pſ. lxvii. 6, 7.

℣. 13. Righteouſneſs ſhall go before him, &c.] The incarnate Saviour, the increaſe of our land, and fruit of the virgin's womb; and righteouſneſs, may be put for a righteous perſon, as Aben Ezra interprets it; and may deſign John the Baptiſt, a holy and juſt man, Mark vi. 20. who was the forerunner and harbinger of Chriſt, went before him, and prepared the way for him, Luke i. 76. Iſ. xl. 3. and ſhall ſet us in the way of his ſteps; the buſineſs of John the Baptiſt being not only to prepare the way of Chriſt by his doctrine and baptiſm, but to guide the feet of his people into the way of peace; or to direct them to believe in Chriſt, and to be followers of him, the lamb of God, whitherſoever he went; who has left an example of grace and duty, that we ſhould tread in his ſteps, Luke i. 79. the Targum renders it, in the good way; and ſuch a way John taught men to walk in.

PSAL. LXXXVI.

A prayer of David.

THE title is the ſame with the 17th pſalm, and the ſubject of it is much alike: it was written by David, when in diſtreſs, and his life was ſought after; very likely, when he was perſecuted by Saul, and fled from him; ſo Aben Ezra, Jarchi, and Kimchi: and as he was a type of Chriſt in his afflictions, as well as in his exalted ſtate, it may not be unfitly applied to him, as it is by ſome interpreters. The Syriac inſcription of it is, "for David, when he built an houſe for the Lord; and a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles; and moreover, a prayer of a peculiar righteous man." Theodoret thinks it predicts the ſiege of Jeruſalem by the Aſſyrians, and Hezekiah's hope in God.

℣. 1. Bow down thine ear, O Lord, hear me, &c.] This is ſpoken of God after the manner of men, who, when they liſten and attentively hearken to what is ſaid to them, ſtoop and bow the head, and incline the ear; and it denotes condeſcenſion in the Lord, who humbles himſelf as to look upon men, ſo to bow down the ear and hearken to them: this favour is granted to the ſaints, to whom he is a God hearing and anſwering prayer, and which Chriſt, as man and mediator, enjoyed; ſee Heb. v. 7. John xi. 41, 42. for I am poor and needy; weak and feeble, deſtitute and diſtreſſed, and ſo wanted help and aſſiſtance; and which carries in it an argument or reaſon enforcing the above petition; for the Lord has a regard to the poor and needy; ſee Pſ. vi. 2. and xii. 5. and xxxv. 10. This may be underſtood literally, it being the common caſe of the people of God, who are generally the poor and needy of this world, whom God chuſes, calls, and makes his own; and ſo was David when he fled from Saul, being often in want of temporal mercies, as appears by his application to Abimelech and Nabal for food; and having nothing, as Kimchi obſerves, to ſupport him, but what his friends, and the men of Judah, privately helped him to; and the character well agrees with Chriſt, whoſe caſe this was; ſee 2 Cor. viii. 9. Matt. viii. 20. Luke viii. 2, 3. Moreover, it may be taken in a ſpiritual ſenſe; all men are poor and needy, though not ſenſible of it; good men are poor in ſpirit, are ſenſible of their ſpiritual poverty, and apply to the Lord, and to the throne of his grace, for the ſupply of their need; and ſuch an one was David, even when he was king of Iſrael, as well as at this time, Pſ. xl. 17. and may be applied to Chriſt, eſpecially when deſtitute of his Father's gracious preſence, and was forſaken by him and all his friends, Matt. xxvii. 46. and xxvi. 56.

[b] אמת fides. Tigurine verſion, Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius.

℣. 2. Preſerve my ſoul, &c.] Or life, which Saul ſought after; and this prayer was heard: David was often remarkably preſerved by the Lord from his attempts upon him; and ſo was the ſoul or life of Chriſt preſerved in his infancy from Herod's malice; in the wilderneſs from wild beaſts, and from periſhing with hunger; and often from the deſigns of the Jews, to take away his life before his time; and he was ſupported in death, preſerved from corruption in the grave, and raiſed from thence: inſtances there are of his praying for the preſervation of his life, with ſubmiſſion to the will of God, in which he was heard, Matt. xxvi. 39. 42. John xii 27. Heb. v. 7. The Lord is not only the preſerver of the lives of men in a temporal ſenſe, but he is the preſerver of the ſouls of his people, their more noble part, whoſe redemption is precious; he keeps them from the evil of ſin, and preſerves them ſafe to his kingdom and glory; yea, their whole ſoul, body, and ſpirit are preſerved by him blameleſs, unto the coming of Chriſt: for I am holy; quite innocent, as to the crime that was laid to his charge by Saul and his courtiers; or was kind, beneficent, and merciful to others, and to ſuch God ſhews himſelf merciful, they obtain mercy: or was favoured of God, to whom he had been bountiful, on whom he had beſtowed many mercies and bleſſings; and therefore deſires and hopes that, to the reſt of favours, this of preſervation might be added; or, as he was a ſanctified perſon, and God had begun his work of grace in him, he therefore intreats the Lord would preſerve him, and perfect his own work in him: ſome, as Aben Ezra obſerves, would have the ſenſe to be, "keep my ſoul until I am holy:" ſo Arama interprets it, "keep me unto the world to come, where all are holy:" the character of an holy one eminently and perfectly agrees with Chriſt, as well as the petition; ſee Pſ. xvi. 1. 10. O thou, my God, ſave thy ſervant that truſteth in thee; both temporally and ſpiritually: the arguments are taken from covenant-intereſt in God, which is a ſtrong one; from relation to him as a ſervant, not by nature only, but by grace; and from his truſt and confidence in him; all which, as well as the petition, agree with Chriſt; ſee Pſ. xxii. 1. 8. 10. 20, 21. Iſ. xlii. 1.

℣. 3. Be merciful unto me, O Lord, &c.] In my diſtreſſed and miſerable condition, being an object of mercy, pity, and compaſſion: this petition is uſed by Chriſt in Pſ. xli. 10. for I cry unto thee daily; or all the day; every day, and ſeveral times in a day, Pſ. lv. 17. conſtant and importunate prayer is the duty of ſaints, and available with God, 1 Theſſ. v. 17. Luke xviii. 1—7. Chriſt was much in the exerciſe of it, Luke vi. 12.

℣. 4. Rejoice the ſoul of thy ſervant, &c.] With the diſcoveries of love, of pardoning grace, and mercy, before made ſad with ſin or ſufferings; and with the light of God's countenance, before troubled with the hidings of his face: this may be applied to Chriſt, in ſorrowful circumſtances, who was made full of joy with his Father's countenance, Matt. xxvi. 37, 38. Acts ii. 28. for unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my ſoul; in prayer, as the Targum adds; and it denotes the devotion, fervency, heartineſs, and ſincerity of his prayer; the doing of it with a true heart, the lifting up of the heart with the hands unto God, Lam. iii. 41. or by way of offering unto the Lord, not the body only, but the ſoul or heart alſo; or as a depoſitum committed into his hands; ſo Chriſt lifted up his eyes, and his heart and ſoul, to his divine Father; and alſo made his ſoul an offering for ſin, and at death commended his ſpirit into his hands, John xvii. 1. Iſ. liii. 10. Luke xxiii. 46. ſee the note on Pſ. xxv. 1.

℣. 5. For thou, Lord, art good, &c.] Eſſentially and independently good, from whom every good and perfect gift comes; good in himſelf, and good to others; good to all, in a providential way; and good to his own ſpecial people in a way of grace: this is aſſerted by Chriſt, Matt. xix. 17. and ready to forgive; there is forgiveneſs with him, and it is to be had without difficulty; he has largely provided for it; he is forward unto it, he freely giving it; it is according to the riches of his grace; he does abundantly pardon; no ſooner is it aſked but it is had; this David knew by experience, Pſ. xxxii. 5. and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee; in truth, in ſincerity, in a right way, through Chriſt, and faith in him; to ſuch not only the Lord ſhews himſelf merciful, but is rich and abundant in mercy; he has a multitude of tender mercies, and abounds in his grace and goodneſs, and in the donation of it to his people; all which encourage their faith and hope in their petitions to him.

℣. 6. Give ear, O Lord, unto my prayer, &c.] As this pſalm is called, in the title of it, his own prayer, and not another's, not one compoſed for him, but what was compoſed by him; this petition is repeated, as to the ſenſe of it, from ℣. 1. to ſhew his importunity to be heard: and attend to the voice of my ſupplications; which proceeded from the ſpirit of grace and ſupplication, put up in an humble manner, in a dependence on the mercy of God, which the word uſed has the ſignification of, and were attended with thankſgiving, ℣. 12, 13. according to the apoſtle's rule, Phil. iv. 6. theſe were vocal prayers, and not mere mental ones; ſee Heb. v. 7.

℣. 7. In the day of my trouble I will call upon thee, &c.] David had his troubles, both inward and outward, before and after he came to the throne, in private and public life; and every good man has his troubles; and there are ſome particular times or days of trouble; which trouble ariſes from different cauſes; ſometimes from themſelves, their corruptions, the weakneſs of their grace, and the poor performance of their duties; ſometimes from others; from the perſecutions of the men of the world; from the wicked lives of prophane ſinners, and eſpecially profeſſors of religion, and from the ſpread of falſe doctrine; ſometimes from Satan and his temptations; and ſometimes from the more immediate hand of God in afflictions, and from the hidings of his face: theſe troubles don't laſt always; they are but for a day, for a particular time; and ſuch a ſeaſon is a fit one for prayer, and the Lord invites and encourages his people to call upon him in prayer, when this is the caſe, Pſ. l. 15. Chriſt had his times of trouble, in which he called upon his divine Father, John xi. 33. 41. and xii. 27. for thou wilt anſwer me; which the idols of the Gentiles could not do; Baal could not anſwer his prieſts, 1 Kings xviii. 26. this the pſalmiſt concluded, both from the promiſe of God, Pſ. l. 15.

and from his frequent experience, Pſ. cxxxviii. 3. a very encouraging reaſon or argument this, to call on the Lord: Chriſt was always heard and anſwered, John xi. 41, 42.

℣. 8. Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord, &c.] Among the angels of heaven, as the Targum, in the king's bible; ſee Matt. xxiv. 36. and who are ſometimes called gods, and among whom there is none like to the Lord; ſee Pſ. xcvii. 7. Heb. i. 6. Pſ. lxxxix. 6. or among civil magiſtrates, he being King of kings, and Lord of lords, the only Potentate; among whom he judges, over whom he preſides, and whom he ſets up and puts down at pleaſure, Pſ. lxxxii. 1—6. or among all thoſe that are named gods in heaven, or on earth, the nominal and fictitious gods of the Gentiles, who are vanity, and the work of error: the portion of Jacob is not like them, Jer. x. 15, 16. there is none like him, for the perfections of his nature, his power, wiſdom, faithfulneſs, holineſs, juſtice, mercy, grace, and goodneſs; ſee Exod. xv. 11. Pſ. lxxxix. 8. and cxiii. 5, 6. Micah vii. 18. neither are there any works like unto thy works; as the works of creation and providence, and thoſe of redemption and grace, in which there is ſuch a manifeſt diſplay of the perfections of his nature, Deut. iii. 24.

℣. 9. All nations whom thou haſt made, &c.] All nations, or the inhabitants of all nations, are made by the Lord, and of the blood of one man, Acts xvii. 26. and which as it ſhews the obligation of all men to come and worſhip, as is ſaid ſhould be; ſo likewiſe, that the Lord, who has made them, is able to make them come to do homage to him, as follows: ſhall come and worſhip before thee, O Lord; come, ſpiritually, by faith and repentance, to the Lord himſelf, being drawn by the power of his efficacious grace through the miniſtry of the word; and, locally, to the houſe and ordinances of God, to attend upon them, and wait on him in them; and worſhip both externally, according to his revealed will; and internally in the exerciſe of grace, in ſpirit and in truth: this is prophetically ſaid of the converſion of the Gentiles in goſpel-times, eſpecially in the latter day; ſee Rev. xv. 4. Kimchi and Arama ſay, this will be in the time of the Meſſiah: and ſhall glorify thy name; the Lord himſelf, with their bodies and ſpirits, which are his; and aſcribe the glory of their ſalvation to him, and glorify him for his mercy towards them in their redemption and converſion; glorify that and every perfection of his, diſplayed in their ſalvation; and alſo his goſpel, which brings them the news of it; ſee Rom. xv. 9. Acts xiii. 48.

℣. 10. For thou art great, &c.] In his nature, and the perfections of it; in his power, wiſdom, truth, faithfulneſs, love, grace and mercy; and in all his perſons; the Father is great, greater than all; the Son is the great God, and our Saviour; and the Spirit, which is in his people, is greater than he that is in the world: and doeſt wonderous things; in nature and providence; ſuch as the forming of all things out of nothing; upholding all things by the word of his power; the formation of man, ſoul and body, and the union of both; and the conſtant government of the world; and more eſpecially in grace, as the proviſion in the covenant in eternity, the miſſion of Chriſt in time, the converſion of a ſinner, and bringing him to eternal glory: thou art God alone; to the excluſion of all ſuch who are not gods by nature; but not to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit, who are with the Father the one God, 1 John v. 7.

℣. 11. Teach me thy way, O Lord, &c.] The methods of thy grace, which thou haſt taken, and do'ſt take, in the ſalvation of men, in the contrivance, impetration, and application of it; or the way which thou haſt marked out for thy people to walk in, the way of thy commandments: each of theſe the pſalmiſt had knowledge of before; but he deſires to be more and more inſtructed therein, as every good man does; ſee Pſ. xxv. 4, 5. Iſ. ii. 3. I will walk in thy truth; in Chriſt, the truth of types, and by whom grace and truth came, and who is truth itſelf, and the true way to eternal life; and to walk in him, is to walk by faith in him, in hope of eternal happineſs through him, John i. 17. and xiv. 6. Col. ii. 6. or in the truth of the goſpel, of goſpel-doctrine, goſpel-worſhip, and goſpel-converſation; to walk in it, is to walk becoming it, and abide by it, its truths and ordinances; ſee 2 John ℣. 4. 3 John ℣. 3, 4. unite my heart to fear thy name; there muſt be an heart given to man to fear the Lord; for the fear of the Lord is not naturally in their hearts, or before their eyes; and they ſhould have, not a divided and diſtracted heart, an heart divided between God and the world, between the fear of God and the fear of man; but a heart united to the Lord, that cleaves to him, and him only; a ſingle and a ſincere heart; a heart that has a ſingle view to his glory, and a ſincere affection for him; and ſuch a heart the Lord has promiſed to give to his people, in order to fear him, Jer. xxxii. 39.

℣. 12. I will praiſe thee, O Lord my God, with all my heart, &c.] And under that conſideration, that he was his God, and which itſelf is ſufficient matter of praiſe; this makes him amiable, and ſuch he is, love itſelf: this is a bleſſing of pure grace, and is the foundation of all other bleſſings, and continues for ever: this work of praiſe, which is no other than aſcribing glory to God, and giving thanks unto him for mercies received, the pſalmiſt determines to do with his whole heart, which is to be engaged in every ſpiritual ſervice; even all of it, all that is within it, every power and faculty of the ſoul, Pſ. ciii. 1. which is expreſſive not of perfection, but ſincerity: and I will glorify thy name for evermore; by celebrating the perfections of his nature, by giving him the glory of the works of his hands, by praiſing him for all favours, by devoting himſelf unto him, and by doing all things for his glory, and that for ever, in time as long as he lived, and to all eternity.

℣. 13. For great is thy mercy toward me, &c.] Both in things temporal and ſpiritual; an inſtance of which follows: and thou haſt delivered my ſoul from the loweſt hell; from a very diſtreſſed and diſconſolate condition, being almoſt in deſpair, under a deep ſenſe of ſin, and a fearful apprehenſion of the wrath of God, as, particularly, when he was charged by Nathan; or from hell itſelf, and the ſevereſt puniſhment in it; from the ſecond and eternal death, which every man is deſerving of, and are only delivered from by the grace of God, and blood of Chriſt: this ſhews the ſenſe the pſalmiſt had of the juſt demerit of ſin, and his thankfulneſs for deliverance from it; ſee Pſ. lvi. 13. Kimchi interprets it of the grave; but ſays, there are ſome that interpret it of the judgment, or condemnation of hell: ſuch who have eſcaped great dangers in long and perilous journeys, or have been delivered from threatening diſeaſes, are ſaid to be ſaved from hell[r].

℣. 14. O God, the proud are riſen againſt me, &c.]

[r] Vide Heraclit. de Incredib. c. 21. p. 86.

As all men naturally are, and as all are, without the grace of God; and becauſe they are, they deal in proud wrath: as, through the pride of their heart, they ſeek not after God; ſo, through the ſame, they perſecute his people, treating them with the utmoſt contempt, and as the off-ſcouring of all things. Jarchi interprets this particularly of Doeg and Ahitophel: and the aſſemblies of violent men have ſought after my ſoul; or terrible[s] ones, who breathed out nothing but cruelty, threatenings, and ſlaughter; and who were many, and got together in bodies, and entered into combinations and conſpiracies; and whom nothing would ſatisfy but the taking away of his life, which they ſought after; ſee Pſ. xxii. 12—16. and have not ſet thee before them; they did not conſider the omniſcience of God, that he knew and took notice of all they did; nor his omnipreſence, that he was every where, and there was no fleeing from him; nor his omnipotence, who was able to cruſh them to pieces; nor his juſtice, which will render tribulation to them that trouble his; nor his goodneſs, which ſhould lead to repentance; nor had they any fear of him, nor reſpect to his glory: in ſhort, they were like the unjuſt judge, who neither feared God, nor regarded men, Luke xviii. 4.

℣. 15. But thou, O Lord, art a God full of compaſſion, &c.] Or merciful[t], in the moſt affectionate and tender manner, as a parent to its child, or particularly as a mother to the ſon of her womb; and is rich and plenteous in his mercy, and freely beſtows it; and this was the ſupport of the pſalmiſt under his troubles from his enemies, that though they were cruel, the Lord was merciful: and gracious; ſo he has been in eternity, as appears by his election of grace, by the covenant of his grace, and the proviſions of it in his Son; and ſo he is in time, as is manifeſt from his kindneſs in Chriſt Jeſus, from his juſtification, pardon, adoption, effectual calling and ſalvation of his people, which are all of grace: long-ſuffering; not only to wicked men, but to his choſen ones; which long-ſuffering of his, is ſalvation to them; he bears with them, and waits to be gracious to them, to bring them to repentance, and ſave them, 2 Pet. iii. 9. 15. plenteous in mercy; or goodneſs; ſee in ℣. v. and truth; in fulfilling promiſes; ſee Exod. xxxiv. 6. to which theſe words refer.

℣. 16. O turn unto me, and have mercy upon me, &c.] For it ſeems the Lord had turned away from him, and had hid his face, and witheld the manifeſtation of his grace and mercy from him, and had not yielded him the help and aſſiſtance he expected; and therefore intreats that he would turn again to him, and ſhew him his face and favour, and be merciful to him: give thy ſtrength unto thy ſervant; ſpiritual ſtrength, ſtrength in his ſoul, to exerciſe grace, perform duty, bear the croſs, and ſtand up againſt all enemies, and hold out to the end: this is God's gift; and the pſalmiſt pleads his relation to him as his ſervant, not merely by creation, but by grace: this is interpreted by the Jews of the King Meſſiah[u]: and ſave the ſon of thine handmaid; out of the hands of thoſe that were riſen up againſt him; ſee Pſ. cxix. 94. Some think this has a ſpecial reference to Chriſt, who was made of a woman, called an handmaid, Luke i. 48. born of a virgin, the ſon of Mary: Arama ſays David uſes the word handmaid, becauſe he ſprung from Ruth the Moabiteſs.

℣. 17. Shew me a token for good, &c.] Not only one, by which he might know that his ſins were pardoned, and his perſon accepted with God, and that he ſhould be ſaved; but one viſible to others, even to his enemies, by which they might know that God was on his ſide, and would verily do him good: Kimchi interprets it of the kingdom; and his being raiſed to the throne of Iſrael was a token of the Lord's goodneſs to him, and ſhewed that he had a delight in him, and meant to do him good: that they which hate me may ſee it, and be aſhamed; of their envy of him, their combinations and conſpiracies againſt him, and of all their efforts to diſtreſs him, to hinder him of the kingdom, or deprive him of it, or make him uncomfortable in it: becauſe thou, Lord, haſt holpen me, and comforted me; he comforted him by helping him againſt his enemies, and out of his troubles; and, by doing both, ſhewed him a token for good, and filled his enemies with ſhame and confuſion.

PSAL. LXXXVII.

A pſalm or ſong for the ſons of Korah.

WHether this pſalm was compoſed by David, in a view of the temple to be built by his ſon Solomon, or whether by one that returned from the Babyloniſh captivity, who wrote it for the comfort of thoſe that wept at the laying of the foundation of the ſecond temple; it ſeems evident, that the ſubject-matter of it is the church of God in goſpel-times, and eſpecially in the latter day-glory: the title in the Syriac verſion is, "concerning the redemption of Jeruſalem."

℣. 1. His foundation is in the holy mountains.] The Jewiſh writers connect theſe words with the title of the pſalm, and make the ſenſe to be this; the foundation or argument of it, the pſalm, is concerning the holy mountains of Zion and Jeruſalem; ſo Aben Ezra, Jarchi, and Kimchi; and the Targum joins them together thus, "by the hands of the ſons of Korah is ſaid a ſong, which is founded by the mouth of the fathers that were of old:" but the words are a part of the ſong or pſalm, which begins in an abrupt manner, juſt as Cant. i. 2. and may be rendered either its foundation, or his foundation, and refer either to the church, or to the Lord, and the ſenſe is the ſame either way; for the church's foundation is alſo the Lord's foundation, a foundation of his laying; ſee Iſ. xiv. 32. and xxviii. 16. and is laid in the holy mountains; alluding to the mountains of Zion and Moriah, where the temple ſtood, a type of the church; or to the mountains about Jeruſalem, by which alſo the church is frequently ſignified; and by thoſe, in a myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe, may be meant the purpoſes and decrees of God, which are as mountains of braſs, Zach. vi. 1. they are like the antient mountains for the antiquity of them, and are high, and not to be reached and ſearched into, and are firm, ſolid, and immoveable; and are alſo holy, particularly the decree of election, that ſource of all true holineſs, which has ſanctification for its end and means; and is the foundation of the church, which ſupports and ſecures it, and ſtands ſure, 2 Tim. ii. 19. alſo the covenant of grace, which is ſure and immoveable, and in which are proviſions for holineſs, internal and external; and is the foundation and ſecurity of the church, and all believers; but eſpecially Jeſus Chriſt, the rock of ages, is meant, the Holy One of Iſrael, the ſure foundation laid in Zion: ſome interpret theſe holy mountains of the holy apoſtles, who were in an high and eminent ſtation in the church, and were doctrinally foundations, as they miniſterially laid Chriſt, as the only foundation; ſee Eph. ii. 20. Rev. xxi. 14. it may be rendered, among the holy mountains [w]; and ſo may regard, as Cocceius explains it, the ſeveral kingdoms and provinces of the world in which the goſpel ſhall be preached; and the church ſhall be eſtabliſhed and ſettled in the latter day, even upon the tops of mountains, which ſhall become holy to the Lord, Iſ. ii. 2.

[u] Zohar in Gen. fol. 58. 4. & 59. 1.

℣. 2. The Lord loveth the gates of Zion, &c.] Which the Targum interprets of the ſchools, as preferable to the ſynagogues: the Lord loves Zion herſelf; that is, the church, and therefore has choſen it for his habitation, took up his reſt and reſidence in it, has founded it, and ſet Chriſt as king over it, and by whom he has redeemed it; and he loves her gates, the public ordinances; he loves them that come to Zion's gates, and wait and worſhip there, and who enter in and become members thereof; and he loves what is done there, he being there publickly prayed unto, and publickly praiſed by a large number of his people; where his word is faithfully preached, and reverently attended to, and his ordinances truly adminiſtered, and the graces of his ſaints exerciſed on him: wherefore, becauſe all this is done ſocially, and in a public manner, and ſo much for his own manifeſtative glory, he eſteems theſe more than all the dwellings of Jacob; the private habitations of his people; yet he has a regard to theſe, the bounds of which he fixed from eternity, and where he was delighting himſelf before they were in being; and he loves the perſons that dwell in them, and what is done there, in a right manner, as cloſet and family-worſhip; but when theſe are put in competition with public worſhip, the latter is preferred unto them, becauſe done by more, and more publickly; Zion and its gates, the church and its ordinances, are preferable to all the dwellings of Jacob put together.

℣. 3. Glorious things are ſpoken of thee, O city of God, Selah.] Which is to be underſtood not of the city of Jeruſalem literally, which was a magnificent city, compact together, full of inhabitants and ſpacious houſes, the metropolis of Judea, and ſeat of the kings of Judah; and what was moſt glorious of all that could be ſaid of it, it was the city of God; and ſo Jarchi interprets it, the glory ſpoken of it is, that it is the city of God; here the temple was built, and many glorious things were in it; here God granted his preſence, and his worſhip was kept up: and beſides, there were other and more glorious things ſpoken of it, by way of prophecy; as, that the Meſſiah ſhould come in perſon into it, as the owner of it, and give it a greater glory than the firſt temple had; here he was to preach his doctrines, and do his miracles, which he accordingly did; near this city he ſuffered, died, and was buried; roſe again, aſcended to heaven; and here he poured forth the gifts of the holy Spirit in an extraordinary manner: but rather, this is to be interpreted of the church of God, comparable to a city, and which is of God's building, and where he dwells; ſee the note on Pſ. xlviii. 1. of which glorious things are ſpoken for the preſent; as, that it is the city of the King of kings, the name of which is Jehovah Shammah, the Lord is there; its foundation is Chriſt; its walls and bulwarks are ſalvation; its gates are praiſe; glorious ordinances are adminiſtered in it, and glorious truths are preached here; and ſo the words may be rendered, glorious things are ſpoken in thee [x]: and of it alſo glorious things are ſpoken, by way of prophecy, as, what ſhall be in the latter day; a great effuſion of the Spirit upon it; the gracious preſence of Chriſt in it in a more viſible manner; a great increaſe of converts both among Jews and Gentiles, which ſhall flock into it; and the great ſpread of the goſpel, which ſhall be the means of it; the unity, harmony, and concord of profeſſors of religion; the holineſs of their lives and converſation; and the very great peace and proſperity which will every where abound; and eſpecially glorious things are ſpoken of the new Jeruſalem, the city of our God; of which ſee Rev. xxi.

℣. 4. I will make mention of Rahab, &c.] Not of Rahab the harlot, as Jerom and others of the antients [y] interpret it; for the letters of both words are not the ſame in Hebrew; tho' mention is made of her in the goſpel, and goſpel-times, in the genealogy of Chriſt, and by two of the apoſtles, Matt. i. 5. Heb. xi. 31. James ii. 25. but of Egypt; and ſo the Targum interprets it, which is ſo called, as it is in Pſ. lxxxix. 19. Iſ. li. 9. either from the pride of its inhabitants, the word having in it the ſenſe of pride and haughtineſs, and theſe being naturally proud and haughty, as Philo [z] the Jew obſerves; or from ſome city of this name in it; or rather this reſpects that part of Egypt called Delta, which was in the form of a pear; which Raab, or Rib, in the Egyptian language, ſignifies; in the midſt of which was the city Athribis of Ptolemy [a], which has its name from hence, and ſignifies the heart of a pear; and ſtill this part of the country is called Errifia, as Leo Africanus [b] relates, and is here put for the whole country: the paſſage reſpects the converſion of it, and are the words of God foretelling it, and of which mention is made in Iſ. xix. 18, 19. 25. and had its accompliſhment, at leaſt in part, on the day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 10. and will be further accompliſhed in the latter day, when the people that now inhabit that country ſhall be converted, which will be when the kingdoms of this world become Chriſt's: and Babylon; the country of the Aſſyrians and Chaldeans, of which Babylon was the metropolis: mention is made of the converſion of theſe in Iſ. xix. 24, 25. and which alſo was fulfilled, in part, on the day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 9. and in Babylon there was a church, in the times of the apoſtle Peter, 1 Pet. v. 13. theſe the Lord promiſes that he would make mention of: to them that know me; ſays he, that ſo they might expect their converſion, and take notice of them, and receive them, when converted; or among them that know me[c]; that is, I will make mention of them, as ſuch that know me, and belong to that number; even ſuch that love the Lord, believe in him, own and confeſs him, and yield obedience to him, and whom he takes into communion and fellowſhip with himſelf, and makes his friends, familiars, and acquaintance: behold Philiſtia, and Tyre, with Ethiopia; where alſo will be many converts, regenerate perſons, and ſuch as know the Lord; of which there has been a partial accompliſhment already; of Philiſtia, ſee Acts viii. 40. for Azotus, or Aſhdod, was a city of the Philiſtines; and of Tyre, ſee Pſ. xlv. 12. Acts xxi. 3, and 4. and of Ethiopia, and its converſion, mention is made in Pſ. lxviii. 31. and the Ethiopian eunuch is one inſtance of it, Acts viii. 27. of all which there will be abundance of inſtances in the latter day; and thus, as the church is commended from her foundation, from the ſuperlative love the Lord bears to her, and the glorious things ſpoken of her; ſo from the number of her converts in different nations, in which her glory in goſpel-times would greatly lie; ſee Iſ. xlix. 18—21. and liv. 1—3. and lx. 4—8. this man was born there; not any particular man; any ſingle individual, famous for piety, wiſdom, wealth, or power; as if it ſuggeſted, that now and then ſuch a perſon might be born in the above countries; whereas in Zion there were frequently many ſuch perſons born: nor is it to be underſtood of the Meſſiah that ſhould come out of Zion, as if that was the reaſon why multitudes from the above places ſhould flock thither, becauſe of the birth of this illuſtrious perſon: the Targum underſtands it of a great perſonage, a king; and paraphraſes it, "a king is educated there;" but it deſigns many perſons in thoſe ſeveral countries that ſhould be born again, of water, and of the ſpirit, of the incorruptible ſeed of grace, by the miniſtry of the word; who, becauſe they ſhould be regenerated by means of the goſpel preached in Zion, therefore are ſaid to be born there; and beſides, being born again, they are admitted members of Zion, and to all the privileges of Zion, as true-born Iſraelites; and are brought up there, are nouriſhed with the ſincere milk of the word, and nurſed with the breaſts of goſpel-ordinances there adminiſtered; and ſo Zion or Jeruſalem, the goſpel-church, is truly the mother of them all, Gal. iv. 26.

℣. 5. And of Zion it ſhall be ſaid, &c.] The ſame with the city of God, the church before commended: this and that man was born in her; this and that great man, in oppoſition to a mean perſon, in the preceding verſe: or a man and man[d]; men of all ſorts, and of different nations, Jews and Gentiles, and great numbers of them: and the higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her; the church of God, though founded by him, and laid on a ſure foundation, on the rock of ages, againſt which the gates of hell cannot prevail, yet is ſometimes fluctuating and unſettled; it is toſſed with tempeſts, the perſecutions of men, the errors and hereſies of falſe teachers, and the contentions and diviſions of its own members; and is not always in one place, but is removed from one place to another, and is obliged to flee into the wilderneſs: but in the latter day it will be eſtabliſhed, and ſettled; it will be a tabernacle that ſhall not be taken down, nor removed; but ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever, Pſ. lxxxix. 37. and this is the work of God, the moſt high God, the poſſeſſor of heaven and earth, whatever inſtruments he may make uſe of, as miniſters of the word, and kings of the earth; as it is his work, and his only, to eſtabliſh particular believers, 2 Cor. i. 21. ſo it is his to eſtabliſh the church in general: or it may be rendered, he ſhall eſtabliſh her on high[e], which will be the caſe when ſhe is eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills, Iſ. ii. 2.

℣. 6. The Lord ſhall count when he writeth up the people, &c.] Not in the Lamb's book of life; for that was written from eternity, Rev. xiii. 8. but in the writing of the houſe of Iſrael, among the living in Jeruſalem, and with his righteous ones; which is done at effectual calling, and when admitted members of goſpel-churches, whereby they openly appear to be the children of God, and are taken into the liſt and catalogue of ſaints; ſee Ezek. xiii. 9. Iſ. iv. 3. Pſ. lxix. 29. or in the laſt day, when the Lord will take the number of his people, and cauſe them again to paſs under the rod of him that telleth them; and will make up his jewels, compleat the number of them in converſion, and collect them all together; and his counting and writing them may denote his exact knowledge of them, and his care that he loſe none; but this will only concern regenerate perſons; the Lord will not count, nor make any account of any others, as follows: that this man was born there, Selah; and the man that is born in Zion, even every regenerate man, will be counted and numbered by him, and declared to be his, when he makes a general ſurvey and muſter of his ſaints another day.

℣. 7. As well the ſingers as the players on the inſtruments ſhall be there, &c.] In Zion, in the church; ſignifying, that there ſhould be great ſpiritual joy there, when the above things ſhould be accompliſhed; great joy in the churches, becauſe of the converſion of Jews and Gentiles; and great joy in the perſons themſelves, born again, and brought to Zion; in alluſion to the vocal and inſtrumental muſic uſed in the temple-ſervice; ſee Iſ. xxxv. 10. Rev. xiv. 1—7. and xix. 6, 7, 8. all my ſprings are in thee; which are either the words of the pſalmiſt, or rather of the ſouls born in Zion; who, in their ſpiritual ſongs, will thus expreſs themſelves concerning the church, in which are the word and ordinances, compared to fountains of living water, and are ſprings of ſpiritual peace and refreſhment to converted perſons; ſee Joel iii. 18. Zech. xiv. 8. Iſ. lv. 1. where alſo the Spirit and his graces are communicated by the miniſtry of the word, and ordinances in the church, which are ſignified by wells and rivers of living water, John iv. 14. and vii. 37, 38. and particularly here ſtands Chriſt, the fountain of gardens, and well of living waters, for the ſupply and comfort of ſaints, and his blood a fountain opened for cleanſing and purification, Cant. iv. 15. Zech. xiii. 1. yea, here flows the river of God's love, the ſtreams whereof make glad the city of God; and which, like the waters in Ezekiel's viſion, come from under the threſhold of the ſanctuary, Pſ. xlvi. 4. Ezek. xlvii. 1—5. or the words may be conſidered as an addreſs of the pſalmiſt, or of the church, or of regenerate perſons, unto Chriſt; all my ſprings or fountains are in thee; the fulneſs of grace dwells in him, the ſprings of of all joy, and peace, and comfort, are with him; the wells of ſalvation are in him, and both grace and glory are from him; he is the ſpring of all grace now, and the fountain of all happineſs hereafter. Guſſetius [z] has a very peculiar verſion of the whole text, which he renders thus, "all my fountains will be ſinging in thee, or of thee, as thoſe that dance at the ſound of the pipe;" taking the alluſion to be to the playing of fountains in gardens, and to the delightful ſound the waters make; but the accents will not admit of ſuch a ſenſe.

PSAL. LXXXVIII.

A ſong or pſalm for the ſons of Korah, to the chief muſician, upon Mahalath Leannoth, Maſchil of Heman, the Ezrahite.

OF the word Maalath, ſee the note on the title of pſalm 53d. Leannoth ſignifies to anſwer. Perhaps this ſong was to be ſung alternately, or by reſponſes. Both words are thought by ſome, as Aben Ezra, to be the beginning of a ſong, to the tune of which this was ſet; and by others a muſical inſtrument, on which it was ſung; a hollow one, as the word Maalath ſeems to ſignify, a wind-inſtrument: others are of opinion, that they intend the ſubject-matter of the pſalm, and render them, concerning the diſeaſe to afflict, or the afflicting diſeaſe [a]; either a bodily one, which threatened with death, under which the pſalmiſt now was; or a ſoul-diſorder, being under deſertions, and a ſenſe of divine wrath, which were very afflicting. The pſalm is called Maſchil, which may be tranſlated cauſing to underſtand; it being inſtructive to perſons in a like caſe to apply to God, as he did; and if it reſpects Chriſt, it teaches many things concerning him, his ſorrows and his ſufferings: the author of it is ſaid to be Heman the Ezrahite; the Targum calls him Heman the native, and the Septuagint render it Heman the Iſraelite, and Arama ſays this is Abraham. There were two of this name, one the ſon of Zerah, the ſon of Judah, and ſo might be called the Zerahite, and with the addition of a letter the Ezrahite; he is mentioned along with others as famous for wiſdom, 1 Chron. ii. 6. 1 Kings iv. 31. but this man ſeems to be too early to be the penman of this pſalm: though Dr. Lightfoot [b] is of opinion, that this pſalm was penned by this Heman many years before the birth of Moſes; which and the following pſalm are the oldeſt pieces of writing the world has to ſhew, being wrote by two men who felt and groaned under the bondage and affliction of Egypt, which Heman here deplores, and therefore intitles his elegy Maalath Leannoth, concerning ſickneſs by affliction; and accordingly he and his brethren are called the ſons of Mahal, 1 Kings iv. 31. There was another Heman, who was both a ſinger in David's time, and the king's ſeer, who ſeems moſt likely to be the perſon, 1 Chron. vi. 33. and xv. 17, 19. and xxv. 1, 5. he was when he wrote this pſalm under ſore temptations, deſertions, and dejections, though not in downright deſpair; there is but one comfortable clauſe in it, and that is the firſt of it; many interpreters, both antient and modern, think he is to be conſidered throughout as a type of Chriſt, with whom every thing in it more exactly agrees than with any one man elſe. The Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi, interpret it of the people of Iſrael in captivity; and ſo the Syriac verſion entitles it, "concerning the people that were in Babylon;" but a ſingle perſon only is deſigned throughout. Spinoſa [c] affirms, from the teſtimony of Philo the Jew, that this pſalm was publiſhed when king Jehoiachin was a priſoner in Babylon, and the following pſalm when he was releaſed: but this is not to be found in the true Philo, but in Pſeudo-Philo [d].

℣. 1. O Lord God of my ſalvation, &c.] The author both of temporal and ſpiritual ſalvation; ſee Pſ. xviii. 46. and xxiv. 5. from the experience the pſalmiſt had had of the Lord's working ſalvation for him in times paſt, he is encouraged to hope that he would appear for him, and help him out of his preſent diſtreſs; his faith was not ſo low, but that amidſt all his darkneſs and dejection he could look upon the Lord as his God, and the God of ſalvation to him; ſo our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when deſerted by his Father, ſtill called him his God, and believed that he would help him, Pſ. xxii. 1. Iſ. l. 7, 8, 9. I have cried day and night before thee, or in the day I have cried, and in the night before thee; that is, as the Targum paraphraſes it, "in the night my prayer was before thee;" prayer being expreſſed by crying ſhews the perſon to be in diſtreſs, denotes the earneſtneſs of it, and ſhews it to be vocal; and it being both in the day, and in the night, that it was without ceaſing. The ſame is ſaid by Chriſt, Pſ. xxii. 2. and is true of him, who in the days of his fleſh was frequent in prayer, and eſpecially in the night-ſeaſon, Luke vi. 12. and xxi. 37. and particularly his praying in the garden the night he was betrayed, may be here referred to, Matt. xxvi. 38, 39.

℣. 2. Let my prayer come before thee, &c.] Not before men, as hypocrites deſire, but before the Lord; let it not be ſhut out, but be admitted; and let it come with acceptance, as it does when it aſcends before God, out of the hands of the angel before the throne, perfumed with the much incenſe of his mediation, Rev. viii. 3, 4. incline thine ear unto my cry; hearken to it, receive it, and give an anſwer to it; Chriſt's prayers were attended with ſtrong crying, and were always received and heard, Heb. v. 7. John xi. 41, 42.

℣. 3. For my ſoul is full of troubles, &c.] Or ſatiated or glutted [e] with them, as a ſtomach full of meat that can receive no more, to which the alluſion is; having been fed with the bread of adverſity, and the water of affliction, ſo that he had his fill of trouble: every man is full of trouble, of one kind or another, Job xiv. 1. eſpecially the ſaint, who beſides his outward troubles has inward ones, ariſing from indwelling ſin, the temptations of Satan, and divine deſertions, which was now the caſe of the pſalmiſt: this may be truly applied to Chriſt, who himſelf ſaid when in the garden, my ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful even unto death, Matt. xxvi. 38. he was a man of ſorrows all his days, but eſpecially at that time, and when upon the croſs, forſaken by his Father, and ſuſtaining his wrath: his ſoul was then filled with evil things[f], as the words may be rendered: innumerable evils compaſſed him about, Pſ. xl. 12. the ſins of his people, thoſe evil things, were imputed to him; the iniquity of them all was laid upon him, as was alſo the evil of puniſhment for them; and then he found trouble and ſorrow enough: and my life draweth nigh unto the grave; a phraſe expreſſive of a perſon's being juſt ready to die, Job xxxiii. 22. as the pſalmiſt now thought he was, ÿ. 5, 15. 'tis in the plural number my lives[g]; and ſo may not only denote the danger he was in of his natural life, but of his ſpiritual and eternal life, which he might fear, being in darkneſs and deſertion, would be loſt, though they could not; yea that he was near to hell itſelf, for ſo the word[h] may be rendered; for when the preſence of God is withdrawn, and wrath let into the conſcience, a perſon in his own apprehenſion ſeems to be in hell as it were, or near it; ſee Jon. ii. 2. This was true of Chriſt, when he was ſorrowful unto death, and was brought to the duſt of it, and under divine dereliction, and a ſenſe of the wrath of God, as the ſurety of his people.

ÿ. 4. I am counted with them that go down into the pit, &c.] With the dead, with them that are worthy of death, with malefactors that are judicially put to death, and are not laid in a common grave, but put into a pit together: thus Chriſt was reckoned and accounted of by the Jews; the ſanhedrim counted him worthy of death; and the common people cried out crucify him; and they did crucify him between two malefactors; and ſo he was numbered or counted with tranſgreſſors, and as one of them, Iſ. liii. 3, 4, 12. I am as a man that hath no ſtrength; for his ſtrength was dried up like a potſheard, Pſ. xxii. 15. though he was the mighty God, and as man was made ſtrong by the Lord for himſelf.

ÿ. 5. Free among the dead, &c.] If he was a freeman, it was only among the dead, not among the living; if he was free of any city, it was of the city of the dead; he looked upon himſelf as a dead man, as one belonging to the ſtate of the dead, who are free from all relations, and from all buſineſs and labour, and removed from all company and ſociety; he thought himſelf quite neglected, of whom there was no more care and notice taken than of a dead man: like the ſlain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more; in a providential way, as in life, to clothe them, and feed them, and protect and preſerve them; in which ſenſe God is ſaid to be mindful of men, Pſ. viii. 4. who when dead have no need to be minded, and remembered in ſuch a manner; otherwiſe God does remember the dead, and takes care of their duſt, and will raiſe them again; and eſpecially he remembers his own people, thoſe that ſleep in Jeſus, who will be thought of in the reſurrection-morn, and will be raiſed firſt, and brought with Chriſt; ſee Job xiv. 13, 14. and they are cut off from thy hand; that is, the ſlain that lie in the grave, the dead that are buried there; theſe are cut off from the hand of providence, they needing no ſupplies from thence as in the time of life. The Targum is, "and they are ſeparated from the face of thy majeſty:" or they are cut off by thine hand[i]; by the immediate hand of God, in a judicial way; ſo Chriſt in his death was like one of theſe, he was cut off in a judicial way, not for his own ſins, but for the tranſgreſſions of his people, Iſ. liii. 8. Dan. ix. 26.

ÿ. 6. Thou haſt laid me in the loweſt pit, &c.] The Targum interprets it of "captivity which was like unto the loweſt pit;" and ſo Jarchi and Kimchi. Some underſtand it of a priſon or dungeon, into which the pſalmiſt was put; it may be interpreted of the pit of the grave, into which Chriſt was laid; though he continued in it not ſo long as to ſee corruption; from that priſon and judgment he was quickly taken, Pſ. xvi. 10. Iſ. liii. 8. in darkneſs; both corporal and ſpiritual, Matt. xxvii. 45, 46. and it is in the Hebrew text in darkneſſes[k], denoting both: in the deeps; in the deep waters of affliction, ſorrows, and ſufferings; ſee Pſ. lxix. 1, 2. The alluſion is to a dark and deep pit, under ground, ſuch as in the eaſtern countries they uſed to put their captives and priſoners into in the night, and take them out in the morning; and which cuſtom continues ſtill among the Turks. Leo Africanus[l] ſays he has ſeen three thouſand Chriſtian captives together, clothed in a woollen ſack, and chained to one another; and in the night put into pits or ditches under ground; ſee Zech. ix. 11.

ÿ. 7. Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, &c.] So ſome good men apprehend, when they are under afflictive diſpenſations of providence, and are left of God, and have not his immediate preſence, and the diſcoveries of his love; though fury is not in him, nor does any wrath in reality fall upon them, only it ſeems ſo to them; ſee Pſ. xxxviii. 1, 2. Lam. iii. 1. but the wrath of God did really lie with all the effects of it upon Chriſt, as the ſurety of his people, when he was made ſin, and a curſe for them; ſee Pſ. lxxxix. 38. and thou haſt afflicted me with all thy waves, Selah; the afflictions of God's people are compared to waves and billows of the ſea, which are many, and come one upon the back of another, and threaten to overwhelm and ſink; ſee Pſ. xlii. 7. and ſo the ſufferings of Chriſt are ſignified by waters coming into him, and floods overflowing him; and hence they are called a baptiſm, Pſ. lxix. 1, 2. Luke xii. 50. and theſe were brought upon him by the Lord; he ſpared him not; he laid the whole chaſtiſement, all the puniſhment due to the ſins of his people, on him; he cauſed every wave to come upon him, and him to endure all ſorrows and ſufferings the law and juſtice of God could require.

ÿ. 8. Thou has put away mine acquaintance far from me, &c.] His familiar friends, who were well known to him, and he to them: it is a mercy and privilege to have good acquaintance, and hearty faithful friends, to converſe and adviſe with, whether about things civil or religious; and it is an affliction to be deprived of them; and oftentimes in diſtreſs and adverſity they drop and fail, which is an additional trouble: this was the caſe of Job and of David, Job xix. 13, 14. Pſ. xxxi. 11. and here of Heman, who attributes it to God, as done by him; as alſo Job does, in the place referred to; for as it is the Lord that gives favour in the ſight of men, he can take it away when he pleaſes: this is true of Chriſt, and the like is ſaid of him, Pſ. lxix. 8. and by his acquaintance, familiars, and friends, may be meant his apoſtles, who, upon his being apprehended, forſook him, and fled; who though they were not all alienated in their affections, yet ſtood at a diſtance from him: Peter, though he followed him, it was afar off, and at laſt he denied him; and others of his acquaintance and intimates ſtood afar off, beholding what was done to him on the croſs; and his familiar friend, Judas, lift up his heel againſt him, and baſely betrayed him, Matt. xxvi. 50. 56. 58. Luke xxiii. 49. Pſ. xli. 9. thou haſt made me an abomination unto them; to ſome of them, as to Judas, and to many that Hoſanna'd him into Jeruſalem, and within a few days cried crucify him, crucify him, Matt. xxi. 9. and xxvii. 22, 23. compare with this Iſ. liii. 3. I am ſhut up, and I cannot come forth; the Targum renders it, "ſhut up in the houſe of priſon," in a priſon; and ſo ſome literally underſtand it of the author of the pſalm being in a priſon, or dungeon, in the time of the captivity: but it is rather to be underſtood of ſome bodily diſeaſe, by which he was detained a priſoner at home, and of his being bound in fetters, and held in the cords of affliction; which was as a priſon to him, and in which when the Lord ſhuts up a man, there can be no opening, Job xxxvi. 8. and xii. 14. or elſe of ſoul-troubles, being in great darkneſs and deſertion; ſo that his ſoul was as in a priſon, and could not come forth in the free exerciſe of grace, and needed the free ſpirit of God to ſet him at liberty; ſee Pſ. cxlii. 7. and li. 12. this may be applied to Chriſt, when in the hands of Judas, and the band of ſoldiers with him, who took him and bound him, and led him to the high prieſt; and when he was encompaſſed with bulls of Baſhan, and incloſed by the aſſembly of the wicked, as he hung on the croſs, Pſ. xxii. 12. 16.

℣. 9. Mine eye mourneth by reaſon of affliction, &c.] Or dropped tears, as the Targum, by which grief was vented; ſee Pſ. vi. 7. Lord, I have called daily upon thee, I have ſtretched out my hands unto thee; in prayer, as the Targum adds, this being a prayer-geſture: notwithſtanding his troubles continued and increaſed, he did not leave off praying, though he was not immediately heard and anſwered, which is what is tacitly complained of, as in Pſ. xxii. 2. Chriſt, in his troubles in the garden, and on the croſs, prayed for himſelf, for divine ſupport and aſſiſtance, as man; for his friends, diſciples and apoſtles, and for all that ſhould believe in him through them; and even for his enemies.

℣. 10. Wilt thou ſhew wonders to the dead? &c.] The Lord does ſhew wonders to ſome that are ſpiritually dead, dead in Adam, dead in law, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, by quickening them; whereby the wonders of his grace and love, and of his power, and the exceeding greatneſs of it, are diſplayed; for the converſion and quickening of a dead ſinner is a marvellous event, like that of raiſing Lazarus from the dead, and cauſing Ezekiel's dry bones to live: likewiſe the Lord will ſhew wonders to thoſe that are corporally dead, by raiſing them from the dead; which work, though not incredible, yet is very wonderful, and can only be accounted for by the attributes of Divine Omniſcience and Omnipotence: yea, he would and he has ſhewn wonders to Chriſt, when dead, by raiſing him up again, and giving him glory, and that before he ſaw corruption, and as the head and repreſentative of his people; and by raiſing many of the ſaints alſo, after his reſurrection: ſhall the dead ariſe and praiſe thee? Selah; the ſpiritually dead, when they are made alive, and riſe out of their graves of ſin, praiſe the Lord for the exertion of his grace and power upon them; which is one end of their being formed anew, quickened, and converted; and thoſe that are corporally dead, ſuch of them as ſhall riſe again to everlaſting life, their mouths will be filled with everlaſting praiſe: but here the author of the pſalm ſuggeſts, that in a little time he ſhould be among the dead, unleſs he had ſpeedy help and deliverance from his troubles; to whom wonders are not ſhewn, but to the living; and who ordinarily do not riſe again to this mortal ſtate, to praiſe the Lord in it: or, conſidering them as the words of Chriſt, he ſuggeſts, that none of the above things would be done, unleſs he was a conqueror over death and the grave, and was raiſed from thence himſelf; and ſo theſe expoſtulations carry in them the nature of a prayer, even of the prayer of Chriſt, as man, to be aſſiſted in overcoming all his enemies, and to be raiſed from the dead, as Cocceius and others think: the Greek and Vulgate Latin verſions are, "ſhall phyſicians riſe again?" of whom the Jews had a bad opinion; ſee the note on 2 Chron. xvi. 12.

℣. 11. Shall thy loving kindneſs be declared in the grave? &c.] Where he ſaw himſelf now going, and where ſhould he be detained, and not raiſed out of it, the loving kindneſs of God to him, as his ſon, and as man and mediator, and to his people, in the gift and miſſion of him to be their Saviour and Redeemer, how would that be declared and made known? now it is, Chriſt being raiſed, and his miniſters having a commiſſion from him to preach the goſpel, in which the loving kindneſs of God is abundantly manifeſted: or thy faithfulneſs in deſtruction? the grave, ſo called from dead bodies being caſt into it, and waſted, conſumed, and deſtroyed in it: the meaning may be, that ſhould he be laid in the grave, and there putrify and rot, and not be raiſed again, where would be the faithfulneſs of God to his purpoſes, to his covenant and promiſes, to him his ſon, and to his people?

℣. 12. Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? &c.] A deſcription of the grave again; ſee Job x. 21, 22. The ſenſe may be, ſhould he continue in the dark and ſilent grave, how would the wonders of the grace of God, of electing, redeeming, juſtifying, pardoning, and adopting grace, be made known; the wonders of Chriſt's perſon and offices, and the wonderous things, and doctrines of the goſpel, relating thereunto; as the glory of theſe would be eclipſed, there would be none to publiſh them: and thy righteouſneſs in the land of forgetfulneſs? the grave, where the dead lie, who, having loſt all ſenſe of things, forget what were done in this world, and they themſelves are quickly forgotten by the living; and had Chriſt continued in this ſtate, and had not riſen again to our juſtification, how would his juſtifying righteouſneſs have been revealed, as it is from faith to faith in the goſpel, which is therefore called the word and miniſtration of righteouſneſs?

℣. 13. But unto thee have I cried, O Lord, &c.] Formerly, and had been heard, anſwered, and relieved, and which was an encouragement to cry again to him in his diſtreſs; Chriſt was always heard, John xi. 42. or, now, in his preſent caſe, yet was not heard, at leaſt not immediately anſwered; which was the caſe of the Meſſiah, when forſaken by his God and Father, Pſ. xxii. 1, 2. yet ſtill determines to continue praying, as follows: and in the morning ſhall my prayer prevent thee; not before the Lord is awake, and can hear; for he neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps, and he always hears: but the meaning is, that he would pray before he entered upon another buſineſs; this ſhould be the firſt thing in the morning he would do, and this he would do before others did, or he himſelf uſed to do; before the uſual time of morning-prayer; ſignifying, he would pray to him very early, which is expreſſive of his vehemeney, fervency, and importunity and earneſtneſs, and what a ſenſe he had of his caſe, and of his need of divine help: ſo Chriſt roſe early in the morning, a great while before day, to pray, Mark i. 35. See the note on Pſ. v. 4.

℣. 14. Lord, why caſteſt thou off my ſoul, &c.] Here begins his prayer, which he determined to preſent early in the morning, and conſiſts of expoſtulations, and a repreſentation of his diſtreſſed caſe: this ſhews that he was under ſoul-deſertion, and which was what ſo greatly afflicted him; imagining that his ſoul was caſt off by the Lord, and had no more ſhare in his affection, and was no more under his care, and in his ſight: ſuch expoſtulations of the ſaints, the church, and people of God, in a like caſe, are elſewhere met with, Pſ. xliii. 3. and lxxiv. 1. and may be applied to Chriſt, when his ſoul was exceeding ſorrowful unto death, and was made an offering for ſin; and particularly when he was forſaken by his father: the Targum is, "why haſt thou forſaken my ſoul?" and uſes the word Sabachtha, which Chriſt did when on the croſs, Matt. xxvii. 46. the Septuagint verſion is, "wherefore, O Lord, doſt thou reject my prayers?" why hideſt thou thy face from me? which is a denial of ſenſible communion, a withdrawing the influences and communications of divine grace for a time; and which ſometimes is the caſe of the beſt of men, as Job, David, and others; and is very grieving and diſtreſſing to them; and, for the moſt part, is on account of ſin; it is ſin which ſeparates between God and his people. and cauſes him to hide his face from them, or not grant them his gracious preſence: this was the caſe of Chriſt, who knew no ſin, whilſt he was ſuffering for the ſins of his people; ſee Pſ. lxix. 17. compared with Matt. xxvii. 46.

℣. 15. I am afflicted, &c.] In body and mind, from within and from without, by Satan, by the men of the world, and by the Lord himſelf; which is the common lot of God's people, Pſ. xxxiv. 19. Zeph. iii. 12. and was the caſe of the Meſſiah, who was afflicted both with the tongues and hands of men, by words, by blows, and by the temptations of Satan; and was ſmitten and afflicted of God, by divine juſtice, as the ſinners ſurety; ſee Pſ. xxii. 24. Iſ. liii. 4. or I am poor[a]; which as it is a character, which, for the moſt part, agrees with the ſaints, who are the poor of this world God has choſen, to whom the goſpel is ſent, and by whom it is received, and who are effectually called by it, ſo likewiſe belongs to Chriſt, Zech. ix. 9. 2 Cor. viii. 9. and ready to die, from my youth up; a ſickly unhealthful perſon from his infancy, and often in danger of death; which laſt was certainly the caſe of Chriſt in his infancy, through the malice of Herod; and many times afterwards, when grown up, through the attempts of the Jews to take away his life: ſome render it, I am ready to die through concuſſion, or ſhaking[b]; meaning ſome very rough and ſevere diſpenſation of providence, ſuch an one as Job expreſſes by ſhaking him to pieces, Job xvi 12. and was literally true of Chriſt, when his body was ſo ſhaken by the jog of the croſs, that all his bones were put out of joint, Pſ. xxii. 14. while I ſuffer thy terrors; or bear[c] them, or carry, even terrible afflictions, in which he had terrible apprehenſions of the wrath of God in them, of death they would iſſue in, and of an awful judgment that ſhould follow that; all which are called the terrors of the Lord, Job vi. 4. Pſ. lv. 4. 2 Cor. v. 10, 11. and which the ſaints, when left of God, have ſome dreadful apprehenſions of: ſuch were the terrors of the Lord, the Meſſiah endured, when in a view of the ſins of his people being laid upon him, and of the wrath of God coming on him for them, his ſweat was, as it were, great drops of blood falling to the ground, Luke xxii. 44. Compare with this Pſ. xviii. 4, 5. I am diſtracted; not out of his mind, deprived of his ſenſes, and without the uſe of reaſon; but his thoughts were diſtracted and confuſed, and his mind diſcompoſed with the terrors of God upon him: the Hebrew word Aphunah is only uſed in this place, and is difficult of interpretation, and is variouſly derived and rendered: ſome take it to be of the ſame root with Pen, which ſignifies leſt, perhaps[d]; ſeeing perſons in a panic are apt to uſe ſuch expreſſions; perhaps, or it may be, ſuch and ſuch things will befal me; forming and framing in their minds ten thouſand dreadful things, which they fear are coming upon them; ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi; and is applied by Cocceius[e] to the ſolicitous care and fear of Chriſt concerning his body, the church, Heb. v. 7. others derive it from Ophen, which ſignifies a wheel, and ſo may be rendered, I am wheeled about[f]; always in motion, and have no reſt day nor night; as Chriſt was after his apprehenſion, being carried from place to place, and from bar to bar: others derive it from the Arabic word Aphan[g], which ſignifies to be in want of counſel and advice: Chriſt though, as God, needed no counſel, nor did he take counſel with any; and as mediator, is the wonderful counſellor; yet, as man, he needed it, and had it from his Father. for which he bleſſes him, Pſ. xvi. 7. others from the Hebrew root Phanah, which ſignifies to look unto, as perſons in a panic look here and there; and as Chriſt did when ſuffering, who looked, and there was none to help, Iſ. lxiii. 5. The Syriac and Arabic verſions render it amazed, or aſtoniſhed, which is ſaid of Chriſt, Mark xiv. 33. the Vulgate Latin verſion is troubled, which alſo agrees with Chriſt, John xii. 27. Matt. xxvi. 38. as he muſt needs be, when his enemies ſurrounded him, the ſins of his people were upon him, the ſword of juſtice awaked againſt him, and the wrath of God on him, as follows.

℣. 16. Thy fierce wrath goeth over me, &c.]

Or wraths[h], burning wrath; the whole of divine wrath, in all its fierceneſs, due to the ſins of his people: theſe, like the mighty waves of the ſea, paſſed over him, threatening to overwhelm him, Pſ. lxxxix. 38. thy terrors have cut me off; from the preſence of God, and out of his ſight; as ſometimes the Lord's people are ready to imagine, when forſaken by him, Pſ. xxxi. 22. or from the land of the living, as the Meſſiah was, and in a judicial way, though not for any ſin of his own, Iſ. liii. 8. Dan. ix. 26.

℣. 17. They came round about me daily like water, &c.] That is, the terrors of the Lord, the ſorrows of death and hell, Pſ. xviii. 4, 5. this was the Meſſiah's caſe, when it was with him as is expreſſed Pſ. lxix. 1, 2. they compaſſed me about together; as waters coming from many places, from all quarters, meet together, and together ſurround a perſon or place; in ſuch circumſtances was Chriſt, when the bulls of Baſhan beſet him around, and the aſſembly of the wicked incloſed him, and innumerable evils encompaſſed him about, Pſ. xxii. 12. 16. and xl. 12.

℣. 18. Lover and friend haſt thou put far from me, &c.] This is mentioned in ℣. 8. and is here repeated; and the account is cloſed with it, to ſhew that this was a moſt aggravating circumſtance of his affliction, and which bore exceeding hard upon him; and this muſt be a very uncomfortable caſe, to be in diſtreſs, whether of body or mind, and to have no kind friend near to yield the leaſt help, relief, and comfort; ſo Chriſt's lovers and friends, his diſciples, who loved him, and he loved them, and reckoned them as his friends, and was a friend to them, when he was taken by his enemies, they all forſook him, and fled, Matt. xxvi. 56. and mine acquaintance into darkneſs; either by death into the dark grave, which Job calls the land of darkneſs and ſhadow of death, chap. x. 21, 22. or being removed from him, ſo that he could not ſee them, it was all one to him as if they had been put into darkneſs, into ſome dark dungeon, or into the grave itſelf: or the words may be rendered, mine acquaintance are darkneſs[i]: this was the caſe of Chriſt, when on the croſs; he had none near him, no acquaintance about him, but darkneſs; and darkneſs was over all the land for the ſpace of three hours; and a darkneſs was on his ſoul, being forſaken by his Father; and the prince of darkneſs, with all the fiends of hell, were throwing their fiery darts at him, Matt. xxvii. 45, 46. Thus ends this ſorrowful and mournful ſong; a joyful one follows.

PSAL. LXXXIX.

Maſchil of Ethan the Ezrahite.

WHO this Ethan was, is not certain. Kimchi takes him to be the ſame with Ethan the wiſe man, a grandſon of Judah, 1 Kings iv. 31. 1 Chron. ii. 6. But ſeeing he lived ſome hundreds of years before the times of David, it is not likely that he ſhould be the writer of this pſalm; for David is made mention of in it, which could not be, unleſs it can be thought to be by a ſpirit of prophecy; which indeed is the opinion of Dr. Lightfoot[k], who takes this Ethan to be the penman of this pſalm; and who "from the promiſe, Gen. xv. ſings joyfully the deliverance (of Iſrael); that the raging of the Red Sea ſhould be ruled, ℣. 9. and Rahab, or Egypt, ſhould be broken in pieces, ℣. 10. and that the people ſhould hear the joyful ſound of the law, ℣. 15. and as for the name of David in it, this, he ſays, might be done prophetically; as Samuel is thought to be named by Moſes, Pſ. xcix. 6. which pſalm is held to be made by him; or elſe might be put into it, in after-times, by ſome divine penman, endued with the ſame gift of prophecy, who might improve the ground-work of this pſalm laid by Ethan, and ſet it to an higher key; namely, that whereas he treated only of bodily deliverance from Egypt, it is wound up ſo high as to reach the ſpiritual delivery by Chriſt; and therefore David is often named, from whence he ſhould come." There was another Ethan, a ſinger, in David's time; and it is more probable that he is the perſon, who might live to the times of Rehoboam, and ſee the decline of David's family, and the revolt of the ten tribes from it; or perhaps it was one of this name who lived in the times of the Babyloniſh captivity, and ſaw the low eſtate that David's family were come into; to which agrees the latter part of this pſalm; and, in order to comfort the people of God, he wrote this pſalm, ſhewing that the covenant and promiſes of God, made with David, nevertheleſs ſtood firm, and would be accompliſhed: the title of the Septuagint verſion calls him Etham the Iſraelite; and the Arabic verſion Nathan the Iſraelite: the Targum makes him to be Abraham, paraphraſing it "a good underſtanding, which was ſaid by the hand of Abraham, that came from the Eaſt." But whoever was the penman of this pſalm, it is Maſchil, an inſtructive pſalm, a pſalm cauſing to underſtand; it treats concerning the covenant of grace, and the promiſes of it; and concerning the mercy and faithfulneſs of God, in making and keeping the ſame; and concerning the Meſſiah and his ſeed, his church and people; and the ſtability and duration of all theſe: many paſſages in it, are applied to the Meſſiah by Jewiſh writers, antient and modern; and ℣. 20. is manifeſtly referred to, in Acts xiii. 22.

℣. 1. I will ſing of the mercies of the Lord for ever, &c.] Both temporal and ſpiritual, eſpecially the latter, in which there is a large diſplay of the rich and abundant mercy of God, from whence they are ſo called; as in the choice of men to everlaſting life, who are ſaid to be veſſels of mercy; in the covenant of grace made with them, the bleſſings of which are the ſure mercies of David; in the miſſion of Chriſt, whoſe coming, as the day-ſpring from on high, is owing to the tender mercy of our God; in redemption by him, in which mercy and truth have met together; in regeneration, which is according to abundant mercy; in the forgiveneſs of ſins, which is according to the multitude of his tender mercies; and in the whole of ſalvation, which is not by works of righteouſneſs, but by the mercy of God through Chriſt: the word may be rendered graces, graces, kindneſſes, goodneſſes[1], and deſigns the abundance of grace; as in the heart of God, in the covenant, in the hands of Chriſt, as diſplayed through him, and in the ſeveral parts of ſalvation, and the whole of it: and theſe are a proper ſubject for a ſong; and a truly gracious ſoul, ſenſible of theſe things, thankful for them, chearful on account of them, and, ſeeing his intereſt in them, cannot but ſing of them; and will determine to do it for ever, every day, and all the day long, as long as he lives, and while he has any being, and which he will do to all eternity: with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulneſs to all generations; God is faithful to himſelf, to all the perfections of his nature, to his truth, holineſs, and juſtice, he cannot deny himſelf; he is ſo to his Son, and to all engagements with him, and promiſes to him; to all his counſels, purpoſes, and decrees; all which are faithfulneſs and truth, or faithfully and truly performed; and to his covenant and promiſes made to his people in Chriſt, in whom they are all yea and amen: and that this glorious perfection of God might be made known to the ſaints in all ſucceſſive generations, and be taken notice of by them, the pſalmiſt ſpoke and ſung this pſalm with his mouth, and penned it with his hand; in which there is more mention made of the faithfulneſs of God, than perhaps in any other paſſage of ſcripture beſides; ſee ℣. 2. 5. 8. 24. 33.

℣. 2. For I have ſaid, &c.] That is, in his heart he had ſaid, he had thought of it, was aſſured of it, ſtrongly concluded it, from the ſpirit and word of God; he believed it, and therefore he ſpoke it; having it from the Lord, it was all one as if He had ſpoke it: ſome verſions therefore render it, for thou haſt ſaid, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, Syriac, and Arabic verſions: mercy ſhall be built up for ever; ſignifying that there ſhould be new and frequent diſplays of it, freſh favours ſhould be given, and a daily increaſe of them; and ſo, like a building, ſhould riſe, and be a firm and ſtable one; for the phraſe denotes the perpetuity of the mercy of God; it endures for ever; it is from everlaſting to everlaſting: moreover, this may be ſaid to be done, when ſaints are rooted and grounded in the love, grace, and mercy of God, and are built up in Chriſt, and eſtabliſhed in him, in whom this mercy is diſplayed; and when the church of God in general, which is a monument of mercy, and which, though it may decay and fall into ruins, ſhall be raiſed up again, and rebuilt, and the head-ſtone brought in with acclamations of God's grace unto it: now, becauſe mercy would be ſuch a noble and laſting ſtructure, therefore the pſalmiſt determines to ſing of the mercies of God for ever: thy faithfulneſs ſhalt thou eſtabliſh in the very heavens; make it appear to be as firm and ſtable as the heavens, and more ſo; for theſe may paſs away; but the words of the Lord, his promiſes, to which he is always faithful, ſhall never paſs away; his word of promiſe being made in the heavens, is ſettled there; and when he brings his people to heaven, which he has prepared for them, and has promiſed to them, then will his faithfulneſs appear to be fully eſtabliſhed there; and becauſe of this, of the faith of this, the pſalmiſt reſolved to make it known to all generations: and as this refers to a covenant made, that is mentioned in the following words, in which the Lord is introduced ſpeaking.

℣. 3. I have made a covenant with my choſen, &c.] Not with Abraham, as the Targum expreſſes it; but with David, as in the following clauſe; not David, literally underſtood, though he was choſen of the Lord to be his ſervant, and a covenant was made with him, and a promiſe made to him of the perpetuity of his throne and kingdom in his family, Pſ. lxxviii. 70. 2 Sam. vii. 16. but myſtical David, the Meſſiah, David's ſon and antitype; after, on this account, called David in ſcripture, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. Hoſ. iii. 5. and who is the Lord's choſen one, fore-ordained to be the redeemer of loſt ſinners, choſen to be the mediator between God and them, to be the head of the church, and ſaviour of the body; and his human nature was choſen to the grace of union to the Son of God, ℣. 19. hence he is called God's elect, Iſ. xlii. 1. and with him the covenant of grace was made from all eternity, and all the bleſſings and promiſes of it were put into his hands; he is the mediator, ſurety, and meſſenger of it, and by his blood it is ratified and confirmed: the Septuagint render it, in the plural number, with mine elect ones; and it is a truth, that the covenant of grace is made with all the elect, conſidered in Chriſt, and is made with them as ſuch, and not as believers, converted perſons, &c. election is the foundation of the covenant, and the ſource of all covenant-bleſſings: I have ſworn unto David my ſervant; to the Meſſiah, called David, as before obſerved, and who is the Lord's ſervant, as man and mediator, of his chuſing, calling, ſending, and ſupporting, Iſ. xlii. 1. and xlix. 3. and liii. 11. to whom he ſwore, and he will not repent; and which oath of his, joined to his covenant and promiſe, makes for the ſtrong conſolation of the heirs of promiſe; ſee ℣. 35. Pſ. cx. 4. Heb. vi. 18. the ſum and ſubſtance of which covenant and oath follows.

℣. 4. Thy ſeed will I eſtabliſh for ever, &c.] Meaning not the natural ſeed of David, at leaſt not only them; whoſe family was indeed preſerved, though in very low circumſtances, until the Meſſiah came, who ſprung from thence, Luke i. 27. and ii. 4. Acts xiii. 23. but the ſpiritual ſeed of Chriſt, to whom it was promiſed that he ſhould have a ſeed, and ſhould ſee and enjoy it, and which ſhould endure for ever; ſee ℣. 29. 36. Iſ. lvii. 11. and ſo he always has had a ſeed to ſerve him in all generations, in the worſt of times, and will; and who are eſtabliſhed in him, and will be kept and preſerved by him, and whom he will preſent to his Father, ſaying, Lo, I and the children whom thou haſt given me, Heb. ii. 13. and build up thy throne to all generations, Selah; and this ſhews that the paſſage is not to be underſtood literally of David, and of his temporal throne and kingdom, which did not laſt many generations; but of the ſpiritual throne and kingdom of the Meſſiah, who ſprung from him, called the throne of his father David, whoſe throne is for ever and ever, and whoſe kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, Luke i. 32, 33. Pſ. xlv. 6. Dan. ii. 44. his throne is in the heavens, where he will reign until all enemies are put under his feet; and it is alſo in the midſt of his church, and in the hearts of his people, where he reigns as King of ſaints; and he is on the ſame throne with his Father; it is the ſame with his, as to glory, power, and authority; on this he will ſit, and judge the world at the laſt day; and on it he will reign with his people a thouſand years, in the new Jeruſalem ſtate, and after that to all eternity, Rev. iii. 21. and xx. 4, 5. 11. and xxii. 3, 4.

℣. 5. And the heavens ſhall praiſe thy wonders, O Lord, &c.] Which, by a proſopopeia, may be underſtood of the heavens literally, in the ſame ſenſe as other inanimate creatures praiſe the Lord, Pſ. cxlviii. 3, 4. or myſtically of the church, conſiſting of heaven-born ſouls, and whoſe doctrines and ordinances are from heaven; or of the apoſtles, as Jerom, who had their miniſtry, miſſion, commiſſion, and gifts from thence; or rather of the angels, the inhabitants of heaven, who praiſe the Lord for his wonderful works of nature, providence, and grace, Pſ. cxlviii. 2. particularly, they admire and praiſe the wonderful work of redemption, that wonderful thing of thine[m], as the word may be rendered, being in the ſingular number: the perſon of the Redeemer is wonderful, and that is his name; his incarnation is a moſt amazing thing, it is the great myſtery of godlineſs; and the redemption wrought out by him is the wonder of men and angels: when he appeared in the world, the angels of God worſhipped him; at his birth, they ſung glory to God in the higheſt; and the myſteries of his grace are what they look into with wonder and praiſe, Heb. i. 6. Luke ii. 13, 14. 1 Pet. i. 12. thy faithfulneſs alſo in the congregation of the ſaints; i. e. is praiſed there; which Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret of the angels alſo, who are called ſaints, Deut. xxxiii. 2. of which there is a congregation, even an innumerable company, Rev. xii. 22. theſe not only admire and praiſe the wonderful works of the Lord, but his perfections alſo; and particularly his faithfulneſs in the execution of promiſes and threatenings, Rev. vii. 11, 12. and xvi. 5. but rather holy men are meant, ſuch as are called to be ſaints, and are gathered together in a goſpel-church-ſtate, deſigned by a congregation of them, among and by whom the truth and faithfulneſs of God, as well as his loving kindneſs and mercy, are ſpoken of with the higheſt commendation, Pſ. xl. 9, 10.

℣. 6. For who in the heaven can be compared unto the Lord? &c.] Or ranked[n], or put upon a par, with him; none of the angels in heaven; for tho' they are holy, wiſe, knowing, powerful, faithful, kind, and merciful creatures, yet not to be compared with the Lord for holineſs, wiſdom, knowledge, ſtrength, faithfulneſs, and mercy; ſee Exod. xv. 11. Iſ. xlvi. 9, 10. Pſ. lxxxix. 8. 1 Kings viii. 23. Micah vii. 18. who among the ſons of the mighty can be likened unto the Lord? the Syriac verſion very wrongly renders it the ſons of angels, ſeeing angels do not propagate their ſpecies, Luke xx. 36. to which Kimchi agrees, who makes the mighty to be angels, and their ſons to be the hoſt of heaven, which are moved and guided by them: the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, and Arabic verſions, render it the ſons of God; and this phraſe, indeed, is applicable to the angels, Job xxxviii. 7. and ſo the Targum interprets it of the multitude of the angels; but rather the mighty men of the earth, and their children, are meant; princes, nobles, judges, and civil magiſtrates of all ſorts, men of power and authority in the world; there are none of them to be likened to the Lord, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords; ſee Pſ. lxxxii. 1, 2.

℣. 7. God is greatly to be feared in the aſſembly of the ſaints, &c.] Which Jarchi and Kimchi underſtand of angels again, and render it God is to be feared in the great aſſembly of them; for they are a very large number, even an innumerable company; in and by whom the Lord is feared and worſhipped, Heb. xii. 21. Rev. v. 11. and vii. 11, 12. but rather an aſſembly or congregation of holy men are deſigned: it is the duty of ſuch to aſſemble together publickly for religious worſhip; they ought to do it on account of the Lord, who requires it, and encourages it by his preſence, he has promiſed; on the account of themſelves, it being for their profit and pleaſure; and on the account of others, for their converſion and comfort; and in imitation of the people of God, in all ages; nor ſhould they forſake the aſſembling of themſelves: the word סוד rendered aſſembly, ſignifies counſel or ſecret; ſee Gen. xlix. 6. and ſo the Targum, "God is mighty in the ſecrets of the ſaints, ſitting on a throne of glory;" in the aſſembly of the ſaints, the ſecrets of God's love are diſcloſed unto them; the doctrines and myſteries of his grace, called the whole counſel of God, Acts xx. 27. are there made known; and the ordinances of the goſpel, which alſo are ſtiled the counſel of God, Luke vii. 30. are there adminiſtered: now, where all this is done, God is greatly feared herein; not with a ſlaviſh fear, a fear of hell and damnation, ſuch as may be in devils; nor with an hypocritical fear, ſuch as is taught by the precepts of men; but with a filial, godly fear, ſuch as is peculiar to the children of God; with an holy and humble fear, with a fiducial and fearleſs one; with a reverential affection for the Divine Being, and ſuch as includes all worſhip of him, internal and external: and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him; which the Targum paraphraſes "and is to be feared above all the angels that ſtand round about him;" and ſo Kimchi interprets it; ſee Rev. v. 11. and vii. 11. but the ſame thing, in different words, is meant, as in the preceding clauſe.

℣. 8. O Lord God of hoſts, &c.] Of all the hoſts of heaven, the ſun, moon, and ſtars, and of all the heavenly hoſts of angels, of all the armies in heaven, and the inhabitants of the earth: who is a ſtrong Lord like unto thee? he is Jah, or Jehovah, and he alone is ſo, and is the moſt high in all the earth, Pſ. lxxxiii. 18. and there is none like him for his great power and ſtrength, by which he has made the heavens and the earth, and upholds them in their being; and by which he has redeemed his people, plucked them out of the hands of ſin and Satan, and preſerves them ſafe to his kingdom and glory; ſee Job xl. 9. Iſ. xl. 15, 17, 18. or to thy faithfulneſs round about thee; none ſo faithful as the Lord, none to be truſted as he, either angels or men; ſome underſtand it of the faithful ones that are about him, his truſty ſervants the angels, who ſtand round about him ready to do his will; or the glorified ſaints that are with him, the called, choſen, and faithful; ſee Pſ. ciii. 19, 20. Rev. xvii. 14. or rather the words are to be read, and thy faithfulneſs is round about thee; and ſo the Targum, "and thy truth (or faithfulneſs) ſurroundeth thee:" look all around him, and his faithfulneſs is every where to be ſeen; to himſelf, and the perfections of his nature; to his Son, and agreements with him; and to his counſels of old, his purpoſes and decrees, and to his covenant and promiſes: he is as it were clothed with faithfulneſs, and it appears in all the diſpenſations of his providence and grace.

℣ 9. Thou ruleſt the raging of the ſea, &c.] The power, pride, and elation of it, when it ſwells, and foams, and rages, and becomes boiſterous, and threatens veſſels upon it with utter ruin and deſtruction; but the Lord who has it under his dominion and government reſtrains it; he has made and can manage it, and he only: his power over it is ſeen in aſſigning it its place, and ordering the waters of it to it when firſt made; in placing the ſand for its boundary by a perpetual decree, which it cannot paſs; by commanding the ſtormy wind to lift up its waves, and by making the ſtorm a calm, and the waves thereof ſtill; ſee Pſ. cvii. 25, 29. inſtances of this were at the univerſal deluge, and at the Red-ſea: when the waves thereof ariſe, thou ſtilleſt them; when the ſea lifts up its waves, and both lift up their voice, and make a noiſe, and roar, the Lord huſhes them, and makes them ſtill and quiet, as a parent its child when it cries, or a maſter his ſcholars, when they are noiſy and tumultuous; ſo Chriſt rebuked the wind, and checked the raging ſea, and made it a calm, when the ſhip in which he was with his diſciples was covered with its waves; and as this is mentioned here as an inſtance of the great power and ſtrength of the Lord of hoſts, ſo that was a proof and evidence of the true and proper divinity of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Matt. viii. 24—27. all this may be underſtood in a myſtical ſenſe, of the ſea of this world, and the wicked inhabitants of it, who are as the troubled ſea, and cannot reſt, caſting up mire and dirt, reproaching and blaſpheming God and man; and particularly of tyrannical princes and potentates, who are like the proud waters and raging waves of the ſea; but the Lord on high is mightier than they, and can and does reſtrain their wrath and rage, ſo that his people have nothing to fear from them; ſee Pſ. cxxiv. 3, 4, 5. and xlvi. 1, 2, 3, 4.

℣. 10. Thou haſt broken Rahab in pieces, as one that is ſlain, &c.] Or Egypt, as in Pſ. lxxxvii. 4. Iſ. li. 9. or the Egyptians, and particularly Pharaoh their king; ſo the Targum explains it, "Rahab or the proud one, this is Pharaoh the wicked;" who and his people were broken to pieces by the plagues that were brought upon them, eſpecially when all their firſt-born were ſlain; and he and his hoſt were broke in pieces at the Red-ſea, and were ſeen by the Iſraelites on the ſhore, all dead men; and this was done as eaſily by the Lord, as one ſlain with the ſword, as a dead carcaſe which has no life, power, and ſtrength to defend itſelf, may be trampled upon, cruſhed, bruiſed, and broken to pieces, by a living man. All this may be an emblem of the Lord's breaking in pieces the proud and inſolent one Satan, as Rahab ſignifies; of his breaking his head, deſtroying his works, and ſpoiling his principalities and powers; and indeed of his deſtruction of every proud and haughty ſinner, that ſays, Pharaoh-like, who is the Lord that I ſhould obey him? and of every vain boaſter, and ſelf-righteous perſon, that truſts in his own righteouſneſs, and will not ſubmit to the righreouſneſs of Chriſt; and particularly of myſtical Egypt, the proud beaſt of Rome, antichriſt, who ſits in the temple of God as if he was God, ſhewing himſelf to be ſo, blaſpheming God, his name, his tabernacle, and his ſaints; who will be broken to ſhivers as a potter's veſſel, when the vials of God's wrath are poured out, and at and by the coming of Chriſt: thou haſt ſcattered thine enemies with thy ſtrong arm; as the Egyptians were in the Red-ſea, by the waves of it, and caſt upon the ſhore by them; and as the Amorites were by Moſes, and the Canaanites by Joſhua; which inſtances may be here referred unto; ſee Num. x. 35. theſe are further proofs of the power and ſtrength of the Lord, Job xl. 9—14.

℣. 11. The heavens are thine, &c.] They are made and inhabited by him, they are the work of his hands, and the ſeat of his majeſty, and the throne of his glory; the angels of heaven are his, his creatures and ſervants; the ſeveral heavens are his, the airy, ſtarry, and third heavens; the place and ſtate of the bleſſed and glorified ſaints, is of his preparing and giving: the earth alſo is thine; the whole terraqueous globe, and all that is in it, being made, preſerved, and continued by him, and by him given to the ſons of men, Pſ. cxvi. 15. as for the world, and the fulneſs thereof; the habitable world, and all that dwell therein, all the children of men, the beaſts of the field, and cattle on a thouſand hills, and the proviſions for them all; which is the goodneſs of the Lord, the earth is full of; theſe are all the Lord's; ſee Pſ. xxiv. 1. and xxxiii. 5. and l. 10, 11, 12. thou haſt founded them; the world, and the inhabitants of it; the earth is founded upon the ſeas, and the world upon nothing; and the inhabitants are wonderfully preſerved and continued by the power and providence of God; ſee Pſ. xxiv. 2.

℣. 12. The north and the ſouth thou haſt created them, &c.] The two extreme parts of the world, the northern and ſouthern poles, whether inhabited or uninhabited, are created by the Lord to anſwer ſome purpoſe or another; ſee Job xxvi. 7. Tabor and Hermon ſhall rejoice in thy name; Tabor was a mountain in the weſtern part of Galilee, in the tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 12. This mountain, according to Mr. Maundrell[a], ſtands by itſelf in the plain of Eſdraelon, about two or three furlongs within the plain; it has a plain area at top, moſt fertile, and delicious, of an oval figure, extended about one furlong in breadth, and two in length; this area is encloſed with trees on all parts, except towards the ſouth, in which there are in ſeveral places ciſterns of good water. It is generally thought to be the mountain Chriſt was transfigured upon before his diſciples; and if ſo, it might then be ſaid to rejoice in his name, when he appeared in ſo glorious a form upon it; Moſes and Elias talking with him, and a voice from the excellent glory declaring him his beloved Son; and eſpecially the diſciples rejoiced in his name there and then, who could ſay it is good for us to be here, Mat. xvii. 1—5. Hermon was a mountain called by the Sidonians Sirion, and by the Amorites Shenir, Deut. iii. 8, 9. and was in the eaſt; and ſo Mr. Maundrell[b], ſpeaking of Tabor, ſays, not many leagues eaſtward you ſee mount Hermon, at the foot of which is ſeated Nain, famous for our Lord's raiſing the widow's ſon there, Luke vii. 11. there was an Hermon near mount Tabor, thought likely to be here meant; but be theſe mountains where and what they may, they were no doubt very high and fruitful ones, clothed with fruitful trees and graſs, and covered with flocks; which made the proprietors and all the beholders rejoice in the goodneſs, wiſdom, and power of God: the Targum in the king's bible gives the four quarters very truly, "the deſert of the north, and the inhabitants of the ſouth, thou haſt created; Tabor on the weſt, and Hermon on the eaſt, praiſe in thy name."

℣. 13. Thou haſt a mighty arm, &c.] Chriſt is the arm of the Lord, and a mighty one he is, and ſo is the goſpel, which is the power of God unto ſalvation; here it ſeems to deſign the almighty power of God, diſplayed in the works of creation and providence; ſee Iſ. li. 59. and liii. 1. ſtrong is thy hand; thy left hand, as ſome, it being diſtinguiſhed from his right hand, mentioned in the next clauſe; the Targum adds, "to redeem thy people:" the work of redemption was put into the hand of Chriſt, and it proſpered in his hand, and his own arm brought ſalvation to him; and his hand is ſtrong to keep and preſerve his people, where they are put, and where they are ſafe; and the hand of the Lord is ſtrong to correct and chaſtiſe them, and ſometimes his hand lies heavy upon them, and preſſes them ſore, when it becomes them to humble themſelves under his mighty hand; and it is alſo ſtrong to puniſh his and their enemies: and high is thy right hand; when it is lifted up in a way of judgment againſt wicked men, and for the defence of his people, then may it be ſaid to be exalted; and it is high enough to reach the higheſt and moſt powerful of his adverſaries; ſee Pſ. cxviii. 16. Iſ. xxvi. 11. Mic. v. 9. The Targum adds, "to build the houſe of thy ſanctuary." Some render[c] theſe two laſt clauſes as a wiſh or prayer; let thy hand be ſtrong, and let thy right hand be lifted up.

℣. 14. Juſtice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne, &c.] The ſeat and throne on which he ſits; all the adminiſtrations of his kingly power in the government of the world, in the ſalvation of his people, and in the puniſhment of his enemies, being according to the ſtrict rules of juſtice and judgment: or the preparation of thy throne[d]; all that the Lord does is according to the counſel of his will; and theſe counſels were of old, and were formed in ſtrict juſtice and judgment, and were a preparation for his future government in providence and grace: or the eſtabliſhment of thy throne[e]; the throne of an earthly king is eſtabliſhed by righteouſneſs; and ſo the throne of God, and of Chriſt, is ordered and eſtabliſhed with juſtice and judgment in the exerciſe of righteouſneſs for evermore, Prov. xvi. 12. Iſ. ix. 7. mercy and truth ſhall go before thy face; be and appear wherever he is; all his ways are mercy and truth, Pſ. xxv. 10. mercy in pardoning and ſaving ſinners that come unto him by Chriſt; and truth in performing all his purpoſes and promiſes; and theſe make the joyful ſound next mentioned.

℣. 15. Bleſſed is the people that know the joyful ſound, &c.] Of the love, grace, and mercy of God diſplayed in Chriſt, of peace and pardon by his blood, of juſtification by his righteouſneſs, of atonement by his ſacrifice, and of compleat ſalvation by his obedience, ſufferings, and death; this is the ſound of the goſpel, and a joyful one it is to ſenſible ſinners; and is ſo called in alluſion either to a ſhout made upon a victory gained, and ſuch a ſound is the goſpel; it declares victory by Chriſt over ſin, Satan, the world, and death, and every enemy; and that he has made his people more than conquerors over them; or to the Jubilee-trumpet, which proclaimed liberty and a reſtoration of inheritances, Lev. xxv. 9, 10. and ſo the goſpel proclaims liberty to the captives, freedom from the dominion of ſin, and condemnation by it, from the tyranny of Satan, and the bondage of the law; and gives an account of the inheritance the ſaints have in Chriſt, and through his death, to which they are regenerated, and for which they are made meet by the Spirit of God, and of which he is the ſeal and earneſt: or to the ſilver-trumpets, for the uſe of the congregation of Iſrael, and blown at their ſolemn feaſts, and other times, and were all of a piece, Num. x. 1, 2. the trumpet of the goſpel gives a certain ſound, an even one, a very muſical one; there's no jar nor diſcord in it; it is a ſoul-charming alluring ſound, and very loud; it has reached, and will reach again, to the ends of the earth, Rom. x. 18. it is a bleſſing to hear it, but it is a greater to know it, not merely notionally, but ſpiritually and experimentally; ſo as not only to approve of it, and be delighted with it, but ſo as to diſtinguiſh it from all other ſounds; and by faith to receive it, and appropriate the things it publiſhes to a man's own ſoul; and ſuch muſt be bleſſed, or happy perſons, for the reaſons following in this verſe, and in the 16th, 17th, and 18th: they ſhall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance; enjoy the gracious preſence of God, have the manifeſtation of himſelf, the diſcoveries of his love, communion with him through Chriſt, and the comforts of the Holy Spirit, and theſe continued; ſo that they ſhall walk in the ſunſhine of theſe things, though not always; for ſometimes they walk in darkneſs, and ſee no light; but it is an unſpeakable mercy and bleſſing to walk herein at any time, for ever ſo ſhort a ſeaſon; ſee Pſ. iv. 6, 7.

℣. 16. In thy name ſhall they rejoice all the day, &c.] That know the joyful ſound, and walk in the light of God's countenance, as they have reaſon to do; theſe will rejoice in the Lord himſelf, for his name is himſelf; in the perfections of his nature, as diſplayed in redemption and ſalvation by Chriſt; in him as the God of all grace, as their Covenant-God and Father in Chriſt, and the God of their ſalvation; and they will rejoice in Chriſt, in his name, in which is ſalvation, and therefore precious; in his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and fulneſs; and that all the day long, continually; there is always reaſon, ground, and matter for rejoicing in Chriſt, though it is ſometimes interrupted by ſin, temptation, and deſertion; ſee Phil. iv. 4. and in thy righteouſneſs ſhall they be exalted; from a low eſtate of ſin and miſery to an high eſtate of grace and glory; from a ſtate of condemnation and death to a ſtate of juſtification of life; from being beggars on the dunghill, to ſit among princes, and to inherit the throne of glory; ſuch as are clothed with the righteouſneſs of the Son of God, are exalted to great honour, as to be admitted into the preſence of the King of kings, in raiment of needle work, to ſtand at his right hand, in gold of Ophir, and to live and reign with him for evermore in his kingdom and glory.

℣. 17. For thou art the glory of their ſtrength, &c.] By which they walk, and do all they do, exerciſe every grace, and diſcharge their duty; they have their ſtrength from Chriſt, as well as their righteouſneſs, without whom they can do nothing, but all things through him ſtrengthening them; and as his righteouſneſs exalts them, his ſtrength adorns, and glorifies them; how glorious and beautiful does a believer look, that is ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, in the grace that is in Chriſt, and in the exerciſe of faith on him, giving glory to God[f]; on whom the power of Chriſt reſts, and it overſhadows, and in whoſe weakneſs his ſtrength is made perfect! and in thy favour our horn ſhall be exalted; either Chriſt, the horn of their ſalvation, who in an acceptable time, in the time of God's favour, or good-will, was heard and helped by him as man, carried thro' his ſufferings and death, was raiſed from the dead, and exalted at his right hand; ſee ℣. 24. and Iſ. xlix. 8. or the ſaints themſelves, their power and ſtrength, kingdom and glory; by the ſpecial favour of God in Chriſt, their mountain is made ſo ſtrong, and they ſo highly exalted, as that they think they ſhall never be moved; and in the latter day the mountain of the Lord's houſe ſhall be exalted above the hills, Pſ. xxx. 6, 7. Eſ. ii. 2.

℣. 18. For the Lord is our defence, &c.] From all their enemies, being all around them, as a wall of fire to protect them, and as the mountains were round about Jeruſalem, and being kept by his power as in a fortreſs, ſtrong-hold, or garriſon, unto ſalvation; or our ſhield[f]; ſee Pſ. lxxxiv. 9, 11. as are his favour, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation, Pſ. v. 12. and xviii. 35. or to the Lord belongs our defence or ſhield[g]; our protection and ſalvation is from him: and the holy one of Iſrael is our king; he who was to be, and is of Iſrael according to the fleſh; and is holy in his nature, life, and office; he is king of ſaints, that rules over them, protects, and defends them, and therefore they muſt be happy: or to or with the holy one of Iſrael is our king[h]; Chriſt is king of Zion by deſignation, appointment, and conſtitution, of God the holy one of Iſrael, the holy God that has choſen Iſrael for his peculiar people; though it rather ſeems that Chriſt is the holy one by what follows.

℣. 19. Then thou ſpakeſt in viſion to thy Holy One, &c.] Samuel the prophet, that holy man of God, to whom the Lord ſpoke in viſion, or by a ſpirit of prophecy, concerning David, the choice and exaltation of him to the kingdom, and his unction for it, 1 Sam. xvi. 1. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads it to thy holy ones; and ſo the Targum, with which agree the Septuagint and Arabic verſions, which render it thy ſons; and the Syriac verſion his righteous ones, and ſo takes in Nathan alſo, to whom the Lord ſpake in a viſion, by night, concerning the ſettlement and perpetuity of the kingdom in David's family, 2 Sam. vii. 4, &c. Aben Ezra interprets it of the ſingers Heman, Ethan, and others; and Jarchi of Gad and Nathan: but the whole is rather to be underſtood of David's ſon, the Meſſiah; and it may be rendered concerning thy Holy One[i], as he is called, Pſ. xvi. 10. concerning whom in viſion, that is, in prophecy, ſee Iſ. i. 1. The Lord ſaid, by the mouth of his holy prophets, from the beginning of the world, the following things: and ſaidſt, I have laid help upon one that is mighty; this mighty one is the Meſſiah, the mighty God, the mighty Man, the mighty Mediator and Redeemer; who was mighty to ſave to the uttermoſt, and was every way fit for and equal to the work of a Redeemer; for which reaſon the Lord laid help upon him, not for himſelf; for this is not to be underſtood of help promiſed or given him as man and mediator: this is after ſpoken of, ℣. 21. but for others; and ſo the Targum adds, for my people: laying it on him, is no other than ordering or enjoining him, to which he agreed, to help his people out of that miſerable condition they were fallen into, through Adam's tranſgreſſion, and their own ſins, out of which they could not help themſelves: the work aſſigned to Chriſt, and devolved on him in council, and covenant, was to help them out of this eſtate by price and power; and to help them on in their way to heaven, through all difficulties, trials, and temptations; and to help them to heaven itſelf, and introduce them there: and being thus laid upon him, according to his Father's will and purpoſe, and with his own conſent, it was found in him, and exerciſed by him, Hoſ. xiii. 9. I have exalted one choſen out of the people; the ſame as before, the Meſſiah, God's elect, his choſen one, Eſ. xlii. 1. Luke xxiii. 35. choſen to be the head of the church, to be the mediator between God and man, and to be the ſaviour and redeemer of loſt ſinners; to be the foundation and corner-ſtone in the ſpiritual building, and to be the judge of quick and dead: and he was choſen out of the people; out of the vaſt number of the individuals of human nature God determined to create, there was a certain number which he ſelected for himſelf, for his own glory, and to be eternally happy with him; and out of theſe he ſingled one individuum of human nature, to be united to the eternal Word, the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity; and which may be truly ſaid to be the chiefeſt among, or, as the Septuagint verſion has it, choſen out of ten thouſand, Cant. v. 10. this the Lord exalted to the grace of union to the Son of God, whereby it became higher than angels and men, and to have a more excellent name than either of them, it bearing the name of him to whom it is united, Heb. i. 4, 5. Luke i. 35. and he has exalted him to the offices of prophet, prieſt, and king, for which he is anointed above his fellows; and he has alſo, having done his work, highly exalted him at his right hand; angels, principalities and powers, being ſubject to him.

℣. 20. I have found David my ſervant, &c.] Not David literally; but his ſon and antitype, the Meſſiah, who is ſometimes called by his name; ſee the note on ℣. 3. and this finding him, does not ſuppoſe any ignorance of him, nor anxious ſolicitude in ſeeking him, nor any fortuitous event; but is attributed to God by an anthropopathy, or ſpeaking after the manner of men; for it is an act of the higheſt wiſdom, and richeſt grace, to find out, that is, to pitch upon and appoint, in council and covenant, his own ſon to be his ſervant, to be the redeemer and ſaviour of ſinners, and to be a ranſom for them, Job xxxiii. 24. The apoſtle Paul ſeems to refer to this paſſage in Acts xiii. 22. with my holy oil have I anointed him; not with material oil, as David, his type, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. 2 Sam. ii. 4. and v. 3. but with the Holy Ghoſt, which may well be called holy oil, in alluſion to the holy anointing oil under the law; the oil of gladneſs with which Chriſt was anointed above his fellows, and without meaſure, at the time of his conception and birth, at his baptiſm and aſcenſion to heaven, and even, in ſome ſenſe, from all eternity; for ſo early is he ſaid to be anointed, and to be poſſeſſed with all fulneſs of grace, being inveſted with and inſtalled into his office as mediator; and from this anointing he has the name of Meſſiah and Chriſt, both which ſignify anointed, Acts x. 38. Pſ. xlv. 7. Prov. viii. 22, 23.

℣. 21. With whom my hand ſhall be eſtabliſhed, &c.] A promiſe of God's gracious preſence with Chriſt, as man and mediator, which is his work; of a communication of grace and ſtrength from him, to carry him through it; and of his ſupporting and upholding him under it; which hand of his power and grace would be always prepared and ready for him, as the word [a] ſignifies, and ſtable and firm with him, ſo that he ſhould have ſucceſs in it; the pleaſure of the Lord ſhould proſper in his hand; ſo the Targum, "for my hands are prepared for his help;" the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Eaſtern verſions, mine hand ſhall help him; and which is confirmed in the next words: mine arm alſo ſhall ſtrengthen him; in the human nature, ſubject to and encompaſſed with infirmities: this ſhews the greatneſs of the work of man's redemption, which no creature could effect; it required the arm and power of the Lord to be exerted, and by which Chriſt was made ſtrong by the Lord, both for himſelf, and for the working out of ſalvation for us; which he did when he travelled in the greatneſs of his ſtrength, ſtanding up under the mighty weight of our ſins, and the wrath of God; and yet failed not, nor was he diſcouraged, till his own arm brought ſalvation to him; ſee Pſ. lxxx. 17. Iſ. xlii. 1. 4. and lxiii. 1. 5.

℣. 22. The enemy ſhall not exact upon him, &c.] The enemy is the devil, as in the interpretation of the parable of the tares, Matt. xiii. 39. the implacable enemy of Chriſt and his church; and yet, notwithſtanding all his enmity and malice, he could not exact, or get more inflicted on him, than the law and juſtice of God required of him, as the ſinners ſurety; or could not exact a tribute of him, or make him tributary to him; or, in other words, conquer him, and ſubject him to him: ſo far from it, that he was conquered by Chriſt, and all his principalities and powers ſpoiled; or could not deceive him, in which ſenſe the word [b] is ſometimes uſed; and ſo the Targum here: though he deceived Eve, he could not deceive the Meſſiah, the ſeed of the woman; he tried at it, in perſon, by his temptations in the wilderneſs, and by his agents and inſtruments, the ſcribes and phariſees; but in vain, and to no purpoſe; he could not ſucceed: nor the ſon of wickedneſs afflict him; at leaſt not always: he was indeed afflicted, as by wicked men, and by Satan the wicked one, yet not ſo as to be overcome by any; and as Chriſt perſonal, ſo Chriſt myſtical, or his church and people, are afflicted by the ſons of wickedneſs; yet, ſooner or later, they are delivered out of all their afflictions. Antichriſt, that man of ſin, and ſon of perdition, that wicked one, that is eminently ſo, and may be well called the ſon of wickedneſs, has long and greatly oppreſſed the people of Chriſt, and his intereſt; but he ſhall not always; he ſhall be deſtroyed with the ſpirit of his mouth, and with the brightneſs of his coming, 2 Theſſ. ii. 3. 8. This paſſage is applied to the Meſſiah by the Jews [c].

℣. 23. And I will beat down his foes before his face, &c.] In Judea, and in the Gentile world; more eſpecially in Rome pagan, and Rome papal; in the moſt public manner, before his goſpel, and the miniſtry of it by his ſervants; and they ſhall either ſubmit unto it, or be broken to pieces as a potter's veſſel; for he muſt reign till all enemies are put under his feet, 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26. and plague them that hate him; that would not have him to reign over them, the unbelieving Jews, and all the followers of antichriſt; who are either plagued with the judgments of God here, or with everlaſting puniſhment hereafter, with which they will be tormented for ever and ever, Luke xix. 14. 27. Rev. xvi. 8, 9, 10, 11. and xiv. 10, 11. or ſtrike [d] them with a rod of iron, with his wrath and vengeance; ſtrike them down to the ground, and to the loweſt hell.

℣. 24. But my faithfulneſs and my mercy ſhall be with him, &c.] The faithfulneſs of God was and is with Chriſt, in performing promiſes made to him reſpecting his work, and ſtrength to do it, as man, and the glory that ſhould follow; and alſo thoſe made to his people in him, relating to grace here, and happineſs hereafter: and though there was no mercy ſhewn to Chriſt, as the ſurety of his people, but he was dealt with in ſtrict juſtice; yet, as mediator of the covenant, the ſpecial mercy of God is with him, even every bleſſing of it, called the ſure mercies of David; and is only communicated thro' him; he is the mercy-ſeat, from whence mercy is diſpenſed, and the propitiation through whom God is merciful to men: the words may be rendered, my truth and my grace [e], as they are by the Targum; and both are with Chriſt, the truth of doctrine, and all the fulneſs of grace, juſtifying, ſanctifying, pardoning, adopting, and perſevering grace, John i. 14. 17. and in my name ſhall his horn be exalted, or his glory, as the Targum; his power and dominion, of which the horn is an emblem; and his glory is diſplayed in having the ſame name his father has: his name is expreſſive of his nature, being, and perfections, the name Jehovah; and his name of title and office King of kings, and Lord of lords; or his name the Word of God, as the Targum; who, as ſuch, is the brightneſs of his father's glory: or the ſenſe is, that, by the power of God, he ſhould be raiſed from the dead, and have glory given him, and be exalted at his right hand, and made Lord and Chriſt; or by means of the Goſpel, which is the name of the Lord, John xvii. 6. 8. his kingdom and dominion ſhould be ſpread in the world; ſee 1 Sam. ii. 10.

℣. 25. I will ſet his hand alſo in the ſea, &c.] Which is expreſſive not of his dominion over the ſea, and of his power and authority over all things in it, which he has by right of creation, and as mediator, Pſ. viii. 5, 6, 7. of which there were inſtances in the days of his fleſh, Matt. viii. 26, 27. and xvii. 27. but of his kingdom taking place in, and of his government over the inhabitants of the iſles of the ſea; and ſo the Targum, "I will ſet or place his government in the provinces of the ſea;" and which has been remarkably accompliſhed in our iſles, where his goſpel has been preached, his kingdom ſet up, and he has had a race of ſubjects, and a ſeed, to ſerve him for many years: and his right hand in the rivers; or, as the Targum, "the power of his right hand in thoſe that dwell by rivers;" meaning ſuch that dwell upon the continent, afar off from the ſea, and whoſe countries are watered by rivers: ſo that both phraſes denote the extent of Chriſt's kingdom in the continent, and in the iſlands of the ſea; ſignifying, that it ſhould reach every where, and be from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, Pſ. lxxii. 8. Compare with this Rev. x. 1, 2. Aben Ezra interprets it of David's prevailing over thoſe that go in ſhips in the ſea, and in rivers.

℣. 26. He ſhall cry unto me, Thou art my father, &c.] Not by creation, as he is the father of angels and men; nor by adoption, as he is the father of ſaints; but by generation, being the begetter of him, Pſ. ii. 7. ſo that he is Chriſt's own and proper father, and Chriſt is his own and proper ſon, John v. 18. Rom. viii. 3. 32. and he frequently called him his father, and aſſerted him to be in this relation to him, John v. 17. and x. 30. and xx. 17. and addreſſed him, called upon him, and prayed unto him as ſuch, Matt. xi. 25. John xi. 41. and xvii. 1. 5. 11. 24, 25. Luke xxiii. 34. 46. my God; that choſe him to be the mediator, redeemer, and ſaviour; who made a covenant with him, his choſen; who prepared and provided the human nature of Chriſt; anointed him with the gifts and graces of his ſpirit, and ſupported him in his ſufferings, and crowned him with glory and honour; whom Chriſt loved as his God, truſted in him as ſuch, obeyed him, and prayed unto him: he called him his God, owned him to be ſo, and called upon him, and cried unto him as ſuch, John xx. 17. Matt. xxvii. 46. God is the father of Chriſt, as Chriſt is a divine perſon; and he is the God of Chriſt, as Chriſt is man: theſe two relations frequently go together in the new teſtament, John xx. 17. 2 Cor. i. 3. Eph. i. 3. 1 Pet. i. 3. It is added, and the rock of my ſalvation; that bore him up, and where he ſtood firm, whilſt he was working out the ſalvation of his people; and though he was not ſaved from ſufferings and death, yet he was quickly delivered from the grave, and raiſed from the dead, and ſet at the right hand of God, where he muſt reign 'till all enemies are put under his feet.

℣. 27. Alſo I will make him my firſt-born, &c.] Or, make him the firſt-born; make him great, as Jarchi interprets it; give him the bleſſing, the double portion of inheritance: ſo Chriſt is made moſt bleſſed for ever, and has all ſpiritual bleſſings in his hands; and is heir of all things, and his people joint-heirs with him. Chriſt is God's firſt-born, or firſt-begotten, Heb. i. 6. being begotten by him, and of him; and his firſt-begotten, though none begotten after him; as the firſt that opened the womb, under the law, was called the firſt-born, though none were ever born after; and in ſuch ſenſe his firſt-begotten, as that he is his only begotten: and he is the firſt-born, with reſpect to creatures; he is the firſt-born of every creature, Col. i. 15. being begotten and brought forth before any creature was in being, Prov. viii. 22, 23, 24, 25. and with reſpect to the ſaints, he is the firſt-born among many brethren, Rom. viii. 29. they are of the ſame nature, and in the ſame family, and in which Chriſt is a ſon, and the firſt-born; and in all things he has the pre-eminence; and he is alſo the firſt-born from the dead, or the firſt-begotten of the dead, Col. i. 18. Rev. i. 5. being raiſed firſt from thence by his own power, and to an immortal life; and is the firſt-fruits of them that ſleep, and the efficient and meritorious cauſe of the reſurrection of life, and the pattern and exemplar of it: even him the Father promiſes to make higher than the kings of the earth; having a kingdom of a ſuperior nature to their's, and a more extenſive and durable one; and even they themſelves ſhall be ſubject to him: hence he is called King of kings, Rev. xix. 16. This will be when their kingdoms become his; when they ſhall fall down before him, and worſhip him, and bring their riches and glory into his kingdom, or the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate, Pſ. lxxii. 10, 11. Rev. xi. 15. and xxi. 24. This paſſage is interpreted of the Meſſiah by the Jews[f].

℣. 28. My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, &c.] That is, for his myſtical body, his church and people; for whom ſtores of mercy are kept with him, to be laid out in their regeneration, pardon, ſalvation, and eternal life; for to them the mercy of God is from everlaſting to everlaſting, Pſ. ciii. 17. unleſs this is to be underſtood of the grace and kindneſs[g] of God, as the word may be rendered; his free favour and love to Chriſt, which always continues; for as he was always his dearly beloved ſon, that lay in his boſom from eternity, ſo he continued, throughout his ſtate of humiliation, his well-beloved, in whom he was well pleaſed, and ſtill is, and ever will: and my covenant ſhall ſtand faſt with him; being made with him, as the head and repreſentative of his people, it remains, and will remain, ſure, firm, and immoveable; its bleſſings are ſure mercies, and its promiſes are all yea and amen in Chriſt: the ſtability of it, and of all that is in it, is owing to its being made with him, and being in his hands, who is the ſurety, mediator, and meſſenger of it.

℣. 29. His ſeed alſo will I make to endure for ever, &c.] Not a race of kings from David, which ended at the Babyloniſh captivity; not the natural ſeed of David, not the Meſſiah himſelf, who ſprung from him; but the Meſſiah's ſpiritual ſeed, which were given him by the Father, adopted through him, regenerated by his ſpirit and grace, begotten through his goſpel, and the miniſtry of it, and born again in his church, and to whom he ſtands in the relation of the everlaſting Father, Iſ. ix. 6. and liii. 10. The enduring of theſe for ever, may denote the final perſeverance of particular believers; which may be concluded from the relation of Chriſt, as an everlaſting father to them, who therefore muſt continue as his children; from his affection to them, from which there can be no ſeparation; from their ſecurity in and by him, being in his hand, and in his heart; from their adoption, which is never revoked, being ſons, they are no more ſervants; from their regeneration of incorruptible ſeed; and from the nature of faith, which can never be loſt: they that truſt in the Lord are as mount Zion, which endures for ever, Pſ. cxxv. 1. or it may be expreſſive of the duration of the church of Chriſt in general, throughout all periods of time, notwithſtanding the malice and oppoſition of men and devils againſt it; ſee Matt. xvi. 18. and his throne as the days of heaven; a phraſe ſignifying a great length of time, Deut. xi. 21. yea, invariable conſtancy and duration, Jer. xxxi. 35, 36. Matt. v. 18. and indeed the throne of Chriſt is for ever and ever, and will be, when the preſent earth and heavens are fled away, Pſ. xlv. 6. Rev. xx. 11. Chriſt is upon a throne now in heaven, the ſame with his divine Father's; and here he muſt ſit and reign, 'till all enemies are put under him; and he will be on a throne of glory when he judges the world, and in the new Jeruſalem-ſtate for the ſpace of a thouſand years; and, after that, he'll reign with his ſaints, and they with him, for evermore; his throne and kingdom are everlaſting, Iſ. ix. 7. Dan. ii. 44.

℣. 30. If his children forſake my law, &c.] The ſame with the ſeed before mentioned, the children of the Meſſiah: it is not ſaid if he forſakes, which cannot be ſuppoſed of Chriſt, becauſe he knew no ſin, nor did any; which yet might be ſuppoſed of David, had he been literally meant; but not he, nor his natural children, but the ſpiritual ſeed of myſtical David are here deſigned, who may ſin, and do ſin, of which there is too much proof and evidence; and who ſin not only through infirmity, but ſometimes very groſly, and which ſins are here expreſſed by various phraſes: they ſometimes forſake the law of God; do not attend to it, as they ſhould, as the rule of their walk and converſation; are remiſs in their obſervance of it, and obedience to it, and tranſgreſs its precepts: or his doctrine[h], even the doctrine of the goſpel; which may be ſaid to be forſaken when men grow indifferent to it; go off from it in any meaſure, drop their profeſſion of it, or hold it remiſsly, or become careleſs in their attendance on it: forſaking the aſſembling together to hear it, in ſome ſenſe, is a forſaking of it; and this the Lord takes notice of, and reſents, in his people: and walk not in my judgments; thoſe laws of his houſe by which he judges, regulates, and governs his people; by which they are directed by him, as their judge and lawgiver, how to behave themſelves in the church of God; and in which they are to walk, and continue in the obſervance of; and ſo to do, is to walk as becomes the goſpel, and worthy of their vocation; but to do otherwiſe, is to walk diſorderly; and ſuch are cognizable by the Lord, and by his people.

℣. 31. If they break my ſtatutes, &c.] Fixed, ſettled, appointed ordinances; ſuch as are baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, under the new teſtament-diſpenſation; which are the things that are unſhaken, and will remain until the ſecond coming of Chriſt: theſe are to be kept as they were firſt delivered; no change and alteration ought to be made in them; ſo to do, is to break and violate them, or prophane them, as the word[i] here uſed ſignifies; and which may be done by an unbecoming, irreverent, and indecent attendance on them; as was by ſome in the Corinthian church, of which the apoſtle complains, and who for it were taken notice of, and chaſtened by the Lord, 1 Cor. xi. 2. 20, 21, 22. 30. 32. and keep not my commandments; which ſhould be kept impartially, with great affection to them, from a principle of love to the Lord, with a view to his glory, and without truſting to and depending upon an obedience to them; for they are not grievous; and beſides, in, though not for, keeping them, there is great reward; and a contrary behaviour is diſpleaſing to God: now this particular enumeration of offences, that may be committed by the children of God to Chriſt, ſhew that all ſorts of ſins may be committed by them; ſins of omiſſion and commiſſion; ſins againſt the law, and againſt the goſpel; all but the unpardonable one; and that theſe, though they are obſerved in a way hereafter mentioned, yet are all forgiven.

℣. 32. Then will I viſit their tranſgreſſion with the rod, &c.] That is, of men; as in 2 Sam. vii. 14. the Lord making uſe of men to chaſtiſe his people by, as he did of the neighbouring nations of the Jews, when they ſinned againſt him; and ſo the Targum interprets it here, "I will viſit their tranſgreſſions by the hands of the tribes of the ungodly;" or with ſuch afflictions as are common to men, 1 Cor. x. 13. in a kind, humane, moderate way, in meaſure, in judgment, and not in wrath and hot diſpleaſure; or in ſuch like manner as a man chaſtiſes his children, which is in love, Deut. viii. 5. and their iniquity with ſtripes; ſuch as diſeaſes of body, loſs of relations, croſſes and diſappointments in the world; not with the ſtripes of divine vengeance, of vindictive juſtice, ſuch as Chriſt, the ſurety of his people, endured for them; but with the ſcourges of a father, Iſ. liii. 8. Heb. xii. 6.

℣. 33. Nevertheleſs, my loving-kindneſs will I not utterly take from him, &c.] Or make it void[k], not from Chriſt, who always was, and ever will be the dear Son of his love, even whilſt he was obeying, ſuffering, and dying; nor from all thoſe that are in him, loved, and choſen in him, from every one of his ſpiritual ſeed, who are all dear ſons, and pleaſant children; and the love of God to his people is in Chriſt; and therefore there can be no ſeparation from it; nor will it ever depart from them, or be utterly, or at all taken from them, as to that itſelf, though ſometimes the manifeſtations of it are withdrawn from them; but the love of God itſelf is invariable and unchangeable; ſee Rom. viii. 38, 39. nor is it removed when God afflicts and chaſtens his people; for his chaſtenings are from love, and in love; the reaſon why he chaſtens them is becauſe he loves them, and he loves them whilſt he is chaſtening them; he viſits and comforts them, ſympathizes with them, ſupports them, and ſupplies them, and makes all things work together for their good, Rev. iii. 19. nor ſuffer my faithfulneſs to fail; in making good his engagements to Chriſt, in keeping the covenant made with him, and in fulfilling his promiſes to his people; and even when he afflicts them, it is in faithfulneſs to them; nor will he ſuffer them to be afflicted above what they are able to bear, and will ſupport them under it, and deliver out of it, Pſ. cxix. 75. 1 Cor. x. 13. or I will not falſify in my truth[l]; or falſify his word; he is faithful that has promiſed, who will do it, yea, notwithſtanding the unbelief of his people, Heb. x. 23. 2 Tim. ii. 13.

℣. 34. My covenant will I not break, &c.] Not the covenant at Sinai, as Aben Ezra, but the covenant of grace made with Chriſt, and which ſtands faſt with him, ℣. 3, 28. which is firm, ſure, and ſtable, and as immoveable as mountains and hills, and more ſo, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. Iſ. liv. 10. or prophane[m] it; though his people prophane his ſtatutes, ℣. 31. he won't prophane his covenant; though they violate his laws, he's a God keeping covenant with them, and will not break his word with them: nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips; any promiſe of his, reſpecting either the temporal, ſpiritual, or eternal welfare of his people: or not change[n]; as he changes not in his nature and perfections, nor in his love and affections, nor in his counſels and purpoſes; ſo neither in his covenant and promiſes, they are always the ſame, and have a certain and unchangeable accompliſhment; there is a performance of whatſoever is ſpoken by the Lord, Luke i. 45.

℣. 35. Once have I ſworn by my holineſs, &c.] Swearing is aſcribed to God after the manner of men, and is done in condeſcenſion to the weakneſs of his people, and to remove doubts and heſitations from them, relating to things ſpiritual and eternal; as to his everlaſting love to them, his covenant with them in Chriſt, and their perſeverance in his grace; and it is made by himſelf, or one or other of his perfections, as here by his holineſs; ſee Amos iv. 2. and indeed his holineſs being his nature, is no other than he himſelf, the holy God; and becauſe he could ſwear by no greater, he ſware by himſelf, that as ſure as he was, and was holy, juſt, and true, he would make good what he promiſes, Heb. vi. 13. and this is done but once, once for all, that being ſufficient; it need not be repeated, nor is it ever revoked; when he ſwears, he never repents of it, nor changes his mind; and it is to ſhew the immutability of his counſel, that he ſwears at all, Pſ. cx. 4. Heb. vi. 17. that I will not lie unto David; he will not lie to any, he cannot, it is impoſſible he ſhould; it would be to deny himſelf, it is contrary to his being as God, he is not a man that he ſhould lie; it is contrary to his character as the God of truth; he will not lie, neither in his counſel nor covenant, in his purpoſes, nor promiſes; theſe are the two immutable things, in which it is impoſſible he ſhould lie: and he has ſwore to it, that he will not lie to David, to David's ſon the Meſſiah, with whom the covenant is made, and ſtands faſt; all the prophecies concerning him he has fulfilled; and all the promiſes made to him of help and aſſiſtance, as man and mediator, in his work, and of the reward of it, a glory with him, he has made good.

℣. 36. His ſeed ſhall endure for ever, &c.] This is a confirmation by his oath of what he had before ſaid, ℣. 29. which may be underſtood either of the perſeverance of particular believers, of every one of the ſpiritual ſeed of Chriſt; or of the duration of the church in general, throughout all ages, as before obſerved; and theſe being matters of moment and importance, and of which there are ſometimes doubts in the minds of the Lord's people about them, and that they may be firmly believed by them, he confirms them with an oath; for God never ſwears to trivial things; and when he does ſwear, it is to remove the doubts of his people, and make their minds eaſy: and his throne as the ſun before me; that is, ſhall continue as long as it does; ſee ℣. 29. and Pſ. lxxii. 17. or ſhall be bright, ſplendid, and glorious as the ſun, ſo the Targum, "and his throne light as the ſun before me;" meaning his church and kingdom, of which the throne is an emblem, and which became ſo in goſpel-times, clear and lucid as the ſun, Cant. vi. 10. when day was made by the riſing of the ſun of righteouſneſs, and by the bright ſhining of the goſpel-miniſtry; and at particular periods ſince, as in the times of Conſtantine, when the church was clothed with the ſun, and at the Reformation, when Chriſt appeared with a rainbow on his head, and his face was as the ſun, Rev. xii. 1. and x. 1. and eſpecially this will be the caſe of the church in the latter day, when the light of the moon will be as the light of the ſun, and the light of the ſun ſevenfold, as the light of ſeven days; and when the city, the church, will ſtand in no need of the ſun, nor of the moon; and alſo in the ultimate glory, when the ſaints will ſhine as the ſun in the kingdom of God; ſee Iſ. xxx. 26. Rev. xxi. 23. Matt. xiii. 43. This paſſage is applied to the Meſſiah by the Jews[a].

℣. 37. It ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever as the moon, &c.] Either Chriſt's ſeed, or throne, which comes to much the ſame ſenſe; for by both are meant his church and people, his kingdom and intereſt in the world; the moon is as perpetual as the ſun, and is uſed as elſewhere to ſignify the continuance of the people, church, and intereſt of Chriſt, Pſ. lxxii. 5, 7. for though the moon has its ſpots, and is changeable, ſometimes in the full, and ſometimes in the decline, yet always is, and always continues, and ever will; and ſo though the people of God have their ſpots and imperfections, and are ſometimes on the decline in the frames and diſpoſitions of their minds, in the exerciſe of grace, in their ſpirituality, livelineſs, and zeal, and in their walk and converſation in the church and world; yet they ſhall abide and perſevere to the end; and though the church may be like the moon in the wain, be declining as to numbers, gifts, and graces, yet it ſhall continue and be eſtabliſhed; it is ſometimes indeed in a fluctuating ſtate, and is not always in the ſame place, but is removed from one country to another; yet it always is ſomewhere, even tho' in the wilderneſs, and ere long will be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains, and be no more a tabernacle that ſhall be taken down; ſee Pſ. xlviii. 8. and lxxxvii. 5. and as a faithful witneſs in heaven, Selah; or in the ſky or cloud[b]; ſome underſtand this of the moon, others of both ſun and moon; but it ſeems beſt to interpret it of ſomething diſtinct from either, even of the rainbow, which though it does not always appear in the clouds, yet it has appeared at times, and does and will unto the end of the world; and be a faithful, and an everlaſting token and witneſs of the covenant of God made with all creatures, that he will no more deſtroy the world by a flood, Gen. ix. 12, 13, 16, 17. and is an emblem of the covenant of grace, and of the continuance, perpetuity, and immutability of it; ſee Iſ. liv. 9, 10.

℣. 38. But thou haſt caſt off, &c.] Here begin objections to what is before ſaid, and ſwore to; even to the everlaſting love of God, to Chriſt, and to his ſeed, to the unchangeableneſs and unalterableneſs of the covenant, and to the continuance and perpetuity of the kingdom and church of Chriſt, taken from the dealings of the Lord, with the Meſſiah and his people; which were made either by the pſalmiſt, under a ſpirit of prophecy, foreſeeing what would come to paſs; or by the apoſtles and church of Chriſt, about the time of his ſufferings and death, and after; when he ſeemed to be caſt off, and rejected by the Lord, particularly when he forſook him, and hid his face from him, Matt. xxvii. 46. as when he hides his face from his people, it is interpreted by them a caſting them off; ſee Pſ. xliv. 22, 23, 24. and viii. 14. and abhorred; not that he abhorred the perſon of Chriſt, who was his own Son, his beloved Son; nor his afflictions and ſufferings, which were a ſacrifice of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to him; ſee Pſ. xxii. 24. though theſe might be interpreted by others as if the Lord abhorred or rejected him; becauſe he ſuffered him to be uſed in the manner he was, and particularly to be abhorred by the Jews, even by the nation in general, Iſ. xlix. 7. Zech. xi. 8. though the ſins of his people, which he had upon him, and for which he ſuffered, were an abhorring to the Lord; and when he was made ſin, he was made a curſe: thou haſt been wroth with thine anointed; with thy Meſſiah; not Rehoboam, from whom the ten tribes were rent; nor Joſiah, who was killed by Pharaoh-Necho; nor Zedekiah, carried captive into Babylon; but the true Meſſiah, the ſon of David, before ſaid to be found by the Lord, and anointed with his holy oil, ℣. 20. which is to be underſtood of him, not as his own Son, who was always the object of his love, but as the ſinner's ſurety, bearing the ſins of his people, and all the wrath and puniſhment due unto them; and ſo is reconcileable to the promiſe, that loving kindneſs ſhould not be taken from him, ℣. 33. and is no objection to it, though made one.

℣. 39. Thou haſt made void the covenant of thy ſervant, &c.] His ſervant David the Meſſiah, ℣. 3, 20. meaning not the covenant of circumciſion, nor the covenant at Sinai, which were really made void at the death of Chriſt; but the covenant of grace and redemption made with Chriſt, which it was promiſed ſhould ſtand faſt, and never be broken, ℣. 3, 28, 34. but was thought to be null and void when the Redeemer was in the grave, and all hopes of redemption by him were gone, Luke xxiv. 21. but ſo far was it from being ſo, that it was confirmed by the ſufferings and death of Chriſt; and every bleſſing and promiſe of it were ratified by his blood, hence called the blood of the everlaſting covenant, Heb. xiii. 20. thou haſt prophaned his crown, by caſting it to the ground; by ſuffering it to be caſt to the ground, and uſed contemptibly; as when Jeſus was crowned with thorns, and ſaluted in a mock-manner; when an if was put upon his being the king of Iſrael, Matt. xxvii. 29. 42. and which ſeemed very inconſiſtent with the promiſe, ℣. 27. that he ſhould be made higher than the kings of the earth; and yet ſo it was, and is; he is highly exalted, made Lord and Chriſt, crowned with glory and honour, and is ſet far above all principality and power, and every name that is named in this world, or that to come, notwithſtanding all the above uſage of him.

℣. 40. Thou haſt broken down all his hedges, &c.] Round about his vine, the church; ſee Pſ. lxxx. 12. A famous church was raiſed at Jeruſalem, quickly after the death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion of Chriſt, which ſeemed to be well filled, fenced, and protected; but on a ſudden a violent perſecution aroſe, and the members of it were made havock of, and the miniſters of the Word were ſcattered abroad, and which was the breaking down of the hedges; and what was done to the church, was taken by Chriſt as done to himſelf, as it is here ſpoken of him; ſee Acts viii. 1—4. and ix. 5. and this might ſeem contrary to the word and oath of God, that his ſeed ſhould endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven, ℣. 29. 36. when the firſt chriſtian church was uſed in this manner; but that providence was over-ruled, for the ſpread of the goſpel, and the intereſt of Chriſt, in other parts; ſee Acts viii. 4. and xi. 19, 20, 21. and ſo no objection to what is before ſaid: thou haſt brought his ſtrong holds to ruin; the ſame as before, the church of Chriſt, which ſeemed to be ſo well built and fortified; ſee Iſ. xxvi. 1.

℣. 41. All that paſs by the way ſpoil him, &c.] His church, his members, which are himſelf, when made havock of by their perſecutors, and they took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, Heb. x. 34. ſee Pſ. lxxx. 12. ſo the church of Chriſt may be ſpoiled, however attempted to be ſpoiled, by falſe teachers, who are the foxes, the little foxes, that ſpoil the vines; crafty ſeducers, who ſpoil Chriſtians of their peace and comfort, through philoſophy and vain deceit, Cant. ii. 15. Col. ii. 8. Chriſt himſelf may be ſaid to be ſpoiled, when he was ſtripped of his clothes by the Roman ſoldiers, who alſo parted his garments, caſting lots on his veſture; when they that paſſed by his croſs, as he hung upon it, reviled him, and robbed him of his good name, and of his kingly and prieſtly offices; and he is alſo ſpoiled by falſe teachers, who rob him of his Deity, his divine and eternal ſonſhip, and of his ſatisfaction and righteouſneſs, by whom he is trodden under foot, and his blood counted as an unholy thing; and ſo the Targum, "all that paſs by the way tread upon him;" ſee Heb. x. 29. theſe are they that walk not in the right way; but go out of it, and chuſe their own way; they are ſuch as paſs over the right way, or croſs it; they are they that tranſgreſs, and abide not in the doctrine of Chriſt, that ſo uſe him, 2 John 9. he is a reproach to his neighbours; his name and character were reproached by the Jews, his countrymen, who called him a glutton and a wine-bibber; and repreſented him as a notorious ſinner; his miracles as done by the help of Satan; his doctrine as hard ſayings, novel opinions, contrary to common ſenſe and reaſon, and tending to licentiouſneſs; and his followers and members as the off-ſcouring of all things: but all this has been or will be rolled off, and is no objection to the glory promiſed him.

℣. 42. Thou haſt ſet up the right hand of his adverſaries, &c.] Suffered them to become powerful, and to prevail againſt him; as the wicked Jews, and Satan, and his principalities and powers, at the time of Chriſt's apprehenſion, crucifixion, and death; for then were their hour, and the power of darkneſs, Luke xxii. 53. death alſo had dominion over him, and held him under the power of it for a while: the enemies of his intereſt, Rome pagan, and Rome papal, have, in their turns, had their right hands ſet up, and have had power, and prevailed over it; and the latter will again, at the ſlaying of the witneſſes: all which, though it ſeems contrary to ℣. 21, 22, 23. 25. 27. yet is not; for Satan, though he bruiſed Chriſt's heel, yet Chriſt bruiſed his head, deſtroyed his works, and him himſelf, and that by dying; and ſpoiled his principalities and powers; and death could not hold him long, nor has it now any dominion over him, and is aboliſhed by him; and antichriſt, and all the antichriſtian powers, will be deſtroyed by him ere long: thou haſt made all his enemies to rejoice; as they did when they had got him on the croſs; and eſpecially when he was laid in the grave, Pſ. xxii. 7, 8. and xli. 8. and as the antichriſtian party will when his witneſſes are ſlain, Rev. xi. 10. but as the joy of the former was ſhort-lived, and was ſoon turned into ſorrow, ſo will be that of the latter.

℣. 43. Thou haſt alſo turned the edge of his ſword, &c.] Or the ſharpneſs[a] of it; blunted it, ſo that it could do no execution: the diſciples of Chriſt were not allowed the uſe of the temporal ſword to defend their maſter; and his houſe, his kingdom not being of this world, Matt. xxvi. 51, 52. John xviii. 36. other weapons were put into their hands; the ſword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God; and the edge of this was blunted, with reſpect to the Jews, being of little or no efficacy among them; it was turued off by them, and put away from them; but then it was turned towards the Gentiles, and was powerful and effectual among them: Chriſt girt it on his thigh, and rode forth in his glory and majeſty, conquering, and to conquer, and by it ſubdued many, who fell under him, and gave up themſelves unto him; ſee Eph. vi. 17. Heb. iv. 12. Pſ. xlv. 3, 4, 5. and ere long, with the two-edged ſword, which proceeds out of his mouth, will he ſmite the antichriſtian nations; and the remnant of thoſe that eſcape at the battle of Armageddon, ſhall be ſlain with it, Rev. xix. 15. 21. and haſt not made him to ſtand in the battle; but to fall in it, being delivered up into the hands of wicked men, of juſtice, and death; and yet, by dying, he put away ſin, finiſhed it, made an end of it, and deſtroyed it; he conquered Satan, and led him captive; overcame the world, the ſpite and malice of it, and its prince; and aboliſhed death itſelf.

ỿ. 44. Thou haſt made his glory to ceaſe, &c.] The glory of his deity, though it did not properly ceaſe, yet it ſeemed to do ſo, being covered, and out of ſight, and ſeen but by a very few, whilſt he appeared in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh; and the glory of his humanity was made to ceaſe, in which he was fairer than the children of men, and his viſage was more marred than any man's, and his form than the ſons of men; and the glory of his offices, prophetical, prieſtly, and kingly, which were reproached and vilified, and diſputed and contradicted by the Jews, Matt. xxvi. 68. and xxvii. 42. it may be rendered, his purity [b], which ſeemed to ceaſe when he was clothed with our filthy garments; or had all our ſins laid upon him, and imputed to him, by his father; and he was made ſin for us, who knew none: the Targum is, "thou haſt made the prieſts to ceaſe who ſprinkle upon the altar, and purify his people:" and caſt his throne down to the ground; this ſeems contrary, and is an objection to ỿ. 29. 36. but is not; for notwithſtanding the uſage of Chriſt by the Jews, who rejected him as the King Meſſiah, ſee the note on ỿ. 39. yet he is now upon the ſame throne with his father, and will ſit upon a throne of glory when he comes to judge the world, and ſo in the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate, and to all eternity.

ỿ. 45. The days of his youth haſt thou ſhortened &c.] His days of joy and pleaſure; ſuch as days of youth are, in oppoſition to the days of old age, which are evil, Eccl. xi. 9. and xii. 1. theſe were ſhortened when his ſorrows and ſufferings came on, and God hid his face from him; and indeed he was a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief all his days: the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, the days of his time; and the Arabic verſion the days of his years; for he did not live out half the time of man's age, which is threeſcore years and ten, Pſ. xc. 10. he dying at the age of three or four and thirty; but, notwithſtanding this, he lives again, and lives for evermore; he has length of days for ever and ever, Pſ. xxi. 4. Rev. i. 18. though his days were in ſome ſenſe ſhortened, yet in another ſenſe they are and will be prolonged, even his own, and thoſe of his ſpiritual ſeed, according to the promiſe of God, Iſ. liii. 10. thou haſt covered him with ſhame, Selah; ſee Pſ. lxix. 7. when his face was covered with ſhame and ſpitting, from which he hid it not, Iſ. l. 6. but now he is crowned with glory and honour; wherefore all theſe complaints, though true, are no objections to what is before ſaid and ſwore to.

ỿ. 46. How long, Lord, wilt thou hide thyſelf, for ever? &c.] When God hides his face from his people, though it is but for a little while, it ſeems long, and a kind of an eternity to them; and ſo it ſeemed to the man Chriſt Jeſus; and indeed what he endured, when his father hid his face from him, was of the ſame kind with an eternal abſence; ſee Pſ. xiii. 1. and xxii. 1. ſhall thy wrath burn like fire? it did ſo when Chriſt bore the ſins of his people, and all the puniſhment due unto them; when his ſtrength was dried up like a potſherd; when he, the antitype of the Paſſover-Lamb roaſted with fire, was ſacrificed for us; all which is intirely conſiſtent with God's everlaſting and invariable love to him, as his own ſon. See the note on ỿ. 38.

ỿ. 47. Remember how ſhort my time is, &c.] In this world: man's time here is fixed, and it is but a ſhort time; his life is but a vapour, which appeareth for a little while; his days are as an hand's breadth; they paſs away like a tale that is told; the common term of life is but threeſcore years and ten, and few arrive to that: to know and obſerve this, is proper and uſeful; it may awaken a concern for a future ſtate, excite to a vigorous diſcharge of duty, and animate to patience under afflictions: the clauſe in connection with the preceding verſe ſeems to be a plea for mercy; that, ſince time was ſhort, it might not be conſumed in bearing the wrath of God; but be ſpent in peace and comfort, like that of Job, Ch. x. 20. Compare with this Pſ. ciii. 13, 14, 15. the Targum is, "remember that I am created out of the duſt:" but theſe words, with what follow, are the words of the pſalmiſt, perſonating the apoſtles of Chriſt, and other ſaints, at the time of his ſufferings and death, and when under the power of the grave, and when they were almoſt out of hope of his reſurrection; ſee Luke xxiv. 21. expoſtulating with the Lord on that account; and here intreat him to remember the ſhortneſs of their time, if there was no reſurrection from the dead, as there would be none if Chriſt roſe not; and therefore, as their life was a ſhort one, it would be of all mens the moſt miſerable: wherefore haſt thou made all men in vain? none of the ſons of men are made in vain; for they are all made for the glory of God, which end is anſwered, ſome way or another, in every one of them; either in the ſalvation of them by Chriſt, or in the juſt deſtruction of them through their own ſin; and though the time of life is ſhort, and afflictions many, yet men are not made in vain, and eſpecially thoſe of them who believe in Chriſt; for, for them to live is Chriſt, they live to his glory: whether they live a longer or ſhorter time, they live to the Lord; and when they die, they die to him; and their afflictions are always for good, temporal, or ſpiritual, and eternal: indeed, if there was no future ſtate after this, men might ſeem to be made in vain, and there might be ſome reaſon for ſuch a queſtion or complaint; but ſo it is not; there is an immortal life and ſtate after this, either of bliſs or woe: alſo, if there was no ſuch thing as the redemption, juſtification, and ſalvation of any of the ſons of men, through the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, and which could not be without his reſurrection from the dead, with a view to which the queſtion is put, then there would ſeem ſome room for it; but there is a redemption of them, and therefore are not made in vain; and Chriſt, who was delivered for their offences, is riſen for their juſtification.

[b] מטהרו puritatem ejus, Montanus, Michaelis.

℣. 48. What man is he that liveth, and ſhall not ſee death? &c.] Every living man muſt die; as ſure as a man lives, ſo ſure he ſhall die: be he ſtrong and mighty, as the word ſignifies, or weak and ſickly; be he high or low, rich or poor, prince or peaſant, righteous or wicked; perſons of all ranks, ſtates and conditions, age or ſex, muſt die; for all have ſinned; and it is the appointment of God that they ſhould die, and very few are the exceptions; as Enoch and Elijah, and thoſe that will be found alive at Chriſt's coming: ſhall he deliver his ſoul from the hand of the grave? Selah; either from going down into it, or coming under the power of it; ſo the Targum, "what man is he that ſhall live, and ſhall not ſee the angel of death? (ſee Heb. ii. 14.) ſhall he deliver his ſoul from his hand, that he ſhould not go down to the houſe of his grave?" or deliver himſelf from the power of it, when in it; that is, raiſe himſelf from the dead: none ever did this, or ever can: Chriſt indeed undertook, and has promiſed, to redeem his people from the power of the grave, upon which they have believed they ſhould be delivered; ſee Hoſ. xiii. 14. Pſ. xlix. 15. but if Chriſt roſe not himſelf, which was the thing now in queſtion, how could it be? the caſe ſtands thus; every man muſt die; no man can raiſe himſelf from the dead; if Chriſt riſe not, every one muſt continue under the power of the grave; for then there could be no reſurrection.

℣. 49. Lord, where are thy former loving kindneſſes, &c.] The ſpiritual bleſſings ſaid to be in Chriſt; the grace ſaid to be given to us in him; the ſure mercies of David, ſuch as redemption, juſtification, remiſſion of ſins, and eternal life; ſo called becauſe they flow from the free favour and love of God; and, being many, are expreſſed in the plural number; and which were former or antient ones, even promiſed and ſecured in Chriſt before the world began; ſpringing from the love of God, which, both to Chriſt and his people, was from everlaſting, and provided for in a covenant, which was as early: which thou ſwareſt unto David in thy truth? which were promiſed to Chriſt, the antitype of David, and that with an oath by the truth or faithfulneſs of God, for the certainty thereof: but now where are all theſe? or how will they take place, if Chriſt riſe not from the dead? where will be the redemption of his people, the juſtification of their perſons, the remiſſion of their ſins, and their everlaſting ſalvation? and what will become then of the covenant, oath, and faithfulneſs of God?

℣. 50. Remember, Lord, the reproach of thy ſervants, &c.] The apoſtles of Chriſt, his ſervants, and the ſervants of the living God, that ſhewed unto men the way of ſalvation, and other ſaints with them that believed in Chriſt, and were made willing to ſerve and follow him; theſe were now reproached by the ſcribes and phariſees for believing in him, and profeſſing him; and were ſcoffed and laughed at, when they had crucified him, and laid him in the grave, triumphing over him and them, believing he would never riſe again, as he had given out he ſhould, and for which his followers were reproached; and therefore deſire the Lord would remember the reproach caſt upon Chriſt, and them, for his ſake, and roll it away: how I do bear in my boſom the reproach of all the mighty people; the eccleſiaſtical and civil rulers of the Jews, their chief prieſts, ſcribes, and phariſees, who poured out their reproaches very plentifully on the followers of Chriſt, whom the pſalmiſt here perſonates; which fell very heavily upon them, as a very great weight and burden, and preſſed them ſore, and went to their very hearts, and therefore ſaid to be in their boſom; and which is mentioned to excite the divine compaſſion, that he would appear for them, and raiſe his ſon from the dead, as was promiſed and expected; that their enemies might have no more occaſion to reproach him and them: it is in the original, I bear in my boſom all the many people [c]; which ſome underſtand of the people of God, and of Chriſt's ſuſtaining their perſons, and making ſatisfaction for their ſins; but the other ſenſe is preferable: Kimchi ſupplies the words as we do; and ſo the Targum, which renders them thus, "I bear in my boſom all the reproaches of many people."

℣. 51. Wherewith thine enemies have reproached, O Lord, &c.] Which carries in it another argument why the Lord ſhould take notice of theſe reproaches; becauſe they come not only from their enemies, but from his alſo, and the enemies of his ſon, who would not have him the king, Meſſiah, to reign over them, and are ſaid to reproach him in the next clauſe: wherewith they have reproached the footſteps of thine anointed; or thy Meſſiah; ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it of the Meſſiah: Jarchi renders it the ends of the Meſſiah; and all of them underſtand it of the coming of the Meſſiah, as in the Talmud [d]; which, becauſe delayed, or was not ſo ſoon as expected, was ſcoffed at and reproached by wicked men; ſee Mal. ii. 17. and iii. 1. but it rather deſigns the ways and works, actions, and eſpecially the miracles of Chriſt, which were reproached, either as done on the Sabbath-day, or by the help of Satan; and he was traduced in his kindeſt actions to the bodies and ſouls of men, as a friend of publicans and ſinners, and himſelf as a ſinner: and it may have a particular view to the latter end of the Meſſiah, the laſt part of his life, his ſufferings and death, and when he hung on the croſs; at which time he was, in the moſt inſolent manner, reviled and reproached by his enemies: the words may be rendered the heels of the Meſſiah [e], and are thought by ſome to have reference to the promiſe in Gen. iii. 15. and may regard either the human nature of Chriſt, which was both reproached and bruiſed; or his members ſuffering diſgrace and perſecution for his ſake, and which he takes as done to himſelf. Suidas [f] interprets it of the anceſtors of Chriſt, according to the fleſh; and Theodoret of the kings of that time.

℣. 52. Bleſſed be the Lord for evermore, &c.] In this world, and in the world to come, as the Targum; for reproaches and afflictions for Chriſt's ſake, ſince they work together for good; as Job bleſſed the Lord in the midſt of his troubles, Job i. 21. or rather the pſalmiſt viewing, by a ſpirit of prophecy, Chriſt riſing from the dead, aſcending to heaven, ſitting at the right hand of God, and interceding for the application of all the bleſſings of the covenant; and now, ſeeing all before objected and complained of was reconcileable to the love, covenant, and oath of God, breaks out into this benediction, and with it cloſes the pſalm; which agrees with Chriſt, not only as God over all, bleſſed for ever, but as mediator, who, as ſuch, is made moſt bleſſed for evermore; ſee Pſ. xxi. 6. Theſe are not the words of the copyer of the pſalms, bleſſing God for aſſiſtance in proſecuting the work thus far, which is the ſenſe of ſome Jewiſh writers mentioned by Aben Ezra and Kimchi, but of the pſalmiſt himſelf: Amen, and Amen; which words are added to expreſs the wiſh and faith of the pſalmiſt; and the word is repeated to denote the vehemence and ſtrength of the ſame. Here ends the third part of the book of pſalms, and ſo the Syriac verſion cloſes it. See the cloſe of Pſ. xli. and lxxii.

PSAL. XC.

A prayer of Moſes the man of God.

HERE begins the Fourth part of the book of pſalms, and with the moſt ancient pſalm throughout the whole book, it being written by Moſes; not by one of that name that lived in aftertimes; nor by one of his poſterity; nor by ſome one who compoſed it, agreeable to his words and doctrines, and called it by his name; but by that Moſes, by whom the Lord brought the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, led them through the wilderneſs to the borders of Canaan's land, and by whom he delivered to them the lively oracles; and who is deſcribed as the man of God, a title given to Moſes, Deut. xxxiii. 1. ſo called, not as a creature of his make, ſo all men are; nor as a man of grace, born of God, ſo is every ſaint; but a man of more than ordinary gifts received from the Lord, a prophet of the Lord, and the chief of the prophets, and a type of the great prophet; ſo inſpired men and prophets under the old teſtament bear this name, and miniſters of the goſpel under the new, 1 Kings xvii. 18. 24. 2 Pet. i. 21. 2 Tim. iii. 17. It is a conceit of Bohlius, that this prayer of his, ſo it is called, as ſeveral other pſalms are; ſee Pſ. xvii. 86, 102, 142. was made by him when he was about ſeventy years of age, ten years before he was ſent to Pharaoh, while he was in Midian, which he gathers from ỳ. 10; others think it was written towards the end of his life, and when weary of it, and his travels in the wilderneſs; but it is more generally thought that it was penned about the time when the ſpies brought a bad report of the land, and the people fell a murmuring; which provoked the Lord, that he threatened them, that they ſhould ſpend their lives in miſery in the wilderneſs, and their carcaſes ſhould fall there; and their lives were cut ſhort, and reduced to threeſcore years and ten, or thereabout; only Moſes, Joſhua, and Caleb, lived to a greater age; and on occaſion of this Moſes wrote this pſalm, ſetting forth the brevity and miſery of human life; ſo the Targum, "a prayer which Moſes the prophet of the Lord prayed, when the people of the houſe of Iſrael ſinned in the wilderneſs." Jarchi and ſome other Jewiſh writers[z] not only aſcribe this pſalm to Moſes, but the ten following, being without a name; but it is certain, that Pſ. xcv. was written by David, as appears from Heb. iv. 7. and Pſ. xcvi. is his, compared with 1 Chron. xvi. 23. and in Pſ. xcix. mention is made of Samuel, who lived long after the times of Moſes.

ỳ. 1. Lord, thou haſt been our dwelling-place in all generations, &c.] Even when they had no certain dwelling-place in the world; ſo their anceſtors, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, dwelt in tabernacles in the land of promiſe, as in a ſtrange land; and their poſterity for many years ſerved under great affliction and oppreſſion, in a land that was not theirs; and now they were dwelling in tents in the wilderneſs, and removing from place to place; but as the Lord had been in every age, ſo he now was the dwelling-place of thoſe that truſted in him; being that to them as an habitation is to man, in whom they had proviſion, protection, reſt, and ſafety; ſee Pſ. xxxi. 2. and lxxi. 3. ſo all that believe in Chriſt dwell in him, and he in them, John vi. 56. they dwelt ſecretly in him before they believed; ſo they dwelt in his heart's love, in his arms, in him as their head in election, and as their repreſentative in the covenant of grace from eternity; and when they fell in Adam, they were preſerved in Chriſt, dwelling in him; and ſo they were in him when on the croſs, in the grave, and now in heaven; for they are ſaid to be crucified, buried, and riſen with him, and ſet down in heavenly places in him, Gal. ii. 20. Col. ii. 12. and iii. 1. Eph. ii. 6. and, being converted, they have an open dwelling in him by faith, to whom they have fled for refuge, and in whom they dwell ſafely, quietly, comfortably, pleaſantly, and ſhall never be turned out: here they have room, plenty of proviſions, reſt and peace, and ſecurity from all evils; he is an hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the ſtorm. Some render the word refuge[a]; ſuch is Chriſt to his people, being the antitype of the cities of refuge; and others helper, as the Targum; which alſo well agrees with him, on whom their help is laid, and is found.

ỳ. 2. Before the mountains were brought forth, &c.] Or were born[b], and came forth out of the womb and bowels of the earth, and were made to riſe and ſtand up at the command of God, as they did when he firſt created the earth; and are mentioned not only becauſe of their firmneſs and ſtability, but their antiquity: hence we read of the antient mountains, and everlaſting hills, Gen. xlix. 26. Deut. xxxiii. 15. for they were before the flood, and as ſoon as the earth was; or otherwiſe the eternity of God would not be ſo fitly expreſſed by this phraſe as it is here, and elſewhere the eternity of Chriſt, Prov. viii. 25. or ever thou hadſt formed the earth and the world; the whole terraqueous globe, and all the inhabitants of it; ſo the Targum; or before the earth brought forth; or thou cauſedſt it to bring forth[c] its herbs, plants, and trees, as on the third day: even from everlaſting to everlaſting, everlaſting, thou art God; and ſo are his love, grace, and mercy towards his people, and his covenant with them; and this is as true of Jehovah the Son, as of the Father, whoſe eternity is deſcribed in the ſame manner as his; ſee Prov. viii. 22—30. Rev. i. 4. 8. and may be concluded from his name, the everlaſting Father; from his having the ſame nature and perfections with his Father; from his concern in eternal election, in the everlaſting covenant of grace, and in the creation of all things; and his being the eternal and unchangeable I am, yeſterday, to-day, and for ever, is matter of comfort to his people.

℣. 3. Thou turneſt man to deſtruction, &c.] Or to death, as the Targum, which is the deſtruction of man; not an annihilation of body or ſoul, but a diſſolution of the union between them: the words may be rendered, thou turneſt man until he is broken[b]; and crumbled into duſt; thou turneſt him about in the world, and through a courſe of afflictions and diſeaſes, and at laſt by old age, and however by death, returns him to his original, from whence he came, the duſt of the earth, which he becomes again, Gen. iii. 19. Eccl. xii. 7. the grave may be meant by deſtruction: and ſayeſt, return ye children of men, or Adam; from whom they all ſprung, and in whom they all ſinned, and ſo became ſubject to death; to theſe he ſays, when by diſeaſes he threatens them with a diſſolution, return by repentance and live; and ſometimes when they are brought to the brink of the grave, he returns them from ſickneſs to health, delivers them from the pit, and enlightens them with the light of the living, as he did Hezekiah: or this may refer to the reſurrection of the dead, which will be by Chriſt, and by his voice calling the dead to return to life, to riſe and come to judgment; though ſome underſtand this as deſcriptive of death, when by the divine order and command man returns to his original duſt; thus the frailty of man is oppoſed to the eternity of God. Guſſetius underſtands all this of God's bringing men to repentance, contrition, and converſion; and takes the ſenſe to be, "thou turneſt till he becomes contrite, and ſayeſt, be ye converted ye ſons of Adam;" which he thinks[c] beſt agrees with the mind of the apoſtle Peter, who quotes the following paſſage, 2 Pet. iii. 8, 9. Some, as Arama obſerves, connect this with the following verſe; though men live 1000 years, yet they are but as yeſterday in the ſight of God.

℣. 4. For a thouſand years in thy ſight are but as yeſterday, &c.] Which may be ſaid to obviate the difficulty in man's return, or reſurrection from the dead, taken from the length of time in which ſome have continued in the grave; which vaniſhes, when it is obſerved, that in the ſight, eſteem, and account of God, a thouſand years are but as one day; and therefore ſhould a man lie in the grave ſix or ſeven thouſand years, it would be but as ſo many days with God; wherefore if the reſurrection is not incredible, as it is not, length of time can be no objection to it. Juſt in the ſame manner is this phraſe uſed by the apoſtle Peter, and who is thought to refer to this paſſage, to remove an objection againſt the ſecond coming of Chriſt, taken from the continuance of things as they had been from the beginning, and from the time of the promiſe of it; ſee 2 Pet. iii. 4—8. though the words aptly expreſs the diſproportion there is between the eternal God, and mortal man; for was he to live a thouſand years, which no man ever did, yet this would be as yeſterday with God, with whom eternity itſelf is but a day, Iſ. xliii. 13. man is but of yeſterday, that has lived the longeſt; and were he to live a thouſand years, and that twice told, it would be but as yeſterday when it is paſt; though it may ſeem a long time to come, yet when it is gone it is as nothing, and can never be fetched back again: and as a watch in the night; which was divided ſometimes into three, and ſometimes into four parts, and ſo conſiſted but of three or four hours; and which being in the night, is ſpent in ſleep; ſo that when a man wakes, it is but as a moment with him; ſo ſhort is human life, even the longeſt, in the account of God; ſee Matt. xiv. 25. and the note there.

℣. 5. Thou carrieſt them away as with a flood, &c.] As the whole world of the ungodly were with the deluge, to which perhaps the alluſion is; the phraſe is expreſſive of death; ſo the Targum, "if they are not converted, thou wilt bring death upon them;" the ſwiftneſs of time is aptly ſignified by the flowing gliding ſtream of a flood, by the rolling billows and waves of it; ſo one hour, one day, one month, one year, roll on after another: moreover the ſuddenneſs of death may be here intended, which comes in an hour unlooked for, and unaware of, as a flood comes ſuddenly, occaſioned by haſty ſhowers of rain; as alſo the irreſiſtible force and power of it, which none can withſtand; of which the rapidity of a flood is a lively emblem, and which carries all before it, and ſweeps away every thing that ſtands in its courſe; as death by an epidemical and infectious diſeaſe, or in a battle, carries off thouſands and ten thouſands in a very little time; nor does it ſpare any, as a flood does not, of any age or ſex, of any rank or condition of life; and, like a flood, makes ſad deſtruction and devaſtation where it comes, and eſpecially where it takes off great numbers; it not only turns beauty to aſhes, and ſtrength into weakneſs and corruption, but depopulates towns, and cities, and kingdoms; and as the flowing flood and gliding ſtream can never be fetched back again; ſo neither can life when paſt, not one moment of time when gone; ſee 2 Sam. xiv. 14. beſides this phraſe may denote the turbulent and tempeſtuous manner in which ſometimes wicked men go out of the world, a ſtorm being within and without, as in Job xxvii. 20, 21. they are as a ſleep; or dream, which ſoon paſſeth away; in a ſound ſleep, time is inſenſibly gone; and a dream, before it can be well known what it is, is over and loſt in oblivion; and ſo ſhort is human life, Job xx. 8. there may be ſometimes a ſeeming pleaſure enjoyed, as in dreams, but no ſatisfaction; as a man in ſleep may dream that he is eating and drinking, and pleaſe himſelf with it; but when he awakes, he's hungry and empty, and unſatiſfied; and ſo is man with every thing in this life, Iſ. xxix. 8. and Eccl. i. 8. and v. 10. and all things in life are a mere dream, as the honours, riches, and pleaſures of it; a man rather dreams of honour, ſubſtance, and pleaſure, than really enjoys them. Wicked men whilſt they live are "as thoſe that ſleep;" as the Targum renders it; they have no ſpiritual ſenſes, cannot ſee, hear, ſmell, taſte, nor feel; they are ſtrengthleſs to every thing that is ſpiritually good, inactive, and do none; are ſubject to illuſions and miſtakes; are in imminent danger, and unconcerned about it; and don't care to be jogged or awaked, and ſleep on till they ſleep the ſleep of death, unleſs awaked by powerful and efficacious grace: and men when dead are aſleep, not in their ſouls, but in their bodies; death is often in ſcripture ſignified by a ſleep, under which men continue until the reſurrection, which is an awaking out of it: in the morning they are like graſs, which groweth up or paſſeth away, or changeth[d]; or is changed; ſome underſtand this of the morning of the reſurrection, when there will be a change for the better, a renovation, as Kimchi interprets the word; and which from the uſe of it in the Arabic language, as Schultens obſerves[e], ſignifies to be green and flouriſhing, as graſs in the morning is; and ſo intends a recovery of vigour and ſtrength, as a man after ſleep, and as the ſaints will have when raiſed from the dead. The Targum refers it to the world to come, "and in the world to come as graſs is cut down, they ſhall be changed or renewed;" but it is rather to be underſtood of the flouriſhing of men in the morning of youth, as the next verſe ſhews, where it is repeated, and where the change of graſs is beautifully illuſtrated and explained.

ꝟ. 6. In the morning it flouriſheth and groweth up, &c.] That is, the graſs, through the dew that lay all night on it, and by the clear ſhining of the ſun after rain, when it appears in great beauty and verdure; ſo man in the morning of his youth looks gay and beautiful, grows in the ſtature and ſtrength of his body, and in the endowments of his mind; and it may be alſo in riches and wealth; it is well if he grows in grace, and in the knowledge of Chriſt: in the evening it is cut down and withereth; the Targum adds, through heat; but it can't be by the heat of the ſun, when it is cut down at evening; but it withers in courſe being cut down. This reſpects the latter part of life, the evening of old age; and the whole expreſſes the ſhortneſs of life, which is compared to graſs, that now is in all its beauty and glory, and to-morrow is caſt into the oven, Matt. vi. 30. This metaphor of graſs, to ſet forth the frailty of man, and his ſhort continuance, is frequently uſed; ſee Pſ. xxxvii. 2. and cii. 11. Iſ. xl. 6, 7, 8. 1 Pet. i. 24. It may be obſerved, that man's life is repreſented but as one day, conſiſting of a morning and an evening, which ſignifies the bloom and decline of life.

ꝟ. 7. For we are conſumed by thine anger, &c.] Kimchi applies this to the Jews in captivity; but it is to be underſtood of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, who are here introduced by Moſes as owning and acknowledging that they were waſting and conſuming there, as it was threatened they ſhould; and that as an effect of the divine anger and diſpleaſure occaſioned by their ſins; ſee Numb. xiv. 33, 35. Death is a conſumption of the body; in the grave worms deſtroy the fleſh and ſkin, and the reins of a man are conſumed within him; hell is a conſumption or deſtruction of the ſoul and body, though both always continue: ſaints, though conſumed in body by death, yet not in anger; for when fleſh and heart fail, or is conſumed, God is the ſtrength of their hearts, and their portion for ever, Pſ. lxxiii. 26. their ſouls are ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus, and their bodies will riſe glorious and incorruptible; but the wicked are conſumed at death, and in hell, in anger and hot diſpleaſure: and by thy wrath are we troubled; the wrath of God produces trouble of mind, whenever it is apprehended, and eſpecially in the views of death and eternity; and it is this which makes death the king of terrors, and men ſubject to bondage in life through fear of it, even the wrath to come, which follows upon it; nothing indeed either in life or at death, or death itſelf, comes in wrath to the ſaints; nor is there any after it to them, tho' they have ſometimes fearful apprehenſions of it, and are troubled at it.

ꝟ. 8. Thou haſt ſet our ſins before thee, &c.] The cauſe of all trouble, conſumption, and death; theſe are before the Lord, as the evidence, according to which he as a righteous judge proceeds; this is oppoſed to the pardon of ſin, which is expreſſed by a caſting it behind his back, Iſ. xxxviii. 17. our ſecret ſins in the light of thy countenance; the Targum and Jarchi interpret it of the ſins of youth; the word is in the ſingular number, and may be rendered, our ſecret ſin[f]; which has led ſome to think of original ſin, which is hidden from, and not taken notice of by, the greateſt part of the world, though it is the ſource and ſpring of all ſin. It is not unuſual for the ſingular to be put for the plural, and may intend all ſuch ſins as are ſecretly committed, and not known by other men, and ſuch as are unobſerved by men themſelves; as the evil thoughts of their hearts, the fooliſh words of their mouths, and many infirmities of life, that are not taken notice of as ſins: theſe are all known to God, and will be brought to light and into judgment by him, and will be ſet in the light of his countenance; which denotes not a gracious forgiveneſs of them, but his clear and diſtinct knowledge of them, and what a full evidence they give againſt men to their condemnation and death; and intends not only a future, but the preſent view the Lord has of them, and his dealings with men in life, and at death, according to them.

ꝟ. 9. For all our days are paſſed away in thy wrath, &c.] The life of man is rather meaſured by days than by months or years; and theſe are but few, which paſs away or decline[g] as the day does towards the evening; ſee Jer. vi. 4. or turn away their face, as the word[h] may be rendered: they turn their backs upon us, and not the face to us; ſo that it is a hard thing to get time by the forelock; and theſe, which is worſt of all, paſs away in the wrath of God. This has a particular reference to the people of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, when God had ſwore in his wrath they ſhould not enter into the land of Canaan, but wander about all their days in the wilderneſs, and be conſumed there; ſo that their days manifeſtly paſſed away under viſible marks of the divine diſpleaſure; and this is true of all wicked men, who are by nature children of wrath, and go through the world, and out of it, as ſuch: and even it may be ſaid of man in general, the ailments, diſeaſes, and calamities, that attend the ſtate of infancy and youth; the loſſes, croſſes and diſappointments, vexations and afflictions, tions, which wait upon man in riper years; and the evils and infirmities of old age, do abundantly confirm this truth: none but God's people can, in any ſenſe, be excepted from it, on whom no wrath comes, being loved with an everlaſting love; and yet theſe, in their own apprehenſions, have frequently the wrath of God upon them, and paſs many days under a dreadful ſenſe of it: we ſpend our years as a tale that is told; or as a meditation[y], a thought of the heart, which quickly paſſes away; or as a word[z], as others, which is ſoon pronounced and gone; or as an aſſemblage of words, a tale or ſtory told, a ſhort and pleaſant one; for long tales are not liſtened to; and the pleaſanter they are, the ſhorter the time ſeems to be in which they are told: the deſign of the metaphor is to ſet forth the brevity, and alſo the vanity, of human life; for in tales there are often many trifling and vain things, as well as untruths told; men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree a lie, in every ſtate; and, in their beſt ſtate, they are altogether vanity: a tale is a mere amuſement; affects for a while, if attended to, and then is loſt in oblivion; and ſuch is human life: in a tale there is oftentimes a mixture, ſomething pleaſant, and ſomething tragical; ſuch changes are there in life, which is filled up with different ſcenes of proſperity and adverſity: and perhaps this phraſe may point at the idle and unprofitable way and manner in which the years of life are ſpent, like that of conſuming time by telling idle ſtories; ſome of them ſpent in youthful luſts and pleaſures; others in an immoderate purſuit of the world, and the things of it; very few in a religious way, and theſe with great imperfection, and to very little purpoſe and profit; and particularly point to the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, who how they ſpent their time for thirty-eight years there, we have no tale nor ſtory of it. The Targum is, "we have conſumed the days of our life as the breath or vapour of the mouth in winter," which is very viſible, and ſoon paſſes away; ſee Jam. iv. 14.

℣. 10. The days of our years are threeſcore years and ten, &c.] In the Hebrew text it is, the days of our years in them are, &c.[a] which refers either to the days in which we live, or to the perſons of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, who were inſtances of this term of life, in whom perhaps it firſt took place in a general way: before the flood, men lived to a great age; ſome nine hundred years and upwards: after the flood, men lived not ſo long; the term fixed then, as ſome think, was an hundred and twenty years, grounding it on the paſſage in Gen. vi. 3. but now, in the time of Moſes, it was brought to threeſcore years and ten, or eighty at moſt: of thoſe that were numbered in the wilderneſs of Sinai, from twenty years and upwards, there were none left, ſave Joſhua and Caleb, when the account was taken in the plains of Moab; ſee Numb. xiv. 29. and xxvi. 63, 64, 65. ſo that ſome muſt die before they were ſixty; others before ſeventy; and perhaps all, or however the generality of them, before eighty: and, from that time, this was the common age of men, ſome few excepted; to the age of ſeventy David lived, 2 Sam. v. 4. and ſo it has been ever ſince; many never come up to it, and few go beyond it: this is not only pointed at in revelation, but is what the heathens have obſerved. Solon uſed to ſay, the term of human life was ſeventy years[b]; ſo others; and a people called Berbiccæ, as Ælianus relates[c], uſed to kill thoſe of them that lived above ſeventy years of age, having exceeded the term of life. The Syriac verſion is, in our days our years are ſeventy years; with which the Targum agrees, "the days of our years in this world are ſeventy years of the ſtronger;" for it is in them that ſuch a number of years is arrived unto; or in them, that is, in ſome of them; in ſome of mankind, their years amount hereunto, but not in all: and if by reaſon of ſtrength they be fourſcore years; through a good temperament of body, a healthful and ſtrong conſtitution, under a divine bleſſing, ſome may arrive to the age of eighty; there have been ſome inſtances of a ſtrong conſtitution at this age and upwards, but not very common; ſee Joſh. xiv. 11. Deut. xxxiv. 7. for, generally ſpeaking, ſuch who through ſtrength of body live to ſuch an age, yet is their ſtrength labour and ſorrow; they labour under great infirmities, feel much pain, and little pleaſure, as Barzillai at this age intimates, 2 Sam. xix. 35. theſe are the evil days[d], in which is no pleaſure, Eccl. xii. 1. or their largeneſs or breadth is labour and ſin[e]; the whole extent of their days, from firſt to laſt, is ſpent in toil and labour to live in the world; and is attended with much ſin, and ſo with much ſorrow: for it is ſoon cut off; either the ſtrength of man, or his age, by one diſeaſe or incident or another, like graſs that is cut down with the ſcythe, or a flower that is cropped by the hand; ſee Job xiv. 2. and we fly away; as a ſhadow does, or as a bird with wings; out of time into eternity; from the place of our habitation to the grave; from a land of light to the regions of darkneſs: it is well if we fly away to heaven and happineſs.

℣. 11. Who knoweth the power of thine anger? &c.] Expreſſed in his judgments on men; as the drowning of the old world, the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah, the conſumption of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs; or in ſhortening the days of men, and bringing them to the duſt of death; or by inflicting puniſhment on men after death: they are few that take notice of this, and conſider it well, or look into the cauſes of it, the ſins of men: ſuch as are in hell, experimentally know it; but men on earth, very few cloſely attend to it, or rarely think of it: even according to thy fear, ſo is thy wrath; or who knows thy wrath, ſo as to fear thee? who conſiders it ſo, as that it has ſuch an influence upon him to fear the Lord, and ſtand in awe of him, and fear to offend him, and ſeek to pleaſe him? or rather, the wrath of God is anſwerable to mens fear of him; and that, in ſome things and caſes, mens fears exceed the things feared; as afflictions viewed beforehand, and death itſelf: the fears of them are oftentimes greater, and more diſtreſſing, than they themſelves, when they come; but ſo it is not with the wrath of God; the greateſt fears, and the moſt dreadful apprehenſions of it, do not come up to it; it is full as great as they fear it is, and more ſo.

℣. 12. So teach us to number our days, &c.] Not merely to count them, how many they are, in an arithmetical way; there is no need of divine teachings for that; ſome few inſtructions from an arithmetician, and a moderate ſkill in arithmetic, will enable perſons not only to count the years of their lives, but even how many days they have lived: nor is this to be underſtood of calculating or reckoning of time to come; no man can count the number of days he has to live; the number of his days, months and years, is with the Lord; but is hid from him: the living know they ſhall die; but know not how long they ſhall live, and when they ſhall die: this the Lord teaches not, nor ſhould we be ſolicitous to know: but rather the meaning of the petition is, that God would teach us to number our days, as if the preſent one was the laſt; for we can't boaſt of to-morrow; we know not but this day, or night, our ſouls may be required of us: but the ſenſe is, that God would teach us ſeriouſly to meditate on, and conſider of, the ſhortneſs of our days; that they are but as a ſhadow, and there is no abiding; and the vanity and ſinfulneſs of them, that ſo we may not deſire to live here always; and the troubles and ſorrows of them, which may ſerve to wean us from the world, and to obſerve how unprofitably we have ſpent them; which may put us upon redeeming time, and alſo to take notice of the goodneſs of God, that has followed us all our days, which may lead us to repentance, and engage us in the fear of God: that we may apply our hearts unto wiſdom; to conſider our latter end, and what will become of us hereafter; which is a branch of wiſdom ſo to do; to ſeek the way of ſalvation by Chriſt; to ſeek to Chriſt, the wiſdom of God, for it; to fear the Lord, which is the beginning of wiſdom; and to walk circumſpectly, not as fools, but as wiſe; to all which an application of the heart is neceſſary; for wiſdom is to be ſought for heartily, and with the whole heart: and to this divine teachings are requiſite, as well as to number our days; for unleſs a man is taught of God, and by his Spirit convinced of ſin, righteouſneſs and judgment, he will never be concerned, in good earneſt, about a future ſtate; nor inquire the way of ſalvation, nor heartily apply to Chriſt for it: he may number his days, and conſider the ſhortneſs of them, and apply his heart to folly, and not wiſdom; ſee Iſ. xxii. 21.

℣. 13. Return, O Lord, &c.] Either from the fierceneſs of thine anger, according to Aben Ezra and Jarchi; of which complaint is made, ℣. 7. 9. or unto us, from whom he had departed; for though God is every where, as to his being and immenſity, yet, as to his gracious preſence, he is not; and where that is, he ſometimes withdraws it; and when he viſits again with it, he may be ſaid to return; and when he returns, he viſits with it, and which is here prayed for; and deſigns a manifeſtation of himſelf, of his love and grace, and particularly his pardoning mercy; ſee Pſ. lxxx. 14. and lxxxv. 2, 3. how long? this is a ſhort, abrupt way of ſpeaking, in which ſomething is underſtood, which the affection of the ſpeaker would not admit him to deliver; and may be ſupplied either thus, how long wilt thou be angry? God is ſometimes angry with his people, which, when they are ſenſible of, gives them a pain and uneaſineſs they are not able to bear; and though it endures but for a moment, yet they think it a long time; ſee Pſ. xxx. 5. and lxxxv. 5. Arama interprets it, "how long ere the time of the Meſſiah ſhall come?" or how long wilt thou hide thyſelf? when he does this, they are troubled; and though it is but for a ſmall moment he forſakes them, yet they count it long, and as if it was for ever; ſee Pſ. xiii. 1. and lxxxix. 46. or how long wilt thou afflict us? as the Targum: afflictions come from the Lord, and ſometimes continue long; at leaſt they are thought ſo by the afflicted, who are ready to fear God has forgotten them and their afflictions, Pſ. xliv. 23, 24. or how long wilt thou defer help? the Lord helps, and that right early, at the moſt ſeaſonable time, and when difficulties are the greateſt; but it ſometimes ſeems long firſt; ſee Pſ. vi. 3, 4. and let it repent thee concerning thy ſervants; men are all ſo, of right, by creation, and through the benefits of providence, and many in fact, being made willing ſervants by the grace of God; and this carries in it an argument for the petition: repentance does not properly belong to God; it is denied of him, Numb. xxiii. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 29. yet it is ſometimes aſcribed to him, both with reſpect to the good he has done, or promiſed, and with reſpect to the evil he has brought on men, or threatened to bring; ſee Gen. vi. 6. 1 Sam xv. 11. Jer. xviii. 8. 10. and in the latter ſenſe it is to be underſtood here; and intends not any change of mind or will in God, which cannot be; but a change of his diſpenſations with reſpect to deſertion, affliction, and the like; which the Targum expreſſes thus, "and turn from the evil thou haſt ſaid thou wilt do to thy ſervants:" if this reſpects the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and their excluſion from Canaan, God never repented of what he threatened; he ſwore they ſhould not enter it, and they did not, only their children, excepting two perſons: ſome render the words comfort thy ſervants[f]; with thy preſence, the diſcoveries of thy love, eſpecially pardoning grace, and by removing afflictions, or ſupporting under them.

℣. 14. O ſatisfy us early with thy mercy, &c.] Or grace[g]; the means of grace, the God of all grace, and communion with him, Chriſt and his grace; things without which, ſouls hungry and thirſty, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, cannot be ſatisfied: theſe will ſatisfy them, and nothing elſe; namely, the diſcoveries of the love of God, his pardoning grace and mercy, Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, and the fulneſs of grace in him; ſee Pſ. lxiii. 3, 4, 5. and ciii. 2, 3, 4, 5. this grace and mercy they deſire to be ſatisfied and filled with betimes, early, ſeaſonably, as ſoon as could be, or it was fitting it ſhould: it may be rendered in the morning[h], which ſome underſtand literally of the beginning of the day, and ſo lay a foundation for joy the whole day following: ſome interpret it of the morning of the reſurrection; with which compare Pſ. xlix. 14. and xvii. 15. others of the day of redemption and ſalvation, as Kimchi and Jarchi: it may well enough be applied to the morning of the goſpel-diſpenſation; and Chriſt himſelf, who is the mercy promiſed unto the fathers, may be meant; whoſe coming was prepared as the morning; and ſatisfied ſuch as were hungry and thirſty, weary and faint with looking for it, Hoſ. vi. 3. Jer. xxxi. 14. The Targum is, "ſatisfy us with thy goodneſs in the world, which is like to the morning;" and Arama interprets it of the time of the reſurrection of the dead: that we may rejoice, and be glad all our days; the love, grace, and mercy of God, his preſence, and communion with him, the coming of Chriſt, and the bleſſings of grace by him, lay a ſolid foundation for laſting joy in the Lord's people, who have reaſon always to rejoice in him; and their joy is ſuch, that no man can take from them, Phil. iv. 4. John xvi. 22.

℣. 15. Make us glad according to the days wherein thou haſt afflicted us, &c.] The days of affliction are times of ſorrow; and days of proſperity make glad and joyful; and the pſalmiſt here ſeems to deſire an equal number of the one as of the other; not that an exact, preciſe number of the one with the other is intended; but that there might be a proper proportion of the one to the other; and commonly God does ſet the one over againſt the other: there is a mixture of both in the believer's life, which is like unto a chequer of black and white, in which there is a proper proportion of both colours; and ſo proſperity and adverſity are had in turns, and work together for good to them that love the Lord: and when it is ſaid make us glad, that is, with thy favour and preſence, it ſuggeſts, that theſe are a ſufficient recompence for all affliction and trouble; and if ſo here, what muſt the enjoyment of theſe be in heaven! between this and preſent afflictions there is no proportion, neither with reſpect to the things themſelves, nor the duration of them; ſee Rom. viii. 18. 2 Cor. iv. 17. and the years wherein we have ſeen evil; afflictions are evils; they flow from the evil of ſin, and to ſome are the evil of puniſhment; and even chaſtiſements are not joyous, but grievous: this may have reſpect to the forty years travel in the wilderneſs, in which the Iſraelites ſaw or had an experience of much affliction and trouble; and even to the four hundred years, in which the ſeed of Abraham were afflicted in a land not their's; ſee Numb. xiv. 33, 34. Gen. xv. 13. Hence the Jews[i] make the times of the Meſſiah to laſt four hundred years, anſwerable to thoſe years of evil, and which they take to be the ſenſe of the text; and ſo Jarchi's note on it is, "make us glad in the days of the Meſſiah, according to the number of the days in which thou haſt afflicted us in the captivities, and according to the number of the years in which we have ſeen evil".

℣. 16. Let thy work appear unto thy ſervants, &c.] Either the work of Providence, in conducting the people of Iſrael through the wilderneſs, and bringing them into the land of Canaan; which God had promiſed to do for them, eſpecially for their poſterity, and therefore their children are particularly mentioned in the next clauſe; or the work of ſalvation, as Kimchi; even the great work of redemption by the Meſſiah, which is the work of God, which he determined ſhould be done, appointed his Son to do, and gave it him for that purpoſe: now this was ſpoken of, and promiſed, as what ſhould be done; but as yet it did not appear; wherefore it is prayed for, that it might; that the Redeemer might be ſent, and the work be done: or elſe the work of grace upon the heart, which is God's work, and an internal one, and not ſo obvious to view; and hence it is intreated, that, being wrought by him, he would ſhine upon it, bear witneſs to it, and make it manifeſt that it was really wrought, and a genuine and true work; and moreover, this may reach to and include the great work of God, to be brought about in the latter day, reſpecting the converſion of the Jews, the bringing in the fulneſs of the Gentiles, the deſtruction of antichriſt, and the eſtabliſhment and glory of the kingdom of Chriſt: and thy glory unto their children; the glory of God, diſplayed in the above works of providence and grace, particularly in the work of redemption, in which all the divine perfections are glorified; or Chriſt himſelf, who is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, that he would appear to them in human nature, and dwell among them; and they behold his glory, as they afterwards did, John i. 14. or elſe the ſenſe is, that the glorious grace of God might appear unto them, and upon them, by which they would be made all glorious within, and be changed into the image of Chriſt, from glory to glory; or that the Shekinah, the glorious majeſty and preſence of God, might be among them, and be ſeen by them in his ſanctuary, Pſ. lxiii. 2.

℣. 17. And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us, &c.] Either the grace and favour of God, his gracious preſence vouchſafed in his ordinances, which makes his tabernacles amiable and lovely, and his ways ways of pleaſantneſs; or the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is that comelineſs he puts upon his people, whereby they become a perfection of beauty; or the beauty of holineſs, which appears on them, when renewed and ſanctified by the Spirit; every grace is beautiful and ornamental: or Chriſt himſelf may be meant; for the words may be rendered, let the beauty of the Lord be with us[k]; he who is white and ruddy, the chiefeſt among ten thouſand, altogether lovely, fairer than the children of men, let him appear as the Immanuel God with us: and eſtabliſh thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands eſtabliſh thou it; or direct it[l]; though God works all works of grace for us, and in us, yet there is a work of duty and obedience to him for us to do; nor ſhould we be ſlothful and inactive, but be the rather animated to it by what he has done for us: our hands ſhould be continually employed in ſervice for his honour and glory; and whatever we find to do, do it with all the might of grace we have; and in which we need divine direction and ſtrength, and alſo eſtabliſhment, that we may be ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord: and this petition is repeated, to ſhew the ſenſe he had of the neceſſity of it, and of the vehemence and ſtrength of deſire after it. Jarchi interprets this of the work of the tabernacle, in which the hands of the Iſraelites were employed in the wilderneſs; ſo Arama of the tabernacle of Bezaleel.

PSAL. XCI.

JARCHI and others think this pſalm was written by Moſes[m], as was the preceding; but the Targum aſcribes it to David; as do the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions; and very probably, as is generally thought, was penned by him on occaſion of the peſtilence which came upon the people, through his numbering of them, 2 Sam. xxiv. The perſon all along ſpoken of, and to, according to the Targum, is Solomon his ſon; and, according to the title in the Syriac verſion, king Hezekiah, ſo Theodoret, who is called the ſon of David; neither of which are probable. Some think the Meſſiah is meant; and that the pſalm contains promiſes of protection and ſafety to him, as man, from diſeaſes, beaſts of prey, evil ſpirits, and wicked men, under the care of angels; and this not becauſe that Satan has applied one of theſe promiſes to him, Matt. iv. 6. but becauſe they ſeem better to agree with him than with any other: and one part of the title of the pſalm, in the Syriac verſion, runs thus, "and ſpiritually it is called the victory of the Meſſiah, and of every one that is perfected by him." It ſeems beſt to underſtand it of every godly man, who is always ſafe under the Divine Protection. The Talmudiſts[n] call it, שיר פגעים a ſong of the occurſions, or meetings with evil ſpirits.

℣. 1. He that dwelleth in the ſecret place of the moſt High, &c.] Or the Supreme; a title of God, who is ſuperior to all beings, the creator and preſerver of them, God over all, higher than the higheſt of angels or men; ſee Gen. xiv. 22. his ſecret place is his heart, his boſom, where his only begotten Son lies; and into which he takes his people, where they are ſet as a ſeal, and who enjoy intimate communion with him; which is no other than his gracious preſence, called the ſecret of his preſence, Pſ. xxxi. 20. which none but ſaints are admitted to, when his everlaſting love, which was a ſecret in his heart, is made known unto them, and in which they alſo dwell, 1 John iv. 16. as they likewiſe do in the eternal decree of election; which perhaps is meant by the clefts of the rock, and ſecret places of the ſtairs, where the church is ſaid to dwell, Cant. ii. 14. unleſs rather Chriſt the rock, and who may be ſignified by the cleft of that Moſes was put into, when the goodneſs of the Lord paſſed before him, is intended; and who is the hiding-place from the wind: mention is made of the ſecret of God's tabernacle, Pſ. xxvii. 5. in which he hides his people; alluding to the tabernacle, or temple, and the moſt holy place in it, called his ſecret place, Ezek. vii. 22. and may refer to the miniſtry of the word and ordinances, where ſaints dwell, and enjoy much communion with God; and who are particularly under his ſpecial providence, protection, and power; which may here be deſigned: ſhall abide under the ſhadow of the Almighty; who is able to do all things for his people, and is Shaddai, all-ſufficient, as this word is thought to ſignify; has a ſufficiency of happineſs in and for himſelf, and of proviſions for all his creatures, and of power and grace for his own children: his ſhadow may be the ſame with his ſecret place, his power and protection, often in this book of pſalms called the ſhadow of his wings, Pſ. xvii. 8. and xxxvi. 7. and lvii. 1. in alluſion to birds that overſhadow and protect their young with their wings; though perhaps the alluſion here may be to the ſhadow of a tree, and deſign the Word and Ordinances of the Lord's houſe, which are a delightful, refreſhing, reviving, and fruitful ſhadow, Cant. ii. 3. Hoſ. xiv. 7. where gracious ſouls dwell, and abide with great delight and pleaſure. Chriſt, the Son of God, is ſometimes compared to the ſhadow of a rock, or tree, which ſkreens and ſhelters from heat; as he preſerves his people from the heat of a fiery law, the flaming ſword of juſtice, the wrath of God, the fiery darts of Satan, and the fury of perſecutors: under this ſhadow do they abide or lodge all night, ſafe and ſecure, as the word[o] ſignifies: the Targum calls this ſhadow, the ſhadow of the clouds of glory; the Arabic verſion, the ſhadow of the God of heaven.

℣. 2. I will ſay of the Lord, &c.] Or to the Lord[p]: theſe are the words of the pſalmiſt, expreſſing his faith in the Lord in the following words, taking encouragement from the ſafety of the godly man above deſcribed: the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, read, he ſhall ſay to the Lord; that is, the man that dwells in the ſecret place, and under the ſhadow of the Lord: the Targum is, "David ſaid, I will ſay to the Lord," as follows: he is my refuge; a refuge in every time of trouble, outward or inward; a refuge when all others fail; and is himſelf a never-failing one, a ſtrong refuge, which none can break through and into, and in which all that have fled thither and dwell are ſafe: and my fortreſs; what fortifications, natural or artificial, are to a city and its inhabitants, that is God to his people, and much more; he is round about them, as the mountains were about Jeruſalem; his ſalvation are walls and bulwarks to them; yea, he is a wall of fire about them, Pſ. cxxv. 2. Iſ. xxvi. 1. Zech. ii. 5 they are kept by his power, as in a garriſon, 1 Pet. i. 5. my God; in him will I truſt; his covenant-God, his God in Chriſt, and who would ever continue ſo; and was a proper object of his truſt and confidence, both as the God of nature, and the God of grace; who is to be truſted in, both for temporal and ſpiritual bleſſings, and at all times; to which his loving kindneſs, power, and faithfulneſs, greatly encourage and engage: the Targum is, "In his word will I truſt."

℣. 3. Surely he ſhall deliver thee from the ſnare of the fowler, &c.] Theſe are the words of the pſalmiſt, either ſpeaking to himſelf, for the encouragement of his own faith and truſt in the Lord; or to the man that dwells in the ſecret place, and under the ſhadow of the moſt high; which latter ſeems moſt agreeable; though Coccejus thinks they are the words of God in one of his Perſons, ſpeaking of another divine Perſon that ſhould deliver ſuch that truſt in him: the Targum makes them to be the words of David to Solomon his ſon. By the fowler and his ſnare may be meant either Saul, who laid wait for David, ſpread ſnares for him, and hunted him as a partridge on the mountains, from whom he was delivered; or rather any tyrannical enemy and perſecutor of the ſaints, who lay ſnares for them; and theſe are broken by the Lord, and ſo they eſcape, as a bird out of the hands of the fowler, Pſ. cxxiv. 6, 7. or it may, beſt of all, be underſtood of Satan and his temptations, which are as ſnares that he lays to catch the people of God in, and from which they are delivered by the power and grace of God; ſee 1 Tim. iii. 7. 2 Tim. ii. 26. and from the noiſome peſtilence; the moſt pernicious and deſtructive one; which may be literally underſtood of any peſtilential diſtemper; from which the Lord, by his powerful providence, ſometimes protects his people, when in danger of it: or, ſpiritually, of the peſtilential diſeaſe of ſin, that noiſome and deadly one, the plague of the heart, which is the worſt of all plagues; and from the ruinous and deſtructive effects and conſequences of which the Lord ſaves his ſaints.

℣. 4. He ſhall cover thee with his feathers, &c.] As birds do their young, who cannot cover themſelves: this they do from a tender regard to them, whereby they both keep them warm, and protect them from thoſe that would hurt them: this repreſents the helpleſs ſtate of the children of God, who are, like to young birds, weak and unable to defend themſelves; the tender regard of God unto them, as the eagle and other birds have to their young; ſee Deut. xxxii. 11. Iſ. xxxi. 5. Matt. xxiii. 37. and the warmth and comforts ſouls have, as well as protection, under his powerful and gracious preſence; he comforts them under their tribulations, as well as defends them from their enemies: and under his wings ſhalt thou truſt; ſee the note on ℣. 1. and the paſſages there referred to; the ſame metaphor is continued: his truth ſhall be thy ſhield and buckler; his faithfulneſs, which is engaged to keep and preſerve his ſaints ſafe to his kingdom and glory, 1 Cor. i. 8, 9. 1 Theſſ. v. 23, 24. his Son, who is truth itſelf, John xiv. 6. and whoſe perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation, are as a ſhield and buckler all around the ſaints, to ſecure them from ruin and deſtruction; and are the ſhield which faith lays hold on, and makes uſe of, againſt the temptations of Satan; ſee Pſ. lxxxiv. 11. Eph. vi. 16. the word of God alſo, which is truth, John xvii. 19. every promiſe in it, and doctrine of it, is as a ſhield and buckler to ſtrengthen, ſupport, and ſecure the faith of his people, Prov. xxx. 5.

℣. 5. Thou ſhalt not be afraid for the terror by night, &c.] The terrible things that happen in the night; as fire, ſtorms and tempeſts, invaſion of enemies, murders, thefts and robberies: a good man, when he has committed himſelf and his family to the care and protection of God by prayer, has no reaſon to be anxiouſly careful of theſe things, or to indulge a ſlaviſh fear about them; ſee Pſ. iii. 5. and iv. 8. Prov. iii. 24, 25. the Targum is, "thou ſhalt not be afraid for the fear of devils that walk in the night:" ſo Jarchi interprets this, and the next verſe, of ſuch; as do others of the Jewiſh writers: a man that truſts in the Lord, need not be afraid of men or devils: a fear of evil ſpirits is natural to men, and very early appeared; perhaps it took its riſe from the fatal affair of the fall of our firſt parents, through an intercourſe with an evil ſpirit; and ever ſince has been imprinted on human nature an averſion to evil ſpirits, and a dread of them, and even of all ſpirits in general; ſee Job iv. 13—16. Matt. xiv. 25, 26. Luke xxiv. 37, 38. nor for the arrow that flyeth by day; the judgments of God, ſuch as the ſword, famine, and peſtilence; theſe are called the arrows of God, Deut. xxxiii. 23, 24. 42. Ezek. v. 16.[q] becauſe they move ſwiftly, come ſuddenly, and ſtrike ſurely, and are open and viſible; they are ſent by the Lord, and are ordered and directed by him, and hit and hurt whom he pleaſes, and none elſe; and therefore ſuch who dwell in the ſecret of the Lord, and under his ſhadow, need not be diſtreſſed about them: the Targum interprets it of the arrow of the angel of death, which he ſends out in the day; ſee Heb. ii. 14. ſo Jarchi underſtands it of a demon that flies like an arrow.

℣. 6. Nor for the peſtilence that walketh in darkneſs, &c.] Some think, and not without cauſe, that what is figuratively expreſſed in the preceding verſe is here explained; and, indeed, the peſtilence may well be called the terror by night: the name of the plague, at a diſtance, is terrible; the near approach of it is more ſo; when it enters a country, city, or town, what fleeing is there from it? and in the night-ſeaſon it is more dreadful than in the day; not only to think of it in the gloomy watches of the night, but to ſee the vaſt numbers carried out to be interred, and to hear the diſmal cry, bring out your dead: and ſo it is here ſaid to walk in darkneſs; in the darkneſs of the night, or to ariſe from dark and unknown cauſes; when it moves and walks through cities, towns, and villages, and there's no ſtopping it: and this alſo may be the arrow that flyeth by day; which flies as ſwift as an arrow, and that flies as ſwift as a bird[r]; this is taken out of the Lord's quiver, has its commiſſion and direction from him, and does execution by night and by day: the plague that ſmote the firſt-born in Egypt was in the night; and that which was in David's time, and might be the occaſion of penning this pſalm, began in the day, Exod. xii. 29, 30. 2 Sam. xxiv. 15. nor for the deſtruction that waſteth at noon-day; as the peſtilence, which may be increaſed, and rage the more, thro' the heat of the day; and which deſtroys great numbers wherever it comes: ſeventy thouſand were taken off in three days by the plague, occaſioned by David's numbering of the people: the Targum is "of a company of devils that deſtroy at noonday;" that is, thou ſhalt not be afraid: ſome think reſpect is had to a peſtilential hot wind, common in the eaſtern countries, which begins to blow about eight o'clock in a morning, and is hotteſt at noon; which inſtantly ſuffocates perſons, burns them, and reduces them to aſhes preſently, which the Arabs call ſammiel, or a poiſon-wind[s].

℣. 7. A thouſand ſhall fall at thy ſide, &c.] The left ſide, as the Targum; ſo the Arabic verſion, and Jarchi and Kimchi; which ſenſe the oppoſition and diſtinction in the next clauſe direct unto: this is not to be underſtood of falling in battle, as ſome interpret it, but by the peſtilence before ſpoken of: and ten thouſand at thy right hand; which ſhews both the great devaſtation made by the plague where it comes, and the ſpecial care and providence of God in preſerving his people from it; of which David had an experience, when vaſt numbers of his people were deſtroyed by it on the right and left: but it ſhall not come nigh thee; it may come nigh the place where good men are, or elſe it could not be ſaid, that a thouſand ſhould fall on their ſide, and ten thouſand at their right hand: the plague that killed the firſt-born in Egypt, was nigh the dwellings of the Iſraelites, though it entered not into them; and that in David's time was nigh him, though he was not infected with it: but the meaning is, that it ſhould not come ſo nigh ſuch as to ſeize their perſons, and they fall by the diſtemper; there being a particular providence oftentimes concerned for their ſafety, which guards them from it; ſee Ezek. ix. 4. not but that good men may fall in a common calamity, and by an epidemical diſtemper; but then it is for their good, and not their hurt; they are taken away from the evil to come, and are delivered from a worſe plague than that by which they fall, the plague of their own hearts, the evil of ſin; and ſo the Targum adds, "ſhall not come nigh to hurt," though it underſtands it of devils.

℣. 8. Only with thine eyes ſhalt thou behold, &c] The flying arrow, the walking peſtilence, and waſting deſtruction, and the great devaſtations made by it: and ſee the reward of the wicked; the vengeance of God upon them, and this as a juſt puniſhment for their ſins; not looking upon it with delight and pleaſure, rejoicing in the miſery of their fellow-creatures, any otherwiſe than as the glory of divine juſtice is diſplayed in it; ſee Pſ. lii. 6. and lviii. 10. the peſtilence is always threatened, and it always comes, as a judgment upon a wicked generation of men; and ſo it is ever to be conſidered, and is conſidered by good men, Lev. xxvi. 25. Deut. xxviii. 20, 21.

℣. 9. Becauſe thou haſt made the Lord which is my refuge, &c] So the words, according to Kimchi, alſo are directed to the good man; giving the reaſon of his ſafety, becauſe he truſts in the Lord, and puts himſelf under his protection: but they ſhould rather be rendered, and the accents require ſuch a reading, becauſe thou, Lord, art my refuge[t]; and ſo are either the words of the good man that truſts in the Lord; or rather of the pſalmiſt himſelf, ſeeing his ſafety in the midſt of danger, and aſcribing it to the Lord; whoſe providence was in a peculiar manner over him, whoſe power protected him, and he was as an aſylum or city of refuge to him; ſo that nothing could hurt him: even the moſt High, thy habitation; it ſhould be rendered, thou haſt made the moſt High thy habitation[u]; being an apoſtrophe of the pſalmiſt to his own ſoul, obſerving the ground of his ſecurity; the moſt high God being made and uſed by him as his habitation, or dwelling-place, where he dwelt; as every good man does, ſafely, quietly, comfortably, pleaſantly, and continually: the Targum makes them to be the words of Solomon, paraphraſing them thus, "Solomon anſwered, and thus he ſaid, thou thyſelf, O Lord, art my confidence; in an high habitation thou haſt put the houſe of thy majeſty."

℣. 10. There ſhall no evil befall thee, &c.] The evil of ſin cleaves to the beſt of ſaints, the evil of temptations beſets them, and the evil of afflictions comes upon them, as chaſtiſements from the Lord; for they muſt expect to receive evil, in this ſenſe, as well as good from his hands; but the evil of puniſhment never touches them; and therefore, when any public calamity befalls them in common with others, yet not as an evil of puniſhment; it is not an evil to them; it is for their good: neither ſhall any plague come nigh thy dwelling; how ſhould it, when they dwell in God, and have made him, the moſt High, their habitation? ℣. 1. 9. otherwiſe it may come nigh their temporal dwellings; ſee the note on ℣. 7. though it may not enter into them; and ſhould it, yet not as an evil, or by way of puniſhment; ſee Prov. iii. 33.

℣. 11. For he ſhall give his angels charge over thee, &c.] Created ſpirits, ſo called, made by the Lord, and are at his command; who are miniſtring ſpirits to his people, who encamp about them, and are concerned in the preſervation of them; they being committed to their care and charge by him who is Lord of heaven and earth: Satan applied this paſſage to Chriſt, Matt. iv. 6. nor did our Lord object to the application of it; and it can hardly be thought that he would have ventured to have done it, had he been aware that a miſapplication might be objected; or that it was not the received ſenſe of the place: what he is to be blamed for, in quoting it, was the wrong purpoſe for which he produced it, and for leaving out the next clauſe, which he ſaw was againſt his deſign: to keep thee in all thy ways; in walking and travelling from place to place, as providence calls and directs; and in all civil ways, in all lawful buſineſs and employment of life; in all ſpiritual ones, as the ways of God and religion: what Satan tempted Chriſt to, was neither of theſe ways; it was not a natural way of going, nor the duty of his office, nor any of the ways of God.

℣. 12. They ſhall bear thee up in their hands, &c.] Which denotes the ſtrength and power of angels to carry the ſaints in their hands; their tender care of them, ſuch as a parent or nurſe have of children; the helpleſs condition of the people of God, who are like infants, and need to be dealt with after this manner; the condeſcenſion of angels to take ſuch an office on them, in ſubmiſſion to the will of God; the conſtant view they have of the ſaints, being always in their hands, and ſo in ſight: thus they bear them up in life, and at death carry their ſouls to Abraham's boſom: leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone; leſt they fall into ſin, or into any calamity and diſtreſs; leſt the leaſt hurt or miſchief befall them, or the leaſt injury be done them; ſee Prov. iii. 23. The Targum interprets it of the evil concupiſcence, or corruption of nature, which is like a ſtone; ſee Ezek. xxxvi. 26.

℣. 13. Thou ſhalt tread upon the lion and adder, &c.] Or be unhurt by ſuch ſavage and poiſonous creatures; as the Iſraelites, when they travelled through the wilderneſs, in which were ſerpents and ſcorpions; and many of the ſervants of God have been delivered from them, or have ſlain them, as Sampſon, David, and Daniel; and ſo Chriſt was among the wild beaſts in the wilderneſs, and yet not touched or hurt by them; and his diſciples had power given them by him to tread on ſerpents and ſcorpions, and to take up ſerpents, without receiving any damage from them; and when a viper faſtened on the hands of the apoſtle Paul, he ſhook it off, without being hurt by it; ſee Mark i. 13. and xvi. 18. Luke x. 19. Acts xxviii. 5. it may be underſtood figuratively of Satan, who, for his voraciouſneſs and cruelty, is compared to a lion; and for his craft and ſubtlety, to a ſerpent, 1 Pet. v. 8. Rev. xii. 9. the young lion and the dragon ſhalt thou trample under ſoot; which alſo may be underſtood of the great dragon, the old ſerpent, called the Devil and Satan; whom Chriſt trampled under his feet when he hung on the croſs, and ſpoiled him and his principalities and powers; and who, in a ſhort time, will be bruiſed under the feet of his people, as he has been already by the ſeed of the woman, Gen. iii. 15. Rom. xvi. 20.

℣. 14. Becauſe he hath ſet his love upon me, &c.] Theſe are the words of God himſelf; and, according to Aben Ezra, are directed to the angels, deſcribing the good man, and making promiſes to him; and in this clauſe he is repreſented as one that had ſet his love upon the Lord, being firſt loved by the Lord, and having the grace of love wrought in his heart by him: the phraſe denotes the ſtrength of his affection to God, and the ſincerity of it; its ſingularity, being placed alone on him, and the ſettlement and fixedneſs of it, ſo as nothing could ſeparate from it: this the Lord takes great notice of, and is highly well pleaſed with: hence it follows, therefore will I deliver him; from noiſom diſeaſes before mentioned, from all afflictions into which he comes, and from all the temptations of the evil one, ſo as that he ſhall not be hurt or deſtroyed by them: I will ſet him on high; on the rock Chriſt Jeſus, that is higher than he, higher than the angels, higher than the heavens, and where he is now out of the reach of all his enemies, and will be ſet hereafter on high in heaven, among princes, inheriting the throne of glory; yea, even ſet upon the ſame throne with Chriſt himſelf: becauſe he hath known my name; himſelf, his being, and perfections; his ſon, the angel of his preſence, in whom his name, nature, and perfections are; and his name as proclaimed in him, a God gracious and merciful; and this not merely notionally, but experimentally, and affectionately and fiducially; for ſuch, that truly know him, love him, and truſt in him; and theſe exalt him, and ſo are exalted and ſet on high by him.

℣. 15. He ſhall call upon me, and I will anſwer him, &c.] God is to be invoked by prayer, and to be called upon in every time of trouble, in faith and with fervency, in truth and uprightneſs, and ſincerity of ſoul; and he himſelf directs and encourages to it, and promiſes an anſwer, which he always ſooner or later gives; for he is a God, hearing and anſwering prayer; ſee Pſ. l. 15. I will be with him in trouble; the Lord knows his people in adverſity; he viſits them in their affliction, grants his gracious preſence with them, ſupports them under it, that they are not overwhelmed by it; he bears them up and through it, and makes all things work together for their good: I will deliver him, and honour him; deliverance is again promiſed, to denote the certainty of it; and with this addition, that the Lord will honour ſuch that know him, and love him: all his ſaints are honoured by him, by taking them into his family, and giving them a name better than that of ſons and daughters of the greateſt potentate; by clothing them with the righteouſneſs of his Son; by adorning them with the graces of his Spirit; by granting them communion and fellowſhip with himſelf, and by bringing them to his kingdom and glory.

℣. 16. With long life will I ſatisfy him, &c.] In this world: the ſaints live in it as long as they chuſe to live; and when they come to die, be it when it will, they are like Abraham, full of years, or ſatisfied with them; they have had enough of them, and would not live always here; but, with good old Simeon, deſire to depart in peace; and in the other world they ſhall be ſatisfied with length of days, for ever and ever, even with eternal life; and nothing ſhort of this will ſatisfy a good man: and ſhew him my ſalvation; Jeſus Chriſt, the author of ſalvation, whom God appointed to do it, and who has finiſhed it; ſalvation itſelf, wrought out by him; its fulneſs and ſuitableneſs, and intereſt in it; and alſo eternal glory and happineſs, the completion and conſummation of ſalvation: the former is ſhewn unto and ſeen by faith here; the latter will be ſeen and enjoyed in heaven to all eternity. Aben Ezra and Kimchi refer this ſalvation to the days of the Meſſiah.

PSAL. XCII.

A pſalm or ſong for the Sabbath-day.

MANY of the Jewiſh writers [a] think that this pſalm was written by the firſt man Adam, and ſo the Targum, "a hymn or ſong which the firſt man ſaid for the ſabbath-day." But had it been a compoſure of his, one would think it ſhould have been placed at the head of this collection of pſalms, and before that of Moſes, Pſ. xc. beſides there were no muſical inſtruments then for this pſalm to be ſung on, as in ℣. 3. for they ſay it was made by him quickly after his creation, and his ejection from paradiſe; for Jubal was the father of them that handle the harp and organ; nor were there any number of enemies and wicked men to riſe up againſt him, as in ℣. 7, 9, 11. Nor was it written by Moſes, as others have thought; but rather by David, to whom the Arabic verſion aſcribes it; the muſical inſtruments, the number of enemies, and the mention of the houſe and courts of the Lord, beſt agree with his times. It was made for the ſabbath-day, and to be uſed upon it; and directs to the work and worſhip of it; praiſing of God and celebrating his works, attending his houſe and ordinances; even for the ſeventh day-ſabbath, which God inſtituted and appointed the Jews to obſerve; and which in David's time was religiouſly kept; though ſome underſtand this of the time of reſt which David had from his enemies round about him, and apply it to all ſuch times of reſt from tyranny and perſecution, which the church of God in any period enjoys; and which is a proper ſeaſon for praiſe and thankſgiving. Some Jewiſh writers refer it to the world to come, which will be all-ſabbath, even to the days of the Meſſiah, as Jarchi and others; ſo Theodoret; ſee Heb. iv. 9.

℣. 1. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, &c.] For all mercies, temporal and ſpiritual, tual, for Chriſt and ſalvation by him, for the goſpel, and for goſpel-opportunities and ordinances; for ſuch days and ſeaſons this pſalm was compoſed for. It is good ſo to do, for it is the will of God, that we ſhould in and for every thing give thanks; it is due unto him, and is our reaſonable ſervice; it is well-pleaſing unto God through Chriſt; it is pleaſant work for the ſaints themſelves, and is profitable unto them; to be thankful for what they have, is the way to have more. Kimchi connects this with the title, the ſabbath-day is good to give thanks unto the Lord; it is a very fit opportunity for ſuch ſervice; when a man is at leiſure from worldly buſineſs, and his heart is engaged in ſpiritual exerciſes, and eſpecially when it is warmed with the love of God: and to ſing praiſes unto thy name, O moſt high; a name and epithet of God, ſuitable to his majeſty and glory, to his ſuper-eminence over all his creatures, and the place where he dwells, and to whom the higheſt praiſes are due; theſe two phraſes, giving thanks, and ſinging praiſe, are much the ſame; only with this difference, the former may be done in prayer, and without the modulation of the voice, as well as with it; the latter only with it; hence theſe two are mentioned as diſtinct things in Eph. v. 19, 20.

℣. 2. To ſhew forth thy loving-kindneſs in the morning, &c.] God has ſhewn forth his loving-kindneſs in Chriſt, and Chriſt has ſhewn it in a miniſterial way; and ſaints ſhould ſhew it forth alſo with their lips, to warm the hearts of one another, and encourage diſtreſſed minds; this ſhould be a part, and a conſiderable one of their thankſgiving and praiſe; as it will appear to be, when the objects of it are conſidered, not angels but men, and theſe the worſt and vileſt; the inſtances of it in election, redemption, vocation, adoption, and eternal life; and the freeneſs, earlineſs, and immoveableneſs of it; and this is to be done in the morning, not of the ſabbath-day only, but every other day, giving praiſe and thanks for the mercies of the night. Jarchi interprets it of the time of ſalvation: and thy faithfulneſs every night; or in the nights[b]; not the night, and goings out of the ſabbath only, ſo Arama; but every other night, obſerving and declaring the faithfulneſs and truth of God in his counſels and covenant, in his word and promiſes, and in the preſervation of his people, and the continuance of favours to them; particularly praiſing his name, and giving thanks unto him openly for the mercies of the day paſt: morning and night being mentioned may have ſome reſpect to the morning and evening-ſacrifices; and may ſignify that our ſacrifices of praiſe ſhould be offered up to God continually, Heb. xiii. 15.

℣. 3. Upon an inſtrument of ten ſtrings, &c.] An harp of ten ſtrings, as the Targum. The harp invented by Terpander had only ſeven ſtrings[c]; according to Pliny[d], Simonides added the 8th, and Timotheus the 9th; but this of David was of ten ſtrings: and upon the pſaltery; of which ſee the note on Pſ. xxxiii. 2. upon the harp with a ſolemn ſound; or upon Higgaon with the harp; which Higgaon, Aben Ezra ſays, was either the tune of a ſong, or an inſtrument of muſic; all theſe inſtruments of muſic were typical of the ſpiritual joy and melody which the ſaints have in their hearts, when they praiſe the Lord; hence mention is made of harps in particular in this ſpiritual ſenſe, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, Rev. v. 8. and xiv. 2, 3. and xv. 2, 3.

℣. 4. For thou Lord haſt made me glad through thy work, &c.] Either of creation, which work is mentioned in the precept of the ſabbath, as an argument for it; and therefore a very proper work to be remembered and obſerved on that day; or of providence, which in general extends to all men, but eſpecially to them that believe; or of the work of redemption wrought out by Chriſt, which is cauſe of great joy and gladneſs; or of the work of grace upon the ſoul, which when a man is ſatisfied of, gives him infinite pleaſure, as knowing it will be performed until the day of Chriſt; and when a man is in ſuch a joyful frame of ſpirit, he is in a very ſuitable one to ſing the praiſes of God, Jam. v. 13. I will triumph in the works of thine hands; thoſe before mentioned; or ſhout aloud for joy, on account of them; and alſo triumph over all enemies, as being out of the reach of them, ſo as to be hurt and ruined by them.

℣. 5. O Lord, how great are thy works, &c.] Of nature, providence, and grace, both for quantity and for quality, for number, excellency, and glory, as they are a diſplay of God's wiſdom, power, and goodneſs; ſee Pſ. civ. 24. and thy thoughts are very deep; his counſels, purpoſes, and deſigns, they are unfathomable and unſearchable; ſee 1 Cor. ii. 10.

℣. 6. A brutiſh man knoweth not, &c.] The loving-kindneſs of the Lord, and his faithfulneſs, nor how to ſhew them forth, nor his great works and deep thoughts; man was made originally far above the brute creatures, and had them all under his dominion; but, ſinning, became like the beaſts that periſh; and is in ſcripture often compared to one or other of them, as the horſe, aſs, &c. a brutiſh man is one that only knows things naturally, as brute beaſts do, and in which alſo he corrupts himſelf; he is governed by ſenſe and not by reaſon, and much leſs by faith, which he has not; one that indulges his ſenſual appetite, whoſe God is his belly, and minds nothing but earth and earthly things; and tho' he has an immortal ſoul, has no more care of it, and concern about it, than a beaſt that has none; he lives like one, without fear or ſhame; and in ſome things acts below them, and at laſt dies as they do, without any thought of, or regard unto a future ſtate: neither doth a fool underſtand this; what is before ſaid, or elſe what follows in the next verſe, as Jarchi and others interpret it, concerning the end and event of the proſperity of the wicked; Arama interpets it of the Gentiles not knowing this law of the land, the ſabbath, and ſo rejected it: a fool is the ſame with the brutiſh man, one that is ſo, not in things natural and civil, but in things moral, ſpiritual, and religious.

℣. 7. When the wicked ſpring as the graſs, &c.] Out of the earth, as they do, and are of the earth earthly, and become numerous as ſpires of graſs, and look gay and beautiful for a while as that does; but like it weak and unſtable, and of a ſhort continuance: and when all the workers of iniquity do flouriſh; in the health of their bodies; not being afflicted as other men, and their eyes ſtanding out with fatneſs; whilſt a Job, an upright man, is ſmitten with boils from the crown of the head to the ſole of the foot: in wealth and riches, in which they increaſe often to ſuch a degree, as to think of pulling down their barns, and building greater, to put their ſubſtance in; in their progeny and offſpring, ſpring, having a numerous iſſue; as well as in their cattle, and the ſtanding of them, and in other ſtores; likewiſe in their power and authority, grandeur and glory, being ſet in high places of honour and profit, though ſlippery ones: theſe are the ungodly, who are wicked at heart, and ſhew it by their wicked works; who are continually commiting ſin, it is the courſe of their converſation, and yet proſper in the world; which is ſometimes a ſtumbling-block to God's people, and a hardening of ſinners, who conſider not that it is that they ſhall be deſtroyed for ever; they are like brute beaſts, made to be taken and deſtroyed, and as lambs and others creatures are nouriſhed and fattened for the day of ſlaughter, 2 Pet. ii. 12. James v. 5. and as land is manured and cultivated, and graſs ſprings up and flouriſhes, that it may be, when grown, cut down, and become the fodder of beaſts, or the fuel of fire; ſo the proſperity of the wicked iſſues in their ruin, and is an aggravation of their damnation; their deſtruction is of ſoul and body in hell, and is an everlaſting one; the Targum is, "and it ſhall be that God ſhall deſtroy them for ever."

℣. 8. But thou Lord art moſt high for evermore, &c.] God is the moſt high; that is one of his names; he is above all, is higher than the higheſt; and he dwells on high, and looks down upon the inhabitants of the earth, and ſees what is doing among them; and to him they will be accountable another day for what they do; and when wicked men periſh, being deſtroyed, he will continue for ever in all his greatneſs, glory, and majeſty; for there ſeems to be an antitheſis in this verſe to the former, or between wicked men and the Lord; and beſides he endures for ever to inflict puniſhment upon them; and therefore it is that they ſhall be deſtroyed for ever.

℣. 9. For lo thine enemies, O Lord, &c.] The particle lo, or behold, is not uſed for the ſake of God, but for the ſake of men; to excite their attention, and to obſerve unto them, that thoſe who are everlaſtingly deſtroyed are the enemies of the Lord; who are enemies in their minds by wicked works, yea enmity itſelf againſt God; and therefore their perdition is juſt as well as certain; ſooner or later theſe ſhall be brought forth and ſlain before him; and for the certainty of it it is repeated, for lo thine enemies ſhall periſh; the Targum adds, in the world to come: all the workers of iniquity ſhall be ſcattered; one from another, and not be able to unite and combine together againſt the ſaints, as they have done; or they ſhall be ſeparated from them at the laſt day, being placed at Chriſt's left hand; and ſhall not ſtand in judgment, nor in the congregation of the righteous; and ſo the Targum, "and all the workers of iniquity ſhall be ſeparated from the congregation of the righteous;" ſee Pſ. i. 5.

℣. 10. But my horn ſhalt thou exalt like the horn of an unicorn, &c.] Which is ſaid to be very high and ſtrong, ſee Deut. xxxiii. 17. this may be underſtood of the eſtabliſhment of David's kingdom, of his royal authority, power, and the glory of it, ſignified by his horn; which was fulfilled when he had ſubdued the neighbouring nations, and the kings of them, and was exalted above them, and had reſt from all his enemies; and may be applied unto the Meſſiah, the horn of David, the horn of ſalvation raiſed up in his houſe, Pſ. cxxxii. 17. Luke i. 69. and ſo may refer to his exaltation at the right hand of God, and the ſtrength and glory of his kingdom; ſee 1 Sam. ii. 10. and alſo may be interpreted of every good man, in oppoſition to the wicked; who though low and abaſed, God will exalt and ſet them among princes, and cauſe them to inherit the throne of glory, and even to ſit down on the ſame throne with Chriſt; ſee 1 Sam. ii. 8. Rev. iii. 21. I ſhall be anointed with freſh oil; oil of olive, as the Targum; oil of myrrhe, as Aben Ezra; it may reſpect David's unction to office, as king of Iſrael; for not only after he had been anointed by Samuel, but even after he was anointed by the men of Judah as king over them, he was afreſh anointed by all the tribes of Iſrael as their king, 2 Sam. ii. 4. and v. 3. oil often ſignifies the Spirit of God, his gifts and graces; and freſh oil may intend new ſupplies of his grace out of the fulneſs of it, which is in Chriſt; and alſo the renewed joys and comforts of the Holy Spirit, who is the oil of gladneſs, Chriſt was anointed with above his fellows, and is given to his people in meaſure.

℣. 11. Mine eyes alſo ſhall ſee my deſire on mine enemies, &c.] The Targum ſupplies thus, "ſhall ſee deſtruction;" Aben Ezra, ſhall ſee the vengeance of God, as in Pſ. lviii. 10. and Kimchi, as we do, ſhall ſee what I will, or my deſire; which aroſe not from a revengeful ſpirit, or from a ſpirit of private revenge, but from a regard to the glory of God and the honour of his name; and in no other view could the deſtruction of fellow-creatures, though his enemies, be grateful to him: and mine ears ſhall hear my deſire of the wicked that riſe up againſt me; he ſhould ſee the ruin of ſome, and hear of the deſtruction of others; that which his eyes ſaw not, his ears ſhould hear; the report would be brought to him; as in the latter day the voice of the angel will be heard, Babylon is fallen; and other voices heard in heaven, giving glory to God; an account of which will be acceptable to the ſaints, becauſe of the juſtice of God, and the honour of it, as well as becauſe it will make for their future peace and comfort, Rev. xviii. 2. and xix. 1, 2.

℣. 12. The righteous ſhall flouriſh like the palm-tree, &c.] Not like graſs, as the wicked, ℣. 7. which is weak and tender, and ſoon cut down; but like trees, and like palm-trees, that are firm and ſtrong, and of a long continnance: the word for righteous being of the ſingular number, has led ſome to think that Chriſt is meant; but though he is eminently the righteous One, being ſo in himſelf, and the author of righteouſneſs to others, yet not he, but his church and people are compared to a palm-tree, Cant. vii. 7, 8. the reaſon why the ſingular number is made uſe of, is, as Aben Ezra thinks, becauſe the righteous are very few, in compariſon of the wicked: the ſenſe is, that every one of the righteous, or every one that is righteous, through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to them, and are created a-new in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, and live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, are like the flouriſhing palm-trees; which grow upright, and under the greateſt preſſures, and riſe upwards againſt the greateſt weight upon them [e]; whoſe force and vigour is on the top of them, which being cut off, they die; which delight in hot climates and ſunny places, bear a delicious fruit, are ever green, are very durable, and their branches uſed in token of joy and victory; it is ſaid to be a perfect image of a man, and in many things to reſemble him [f]: ſo truly righteous perſons are upright right ones in heart and life, grow up into their head, Chriſt, and riſe up heavenwards in their deſires and affections; and, like the Iſraelites, the more they are preſſed with the weight of afflictions, the more they grow; their grace and ſtrength, their life and vigour, lie in their head, Chriſt; from whom was it poſſible they could be ſeparated, as it is not, they would inſtantly die; they flouriſh under him, the ſun of righteouſneſs, and his warming beams of love, and bring forth the fruits of righteouſneſs by him, to the glory of God; their leaf of profeſſion does not wither, but is always green; the grace of God, which is in them, being an incorruptible and never-dying ſeed: hence, in the iſſue, they make that palm-bearing company in Rev. vii. 9. who are more than conquerors thro' Chriſt, that has loved them: the Greek verſion is, as the phœnix, which ſome of the antients underſtood of a bird ſo called, ſuppoſed to riſe out of its aſhes, and uſe it to prove the reſurrection of the dead[d]: he ſhall grow like a cedar in Lebanon; where the beſt, talleſt, largeſt, and ſtrongeſt cedars grow; ſee the note on Iſ. xxxvii. 24. to which the righteous are compared, who grow up by degrees higher and higher, even to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; and, ſtronger and ſtronger in him, go from ſtrength to ſtrength, having their ſpiritual ſtrength renewed by him; and caſt forth their roots in him, like Lebanon, and the cedars there; and ſpread their boughs and branches, like them, in the exerciſe of grace and diſcharge of duty; and grow in every grace, of faith, hope, love, humility, ſelf-denial, and ſubmiſſion to the will of God, and in the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt; and are durable as the cedar, never die, their life being hid with Chriſt in God. Kimchi refers this to the days of the Meſſiah.

℣. 13. Thoſe that be planted in the houſe of the Lord, &c.] Or being planted[e], that is, every one of the righteous before mentioned; ſuch are they that are tranſplanted out of the wilderneſs of the world, and are grafted into Chriſt, and are rooted in him, and are planted together in the likeneſs of his death and reſurrection; have the graces of the Spirit of God implanted in them, and have received the engrafted word; and, in conſequence of all this, are grafted into the olive-tree, the church; or have a place, and name there, better than that of ſons and daughters, where they are as plants grown up in their youth; and which is here meant by the houſe of the Lord, in alluſion to the tabernacle, or temple, which had the figure of palm-trees on the walls of it: ſo the Targum interprets it the temple, rendering it, "his children ſhall be planted in the ſanctuary of the Lord:" and tho' it may ſeem ſtrange that trees ſhould be planted in an houſe; it ſhould be remembered, that the houſe of the Lord, or the church, is a garden, whoſe plants are an orchard of pomegranates, Cant. iv. 12, 13. and ſuch are not mere education-plants, or ſuch as are merely by outward profeſſion, or only miniſterially planted, but are planted by the Lord himſelf; and ſo are choice and pleaſant ones, by which God is glorified, and which ſhall never be plucked up: and theſe ſhall flouriſh in the courts of our God; like trees in court-yards before houſes; alluding to the courts in the tabernacle or temple, where the people worſhipped: here the righteous flouriſh like palm-trees, as in the preceding verſe, being rooted in Chriſt, who is the righteous man's root, that yieldeth fruit, and from whom all his fruit is found; but this flouriſhing is not merely in the leaves of profeſſion, but in the fruits of grace and righteouſneſs, being watered with the dews of divine grace, and having the benefit of the word and ordinances; which are the waters of the ſanctuary, that refreſh and quicken the trees of righteouſneſs that grow by it; ſee Ezek. xlvii. 1. 7. 12. This is referred to the times of the Meſſiah, and the Reſurrection, by the antient Jews[f].

℣. 14. They ſhall ſtill bring forth fruit in old age, &c.] Being thus planted and watered, they ſhall not only bring forth the fruits of righteouſneſs, but ſhall continue, and go on to do ſo, and even when they are grown old; contrary to all other trees, which, when old, ceaſe bearing fruit; but ſo do not the righteous; grace is often in the greateſt vigour when nature is decayed; witneſs Abraham, Job, David, Zachariah, and Elizabeth, and good old Simeon, who went to the grave like ſhocks of corn, fully ripe: they ſhall be fat and flouriſhing; or green, full of ſap and moiſture, abound with green leaves and precious fruit; or, in other words, abound in grace, and be fruitful in every good work: being engrafted into the true olive, the church of God, they partake of the root and fatneſs of it; having a place in the houſe of the Lord, they are ſatisfied with the goodneſs and fatneſs thereof, and are made to drink of the river of divine pleaſure; and being in the courts of the Lord, where a feaſt of fat things is provided for them, they eat and feed, and ſo thrive and flouriſh; the alluſion is to fat and flouriſhing palm-trees[g].

℣. 15. To ſhew that the Lord is upright, &c.] Or righteous, that is, faithful; as he is in his counſels, covenant, and promiſes, which he makes good by cauſing his people to grow and flouriſh, and become fruitful; by carrying on the work of grace upon their ſouls, and by preſerving them to the end ſafe to his kingdom and glory; by all which it appears, that he does not, and will not, ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail: the Targum is, "that the inhabitants of the earth may ſhew, &c." he is my rock; the pſalmiſt ſets his ſeal to the truth of God's faithfulneſs, firmneſs, and conſtancy, calling him a rock for his ſtrength and ſtability, and claiming his intereſt in him; declaring he found him to be ſo by experience, even the rock whoſe work is perfect; who always compleats what he undertakes, and finiſhes what he begins, and will not forſake the work of his own hands: juſt and right is he; the rock of ages, that remains firm, ſtedfaſt, and unalterable in all generations: and there is no unrighteouſneſs in him; as not in his ſovereign acts of grace, ſo neither in his providential diſpenſations, either towards good men, or bad men; not in ſuffering the wicked to proſper, as in ℣. 7. and the righteous to be afflicted; nor in puniſhing bad men here, or hereafter; nor in juſtifying ſinners by the righteouſneſs of his ſon, and giving them the crown of righteouſneſs at the laſt day: all his proceedings are in the moſt juſt and equitable manner; ſee Rom. ix. 14.

PSAL. XCIII.

THIS pſalm is by ſome aſcribed to Moſes, by others to David, which latter is more probable; with which agree the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; all which, excepting the Syriac and Arabic verſions, ſay it is a pſalm that was made to be ſung the day before the Sabbath; and it was a cuſtom with the Jews[a] to ſing it on the ſixth day of the week; which it is likely the authors of the Septuagint verſion were acquainted with, and therefore inſerted it in the title of the pſalm, though it is not in the Hebrew text. The ſubject of the pſalm is the kingdom of God; not of nature and providence, but of grace; the kingdom of the Meſſiah; of the certainty, firmneſs, and eternity of it, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of mighty enemies; being eſtabliſhed by the ſure promiſes of God, which his faithfulneſs and holineſs were engaged to make good. Kimchi ſays, that all theſe pſalms, this and the following unto the 101ſt, are concerning the Meſſiah; and ſo ſay Kabvenaki and Ben Melech.

℣. 1. The Lord reigneth, &c.] The King Meſſiah, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the true Jehovah, God over all, the Lord God omnipotent: he has reigned, he was ſet up as king from everlaſting; he reigned throughout the whole old teſtament-diſpenſation; he was promiſed, and propheſied of, as a king; he came as ſuch, in human nature, into the world, though his kingdom was not with obſervation; when he aſcended to heaven, he was made or declared Lord and Chriſt, and was crowned with glory and honour; he now reigns in the hearts of his people, by his ſpirit and grace; and, ere long, he will take to himſelf his great power, and reign more manifeſtly; when the kingdoms of this world ſhall become his, and he ſhall be king over all the earth; and this his government will be ſtill more apparent when he ſhall come in perſon, and reign with his ſaints on earth a thouſand years; and, after that, for ever and ever, in heaven: he is clothed with majeſty; with all the regalia and enſigns of royalty; ſeated on a throne of glory, with a crown of pure gold on his head, a ſceptre of righteouſneſs in his hand, and arrayed with robes of honour and majeſty; ſo that his appearance at his kingdom will be very ſplendid, Pſ. civ. 1, 2. the Lord is clothed with ſtrength, wherewith he hath girded himſelf; as he was, when he came here on earth, travelling in the greatneſs of his ſtrength, and mighty to ſave; bearing the ſins of his people, conflicting with and ſpoiling principalities and powers, and obtaining eternal redemption; and which alſo appeared in carrying the goſpel into the Gentile world, and ſucceeding it, againſt all the oppoſition made unto it; and in making his way into the hearts of ſinners at converſion, binding the ſtrong man armed, and diſpoſſeſſing him, and taking his place; in ſtrengthening them with ſtrength, in the inward man, againſt him and all enemies; and keeping them by his power, through faith, unto ſalvation: and which will be further manifeſt in the deſtruction of antichriſt, and in the ruin of all the antichriſtian ſtates, which will make way for his ſpiritual reign; and eſpecially, this will be ſeen, at his perſonal coming, by raiſing the dead in Chriſt, cauſing the heavens and earth to paſs away, and making new ones; and binding Satan for a thouſand years, that he may give no diſturbance to his ſubjects, during that time: the world alſo is eſtabliſhed, that it cannot be moved; the world to come, of which Chriſt is the father; that which is not put into ſubjection to angels, Iſ. ix. 6. Heb. ii. 5. the goſpel-diſpenſation, the church-ſtate in it; which, though it has been unſettled, the church has been toſſed about with tempeſts, and has been removed from place to place, and obliged to fly into the wilderneſs; yet, in the latter day, it will be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains: this is one of the glorious things that are ſpoken of it, and for the accompliſhment of which we ſhould earneſtly pray, and give the Lord no reſt until it is; after which it ſhall never be moved again; it ſhall be a tabernacle, that ſhall never be taken down; there will be no enemies to attempt it; all will be vanquiſhed and deſtroyed; the beaſt, the falſe prophet, and the old ſerpent the devil, Pſ. lxxxvii. 3. 5. Iſ. ii. 2. and lxii. 7. and xxxiii. 20.

℣. 2. Thy throne is eſtabliſhed of old, &c.] Or prepared from eternity[b]; Chriſt was ſet up, and anointed as king, from everlaſting; he had a kingdom appointed and prepared for him ſo early; and his throne, which is prepared in the heavens, is an eſtabliſhed one; it is for ever and ever; his kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom; of his government, and the increaſe of it, there is no end: thou art from everlaſting; as a divine perſon, as God, and the Son of God; or he could not have been anointed unto or inveſted with the kingly office ſo early; nor have had a glory with his father before the world began: his eternal exiſtence, as God, accounts for the eſtabliſhment of his throne of old, without which it could not be.

℣. 3. The floods have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voice, &c.] The Targum adds, "in a ſong," taking the words in a good ſenſe; and ſo ſome of the antients, as Jerome particularly, underſtood them of the apoſtles and their miniſtrations; who lifted up their voice like a trumpet, which went into all the world, and unto the ends of the earth; and who came with the fulneſs of the gifts and graces of the Spirit, and were attended with a force and power which bore down all before them: but rather by the floods are meant the enemies of Chriſt, his kingdom, and intereſt; and by their lifting up their voice, the oppoſition made by them thereunto; ſee Iſ. viii. 7, 8. and xvii. 12, 13. Pſ. cxxiv. 4, 5. and xviii. 4. this was fulfilled in the Jews and Gentiles, who raged, like foaming waves of the ſea, againſt Chriſt, and lift up their voices to have him crucified; in the Roman emperors, and in the ten perſecutions under them; in thoſe floods of errors and hereſies, which the dragon has caſt out of his mouth to devour the church of Chriſt, againſt which the ſpirit of the Lord has lift up a ſtandard, in all ages; in the antichriſtian kingdoms, compared to many waters, on which the whore of Rome is ſaid to ſit, Rev. xvii. 1. 15. and eſpecially in antichriſt himſelf, who has opened his mouth in blaſphemy againſt God, his tabernacle, and they that dwell therein; and will be further fulfilled in the laſt perſecution and ſlaying of the witneſſes, and in the Gog and Magog-army, which ſhall encompaſs the beloved city and camp of the ſaints. Kimchi interprets it of Gog and Magog, and of the kings that ſhall be gathered together to fight againſt Jeruſalem: the floods lift up their waves; with great ſtrength, making a great noiſe, and threatening with ruin and deſtruction, as before.

℣. 4. The Lord on high is mightier than the noiſe of many waters, &c.] Chriſt is the moſt high; he is God over all, higher than the higheſt; he is, as King, higher than the kings of the earth; he is in the higheſt heavens, and higher than they; he is highly exalted, as Mediator, at the right hand of God: he is the mighty God, and mighty Saviour; yea, he is Almighty, and therefore mightier than all his enemies, and the noiſe they make, and the force they uſe; he is ſtronger than the ſtrong man armed; than Satan, and all his principalities and powers; than all the perſecuting princes and potentates of this world; than Antichriſt, and all the antichriſtian ſtates: yea, than the mighty waves of the ſea; the ſame are intended as before [c].

℣. 5. Thy teſtimonies are very ſure, &c.] Meaning not the works of God, of nature, and providence, which teſtify of his power and godhead, and other perfections of it; rather the word of God, the ſcriptures of truth, the law and goſpel; the one being a teſtimony of his will to be done by men, the other a teſtimony of his good-will to men; which are ſure and true, and to be believed; tho' it ſeems beſt of all to underſtand them of the promiſes of God, which teſtify what he will do, or ſhall be done hereafter, and which are all yea and amen in Chriſt; and eſpecially thoſe that reſpect his kingdom and intereſt, the glory, ſtability, and eternity of it, things which are the principal ſubjects of this pſalm; all which promiſes are ſure and certain, true and faithful, firm, and to be believed; ſee Rev. xix. 9. and xxi. 5. and xxii. 6. holineſs becometh thine houſe, O Lord, for ever; or unto length of days [d]: holineſs is a dreſs or clothing; though it is not the robe of a juſtifying righteouſneſs, yet it is an inner garment, which makes the ſaints all glorious within; it is a very beautiful and becoming dreſs; it is called the beauty of holineſs, and it is always becoming; it becomes the church and people of God, all that are of the houſhold of God, both now and for evermore; it will never be out of uſe; it will be more and more in uſe, both in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, and in the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate, and in heaven to all eternity; ſee Zach. xiv. 20. Rev. xxi. 27. Heb. xii. 14.

PSAL. XCIV.

SOME, as Jarchi and others, think this pſalm was written by Moſes; others, with greater probability, aſſign it to David; as do the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; and which all but the Syriac verſion ſay it was compoſed to be ſung on the fourth day of the week, on which day the Talmudiſts ſay it was ſung; ſee the argument of the preceding pſalm. This pſalm and others, that go before and follow, are without any title in the Hebrew bible: the title of it in the Syriac verſion is, "a pſalm of David, concerning the company of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; but, ſpiritually, concerning the perſecution againſt the church;" not of the oppreſſion of the Iſraelites in Egypt, as ſome; nor of the Jews in their preſent exile, as Kimchi; but rather of the people of God under the tyranny of Antichriſt; who are repreſented as complaining of his inſults and cruelty, and as comforting themſelves in the hopes of deliverance, and in the view of his deſtruction.

℣. 1. O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth, &c.] As it does to God, and to him only; not to heathen deities, one of which has the name of Vengeance given it, Acts xxviii. 4. nor to Satan, the enemy and avenger, and his ſpiteful principalities and powers; nor to men, who are not to exerciſe private revenge on their fellow-creatures; only to civil magiſtrates, to whom public revenge belongs, they being God's vicegerents, and repreſenting him; otherwiſe to God only it belongs, againſt whom ſin is committed; and he will, in his own time and way, execute it: he is the God of revenges [e], as the words may be rendered; and this is applicable to Chriſt, who is the true Jehovah, and God over all: it was he that took vengeance on Sodom and Gomorrah, and rained from the Lord fire and brimſtone on them; and who took vengeance on the inventions of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs; and when he came in the fleſh, he came with vengeance to deſtroy Satan and his works, as it was promiſed and propheſied he ſhould, Iſ. xxxv. 4. and lxi. 2. and lxiii. 4. forty years after his death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion, he came in his power and kingdom, and took vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, for their unbelief and rejection of him, Luke xxi. 22. and at the opening of the ſixth ſeal, his wrath came upon Rome pagan, in a manner intolerable to them, for their cruel perſecutions of his church and people; and the cry of the ſouls under the altar, was much like what is uttered in this pſalm; ſee Rev. vi. 9—17. and at the time of his ſpiritual coming and reign, he will avenge the blood of his ſaints on Rome papal, or Antichriſt, whom he will deſtroy with the breath of his mouth; and the ſaints will be called upon to rejoice, and will rejoice when they ſee the vengeance, Rev. xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2. and his perſonal coming will be in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not his goſpel, and when all the wicked will ſuffer the vengeance of eternal fire, 2 Theſſ. i. 8. Jude ℣. 7. O God, to whom vengeance belongeth; which is repeated to obſerve the certainty of it, and to expreſs the vehement and importunate deſire of the pſalmiſt and thoſe he repreſents, that he would ſhew himſelf to be ſo, as follows: ſhew thyſelf; or ſhine forth [f], as in Pſ. lxxx. 1. either at his incarnation, when he appeared as the day-ſpring from on high; yea, as the ſun of righteouſneſs; or, in the miniſtry of the goſpel, the great light which ſhone firſt on the inhabitants of Judea and Galilee, and then on the Gentile world; or in his gracious preſence with his people, which is expreſſed, by cauſing his face to ſhine upon them, Pſ. lxxx. 7. or in the protection of them, and deſtruction of their enemies; which is a ſhewing himſelf ſtrong on their behalf, an appearing to the joy of the one, and the confuſion of the other; and in this manner will Chriſt ſhew himſelf in the latter day.

℣. 2. Lift up thyſelf, thou, O judge of the earth, &c.] A title very proper to Chriſt, and which is given him by Abraham, Gen. xviii. 25. who then appeared to him in an human form, and with whom he was converſing; he judges his own people on earth, all judgment being committed to him by the Father; he judges and chaſtiſes them, that they may not be condemned with the world; he judges and diſtinguiſhes between them and the world; he protects and defends them, he pleads their cauſe, and avenges them on their enemies: and for this purpoſe, he is requeſted to lift up himſelf; being in the apprehenſion of his people as one laid down and aſleep, quite negligent and careleſs of them; and therefore they deſire that he would awake and ariſe, and exert his power, and ſhew himſelf higher than their enemies; that he would mount his throne, and execute juſtice and judgment on the wicked, agreeable to his character and office: render a reward to the proud; an evil reward, as the Targum; to proud perſecutors of the church, who through their pride perſecute the poor ſaints; and to render tribulation to them is but juſt with the Lord; to antichriſt that exalts himſelf above all that is called God, and to all his haughty and ambitious dependents and followers, cardinals, biſhops, prieſts, &c.

℣. 3. Lord, how long ſhall the wicked, &c.] The reign of Antichriſt is thought long by the ſaints, being the ſpace of 42 months, or 1260 days or years; and this tries the faith and patience of the church of Chriſt, Rev. xiii. 5, 10. how long ſhall the wicked triumph? in their proſperity, and in the ruins of the intereſt of Chriſt; the Targum is, "how long ſhall they ſit in tranquillity, or proſperity?" the triumphing of the wicked may ſeem long, but it is but ſhort, Job xx. 5. the inhabitants of the Romiſh juriſdiction will triumph when the witneſſes are ſlain, and ſend gifts to one another, as a token of their joy; but this won't laſt long, no more than three days, or three years and a half; and while Antichriſt is ſaying, I ſit a queen, and ſhall know no ſorrow, her plagues ſhall come upon her in one day, Rev. xi. 10, 11. and xviii. 7, 8.

℣. 4. How long ſhall they utter, and ſpeak hard things, &c.] Againſt Chriſt, his perſon and offices, his miniſters, his people, his truths and ordinances; this is very applicable to Antichriſt, who has a mouth ſpeaking blaſphemies, and which he opens, and with it blaſphemes God, his tabernacle, and them that dwell in it, Rev. xiii. 5, 6. The Targum is, "will they utter and ſpeak reproachful words?" contumelies or calumnies; and ſuch are uttered by the antichriſtian party againſt the true profeſſors of religion in great abundance, as water out of a fountain, as the firſt word * uſed ſignifies; ſee Jude, ℣. 15. and all the workers of iniquity boaſt themſelves; the juſt character of the followers of Antichriſt, who work an abomination, and make a lie, and whoſe whole courſe of life, and even of religion, is a ſeries of ſin and iniquity, Rev. xxi. 27. and xxii. 15. theſe lift up themſelves againſt the Lord, like the high branches of a tree, as Aben Ezra; or praiſe themſelves, as Jarchi; being proud, they are boaſters; boaſt of their antiquity and precedence, of their wealth and riches, of their power and authority, of infallibility, and works of ſupererogation, and the like.

℣. 5. They break in pieces thy people, O Lord, &c.] Not the Iſraelites, as Kimchi; but the church of Chriſt, by their anathemas, cruel edicts, and perſecutions; by confiſcating their goods, impriſoning their perſons, putting them to cruel deaths; and by ſuch means think to wear out the ſaints of the moſt high, the Lord's covenant and peculiar people; which is mentioned as an aggravation of their ſin, and as an argument with the Lord to ariſe on their behalf: and afflict thine heritage; the church ſtiled God's heritage, 1 Pet. v. 3. whom the Lord has choſen for his inheritance; and are dear to him, as his portion, his jewels, and even as the apple of his eye; and yet theſe are afflicted all manner of ways by their perſecuting enemies, as Iſrael was of old in Egypt.

℣. 6. They ſlay the widow and the ſtranger, &c.] Who are ſo both in a literal and figurative ſenſe, ſuch who are weak and feeble, helpleſs and friendleſs; or who are deprived of their faithful paſtors, who were as huſbands and fathers to them, and who profeſs themſelves pilgrims and ſtrangers here; theſe the followers of the man of ſin have inhumanly put to death, ſuppoſing they did God good ſervice: and murther the fatherleſs; having ſlain the parents in a cruel and barbarous manner, murther their infants; or figuratively ſuch who are as orphans, deſtitute of their ſpiritual fathers, who were the inſtruments of begetting them in Chriſt, and of nouriſhing them with the words of faith and good doctrine; with the blood of theſe the whore of Rome has often made herſelf drunk, and therefore blood ſhall be given her to drink, Rev. xvii. 5, 6. and xvi. 6, 7.

℣. 7. Yet they ſay, the Lord ſhall not ſee, &c.] The blood they ſhed, the murthers they commit, the miſchief they do, the wickedneſs they are guilty of, ſo flattering themſelves with impunity; ſuch atheiſm reigns at Rome, but God ſees all their abominations, and he'll let them know one day that he does behold them; ſee Pſ. x. 10, 14. neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard it; the ſame as before; this title of the God of Jacob may be conſidered either as put in by the pſalmiſt, as an argument ſtrengthening the faith of the church of God; that being their Covenant-God, he would take notice and care of them, and reſent the injuries done them, and avenge them: or elſe as mentioned by their enemies, ſneering at their confidence in God, whom they called their Covenant-God; that notwithſtanding he would not regard or take any notice of what was done unto them, ſo as to appear in their behalf; all this has been ſaid if not openly with the mouth, yet ſecretly in the heart; the language of their actions has abundantly declared this groſs atheiſm of Antichriſt, and his abettors, who are addreſſed as follows.

℣. 8. Underſtand ye brutiſh among the people, &c.] Or, the moſt brutiſh and ſtupid of all people; eſpecially that profeſs themſelves to be the people of God, or Chriſtians, as the Papiſts do; and who ſeem to be the perſons here addreſſed: brutiſh; to murder the ſervants of the Lord, and drink their blood, till inebriated with it; ſtupid to the laſt degree to think that hereby they did God good ſervice: hence the pope, the head of them, is repreſented both in his ſecular and eccleſiaſtical power by two beaſts; the one riſing out of the ſea with ſeven heads and ten horns, a monſter in nature, moſt like a leopard, his feet as a bear's, and his mouth as a lion's, having the fierceneſs and cruelty of them all; and the other coming out of the earth with two horns like a lamb, but ſpake like a dragon, Rev. xiii. 1, 2, 11. the exhortation to theſe brutiſh creatures ſuppoſes them to be without underſtanding, like the beaſts by whom they are repreſented; or however that they did not make uſe of thoſe intellectual powers which God had given them; had they, they would have learned more humanity to their fellow creatures, and more religion towards God; they would have known more of him than to have ſaid and done what is before declared; wherefore they are called upon to conſider, ſo the word[b] is ſometimes rendered, Pſ. l. 22. the reaſonings about it to be laid before them: and ye fools when will ye be wiſe? fools they are to worſhip ſtocks and ſtones, the images of the virgin Mary, and other ſaints; to give into the groſs atheiſm they do; to diſbelieve the omniſcience of God and his providence, at leaſt to behave as though they did; and think to do the vileſt actions with impunity; wherefore it would be their wiſdom to relinquiſh ſuch ſtupid notions, and do no more ſuch fooliſh and wicked actions.

ỷ. 9. He that planted the ear, &c.] In the human body, with ſo much art and ſkill, in ſo convenient a place, ſo capacious of receiving ſounds, and fitted it with organs ſuited for ſuch a purpoſe: ſhall he not hear? the atheiſm ſpoke in the heart, in the actions, and by the mouths of ſuch blaſphemers of him; the hard ſpeeches ſpoken againſt his Son, his perſon and offices; and againſt his Spirit, his being, and operations; and againſt his people, the ſaints of the moſt High; in ſhort, all thoſe blaſphemies and evil-ſpeakings of God, of his tabernacle, and thoſe that dwell therein: it would be monſtrous ſtupidity to imagine, that that God that communicates a faculty of hearing to his creatures, ſhould not hear himſelf; for none can give that which they have not: he that formed the eye; in ſo curious a manner, with ſuch exquiſite parts; with ſuch fine humours, nerves, and tunics; ſo adapted to receive all objects, and take the impreſs of them in ſo wonderful a manner: ſhall he not ſee? all perſons and things, all the ways and actions of men; certainly he muſt: clouds, rocks, and hills, are no obſtruction to him; the darkneſs and the light are both alike to him; his eyes are every where, and all things are naked and open before him: it is the height of madneſs and folly to think, that that God cannot ſee what men are doing here below, who has given to men eyes to ſee the heavens above, and all their hoſt; and in this ſo ſmall a compaſs to take in the ſight of the largeſt mountains, as well as the moſt minute things: ſince the ſeeing eye, and the hearing ear, are both from the Lord; it may be moſt ſtrongly concluded, that he hears all that is ſaid, and ſees all that is done againſt him and his people; ſee Pro. xx. 12. Exod. iv. 11. A heathen[c] could ſay, "truly there is a God, who hears and ſees all that we do."

ỷ. 10. He that chaſtiſeth the heathen, &c.] As he did the old world, by bringing a flood upon it, and ſweeping away its inhabitants at once; and Sodom and Gomorrah, by raining fire and brimſtone upon them, and conſuming them from off the earth; and the old inhabitants of Canaan, by ejecting them out of their land for their abominations, with other ſimilar inſtances: ſhall he not correct? ſuch audacious wretches, guilty of ſuch atrocious crimes, ſuch horrid murders, and groſs atheiſm? certainly he will, as he has both a right and power to do it. The Targum is, "is it poſſible that he ſhould give the law to his people, and when they have ſinned, ſhould they not be corrected?" and if theſe are corrected and chaſtiſed, then ſurely ſuch daring and inſolent wretches ſhall not go unpuniſhed: or, he that inſtructeth the heathen[d]; by the light of nature in things civil and moral, and therefore has a right to puniſh ſuch who act contrary to it; ſee Rom. ii. 12. he that teacheth man knowledge; that has given him the light of nature; inſpired him with reaſon and underſtanding; taught him more than the beaſts of the field, and made him wiſer than the fowls of the heaven; from whom he has the knowledge of all arts and ſciences, liberal and mechanic, thoſe of the lower as well as of the higher claſs; ſee John i. 9. Job xxxii. 8. and xxxv. 11. Iſ. xxviii. 26, 29. The Targum is, "has not the Lord taught the firſt man knowledge?" that more perfect knowledge of things, which Adam had in innocence, was from the Lord; and therefore, ſhall not he know? all perſons and things? verily he does; he is a God of knowledge, of all knowledge; his knowledge and underſtanding is infinite; it reaches to all perſons, and to all their thoughts, words, and actions: this clauſe is not in the Hebrew text; but is underſtood, and rightly ſupplied; ſee 2 Sam. v. 8. compared with 1 Chron. xi. 6.

ỷ. 11. The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man, &c.] He not only hears their words, and ſees their actions; but he knows their thoughts, the ſecret thoughts of their hearts, though he is afar off from them, and they from him; he is the ſearcher of the hearts, and trier of the reins of the children of men; ſee Pſ. cxxxix. 2, 23, 24. Jer. xvii. 9, 10. and ſo is Chriſt, who is the omniſcient God, and is the Jehovah all along ſpoken to and of in this pſalm; he knows the thoughts of men, and is a critical diſcerner of them, Matt. ix. 3, 4. Heb. iv. 12. that they are vanity; either that their thoughts are vanity; the object of them is vanity, the riches and honours of this world, which are all vanity and vexation of ſpirit; and ſinful luſts and pleaſures, which are vain and uſeleſs, yea, pernicious and hurtful: and ſo are thought in their iſſue and event; they come to nothing, they are without effect; the Lord diſappoints mens devices, and fruſtrates their deſigns; they think of this, and the other, form ſchemes, but cannot execute them: or elſe the ſenſe is, that they themſelves are vanity, as man in his beſt eſtate is; even every man, whether of high or low degree; ſee Pſ. xxxix. 5, 6. and lxii. 9. The Syriac verſion is, for they are a vapour; with which compare James iv. 14. Thales, an heathen philoſopher[e], being aſked, whether mens deeds could be hid from God, anſwered, No, nor their thoughts.

ỷ. 12. Bleſſed is the man whom thou chaſteneſt, O Lord, &c.] Much more happy now, and hereafter, than the proud, inſulting perſecutor of him; he

he is chaſtened of the Lord, that he might not be condemned with the world; he is chaſtened not in wrath, but in love; not with the chaſtiſement of a cruel one, nor indeed of a magiſtrate nor a maſter; but of a tender-hearted father, who always does it for his profit and advantage, and therefore is he bleſſed, or happy; for theſe chaſtenings are tokens of God's love, evidences of ſonſhip, or of a man's being an adopted child of God; are for, and do work for good, either temporal, ſpiritual, or eternal, and even in every ſenſe; and beſides, the Lord grants his preſence in them, ſupports under them, and teaches by them, as follows: and teacheſt him out of thy law; or doctrine[b]; and may be underſtood of the doctrine of the goſpel, as well as of the law; the Lord teaches by his ſpirit, his word, and providences; and, even by afflictive ones, he teaches men their ſins and tranſgreſſions, and ſhews them wherein they have exceeded; brings them to a ſenſe and confeſſion of them, repentance and reformation; he teaches them hereby their duty, both to himſelf and all men, which they have neglected, and departed from; he teaches many leſſons of faith, patience, humility, ſelf-denial, and ſubmiſſion to his will in the ſchool of affliction; here they learn much of God, of his power and faithfulneſs, truth, goodneſs, grace and love, and of evangelical doctrines; of his everlaſting love, of eternal election, the covenant of grace, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; which the Lord makes known unto them at ſuch ſeaſons, and on which account they are pronounced bleſſed, or happy perſons.

℣. 13. That thou mayeſt give him reſt from the days of adverſity, &c.] Or evil[c]; or in the evil days, as the Arabic verſion; for through teaching men under afflictions, they become tranquil and quiet in them; they yield the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs to them; ſuch men patiently bear them; and quietly ſubmit to the will of God in them, and are ſtill, and know that he is God, that does all things well and wiſely: moreover, the Lord does not always chaſten his people; when he has taught them by his rod, and the affliction has anſwered its end, he gives them reſt or intermiſſion from thoſe days of affliction: God does not always ſuffer the rod of the wicked, or perſecution, to be upon the lot of the righteous; he gives his churches reſt at times: in all ages there have been ſome intervals of reſpite; and after the ſlaying of the witneſſes, and their riſing, there will be no more of thoſe days of adverſity; but the times of refreſhing, or reſt, will come, which will make up the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt; and there remains a reſt, or ſabbatiſm, for the people of God, which will laſt a thouſand years; and, after that, an eternal reſt in heaven, which the light afflictions of the ſaints here are working, and are the means of making them meet for it: until the pit be digged for the wicked; hell, the pit of deſtruction, the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone, the everlaſting fire prepared for the devil and his angels: this pit and lake is dug and prepared by the ſovereign will and unchangeable purpoſe and decree of God, for all wicked and chriſtleſs ſinners; particularly for the beaſt and falſe prophet, and his followers, who ſhall be caſt into it, and be tormented in it day and night, and have no reſt; whilſt the ſaints they here perſecuted, will be in the greateſt repoſe, and utmoſt felicity; and when it will appear who are the bleſſed and happy perſons, and who not.

℣. 14. For the Lord will not caſt off his people, &c.] The people whom he has foreknown, his choſen people, whether among Jews or Gentiles, Rom. xi. 1, 2. his covenant-people, whom he has given to Chriſt, and who are redeemed by his blood, and called by his ſpirit and grace: theſe, though he may not ariſe immediately for their help; though he may withdraw his preſence from them for a time, may afflict them, and ſuffer them to be afflicted by others, ℣. 5. he will not caſt them off, at leaſt for ever, ſo as to be removed out of his ſight, or off of his heart, or from his covenant, or out of the hands of his Son, or from being a part of his family, or ſo as to periſh eternally; they are a people near and dear unto him; he takes pleaſure in them, and will not eternally reject them; whoever caſts them off, he will not: neither will he forſake his inheritance; which he has choſen, and values and eſteems as a goodly one; he will not give up his title to it, nor drop his claim upon it, nor relinquiſh his hold and uſe of it; he will not forſake his people for this reaſon, becauſe they are his inheritance, as well as becauſe he has promiſed that he will not: he may ſeem to forſake them, and they may think they are forſaken by him; but he will not forſake neither their perſons in youth nor in old age, nor his work upon their hearts: the church, in the wilderneſs, and under the perſecution of Antichriſt, might ſeem to be caſt off and forſaken; yet is not, being nouriſhed there for a time and times, and half a time, Rev. xii. 14. the note of Arama is, "at the coming of the Meſſiah all this good ſhall be."

℣. 15. But judgment ſhall return unto righteouſneſs, &c.] Which may be underſtood either of the judgment and righteouſneſs of God, which ſeemed to be parted, and ſtand at a diſtance from each other; his conduct and government of the world from his juſtice; the righteous being perſecuted and afflicted, and wicked men ſuffered to proſper; which ſometimes makes it difficult to reconcile the judgment of God, or his government of the world, to his juſtice; ſee Jer. xii. 1. but as this has been made manifeſt in the deſtruction of the Jews, and in the downfal of Rome pagan, the firſt perſecutors of the Chriſtians; ſo it will be ſeen in Rome papal, when the judgments of God will be manifeſt, and appear to be juſt and true; and theſe two, judgment and juſtice, will openly come together, in the ſight of all; as they alſo will at the laſt judgment; ſee Rev. xv. 4. 2 Theſſ. ii. 6, 7. or elſe of the righteouſneſs of men, which, in time of general corruption, ſeems to be fled from them, and to ſtand at a diſtance, from their conduct and behaviour; as in the old world before the flood, and in the times Iſaiah beautifully deſcribes, Iſ. lix. 14, 15. and in the times of Chriſt and his apoſtles; and in the perſecuting times of Rome pagan and papal; and as it will be at the time of the ſlaying of the witneſſes; but upon the riſing of them, which will not be long after, there will be a great pouring down of the Spirit, and a general reformation will follow throughout the world; all the Lord's people will be righteous, not only nominally, but really; every pot in Jeruſalem ſhall be holy; and holineſs ſhall be ſo common as that it is ſaid, it ſhall be upon the bells of the horſes; and in the new heavens and new earth will dwell none but righteous perſons; and then judgment and righteouſneſs will come together indeed: and all the upright in heart ſhall follow it; either judgment, as Jarchi; or righteouſneſs, as Kimchi; not the righteouſneſs of the law, but the righteouſneſs of faith; or rather practical righteouſneſs, works of righteouſneſs, which both the grace wrought in them, and the doctrine of grace received by them, will teach, influence, and engage to purſue after with eagerneſs: or elſe the meaning is, that ſuch who are upright in heart; who have new hearts and right ſpirits formed in them; who have the truth of grace, and the root of the matter in them; whoſe hearts, words, and actions agree; who are ſincere ſouls, Iſraelites indeed, in whom is no guile; theſe will approve and applaud the righteous judgments of God upon Antichriſt; they ſhall follow the juſtice of God with their commendations and praiſes; ſee Rev. xv. 3, 4. and xvi. 6, 7. and xix. 1, 2. The words may be rendered, and all the upright in heart ſhall be after him[d], the Lord; they ſhall follow him whitherſoever he goes, as ſheep follow the ſhepherd, ſervants their maſters, and ſoldiers their general; they ſhall follow him in his own ways, obſerve his commands, and obey his orders; ſee the deſcription of ſuch, that will be with Chriſt, and follow him, before and at the time of Antichriſt's ruin, Rev. xiv. 4. and xvii. 14. and xix. 14. The Targum is, "after him ſhall be redeemed all the upright in heart."

[c] רע mali, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis.

ỿ. 16. Who will riſe up for me againſt the evil-doers? &c.] Theſe are the words of the pſalmiſt, perſonating the church of God, under ſore perſecutions from the antichriſtian party; called evil-doers, becauſe of their thefts, murders, idolatries, ſorceries, and all manner of wickedneſs committed by them, Rev. ix. 21. intimating, that ſhe had looked all around her, and could not obſerve any that ſhe could hope for aſſiſtance from, to fight her battles for her with the enemy, and deliver her out of his hands: the Targum is, "who will riſe up for me, to make war with the evil-doers?" what the church here ſeems to ſay in a deſpairing way, the followers of Antichriſt ſay in a triumphant and inſulting manner; who is like unto the beaſt? who is able to make war with him? Rev. xiii. 4. or who will ſtand up for me againſt the workers of iniquity? to contend or ſtrive with them, as the Targum; ſuggeſting, that ſhe had no friends to appear for her, that had either courage or ſtrength to engage in ſuch a warfare; her caſe was like that of the oppreſſed, Solomon ſpeaks of, Eccl. iv. 1. or the apoſtle Paul's, when none ſtood with him; but all forſook him, excepting the Lord, 2 Tim. iv. 16, 17. and ſo here the church had none to riſe up, and ſtand by her, but the Lord; Michael, the great prince that ſtands for the children and people of God, and who is a match for all the enemies of his church; and he will riſe and ſtand up for them, and fight their battles, and overcome the beaſt and falſe prophet, with the kings of the earth, Dan. xii. 1. Rev. xvii. 14. and xix. 11—20.

ỿ. 17. Unleſs the Lord had been my help, &c.] Againſt her enemies, which were ſo many and mighty, and her friends ſo few and feeble, and having no heart to defend her cauſe; eſpecially this will be the caſe at the time of the ſlaying of the witneſſes; but the Lord will appear, and help her; the ſpirit of life, from him, ſhall enter into them, and cauſe them to live again, and to aſcend up to heaven; and ſhall deſtroy great numbers of their enemies, and the reſt ſhall be affrighted, and give glory to God, Rev. xi. 11, 12, 13. my ſoul had almoſt dwelt in ſilence; or within a little, or muſt quickly[e]; not only have been, but muſt have dwelt, continued in ſilence, in the grave; ſee Pſ. cxv. 17. his caſe being deſperate, like that of the apoſtles, when they had the ſentence of death within themſelves, 2 Cor. i. 10. this is to be underſtood not of the ſoul preciſely, and abſtractly conſidered, which dies not, nor is it ſilent after death; but of the whole perſon, being a part for the whole; and of the perſon, with reſpect to the mortal part, the body, which only dies, and whilſt in a ſtate of ſeparation, or in the grave, is ſilent, and ceaſes from all operations of life: perhaps this may have ſome reſpect to the ſilencing of the witneſſes, which is a principal thing meant by the ſlaying of them; a ſtop put to their miniſtrations, partly by the edicts of their enemies, and partly by the diſcouragement of their friends, their ſhyneſs, and negligence of them; and which ſilence will be almoſt total, if not altogether; though it will laſt but for a ſhort time; they ſhall not dwell or continue in ſilence, but will open their mouths again; ſignified by the angel flying through the midſt of heaven, with the everlaſting goſpel, Rev. xiv. 6.

ỿ. 18. When I ſaid, My foot ſlippeth, &c.] There is no ground for me to ſtand upon; all is over with me; there's no hope nor help for me; I am juſt falling into ruin and deſtruction: ſuch will be the deſperate caſe of the church, at the time before referred to: thy mercy, O Lord, held me up; the extremity of his people, is the Lord's opportunity; then is his ſet time to ariſe, and have mercy on them; then mercy ſteps in, lays a ſolid ground and foundation for hope, and holds up in its arms a ſinking people, and revives a dying cauſe.

ỿ. 19. In the multitude of my thoughts within me, &c.] The word for thoughts is uſed of branches of trees, thick and entwined, and ſo denotes perplexed and diſtreſſing thoughts; ſuch as good men ſometimes have concerning God; his awful and tremendous majeſty; the perfections of his nature, particularly his power, purity, and holineſs; concerning their relation to him, his preſence with them, and good-will towards them, which, becauſe of their ſins, they are ready to doubt of: thoughts concerning ſin; that there are no ſins, like their's, attended with ſuch aggravated circumſtances; that they are ſuch as will not be forgiven; or they fear their corruptions will be too many for them, and they ſhall periſh by them; or that they ſhall ſo fall as to bring diſhonour on the ways of God; and ſometimes, that they have ſinned the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt: thoughts concerning the law of God, their ſins are a violation of, of the holineſs and ſpirituality of it; by comparing themſelves with which, they find they are very deficient, and very carnal; and ready to fear, that all the curſes of it belong to them, and the condemnation of it will light upon them: thoughts concerning Chriſt, the Saviour; that he is the Saviour of others, but not of them; that he is able to ſave, but they cannot think he is willing to ſave ſuch vile ſinners as they are: thoughts concerning the work of the Spirit of God upon them; calling it in queſtion, fearing it was never begun, becauſe of the power and prevalence of ſin and corruption in them: thoughts concerning their preſent and future ſtate; how it is with them now, and how it will be with them hereafter; how they ſhall paſs through the troubles and difficulties of this world, and paſs over Jordan's river, or get through the valley of the ſhadow of death; and how they ſhall appear before the judgment-ſeat of God; and how things will be with them to all eternity: theſe are ſome of the perplexing and diſtreſſing thoughts, a multitude of which riſe up at times in the minds of God's people, who yet are favoured with the ſame gracious experience the pſalmiſt was, expreſſed as follows: thy comforts delight my ſoul; ſuch as flow from the love of God, ſhed abroad in the heart; from the preſence of God enjoyed; from the exceeding great and precious promiſes of the goſpel; from Chriſt, and the things of Chriſt, ſhewn, brought home, and applied by the Spirit; his perſon, offices, fulneſs, righteouſneſs, blood, and ſacrifice; all which are a fund of divine conſolation to a diſtreſſed mind: theſe are the conſolations of God, of which he is the provider, author, and giver, and therefore called the God of all comfort: they come from Chriſt, the conſolation of Iſrael, and by the Spirit the Comforter, who ſheds abroad the love of God in the heart; reveals Chriſt, and the things of Chriſt; opens and applies the promiſes; wherefore theſe comforts are called the comforts of the Holy Ghoſt; and they are uſually enjoyed by means of the word and ordinances, which are breaſts of conſolation; and theſe are not ſmall, but ſtrong, and even everlaſting, and which delight the ſoul: worldly comforts may delight the animal part, and pleaſe the ſenſes, but not delight the ſoul, eſpecially a wounded ſpirit, a diſtreſſed mind; but theſe will ſatiate the weary ſoul, and repleniſh the ſorrowful ſoul with a joy unſpeakable, and full of glory: the pſalmiſt may here perſonate the church in the latter day, when in the midſt of her troubles, and having many diſtreſſing thoughts concerning the iſſue of things; the comforts of God, from his promiſes, will delight her; ℣. 14, 15. that he will not caſt off his people, nor forſake his inheritance; but judgment ſhall return to righteouſneſs; that he will keep her in the hour of temptation, and avenge the blood of her ſlain.

PSALM XCV.

THIS pſalm, though without a title, was written by David, as appears from Heb. iv. 7. and to him the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions aſcribe it. It belongs to the times of the Meſſiah, as Kimchi obſerves; the apoſtle applies it to the Jews of his time, and beſpeaks them in the language of it, Heb. iii. 7—11. and in which time Iſraelites, believers in Chriſt, are called upon to ſerve and worſhip him, in conſideration of his greatneſs in himſelf, and his goodneſs to them. Theodoret thinks, that David ſpoke prophetically of king Joſiah and his times; and wrote it in the perſon of him, and the prieſts of God.

℣. 1. O come, let us ſing unto the Lord, &c.] To Jehovah the Meſſiah, the Lord our righteouſneſs; ſetting forth, in ſongs of praiſe, the glory of his perſon, the riches of his grace, and our thankfulneſs to him for ſpiritual mercies by him: Chriſt is to be the ſubject of our ſpiritual ſongs, and is the perſon to whoſe honour and glory they ſhould be directed: in the new teſtament we are inſtructed to ſing unto the Lord, the Lord Chriſt, Eph. v. 19. Col. iii. 16. and this is what Pliny[a] tells Trajan, the Roman emperor, the Chriſtians in his time did; they ſung an hymn to Chriſt, as to a God: let us make a joyful noiſe to the rock of our ſalvation; to Chriſt, the rock, 1 Cor. x. 4. a rock, for height, being higher than the ſaints, than the kings of the earth, than the angels in heaven, than the heavens themſelves; for ſtrength, being the mighty God, and mighty Saviour; for ſhelter, being the ſaints ſecurity from avenging juſtice and wrath to come: a rock, on which the church and all believers are built, and which endures for ever; the rock of ſalvation, being the author of ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, and the ſtrength and ſecurity of it; not only is he ſtrong to do it, but, being done by him, it is ſafe in him; wherefore ſhouts of joy, and ſongs of praiſe, are due unto him. This ſhews, that vocal ſinging is meant, ſinging with an harmonious and muſical voice; and that ſocial ſinging, or ſinging in concert together, is intended. The Septuagint renders it, to God our Saviour, Luke i. 47. Jud. 25.

℣. 2. Let us come before his preſence with thankſgiving, &c.] Come with the ſacrifice of praiſe, there being no other in the days of the Meſſiah, all ceremonial ſacrifices being put an end to, when his ſacrifice was offered up; ſo Arama obſerves, that the offering of thankſgiving ſhall remain, or be left in the days of the Meſſiah; come with this to Chriſt as a prieſt, to offer it by him to God his father, to whom it is acceptable through him, and with this to himſelf for the great ſalvation he has wrought out: to come before his preſence, or face[b], ſuppoſes his being come in the fleſh, his being God manifeſt in it, and alſo as clear and free from the veil of types and ſhadows; theſe all being gone now he is come, and to be beheld with open face; and likewiſe his having done his work as a Saviour, and now upon his throne as a King; into whoſe preſence-chamber ſaints are admitted to make their acknowledgments to him, and profeſs their allegiance and ſubjection to him, and their gratitude for favours received. It ſignifies an attendance on him in his houſe and ordinances, where he ſhews his face, and grants his preſence; and intends not merely bodily exerciſe, or a preſentation of our bodies only to him, but a drawing nigh to him with true hearts, and ſerving him in a ſpiritual manner: and make a joyful noiſe unto him with pſalms; with a melodious voice, and grace in the heart, with pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs; this belonging to goſpel-times, ſhews that ſinging of pſalms vocally in a muſical way is an ordinance of Chriſt, to be performed to him under the goſpel-diſpenſation, Eph. v. 19. Col. iii. 16.

℣. 3. For the Lord is a great God, &c.] Chriſt is truly and properly God, wherefore divine ſervice is to be performed unto him; particularly ſinging pſalms, ſetting forth therein his greatneſs and glory: and he is a great one; great in power, wiſdom, juſtice, truth, mercy, and grace; greatneſs is to be aſcribed unto him, and worſhip given him, becauſe of his greatneſs, Tit. ii. 13. and a great king over all gods; he is king of the whole world; his kingdom ruleth over all; he is King of kings, and Lord of lords; he is King of ſaints, the government of the whole church is upon his ſhoulders, which he exerciſes in the moſt wiſe, powerful, and righteous manner imaginable; he is above all that are called gods, all the nominal and fictitious deities of the heathens; above all civil magiſtrates, who are gods by office; and above the angels, who have this name, 1 Pet. iii. 22. Aben Ezra interprets it of angels.

℣. 4. In his hand are the deep places of the earth, &c.] The penetrals[c] of it; not only what are penetrated by men, the minerals that are in it; but what are of ſuch deep receſs, as to be penetrated only by the Lord himſelf; theſe are in the hands and power of Chriſt, which he can ſearch into, diſcover, and diſpoſe of; theſe are the foundations of the earth, which cannot be ſearched out beneath by men, Jer. xxxi. 37. the ſtrength of the hills is his alſo; or, the wearineſſes[d] of them, the tops[e] of them, which make a man weary to go up unto, they are ſo high; the Targum is, "the ſtrengths of the height of the hills;" which takes in both ideas, both the height and ſtrength of them. The hills that are both high and ſtrong, are ſet faſt by his power, and are at his command; and bow and tremble before him, whom men ought to worſhip.

℣. 5. The ſea is his, and he made it, &c.] He made it, and therefore it is, and all creatures in it; he ſets bounds to it, and its waves, and reſtrains the raging of it at his pleaſure, Matt. viii. 26, 27. and his hands formed the dry land; the whole world, all beſides the ſea, the vaſt continent; he is the maker of it, and all creatures in it; without him was nothing made that is made; and being the Creator of all things, is the proper object of worſhip, John i. 2, 3. Rom. i. 25. as follows.

℣. 6. O come, let us worſhip and bow down, &c.] Before him who is the rock of our ſalvation, the great God and great King, the Creator of the ends of the earth, the proper object of all religious worſhip and adoration: Chriſt is to be worſhipped with every part of external worſhip under the new teſtament-diſpenſation; pſalms and ſongs of praiſe are to be ſung unto him; prayer is to be made unto him; the goſpel is to be preached, and ordinances to be adminiſtered in his name; and likewiſe with all internal worſhip, in the exerciſe of every grace on him, as faith, hope, and love; ſee Pſ. xlv. 11. let us kneel before the Lord our maker; both in a natural and ſpiritual ſenſe: Chriſt is the maker of us as creatures, of our ſouls and bodies; we have our natural being from him, and are ſupported in it by him; and he is the maker of us as new creatures; we are his workmanſhip, created in him, and by him; and therefore he ſhould be worſhipped by us, Eph. ii. 10. Pſ. c. 3, 4, Kimchi diſtinguiſhes theſe ſeveral geſtures, expreſſed by the different words here uſed; the firſt we render worſhip, ſignifies according to him the proſtration of the whole body on the ground, with the hands and legs ſtretched out; the ſecond, a bowing of the head, with part of the body; and the third, a bending of the knees on the ground; but though each of theſe poſtures and geſtures have been, and may be uſed in religious worſhip; yet they ſeem not ſo much to deſign them themſelves, and the particular uſe of them, as worſhip itſelf, which is in general intended by them.

℣. 7. For he is our God, &c.] God over all bleſſed for ever, truly and properly God, and therefore to be worſhipped: our God; in whom we have intereſt, who became our head and ſurety in covenant; took upon him our nature, is our Immanuel, God with us, which increaſes the obligation to worſhip him; theſe are the words of new teſtament-ſaints: and we are the people of his paſture; for whom he has provided a good paſture; whom he leads into it, and feeds in it, even by the miniſtry of the word and ordinances: and the ſheep of his hand; made and faſhioned by his hand, both in a natural and ſpiritual ſenſe; led and guided by his hand, as a flock by the hand of the ſhepherd; are in his hand, being put there for ſafety by his Father; and upheld by it, and preſerved in it, and from whence none can pluck them; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 3. John x. 28, 29. receiving ſuch favours from him, he ought to be worſhipped by them. The heathens had a deity they called Pan, whom they make to be a keeper of ſheep[e]; and ſome Chriſtian writers have thought that Chriſt the chief ſhepherd is meant; ſince when the heathen oracles ceaſed, after the coming and death of Chriſt, a voice is[f] ſaid to be heard at a certain place, the great Pan is dead: to day if ye will hear his voice; the voice of the ſhepherd, the voice of God, ſays Aben Ezra, his word, as the Targum; the voice of the Meſſiah, both his preceptive voice, his commands and ordinances, which ought to be hearkened to and obeyed; and the voice of his goſpel, and the doctrines of it; which is to be heard not only externally, but internally: when it is heard as to be underſtood, to be approved of and believed, and to be diſtinguiſhed; ſo as to have a ſpiritual and experimental knowledge of it; to feel the power and efficacy of it, and practically attend to it; it is an evidence of being the ſheep of Chriſt; ſee John x. 4, 5, 27. where the ſheep are ſaid to know the voice of the ſhepherd, and not that of a ſtranger; of which Polybius[g] gives a remarkable inſtance in the goats of the iſland of Cyrnon, who will fly from ſtrangers, but as ſoon as the keeper ſounds his trumpet, they will run to him: though the words may be connected with what follows, as they are in Heb. iii. 7, 8. where they are ſaid to be the words of the Holy Ghoſt, and are applied to goſpel-times, and are interpreted of the voice of the Son of God in his houſe; for though it may refer to ſome certain day in David's time, as the ſeventh day-ſabbath, in which the voice of God might be heard, the word of God read and explained; and in goſpel-times, as the Lord's day, in which Chriſt ſpeaks by his miniſters; and to the whole time of a man's life, which is called while it is to day, Heb. iii. 13. yet it chiefly reſpects the whole day of the goſpel, the whole goſpel-diſpenſation, 2 Cor. vi. 2.

℣. 8. Harden not your hearts, &c.] Againſt Chriſt, againſt his goſpel, againſt all the light and evidence of it. There is a natural hardneſs of the heart, owing to the corruption of nature; and an habitual hardneſs, acquired by a conſtant continuance and long cuſtom in ſinning; and there is a judicial hardneſs, which God gives men up unto. There is a hardneſs of heart, which ſometimes attends God's own people, through the deceitfulneſs of ſin gaining upon them; of which when ſenſible they complain, and do well to guard againſt. Reſpect ſeems to be had here to the hardneſs of heart in the Jews in the times of Chriſt and his apoſtles, which the Holy Ghoſt foreſaw, and here dehorts from; who notwithſtanding the clear evidence of Jeſus being the Meſſiah, from prophecy, from miracles, from doctrines, from the gifts of the Spirit, &c. yet hardened their hearts againſt him, rebelled againſt light, and would not receive, but reject him: as in the provocation; or as at Meribah[h]; a place ſo called from the contention and ſtriving of the people of Iſrael with the Lord and his ſervants; and when they provoked not only the meek man Moſes, to ſpeak unadviſedly with his lips; but alſo the Lord himſelf by their murmurings, Exod. xvii. 7. Numb. xx. 13. though this may reſpect their provocations in general in the wilderneſs; for they often provoked him by their unbelief, ingratitude, and idolatry; ſee Deut. ix. 8, 22, 23. and as in the day of temptation in the wilderneſs; or, as in the day of Maſſah[i]; the time when they tempted him at Maſſah, ſo called from their tempting him by diſtruſting his power and preſence among them, by diſobeying his commands, and limiting the holy one of Iſrael to time and means of deliverance; ſee Exod. xvii. 7. and this being in the wilderneſs was an aggravation of their ſin; they being juſt brought out of Egypt, and having had ſuch a wonderful appearance of God for them, there and at the Red-ſea; and beſides being in a place where their whole dependence muſt be upon God, where they could have nothing but what they had from him immediately; it was egregious folly as well as wickedneſs to provoke and tempt him.

℣. 9. When your fathers tempted me, &c.] Or, where[i]; that is, in the wilderneſs, particularly at Meribah and Maſſah; it was Chriſt they tempted, as appears from 1 Cor. x. 9. proved me; had proof of his power, goodneſs, and mercy, in providing for them, and in the preſervation of them: or tried[k] him, his patience, long-ſuffering, and forbearance, by their repeated provocations of him: and ſaw my work; his work of judgment upon their enemies the Egyptians, by inflicting plagues upon them, and by the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt at the Red-ſea; and his work of goodneſs to them, in bringing them out of bondage, leading them through the Red-ſea ſafely, raining manna about their tents, and giving them water out of the rock; or particularly his work in conſuming them in the wilderneſs, as he ſwore he would, and which they ſaw with their eyes, and was near forty years a doing. The Syriac verſion joins the forty years at the beginning of the next verſe to this; the phraſe ſtanding in ſuch a ſituation as to be connected with both, and is true of each; ſo the apoſtle uſes it both ways, Heb. iii. 9, 17.

℣. 10. Forty years long was I grieved with this generation, &c.] The generation of the wilderneſs, as the Jews commonly call them; and which was a ſtubborn and a rebellious one, whoſe heart and ſpirit were not right with God, Pſ. lxxviii. 8. wherefore ſpeaking after the manner of men, God was grieved with them, as he was with the old world, Gen. vi. 6. or he was weary of them, and loathed them, as the word[l] ſometimes ſignifies; wherefore after the affair of the ſpies, to which Aben Ezra thinks this had reference; they did not hear from the mouth of the Lord, there was no prophecy ſent them by the hand of Moſes, as the ſame writer obſerves; nor any hiſtory or account of them, from that time till they came to the borders of Canaan; ſo greatly was their conduct and behaviour reſented: and it was much ſuch a term of time that was between the beginning of the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt and of Chriſt, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; during which time the Jews tempted Chriſt, tried his patience, ſaw his works, and grieved his ſpirit, which brought at laſt ruin upon them: and ſaid, it is a people that do err in their heart; he was not only inwardly grieved with them, but ſpeaking after the ſame human manner, he gave his grief vent, he ſpoke and gave this juſt character of them. The apoſtle adds alway, Heb. iii. 10. and ſo does the Arabic verſion here, and which is implied in the words do err; they not only had erred, but they continued to do ſo; and their errors were not merely through weakneſs, ignorance, and miſtake, but were voluntary, and with their whole hearts; they ſprung from their hearts, which were deſperately wicked; they erred willingly and wilfully; and this the Lord, the ſearcher of hearts, knew and took notice of: and they have not known my ways; they had his law, his ſtatutes, and his judgments, and ſo muſt know the ways he preſcribed them to walk in; but they did not practically obſerve them: or his ways of providence; which they did not take that notice of as they ought to have done; they did not conſider them as they ſhould, nor improve them in the manner as became them; they were not thankful for their mercies as they ought; nor did the goodneſs of God lead them to repentance.

℣. 11. Unto whom I ſware in my wrath, &c.] Being angry with them, he ſware for the confirmation of what he ſaid; the form of the oath was, as truly as I live; he ſware by himſelf, for he could ſwear by no greater; ſee Num. xiv. 21, 22, 23, 28, 29, 30, 35. that they ſhould not enter into my reſt; the land of Canaan, or Iſrael, as Kimchi; which the Lord provided, promiſed, and gave to the Iſraelites, as their reſt; the land of Iſrael and Jeruſalem, as Jarchi; or the houſe of the ſanctuary, the temple, as the Targum; which Jehovah choſe for his reſt, and took it up in it, and where he promiſed the Meſſiah, the prince of peace, who gives to his people ſpiritual and eternal reſt. Canaan was typical of the reſt which remains for the people of God; the uſe that believing Jews, and all Chriſtians under the goſpel-diſpenſation, are to make of this, ſee in Heb. iii. 18, 19. and iv. 1, 9, 10, 11.

PSAL. XCVI.

THIS pſalm was written by David, as appears from 1 Chron. xvi. 7, 23. to whom it is aſcribed by the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions. This and part of Pſ. cv. were firſt compoſed and ſung at the bringing of the ark from the houſe of Obed Edom to the city of David; and here it is detached from that with a new introduction to it, and applied to the times and kingdom of the Meſſiah, and with great propriety, ſince the ark was an eminent type of him. The inſcription in the Syriac verſion is, "a pſalm of David, a prophecy of the coming of the Meſſiah, and of the calling of the Gentiles that believe in him;" and very rightly, ſince expreſs mention is made of them in it, and of the publication of the goſpel among them; and clear reference is had to Chriſt, who is the Jehovah all along ſpoken of. Jarchi well obſerves, that wherever a new ſong is mentioned, it is to be underſtood of future time, or the times of the Meſſiah; and the end of the pſalm ſhews it, he cometh to judge, &c.

℣. 1. O ſing unto the Lord a new ſong, &c.] A famous excellent one, ſuited to goſpel-times, on account of the new benefit and bleſſing of redemption and ſalvation lately obtained by the Meſſiah; which ſhould be ſung to him, who is the Lord or Jehovah here deſigned, by all the redeemed ones, Rev. v. 9. ſee the note in Pſ. xxxiii. 3. the Targum adds, "ſing, ye angels on high:" ſing unto the Lord all the earth; not the whole land of Iſrael only, as Aben Ezra interprets it; though here the Saviour firſt appeared, taught his doctrines, wrought his miracles, ſuffered and died for the ſalvation of his people; here the angels firſt begun the new ſong; and here thoſe that believed in him firſt expreſſed that ſpiritual joy which afterwards ſpread through the whole world, and who are here called upon to ſing; namely, all thoſe that are redeemed from among men, throughout all the earth: believing Gentiles are here intended: the Targum is, "ſing before the Lord, all ye righteous of the earth."

℣. 2. Sing unto the Lord, &c.] Which is repeated to ſhew the vehemency of the ſpeaker, and the importance of the work exhorted to: this being the third time that the word Lord or Jehovah is mentioned, have led ſome to think of the trinity of perſons, Father, Son, and Spirit, the one only Jehovah, to whom the new ſong of ſalvation is to be ſung, becauſe of their joyful concern in it; the Father has contrived it, the Son has effected it, and the Spirit applies it: bleſs his name; ſpeak well of him, whoſe name is excellent and glorious, ſweet and precious; even every name of his, Jeſus, Immanuel, &c. proclaim him the ever bleſſed God, as he is, as prevented with the bleſſings of goodneſs, and made moſt bleſſed for ever; as Mediator, aſcribe all ſpiritual bleſſings to him, and bleſs him for them, and give him the glory and honour of them: ſhew forth his ſalvation from day to day; the ſalvation of his people he undertook, and has compleated; publiſh that as a piece of good news, as glad tidings; ſo the word [n] uſed ſignifies; even evangelizing, or preaching the goſpel; for this is the goſpel, the ſum and ſubſtance of it, ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt: this may be conſidered as directed to miniſters of the goſpel, whoſe work it is, more peculiarly, to ſhew forth the ſalvation of Chriſt; to point him out as a Saviour to ſenſible ſinners; to declare that this ſalvation is done, is wrought out for ſinners, is full and compleat; is to be had freely, and to be had now; and this is to be done from day to day, one Lord's day after another, frequently and conſtantly, when opportunity ſerves.

℣. 3. Declare his glory among the heathen, &c.] What a glorious perſon the Meſſiah is; the brightneſs of his Father's glory; having all the perfections of Deity in him; how the glory of God appears in him, and in all that he has done; and eſpecially in the work of redemption, in which the glory of divine wiſdom, power, juſtice, truth and faithfulneſs, love, grace, and mercy is richly diſplayed; ſay what glory he is advanced unto, having done his work, being highly exalted, ſet at the right hand of God, and crowned with glory and honour; and what a fulneſs of grace there is in him, for the ſupply of his people; and what a glory is on him, which they ſhall behold to all eternity: his wonders among all people; what a wonderful perſon he is, God manifeſt in the fleſh; what wonderful love he has ſhewn in his incarnation, obedience, ſufferings, and death; what amazing miracles he wrought, and what a wonderful work he performed; the work of our redemption, the wonder of men and angels; declare his wonderful reſurrection from the dead, his aſcenſion to heaven, ſitting at the right hand of God, and interceſſion for his people; the wonderful effuſion of his Spirit, and the conqueſts of his grace, and the enlargement of his kingdom in the world; as alſo what wonders will be wrought by him, when he appears a ſecond time; how the dead will be raiſed, and all will be judged.

℣. 4. For the Lord is great, &c.] In the perfections of his nature; in the works of his hands, of creation, providence, and redemption; and in the ſeveral offices he bears and executes: and greatly to be praiſed; becauſe of his greatneſs and glory; ſee the note on Pſ. xlviii. 1. he is to be feared above all gods; the angels by whom he is worſhipped; civil magiſtrates, among whom he preſides, and judges; and all the fictitious deities of the Gentiles, who are not to be named with him, and to whom no fear, reverence, and worſhip are due.

℣. 5. For all the gods of the nations are idols, &c.] Or are nothings [o], non entities; ſuch as have not, and never had, any being, at leaſt many of them, but in the fancies of men; and all of them ſuch as have no divinity in them; an idol is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. viii. 4. but the Lord made the heavens; and all the hoſts of them, the ſun, moon, and ſtars; theſe are the curious workmanſhip of his fingers, and which declare his glory, and ſhew him to be truly and properly God, who is to be feared and worſhipped; ſee Heb. i. 10. Jer. x. 11, 12.

℣. 6. Honour and majeſty are before him, &c.] He being ſet down at the right hand of the throne of the Majeſty in the heavens, and having honour and majeſty laid upon him; being arrayed in robes of majeſty, crowned with glory and honour, ſitting on the ſame throne of glory with his Father, and having a ſceptre of righteouſneſs in his hand, and all the forms and enſigns of royalty and majeſty about him; rays of light and glory darting from him; as well as thoſe glorious and bright forms before him, the holy angels continually praiſing him; which is a much more noble ſenſe than that of Kimchi's, who interprets them of the ſtars: ſtrength and beauty are in his ſanctuary; the Targum is, "the houſe of his ſanctuary," the temple; the goſpel-church, of which the temple or ſanctuary was a figure: the ſtrength of Chriſt is ſeen here, in the converſion of ſinners by his goſpel, which is the rod of his ſtrength, the power of God unto ſalvation, when it comes not in word only; and by which he alſo ſtrengthens his people, to the more vigorous exerciſe of grace and diſcharge of duty; here they go from ſtrength to ſtrength: the beauty of Chriſt is ſeen here; the King is held in the galleries of goſpel-ordinances, and is beheld in his beauty; his people appear here in the beauties of holineſs, and as a perfection of beauty, through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt upon them; and as they obſerve the order of the goſpel, and do all things decently, and with a good decorum: or elſe, as Kimchi interprets it, heaven may be meant by the ſanctuary, of which the holy place, made with hands, was a figure; here Chriſt reigns, girded with ſtrength; here he rules as the Lord God omnipotent, having all power in heaven, and in earth, and doing according to his will in both; and from hence he ſhews himſelf ſtrong on the behalf of his people; here he, who is beauty itſelf, fairer than the children of men, dwells; here thoſe beauteous forms of light and glory, the holy angels, are; and here the ſpirits of juſt men, made perfect, who are without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, have their abode: in 1 Chron. xvi. 27. it is, ſtrength and gladneſs are in his place; among his people and worſhippers there.

℣. 7. Give unto the Lord, O ye kindreds of the people, &c.] Or families [p]: the Targum is, "give unto the Lord a ſong, ye families of the people;" by whom are meant not the tribes and families of the people of Iſrael, but the Gentiles, the nations of the world, who were to be bleſſed in the ſeed of Abraham, the family of Egypt, and others; ſee Amos iii. 2. Zach. xiv. 17, 18. even ſuch as were choſen of them, taken out from among them for a people to his name; who were redeemed out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation; and were taken, one of a city, and two of a family, and brought to Zion: give unto the Lord glory and ſtrength; ſee the note on Pſ. xxix. 1.

℣. 8. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name, &c.] Or the glory of his name [q]; whoſe name is glorious and excellent, becauſe of his nature and perfections, becauſe of the works done by him, and becauſe of his benefits and bleſſings beſtowed on his creatures; wherefore it is his due, and their duty, to give him glory; ſee the notes on Pſ. xxix. 2. and lxvi. 2. the word Jehovah, or Lord, being thrice mentioned in this and the preceding verſe, in the aſcription of glory, may lead our thoughts to the trinity of perſons, Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit, to whom glory is to be equally given: bring an offering, and come into his courts; not ceremonial ſacrifices, which are aboliſhed under the goſpel-diſpenſation, to which times this pſalm belongs; but either the ſaints themſelves, their bodies, as a holy, living, and acceptable ſacrifice, and eſpecially the ſacrifices of a broken heart, with as much of their ſubſtance as is neceſſary for the relief of the poor, the ſupport of the miniſtry, and the carrying on of the cauſe and intereſt of the Redeemer: the alluſion is to the law that enjoined the Iſraelites not to appear empty before the Lord; but every one to bring his gift according to his ability, Deut. xvi. 16, 17. or elſe their ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe, which are the ſpiritual ſacrifices of the goſpel-diſpenſation, and are to be offered by the ſaints, as prieſts, to God through Chriſt; or rather the ſacrifice of Chriſt himſelf, which is of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to God, makes way for acceſs unto him, and acceptance with him; and which ſhould be brought in the arms of faith, when they enter into the houſe of the Lord, and attend his word and ordinances; for, through this, their perſons and ſervices become acceptable to God, and the ſins of their holy things are taken away.

℣. 9. O worſhip the Lord in the beauty of holineſs, &c.] See the note on Pſ. xxix. 2. in this and the three preceding verſes, there is a manifeſt alluſion to the form of addreſſes made to kings in the eaſtern nations; who being arrayed, and ſeated in a majeſtic manner, with all the marks of royal honour and dignity about them, whom their ſubjects approach with aſcriptions of glory to them; bringing preſents in their hands, and bowing down to the ground before them, as the word [r] for worſhip ſignifies; expreſſing the utmoſt awe and reverence of them, as in the next clauſe: fear before him all the earth; or, as the Targum, "all the inhabitants of the earth:" it is the duty of all men to fear the Lord; but none can fear him aright, without his grace, or an heart given them to fear him: this reſpects the latter day, when the Jews ſhall ſeek the Lord, and fear him and his goodneſs; when all nations ſhall fear and worſhip him; when, from the riſing of the ſun to the going down of the ſame, the name of the Lord ſhall be great and tremendous among the Gentiles; ſee Hoſ. iii. 5. Rev. xv. 3, 4. Mal. i. 11.

℣. 10. Say among the heathen, &c.] This is a direction to ſuch as were converted to Chriſt among the Jews, or were firſt called out from among the Gentiles; or to the miniſters of the word, the apoſtles and firſt preachers of the goſpel more eſpecially, who were ſent into all the world to preach the goſpel to every creature, that a people from among them might be taken for the Lord: that the Lord reigneth; whoſe goſpel ſhould be received and obeyed, and his ordinances ſubmitted to; who now reigns in heaven, at his Father's right hand, and muſt reign till all enemies are put under his feet; he reigns in the hearts of his people by his ſpirit and grace; will reign more glorioſly in his churches in the latter day, and with his ſaints for a thouſand years in the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate; and, after that, to all eternity in heaven: this is one part of the goſpel, or good tidings to be publiſhed, among the Gentiles, Iſ. lii. 7. the world alſo ſhall be eſtabliſhed, that it ſhall not be moved; not the natural material world; for that ſhall flee, and paſs away, and be no more; it ſhall be burnt up, and all things in it; though that, and mankind on it, will be continued till all the elect of God are gathered in; Chriſt will uphold it, it being by his power that it ſhall not be moved till the work is effected: moreover, the church, in however fluctuating and unſettled a condition it may be now, ſometimes in one place, and ſometimes in another, yet ere long will be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains, ſo that it ſhall not be moved; and the goſpel-diſpenſation is what will remain unto the end of time, and the goſpel is an everlaſting one; the ordinances of it will continue to the ſecond coming of Chriſt; and he will be with his churches to the end of the world; he is reigning King of Zion; has ſet up a government, of which, and the peace of it, there ſhall be no end: during the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, the world will be in ſuch ſtable tranquility as to have no commotions in it, nor to be moved with wars, and rumours of wars; and when the Millenium ſhall take place, the new heavens and new earth ſhall never paſs away: he ſhall judge the people righteouſly; he reigns over his people in a righteous manner, with a ſceptre of righteouſneſs, according to the rules of righteouſneſs, by righteous laws and ordinances; he juſtifies his people with his own righteouſneſs; he forms the new man in them, which is created in righteouſneſs, and ſets up a kingdom within them, which conſiſts of righteouſneſs; and he protects and defends them, and keeps them in ſafety from all their enemies.

℣. 11. Let the heavens rejoice, &c.] At the coming and kingdom of Chriſt; at what is ſaid and done in the Gentile world; even the hoſts of heaven, as the Targum, the angels that dwell there, and never left their habitation and firſt eſtate: theſe rejoiced at the incarnation of Chriſt, at the firſt ſetting up and appearance of his kingdom in the world; and as they rejoice at the converſion of a ſingle ſinner, much more muſt they be ſuppoſed to do at the converſion of multitudes in the Gentile world, and at the increaſe of the Redeemer's intereſt there: or heavenly men, ſuch as are born from above, partakers of the heavenly calling; theſe rejoice when the kingdom of Chriſt is enlarged, and his cauſe flouriſhes: or the holy apoſtles and prophets of Chriſt, and miniſters of the Word, full of heavenly gifts and grace, are meant; who expreſs their joy when ſinners are converted, and and made ſubject to Chriſt, at any time; and will be called upon to do it, when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is brought in, and Babylon is fallen, Rev. xviii. 20. and let the earth be glad; the righteous of the earth, as the Targum; the excellent of the earth, who are glad, and exult at the coming and kingdom of Chriſt, in every ſenſe; in the ſalvation which he has wrought out; in the righteouſneſs which he has brought in; at the ſight of him, the glory of his perſon, and riches of his grace; in the enjoyment of his preſence; at hearing his goſpel, and the comfortable truths of it; and when it is made uſeful to the ſouls of others; and in a view and hope of the glory of God, and of being partakers of it to all eternity: let the ſea roar, and the fulneſs thereof; the roaring of the waves is the voice of the ſea, which ſometimes ſpeaks terror, and here expreſſes joy: its fulneſs is not literally the abundance of its waves, or the multitude of its fiſhes, as Kimchi; but the iſlands in it, the inhabitants of them; ſee Pſ. xcvii. 1. and ſuch as ours of Great Britain and Ireland, who have reaſon to rejoice and be glad at the bringing of the goſpel among us, the continuance of it with us, and the kingdom and intereſt of Chriſt in the midſt of us.

℣. 12. Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein, &c.] Not the field of the world, but of the church, ſeparated from others by diſtinguiſhing grace; the peculiar property of Chriſt, cultivated and manured by his ſpirit and grace, and abounding with the fruits and flowers thereof; of a wilderneſs becoming a fruitful field, and for that reaſon ſhould rejoice, even with joy and ſinging, Iſ. xxxv. 1, 2. then ſhall all the trees of the wood rejoice; the ſons of God, ſo called, Cant. ii. 3. who, though like ſuch, in their nature-ſtate, barren and unfruitful, yet, being ingrafted into Chriſt, become trees of righteouſneſs; and ſo have reaſon to rejoice at their root in Chriſt, their ſtability by him, and fruitfulneſs through him: Jarchi interprets this of all the governors of the people; ſee Ezek. xvii. 24. all this, indeed, by a proſopopœia, may be underſtood of inanimate creatures; the heavens, earth and ſea, fields, woods and trees, rejoicing, if they could, and in their way, at ſuch great and wonderful appearances in the Gentile world; ſee Iſ. xliv. 23. and xlix. 13. and lv. 12. Aben Ezra interprets all this of the heavens giving dew, the earth its increaſe, and the field its fruit; all which is rejoicing.

℣. 13. Before the Lord, &c.] At the face of him, in his preſence; meeting him as he comes, and rejoicing at his coming: this clauſe is to be joined to every one in the two preceding verſes: for he cometh, for he cometh; which is repeated to ſhew the certainty of Chriſt's coming, and the importance of it, and the juſt reaſon there was for the above joy and gladneſs on account of it; and it may be alſo, as Jerom and others have obſerved, to point out both the firſt and ſecond coming of Chriſt, which are both matter of joy to the ſaints: his firſt coming, which was from heaven, into this world, in a very mean and abject manner, to ſave the chief of ſinners, to procure peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life for them, and therefore muſt be matter of joy: his ſecond coming, which will be alſo from heaven, but in an extremely glorious manner, without ſin, or the likeneſs of it, unto the ſalvation of his people: it will be as follows, to judge the earth; the inhabitants of it, ſmall and great, high and low, rich and poor, bond and free, quick and dead, righteous and wicked; when all works, words and thoughts, good and bad, will be brought to account; and every man will be judged, as thoſe ſhall be, with or without the grace of God: he ſhall judge the world with righteouſneſs, and the people with his truth; according to the rules of juſtice and equity; he will truly diſcern and rightly judge; his judgment will be according to his truth; he will approve himſelf to be the righteous judge, and his judgment will appear to be a righteous judgment; for which he is abundantly qualified, as being the Lord God omniſcient and omnipotent, holy, juſt, and true; ſee Acts xvii. 31.

PSAL. XCVII.

THIS pſalm is aſcribed to David by the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions. It is of the ſame argument, and upon the ſame ſubject, as the preceding, the coming and kingdom of Chriſt; and that it reſpects his firſt coming into the world, when angels were called upon to worſhip him, appears from ℣. 7. compared with Heb. i. 6. though it is expreſſed in ſuch language as ſeems to agree with his ſecond coming; and perhaps both are included, with various things between the one and the other; or it reſpects the kingdom of Chriſt, from his firſt to his ſecond coming; to which agrees the inſcription of the Syriac verſion, which is "a pſalm of David, in which he propheſies concerning the coming of the Meſſiah, and again he intimates in it his laſt appearance."

℣. 1. The Lord reigneth, &c.] He has reigned, now reigns, will and muſt reign till all enemies are made his footſtool; ſee the notes on Pſ. xciii. 1. and xcvi. 10. let the earth rejoice; not the land of Judea only, and the inhabitants of it, to whom the King Meſſiah came; for there were but few among them that received him, and rejoiced at his coming; but the whole earth, the vaſt continent, as diſtinguiſhed from the iſles after mentioned, and they that dwell upon it; the Gentiles, who had a concern in his coming, in whom they were to be bleſſed, to whom they were to be gathered, and in whom they ſhould find a glorious reſt; and therefore he is called the deſire of all nations: the firſt preaching of the goſpel was occaſion and matter of great joy to them; not only the bleſſings contained in it of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by Chriſt; but the effects of it, delivering them from the dominion of Satan, the god of this world; and from ſuperſtition and idolatry, with which they were enſlaved; and the bringing them into the glorious liberty of the children of God: let the multitude of iſles be glad thereof; the iſles of the ſea are many, even many thouſands: Columbus, when he firſt diſcovered America, ſailing by Cuba weſtward, gave names, as he paſſed along, to ſeven hundred iſlands, leaving three thouſand more without names[r]: Gejerus reports, from ſome writers, that an Indian king, in 1553, was converted to the chriſtian faith, that ruled over eleven thouſand iſlands; and that in Maldivar there are reckoned to be ſixteen thouſand: well may the text ſpeak of a multitude of them: or, let the great iſlands, &c. ſuch as ours of Great Britain and Ireland; theſe iſles are ſaid to wait for Chriſt and his doctrine, Iſ. xlii. 4. and li. 5. and lx. 9. and therefore muſt be glad to hear of his coming and kingdom: the goſpel was very early ſent to the iſles, as to Cyprus, Crete, &c. ſee Acts xiii. 4, 5, 6. Tit. i. 5. and to our northern iſles likewiſe, who have great reaſon to be glad at its coming among us, continuance with us, and the ſucceſs it has had; and that it is yet in the midſt of us for further uſefulneſs; and that Chriſt reigns, and will reign evermore.

℣. 2. Clouds and darkneſs are round about him, &c.] Either as a garment; ſo Apollinarius paraphraſes it, "near is the King clothed with a cloud and tempeſt;" and it is uſual with the heathens to repreſent their deities as ſurrounded or clothed with a cloud[s]: here the alluſion is to the tabernacle and temple, when reared up and dedicated, Exod. xl. 34. 1 Kings viii. 10, 11, 12. and to other appearances of God, or Chriſt, in a cloud, Exod. xix. 9. 16. Matt. xvii. 5. it may denote the obſcurity of his divine nature at his firſt coming; he appearing in the form of a ſervant, and in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, ſo that few diſcerned his glory, as the glory of the only begotten of the Father; as alſo the darkneſs and blindneſs of the Jews concerning him, who could not perceive him to be the Meſſiah; notwithſtanding all the characters of him; clouds and darkneſs were about him to them; as they were, in a literal ſenſe, when he hung on the croſs; the ſun withdrew and hid itſelf, and darkneſs was upon the face of the earth for three hours; Chriſt was inveloped in it; and a greater darkneſs ſurrounded his ſoul, when his divine Father hid his face from him: dark providences attended the firſt ſetting up of his kingdom, and the miniſtration of his goſpel in the world; the apoſtles, the firſt preachers of it, were perſecuted by their own countrymen the Jews; the whole Gentile world was againſt them; the Roman empire, emperors, and governors of provinces, oppoſed them; wherever there was an open door, there were many adverſaries, ſo that things looked very unpromiſing: nevertheleſs theſe clouds were diſſipated, and the difficulties got over; though this has ſometimes been the caſe ſince, and will be again, ere the kingdom of Chriſt is in all its glory; he now ſits enthroned in heaven, ſurrounded with clouds and darkneſs, and unſeen to us; whoſe being and perfections are inſcrutable to us, his providences unſearchable, and his ways paſt finding out; and when he comes a ſecond time, it will be at midnight, and in the clouds of heaven: righteouſneſs and judgment are the habitation of his throne; the ſeat, baſis, and ſupport of it; he ſits on a throne doing right, and by it his throne is eſtabliſhed; ſee the note on Pſ. lxxxix. 14.

℣. 3. A fire goeth before him, &c.] Not the fiery law, which went forth from his right hand on mount Sinai; but rather his goſpel, which, as it enlightens, warms, comforts, and refreſhes his people, ſearches, torments, and deſtroys his enemies, and is the ſavour of death unto death to them; ſee Jer. xxiii. 29. 2 Cor. ii. 16. Rev. xi. 5. Some apply this to the gifts of the Spirit on the day of Pentecoſt, ſignified by cloven tongues of fire; but then no ſuch effect followed as mentioned in the next clauſe: it ſeems beſt to interpret it of his wrath, which, like fire, was poured out to the uttermoſt on the Jews, for their diſbelief and rejection of him; they would not have him to reign over them; they deſpiſed his goſpel, and ſlew his ſervants; wherefore he ſent the Roman armies to them, who deſtroyed thoſe murderers, and burnt their city, Matt. xxii. 7. this will be alſo verified in the ſecond coming of Chriſt, who will deſcend in flaming fire, and the earth will be burnt up, and all that is therein, 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8. 2 Pet. iii. 10. 12. ſome Jewiſh writers interpret this of the war of Gog and Magog, in Ezekiel, which they ſuppoſe ſtill future; as, when it is, fire will be ſent and rained upon them, Ezek. xxxviii. 22. and xxxix. 6. but may be better applied to the Gog and Magog in Rev. xx. 8, 9. and burneth up his enemies round about; ſo that none can eſcape: this was true of the Jewiſh nation, who were burnt up; ſo that there was not left root nor branch in it, Mal. iv. 1. and will be true of the wicked, at the general conflagration of the world, upon Chriſt's ſecond coming; and of the Gog and Magog-army, after the reſurrection.

℣. 4. His lightnings enlightened the world, &c.] Either the doctrines of the goſpel, compared thereunto, becauſe of the ſwift progreſs they made, and the large extent of them in the world, in a very little time; by the apoſtles they were publiſhed in all nations, and were the means of enlightening them in the true knowledge of themſelves, and of the way of ſalvation by Chriſt: hence they are called the lights of the world, Matt. v. 14. as the coming of Chriſt, in his kingdom and power, by them, is compared to lightning, and ſo are the arrows of his word, Matt. xxiv. 27. Zech. ix. 14. or elſe his judgments on the Jewiſh nation are meant, which were manifeſt and clear, and obvious to all the world; ſee Pſ. xviii. 14. the earth ſaw, and trembled; the inhabitants of the earth, of the Gentile world, ſaw the judgments of God upon the Jews, and were aſtoniſhed at them; ſee Deut. xxix. 24. it is uſual for lightnings and earthquakes to go together; ſee Rev. xi. 19. and xvi. 15.

℣. 5. The hills melted like wax at the preſence of the Lord, &c.] Kimchi interprets the hills of the kings of the wicked; and it was verified in Herod and his nobles, and the citizens of Jeruſalem, who, when they heard of the coming of the Meſſiah, of the birth of the King of the Jews, were exceedingly moved and troubled; their hearts melted like wax within them, Matt. ii. 1, 2, 3. ſo when he appeared, in the power of his goſpel, in the Gentile world, and went forth in the miniſtration of it, conquering, and to conquer, all fled before him; every mountain and iſland were moved out of their places; and the kings of the earth, and great men, ran to the rocks to hide them from his face, which they could not bear, Rev. vi. 14—17. and the like events, and more terrible will they be, when he comes to deſtroy Antichriſt, and eſpecially to judge the world, Rev. xvi. 19, 20. and xx. 11, 12. at the preſence of the Lord of the whole earth; as Chriſt is; he is Lord of all, the Prince of the kings of the earth, Acts x. 36. Rev. i. 5. and xi. 4. and as he will ſhew himſelf to be at the great day; and that is the reaſon why the proud and lofty, comparable to hills and mountains, ſhall melt at his preſence.

℣. 6. The heavens declare his righteouſneſs, &c.] His juſtice in puniſhing his enemies; the lightning and the thunder in the heavens, the tokens of his wrath, and inſtruments of it; his wrath itſelf, which is revealed from heaven, Rom. i. 18. or the inhabitants of heaven, as Aben Ezra; the angels of heaven; ſo the Targum, "the angels on high, (or of heaven, as in the king's bible) declare his righteouſneſs;" ſee Rev. xvi. 5, 6, 7. it is true of the miniſters of the goſpel, who are Chriſt's angels or meſſengers, men of heavenly gifts and grace, whoſe work it is to declare the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is revealed in the goſpel, from faith to faith, and which is therefore called the word of righteouſneſs, and the miniſtration of it, Rom. i. 17. 2 Cor. iii. 9. Heb. v. 13. and all the people ſee his glory; the glory of his juſtice in the deſtruction of his enemies; the glory of his power and grace in the ſalvation of his choſen; the glory of God in the face of Chriſt; the glory of Chriſt himſelf, as the only begotten of the Father; the glory of his perſon, office, grace, and righteouſneſs, in the glaſs of the goſpel; the glory and honour he is now crowned with in heaven; and all the people, even all the choſen, redeemed and called people, ſhall behold his glory to all eternity: it ſeems chiefly to reſpect the revelation of his glory, and his people's view of it at his firſt coming; ſee Iſ. xl. 5, 6.

℣. 7. Confounded be all they that ſerve graven images, &c.] Images of gold, ſilver, and ſtone, graven by art and man's device; to ſerve and worſhip which muſt be the groſſeſt ignorance and ſtupidity, which, when convinced of, muſt fill with ſhame and confuſion: this may be conſidered either as a prayer, that the idolatrous Gentiles might be enlightened to ſee the vanity of their idols, and their worſhip of them, and turn to the living God; or as a prophecy that it ſhould be; for it may be rendered, they are or ſhall be confounded, or aſhamed[t], as the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi; which had its accompliſhment in the firſt times of the goſpel; when, being preached in the Gentile world, multitudes forſook their idols, and ſerved the true God; and eſpecially at the opening of the ſixth ſeal, when pagan worſhip was aboliſhed throughout the Roman empire; and when the kings and great men in it, through ſhame, confuſion, and dread, fled to the rocks and mountains to hide them from the wrath of the Lamb, Rev. vi. 12—17. and will have a further accompliſhment, when the papiſts, the worſhippers of the beaſt, ſhall be aſhamed of their graven images, of the virgin Mary, and other ſaints; which will be when the goſpel ſhall be publiſhed throughout the world, Rev. xiv. 6—11. that boaſt themſelves of idols; as their ſaviours and deliverers, which yet are nothing, as the word[u] ſignifies; that praiſe and extol them, as the givers of good things to them, or the procurers of them for them; that glory in them, and in their worſhip of them, than which nothing can be a greater inſtance of folly and madneſs: worſhip him all ye gods; thoſe that are ſo called, the graven images and idols before mentioned; let them bow down, and be proſtrate before the Lord, as Dagon before the ark; or they that ſerve other gods, as Kimchi; ſo the Targum, "and all the nations that ſerve idols ſhall worſhip before him;" rather kings and princes, civil magiſtrates, who are ſometimes called gods, are meant, Pſ. xcv. 3. and lxxxii. 1. 6. and who, in the latter day eſpecially, ſhall ſerve and worſhip the Meſſiah, Pſ. lxxii. 10. though it is beſt of all to interpret it of angels, as this word Elohim is rendered in Pſ. viii. 5. and Aben Ezra ſays, there are ſome of their interpreters that underſtand it of angels: the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, and ſo Apollinarius, render it, worſhip him all his angels: Guſſetius[w] interprets it, all that is God's; all that belong to him, angels and men, and all creatures; particularly angels, the moſt noble of all: and this ſenſe is confirmed by an inſpired writer, who manifeſtly refers to and quotes this paſſage, and applies it to the angels worſhipping of Chriſt, the firſt begotten Son of God, when he came into the world, Heb. i. 6. with which compare Luke ii. 13, 14. from whence it appears not only that Chriſt is ſuperior to angels, for the proof of which it is produced by the apoſtle; but that he is truly God, ſince God only is the object of religious worſhip; and that, if he is worſhipped by angels, he ought to be worſhipped by men; and that angels are not the proper objects of worſhip, ſince they are worſhippers.

℣. 8. Zion heard, and was glad, &c.] Or, the congregation of Zion, as the Targum; the church of Chriſt, and the members of it, called Zion, in alluſion to the mountain of that name, in which the temple ſtood; a type of the church, Heb. xii. 22. theſe heard the goſpel, the good news and glad tidings of good things; they heard that Zion's King reigned, and that his kingdom was enlarged, and intereſt increaſed; they heard the heavenly men declare his righteouſneſs, by which they are juſtified from all things; they heard of the converſion of the Gentiles, and the confuſion of idolators; of the incarnation of Chriſt, and of his being worſhipped by angels; all which filled them with joy and gladneſs: and the daughters of Judah rejoiced; particular congregated churches, particular believers and profeſſors of Chriſt and his goſpel; theſe rejoiced at the above things, as well as becauſe of what follows: becauſe of thy judgments, O Lord; either the doctrines of the goſpel, which come from the God of judgment, and are according to his juſtice and holineſs; and are matter of joy and gladneſs, when they are ſpread in the world, and ſucceed to the converſion of ſinners, the comfort of ſaints, and the glory of Chriſt; ſee Pſ. xix. 9, 10. or his judgments upon his enemies, and the enemies of his church and people; which alſo are an occaſion of rejoicing to them, becauſe Chriſt is thereby glorified in his power, juſtice, truth, and faithfulneſs, Rev. xix. 1, 2.

℣. 9. For thou, Lord, art high above all the earth, &c.] Above all the inhabitants of the earth, as the Targum; he is highly exalted above every name, men of the greateſt name that is named in the world; he is made higher than the heavens, and the inhabitants of it; and has all power in heaven and earth, as Mediator; and, as a divine Perſon, he is the moſt high God, as the word Elion here uſed ſignifies; and all this lays a foundation for joy and gladneſs in the ſaints; even the dignity of Chriſt's perſon, and the exaltation of him in the human nature: thou art exalted far above all gods; not only the fictitious deities of the Gentiles, or the greateſt potentates upon earth, being made higher than the kings of the earth, who are called Gods; but alſo than the angels in heaven; he is ſet down at the right hand of God, where they are not, and never were, nor ſhall be; angels, authorities, and powers, being ſubject to him, Heb. i. 13. 1 Pet. iii. 22.

℣. 10. Ye that love the Lord, hate evil, &c.] The evil of ſin, which is to be hated, becauſe of the evil nature of it, it being exceeding ſinful; and becauſe of its evil conſequences, bringing death, ruin, and deſtruction with it to the ſouls of men, unleſs grace prevents; and diſquietude, diſtreſs, and trouble to the ſaints themſelves; and becauſe it is hateful to God, being contrary to his nature, will, and law, and is hated by Chriſt; and therefore thoſe that love him ſhould hate that, ſhun it, avoid it, depart from it, and abſtain from all appearance of it; as all ſuch will that love him in ſincerity above all perſons and things; and all of him, and that belong to him, his people, ways, worſhip, truths, and ordinances: and ſuch are they that have ſeen the lovelineſs of him, and know his love, and have had it ſhed abroad in their hearts; and theſe will not only hate the evil of ſin, but evil men; not their perſons, but their actions and converſations; and will avoid them, and have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs: he preſerveth the ſouls of his ſaints; that are ſet apart by him, and choſen in him to be holy; that are ſanctified by his blood, and by his ſpirit and grace, and to whom he is made ſanctification: the ſouls of theſe, their better and more noble part, which are dear to him, and he has redeemed by his blood, and whoſe ſalvation he has obtained, and they ſtill receive; he preſerves from the evil of ſin, from its governing and damning power, from a final and total apoſtacy by it, from ruin and deſtruction through it, from being hurt by the ſecond death; and he preſerves them from all their enemies, ſin, Satan, and the world, from being deſtroyed by them, ſafe to his kingdom and glory; therefore he is to be loved, and ſin to be hated by them: he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked; of wicked and unreaſonable men, into whoſe hands they ſometimes fall, cruel and blood-thirſty perſecutors; as he is able to deliver them, ſo oftentimes he does; and will, ere long, put them intirely out of their reach. Kimchi interprets this of the deliverance of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon, Media, and Perſia.

℣. 11. Light is ſown for the righteous, &c.] Who are made righteous by the obedience of Chriſt, and live ſoberly and righteouſly; the light of joy and gladneſs, as it is explained in the next clauſe; ſee Eſth. viii. 16. ſo φόως light is frequently uſed by Homer[k] for joy and gladneſs: theſe ſometimes are without it, through the hidings of God's face, the prevalence of corruptions, the force of Satan's temptations, and the many afflictions they meet with; but joy and gladneſs, peace and comfort, are ſown for them in the counſels and purpoſes of God, in his covenant, in the ſcriptures, in the goſpel, and in the promiſes of it; and though at preſent hidden, will ſpring up in God's due time, Pſ. cxii. 4. and which alſo may be interpreted of the light of glory, which at preſent does not appear; but it is prepared in the purpoſe of God, and in his promiſe, and ſhall be enjoyed by the heirs of it. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions render it, light is riſen for the righteous; and ſo the Targum, "light is riſen and prepared for the righteous;" Chriſt the light of the world, the ſun of righteouſneſs, is riſen for them, and upon them, with healing in his wings, which bring joy and comfort to them: and gladneſs for the upright in heart; ſuch as have new hearts and right ſpirits formed in them, and are Iſraelites indeed, that have the truth of grace, and the root of the matter in them; gladneſs is prepared, provided, and promiſed to them, and ſooner or later they ſhall have it; the ſeed of it is ſown, and it will ſpring up, and a large crop ſhall be enjoyed. Kimchi's note is, "light is ſown for the righteous in this world, and they ſhall reap light and joy in time to come, in the days of the Meſſiah."

℣. 12. Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous, &c.] In the word of the Lord, as the Targum; in Chriſt, the eſſential Word, in his perſon, the greatneſs, glory, and fulneſs of it; in his righteouſneſs, and in ſalvation by him, and that always; ſee Phil. iv. 4. and give thanks at the remembrance of his holineſs; of his eſſential holineſs, as a divine perſon, in which he is glorious, and which appears in all that he has done; and of the holineſs of his nature and life, as man and mediator, which are imputed to his people for their juſtification; and at the remembrance of that holineſs which they have from him, and are made partakers of in ſanctification; and at the remembrance of that perfect holineſs which they ſhall have with him in heaven to all eternity. Holineſs may alſo ſignify his faithfulneſs in the diſcharge of his work and office as mediator, and in the fulfilment of his promiſes to his people; ſee the note on Pſ. xxx. 4.

PSALM XCVIII.

A Pſalm.

THIS is the only pſalm throughout the whole book which is ſo called, without any other additional word, epithet, or inſcription. The Targum calls it a pſalm of prophecy, or a prophetic pſalm, as indeed it is; for it reſpects time to come, as Jarchi obſerves, even the goſpel-diſpenſation. Aben Ezra ſays, perhaps this pſalm is concerning the coming of the Redeemer; a doubt need not be made of it, it certainly is. Abendana, a later writer among the Jews, ſays of the latter part of the pſalm, that it figuratively expreſſes the greatneſs of the joy that ſhall be in the days of the Meſſiah. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, aſcribe it unto David; but it was not penned by him on account of any victory obtained by him, but as a prophecy of the victories and ſalvation of the Meſſiah; nor is it of the ſame argument with, or a compendium of the ſong of Moſes at the Red-ſea, as Grotius thinks; though the inſcription of the Syriac verſion begins thus, "a pſalm of David, concerning the redemption of the people out of Egypt, when they conquered and triumphed;" yet it more rightly adds, "but ſpiritually a prophecy concerning the coming of Chriſt, and the calling of the Gentiles unto the faith."

[k] Iliad 6. v. 6. & 8. v. 282. & 16. v. 39.

℣. 1. O ſing unto the Lord a new ſong, &c.] An excellent one unto the Lord Chriſt, on account of the great work of redemption and ſalvation wrought out by him; and becauſe of the new and living way opened by him, and becauſe of the new diſpenſation of the goſpel, which takes place thro' him, and for the reaſons next mentioned; ſee the note on Pſ. xcvi. 1. for he hath done marvellous things; by aſſuming human nature, in that he being God became man, took fleſh of a virgin, even pure and uncorrupt, a clean thing out of an unclean; which he took into perſonal union with himſelf, and that for the ſake of ſinful creatures; a moſt marvellous affair this! which calls for a new ſong from men, as it had from the angels. In this nature he taught wonderful doctrines, at which his hearers were aſtoniſhed, wondering from whence he had his wiſdom; and in it he did many miraculous works, which filled them with amazement above meaſure; and eſpecially in it he performed the amazing and ſurprizing work of man's redemption, an inſtance of the marvellous loving kindneſs and aſtoniſhing wiſdom of God; performed in a manner quite ſtupendous, through Chriſt's being made under the law both the precept and penalty of it; through his being made ſin and curſe for men, even for the ungodly, ſinners and enemies; a redemption which is of the ſouls of men from ſin, Satan, and the law; a complete and plenteous one, which includes and ſecures all the bleſſings of grace and glory, juſtification, pardon, adoption, and eternal life. To which may be added the reſurrection of himſelf from the dead, his aſcenſion to heaven, the effuſion of the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit on the apoſtles, the wonderful ſucceſs of the goſpel in the Gentile world, the ſupport of his intereſt againſt all the powers on earth, the deſtruction of the man of ſin, the calling of the Jews, and the bringing in of the fulneſs of the Gentiles in the latter day; all which marvellous events require a new ſong of praiſe; another reaſon of which follows: his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory; over ſin, Satan, the world, death, and hell, in which he has made his people ſharers, yea more than conquerors; and therefore may well ſing the new triumphant ſong to him: the words may be rendered, hath brought ſalvation to him[b]; as in Iſ. lix. 16. and lxiii. 5. to him perſonally, he raiſing himſelf from the dead, as a triumphant conqueror; to him myſtically, his body the church, to whom he is the author of ſalvation; or to him, that is, to his Father, in obedience to whoſe will he wrought out ſalvation for his people, and for the honour of his name, and for the glorifying of his perfections. This was done by him alone, by his right hand of power, by the mighty arm of his ſtrength, and which no mere creature could ever have performed: and this he did in a way of holineſs; his holy arm did it in a way that maintains and ſecures the glory of divine holineſs and juſtice.

℣. 2. The Lord hath made known his ſalvation, &c.] Which was appointed him, he undertook, came ro perform, and has effected; this though wrought out is unknown to men, eſpecially to the Gentile world, who had no prophecy, promiſe, or revelation of the Meſſiah, and ſalvation by him; but now this is made known in the everlaſting goſpel, called therefore the goſpel of ſalvation, and by the miniſters of it; and beſides this, the ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of Chriſt, and his ſalvation, is given to ſome; whereby they come to know their need of it, the ſuitableneſs of it to their caſe, the neceſſity of going to Chriſt for it, and their ſpecial and particular intereſt in it; and ſuch have a new ſong put into their mouths, and are under great obligation to ſing it: his righteouſneſs hath he openly ſhewed in the ſight of the heathen; either the faithfulneſs of God in fulfilling his promiſes, particularly in raiſing up the ſaviour Jeſus; or the goodneſs of God to his people, and the ſtrictneſs of his juſtice on their ſurety; goodneſs towards them, and ſeverity on him, when he ſpared them and not him, turned his hand of grace and mercy on them, when he awoke the ſword of juſtice againſt him; or rather his own righteouſneſs, by which he fulfilled the law in the room and ſtead of his people; and which being brought in is revealed in the goſpel, from faith to faith; and that openly, not in dark ſhadows, types, and figures; but it is to be ſeen with open face in the clear glaſs of the goſpel; and is held up and forth in the miniſtration of it unto the Gentiles, whom God juſtifies through faith in it, as well as the believing Jews; ſee Rom. iii. 30. Gal. iii. 8.

℣. 3. He hath remembered his mercy and his truth toward the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] His mercy promiſed them, in raiſing up a Saviour to them, one that ſhould be the glory of them; and his truth, in fulfilling that and every other promiſe concerning him; ſee Luke i. 72, 73, 74. and ii. 32. Rom. xv. 8. all the ends of the earth have ſeen the ſalvation of our God; either Chriſt himſelf, who is the ſalvation or ſaviour of God's appointing, providing, and ſending; or the ſalvation which he has wrought out, the goſpel declaring it; which has been ſent throughout the world, and many in all parts of it, even in the moſt diſtant parts of it, in the very ends of it, have been made to ſee the nature, want, worth, and value of it; not every individual perſon in the world, but ſome in the ſeveral parts, and in the remote corners of it, whither the goſpel has been, or will be ſent; ſee Iſ. lii. 10.

℣. 4. Make a joyful noiſe unto the Lord all the earth, &c.] That is, all the inhabitants of the earth, as the Targum, to whom the joyful ſound of the goſpel comes; ſee the note on Pſ. xcv. 1. make a loud noiſe, rejoice, and ſing praiſe; exalt and extend the voice to the higheſt pitch, in the moſt muſical and melodious ſtrains; this heap of words is uſed to expreſs the intenſeneſs of mind, vehemency of affection, and ſtrength of ſpirit, and exceeding greatneſs of joy, with which the Lord ſhould be praiſed for his great and marvellous works.

℣. 5. Sing unto the Lord with the harp, &c.] Playing upon that at the ſame time: here and in the following verſe is an alluſion to old-teſtament-worſhip, and the manner of performing that; not that this ſhould be done in new-teſtament times, only new-teſtament-worſhip is expreſſed in old teſtament-language, which is no unuſual thing; hence in goſpel-times, and goſpel-churches, the ſaints, eſpecially when ſinging the new ſong of redeeming grace, are ſaid to have harps in their hands, expreſſive only of their ſpiritual melody in their hearts, Rev. v. 8, 9. and xiv. 2, 3. and xv. 2, 3. with the harp and the voice of the pſalm; with the harp alone firſt, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it, and then with the harp, and together with the words of a pſalm, ſung in a pſalm-tune. Goſpel-churches are to ſing pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, Eph. v. 19. Col iii. 16.

℣. 6. With trumpet and ſound of cornet, &c.] The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, render it with ductile trumpets, ſuch as were made of ſilver, as the two trumpets for the calling of the aſſembly, Numb. x. 2. to which the alluſion ſeems to be here, called Aſoſra by Joſephus[c], according to the Hebrew language חצוצרות; which he ſays were in length a little leſs than a cubit, but the pipe narrow, ſomewhat thicker than a flute, having a ſufficient breadth at the mouth to blow with, ending after the manner of a bell. The cornet was a trumpet or pipe, made of horn, from whence it has its name; ſuch were thoſe made of rams horns, the prieſts blew with when they encompaſſed Jericho, Joſh. vi. 4. make a joyful noiſe before the Lord, the King; or rather before the King, the Lord[d]; before the King, who is Jehovah, who is the King of kings, and Lord of lords; let this ſhout be made before him, in his preſence, and on account of his kingly office, and becauſe of ſome eminent appearance of his kingdom and glory; ſee Rev. xix. 6, 16.

℣. 7. Let the ſea roar, and the fulneſs thereof, &c.] See the note on Pſ. xcvi. 11. the world and they that dwell therein; men, the inhabitants of the world; that is, let them rejoice becauſe this glorious king has taken to himſelf his great power and reigns, Rev. xi. 15, 16, 17.

℣. 8. Let the floods clap their hands, &c.] Or rivers[e], daſhing againſt their banks, as they paſs along; a proſopopeia, as the preceding and following, expreſſing great joy on account of the Meſſiah, the reigning king. Aben Ezra interprets this of men that are in rivers, as the ſea in the preceding verſe of ſuch that are in ſhips at ſea; and the hills in the next clauſe of ſuch that dwell on them; let the hills be joyful together; ſee Iſ. lv. 12.

℣. 9. Before the Lord, for he cometh to judge the earth, &c.] See the note on Pſ. xcvi. 13. with righteouſneſs ſhall he judge the world, and the people with equity; both at his firſt and ſecond coming, and during the intermediate time; ſee the note as before. The only difference is, that in Pſ. xcvi. 13. it is ſaid that he ſhall judge the people with his truth, here with equity, or uprightneſſes[f]; in the moſt upright manner, according to the ſtricteſt rules of juſtice and judgment; ſee Iſ. xi. 3, 4, 5.

PSAL. XCIX.

THIS pſalm, with the foregoing from pſalm xcth, is aſcribed to Moſes by Jarchi and others; but cannot be his, ſince mention is made of Samuel in it, who lived many years after him. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, more rightly attribute it to David; the inſcription of the Syriac verſion, after ſaying it is David's, ſubjoins, "concerning the deſtruction of the Midianites, whom Moſes and the people of Iſrael led captive;" of which there is not the leaſt mention in it; but it more truly adds, "and a prophecy concerning the glory of the kingdom of the Meſſiah;" as it undoubtedly is.

℣. 1. The Lord reigneth, &c.] The king Meſſiah, he is made and declared Lord and Chriſt; he has reigned, does reign, and ever will; ſee Pſ. xciii. 1. and xcvi. 10. and xcvii. 1. let the people tremble; with awe of his majeſty, and reverence of his word and ordinances; rejoicing before him with trembling, as his own people and ſubjects do, Pſ. ii. 11. and ſo it agrees with Pſ. xcvii. 1. or it may be underſtood of the people that are enemies to Chriſt, who would not have him to reign, though he ſhall whether they will or no; and who will ſooner or later tremble for fear of him, and his righteous judgment. Jarchi refers this to the war of Gog and Magog. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions render it, let the people be angry; or it may be rendered, they are angry; or therefore they are angry; becauſe he reigns; ſo the people, both Jews and Gentiles, were angry and raged, when his kingdom was firſt viſibly ſet up among them, Pſ. ii. 1, 2. and ſo the nations will when he takes to himſelf his great power, and reigns, Rev. xi. 18. he ſitteth between the cherubim; upon or above, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; alluding to the ſeat of the Shekinah, or divine majeſty, in the holy of holies; and reſpects either the exalted glory of Chriſt among the angels, and above them at the right hand of God, where they are ſubject to him, ſtand about him, ready to do his will; or rather his preſence with his miniſters of the word, who are the inſtruments of ſpreading his goſpel, and enlarging his kingdom and intereſt in the world; ſee the note on Pſ. lxxx. 1. let the earth be moved; not that itſelf out of its place, but the inhabitants of it; and theſe either with a ſenſe of ſin and duty, and become ſubject to Chriſt their king; or with wrath and indignation at him, or through fear of him as before; Kimchi ſays, at the fall of Gog and Magog: it may be particularly underſtood of the land of Judea, and of the commotion in it, eſpecially in Jeruſalem, when the tidings were brought of the birth of the king Meſſiah, Matt. ii. 1, 2. or of the ſhaking and moving both of the civil and eccleſiaſtical ſtate of the nation, and of the ruin of it; ſee Heb. xii. 26, 27. 1 Theſſ. ii. 16.

℣. 2. The Lord is great in Zion, &c.] Where the temple ſtood, and into which Chriſt came as the proprietor of it, and gave it a greater glory by his preſence than the firſt temple had; here he preached his doctrines, wrought many of his miracles; here he poured forth the Spirit on his apoſtles; and from hence went forth his goſpel into all the world: or in Zion, that is, in his church, and among his people; here he grants his gracious preſence, and beſtows the bleſſings of his goodneſs; and ſhews himſelf to be great and glorious in his perſon, offices, and operations; ſee Pſ. xlviii. 1. and he is high above all people; as God, he is the Creator of them all; in whom they live, move, and have their being, and ſo muſt be above them all; as Mediator, he is the Saviour of his own people, and exalted to be ſo unto them; as King, he is higher than the kings of the earth, and therefore muſt be above all the reſt of the inhabitants of it; he is higher than the heavens, and the angels there, and therefore he muſt be higher than the earth, and they that dwell in it; he is highly exalted above every name that is named in this world, or in that to come.

℣. 3. Let them praiſe thy great and terrible name, &c.] All people, eſpecially the Lord's people; thoſe that dwell in Zion, where his name is great, in high eſteem, venerable, and valued; as his name Jeſus, or Saviour is amiable and lovely to his ſaints; and his name, the Lion of the tribe of Judah is terrible to his enemies: for it is holy; his name is holy, as well as reverend and great; his nature is holy, both divine and human; holy in all his ways and works; and is holineſs to his people, and therefore worthy of praiſe; holineſs is the ground and foundation of his praiſe from the Seraphim, Iſ. vi. 3.

℣. 4. The king's ſtrength alſo loveth judgment, &c.] Or he who is a ſtrong and mighty King, as Chriſt is; which appears by ſaving his people, and preſerving them to his kingdom and glory, and by deſtroying all his and their enemies; but though he is ſo potent and victorious a Prince, yet no tyrannical one; he loves and does what is juſt and righteous; he loved the righteous law of God, and obeyed it in the whole courſe of his life; he wrought out a perfect righteouſneſs for his people, and encourages and loves righteouſneſs in them; he will judge the world in righteouſneſs hereafter; and is now on his throne, and in his kingdom, ordering it with judgment and juſtice; all the adminiſtrations of his kingly office are juſt and true, and herein he delights: thou doſt eſtabliſh equity, or equities[a]; uprightneſſes, righteouſneſſes; a perfect and a complete righteouſneſs: this he has prepared[b], as the word ſignifies, by his obedience, ſufferings, and death, and has eſtabliſhed as an everlaſting one; moreover, equity, righteouſneſs, and juſtice, are the ſettled rules and laws of his government; ſee Iſ. ix. 7. and xi. 4, 5. thou executeſt judgment and righteouſneſs in Jacob; among the true Iſrael and people of God, as David his type did, 2 Sam. viii. 15. thereby keeping them in due order, in the obſervance of his righteous judgments and ſtatutes, and defending them from their enemies.

℣. 5. Exalt ye the Lord our God, &c.] Chriſt, who is Lord of all, and Immanuel, God with us, God in our nature, our Lord and our God; exalt him in his perſon, as God over all, bleſſed for ever; in his offices of prophet, prieſt, and king, by hearkening to his word, by truſting in his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, and by ſubmitting to his ordinances, and obeying his commands; exalt him in heart, thought, and affection, thinking highly of him, and affectionately loving him; exalt and extol him in words, ſpeak of his love and lovelineſs, and of the great things he has done; exalt him in private and in public, in the family and in the houſe of God; make mention of him every where, that his name be exalted: and worſhip at his footſtool; worſhip him who is the object of the adoration of angels, and ought to be of men; worſhip him privately and publickly, internally and externally, in ſpirit and in truth; at his footſtool, on earth, he being on his throne in heaven; ſee Iſ. lxvi. 1. or elſe the ark is meant, which is ſo called, 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. and this being a type of the human nature of Chriſt, that may be meant here; and which, though not the object of worſhip, nor is it ſaid, worſhip his footſtool, but at it; yet in worſhipping Chriſt, reſpect is to be had unto him, as in our nature, in which he has done ſuch great things for us: the Targum is, "worſhip in or at the houſe of his ſanctuary;" ſo Kimchi interprets it of the ſanctuary, which agrees with ℣. 9. for he is holy; eſſentially holy, glorious in holineſs as a divine perſon, and therefore to be worſhipped: or it is holy; the footſtool, the ark, the human nature of Chriſt, in which the Godhead dwells bodily.

℣. 6. Moſes and Aaron among his prieſts, &c.] The prieſts of the Lord, called and appointed by him, that miniſtered to him in that office, were the prieſts of Chriſt, types of him, and ceaſed when he came: theſe were the chief among them, or of them, as Kimchi obſerves: Moſes officiated as a prieſt before Aaron was called, and ſeparated to that ſervice; yea, it was he that conſecrated and inſtalled him in it, and that by offering ſacrifice among other things, Exod. xxix. 1. ſee alſo Exod. xxiv. 7, 8. Numb. vii. 1, &c. and that Aaron was the chief of them, there can be no queſtion; ſeeing he was the firſt from whom a race of prieſts ſprung, and who gave name to that order of prieſthood which continued until the Meſſiah's coming: and Samuel among them that call upon his name; theſe, according to Kimchi, deſcribe the prophets; among whom Samuel was the chief; ſee Acts iii. 24. calling on the name of the Lord, includes the whole worſhip of God, and is often uſed particularly of prayer; the object of which is God, and him only; and who is to be called upon at all times, and eſpecially in a time of trouble, and always in faith, and with ſincerity and truth; and an honour it is to be among ſuch perſons: now theſe three men, who were eminent for religion and piety, and particularly prayer; ſee Jer. xv. 1. are mentioned to animate and encourage the ſaints, by their example, to the worſhip and ſervice of the Lord, before exhorted to: they called upon the Lord; the Lord Chriſt, who is the object of invocation, was ſo in the old teſtament-diſpenſation, and ſhould be ſo in the new; ſee Acts vii. 59. and xxii. 16. 1 Cor. i. 2. Moſes called upon him, Exod. xxxii. 11. 32. ſo did Aaron, Numb. xvi. 22. and alſo Samuel, 1 Sam. vii. 8, 9. and xii. 18, 19. and he anſwered them; as he does all his people, ſooner or later, in one way or another; which is no ſmall encouragement to pray unto him.

℣. 7. He ſpake unto them in the cloudy pillar, &c.] In the pillar of the clouds of glory, as the Targum; in which the Lord went before the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, to lead them, and protect them from heat in the day, Exod. xiii. 21, 22. that is, he ſpake in this to Moſes and Aaron; for it ceaſed when they came to the land of Canaan; inſtances of which ſee in Exod. xix. 9. Numb. xii. 5. ſome have thought that the Lord might ſpeak to Samuel alſo out of a cloud, when he called upon him; him, and it thundered, ſince clouds and thunder go together, 1 Sam. xii. 18. the cloudy pillar was a type of Chriſt; and it is by him the Lord has ſpoken all his mind and will, when he was clothed with a cloud, or became obſcure in the form of a ſervant; and it is through him, the Mediator, that men have acceſs to God, and anſwers of prayer from him: they kept his teſtimonies; the law, and the precepts of it, which were teſtifications of the mind and will of God; theſe, Moſes, Aaron, and Samuel kept, though not perfectly, yet ſincerely, from a principle of love, and with a view to the glory of God: and the ordinance that he gave them; the ordinance of the Paſſover, with the ſeveral rituals of the ceremonial law, which was an ordinance of God until the Meſſiah came; and we, under the goſpel diſpenſation, ought to keep the ordinances of Chriſt in faith and love, as they have been delivered to us; and ſuch only can expect to be heard and anſwered by the Lord; and this is the reaſon of the mention of theſe things; ſee Pſ. lxvi. 18. Prov. xxviii. 9.

℣. 8. Thou anſweredſt them, O Lord, our God, &c.] This is repeated to ſhew the certainty of it, and to encourage the people of God, in all ages, to pray unto him: thou waſt a God that forgaveſt them; even Moſes, Aaron, and Samuel; for, though they were great and good men, they did not live without ſin, and ſtood in need of pardoning grace and mercy, which they had; or rather the people for whom they prayed: ſo the Targum, "O God, thou waſt forgiving thy people for them;" that is, through their prayers; ſee Numb. xiv. 19, 20. Pſ. lxxviii. 38. though thou tookeſt vengeance of their inventions; their ſins, which are the inventions of men, Eccl. vii. 29. Kimchi and others interpret this of the inventions, deſigns, and practices of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, againſt Moſes and Aaron, Numb. xvi. 32. 35. but though God took vengeance on them, it does not appear that he forgave their iniquities; wherefore it is beſt to underſtand this either of the ſins of Moſes and Aaron themſelves, which, though pardoned, God took vengeance of, and ſhewed his diſpleaſure at, by not ſuffering them to go into the land of Canaan, Numb. xx. 10, 11, 12. and xxvii. 12, 13, 14. or elſe of the ſins of the Iſraelites, who murmured upon the report of the ſpies; and though they were pardoned at the interceſſion of Moſes, yet ſo far vengeance was taken upon them, that none of them were ſuffered to enter the land of Canaan; but their carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs, Numb. xiv. 19—23. and thus, though God forgives the iniquities of his people, for the ſake of his Son, yet he takes vengeance of them on him, their ſurety; on whom they have been laid and born, and who has not been ſpared in the leaſt; but has bore the whole wrath and vengeance of God due to ſin; and beſides, tho' he pardons his people, yet he chaſtiſes them for their ſins, and ſhews his fatherly diſpleaſure at them.

℣. 9. Exalt the Lord our God, &c.] Having given the above inſtances of Moſes, Aaron, and Samuel, ſerving and worſhipping the Lord, the pſalmiſt repeats the exhortation in ℣. 5. which he enforces by their example; ſee the note there: and worſhip at his holy hill; the holy hill of Zion, the church; attend the public worſhip and ſervice of it: the Targum is, "worſhip at the mountain of the houſe of his ſanctuary;" the temple, a type of the church of Chriſt: for the Lord our God is holy; his nature is holy, and he is glorious in the perfection of his holineſs, and therefore to be praiſed and exalted; and his name is holy, and ſo reverend, and therefore to be worſhipped; ſee in ℣. 3. 5.

A pſalm of praiſe.

THE Arabic verſion aſcribes this pſalm to David, and very likely it is one of his: the Targum calls it "a hymn for the ſacrifice of thankſgiving;" and ſo Jarchi. It is ſuppoſed to have been uſed when peace-offerings for thankſgivings were offered up, Lev. vii. 11, 12. The Syriac inſcription is very odd; "concerning Joſhua the ſon of Nun, when he made the war of the Ammonites to ceaſe;" though it more rightly adds, "but in the new teſtament, when the Gentiles are converted to the faith:" and indeed the ſcope of the pſalm is to exhort the Gentiles to praiſe the Meſſiah, to ſerve and worſhip him, from the conſideration of his goodneſs and mercy, truth and faithfulneſs.

℣. 1. Make a joyful noiſe unto the Lord, all ye lands.] Or, all the earth[c]; that is, as the Targum, all the inhabitants of the earth, who are called upon to ſhout unto him as their King; as the angels did at his birth, the diſciples when he made his public entrance into Jeruſalem, the apoſtles at his aſcenſion to heaven, the ſaints when the marriage of him, the Lamb, will be come, and both men and angels when he ſhall deſcend from heaven to judge the world; and ſuch a joyful noiſe or ſhout ſhould be made unto him as to a triumphant conqueror, who has got the victory over ſin, Satan, death and the grave, and every enemy of his and his people, and made them more than conquerors through himſelf; ſee Pſ. xcv. 1.

℣. 2. Serve the Lord with gladneſs, &c.] Not with a ſlaviſh fear, under a ſpirit of bondage, as the Jews under the legal diſpenſation; not in the oldneſs of the letter, but in the newneſs of the Spirit; with ſpiritual joy, and freedom of ſoul, as under the ſpirit of adoption; readily, willingly, chearfully; without ſiniſter and ſelfiſh ends and views; as their Lord and Maſter; taking delight in his perſon, and pleaſure in his ſervice; rejoicing in him, without having any confidence in the fleſh: come before his preſence with ſinging; to the throne of his grace with thankfulneſs for mercies received, as well as to implore others; and into his houſe, and at his ordinances, beginning public worſhip with ſinging pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs; ſee Pſ. xcv. 2.

℣. 3. Know ye that the Lord he is God, &c.] Own and acknowledge him to be God, as well as man; and though a man, yet not a mere man, but the great God and our Saviour, the true God and eternal Life; ſo a man, as that he is Jehovah's Fellow; or or our God, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; Immanuel, God with us, God in our nature, God manifeſt in the fleſh: it is he that hath made us; as men, without whom nothing is made that was made; in him we live, move, and have our being; and, as new creatures, we are his workmanſhip, created in him, and by him; regenerated by his ſpirit and grace, and formed for himſelf, his ſervice and glory; and made great and honourable by him, raiſed from a low to an high eſtate; from being beggars on the dunghil, to ſit among princes, yea, made kings and prieſts unto God by him; ſo Kimchi, "he hath brought us up, and exalted us:" and not we ourſelves; that is, did not make ourſelves, neither as creatures, nor as new creatures; as we have no hand in making either our ſouls or bodies, ſo neither in our regeneration, or in the work of God upon our hearts; that is ſolely the Lord's work: there is a double reading of this clauſe; the marginal reading is, and we are his; which is followed by the Targum and Aben Ezra: both are approved of by Kimchi, and the ſenſe of both is included; for if the Lord has made us, and not we ourſelves, then we are not our own, but his, and ought to ſerve and glorify him: we are his by creation; we are alſo his offſpring, as ſaid Aratus[d], an heathen poet, cited by the apoſtle Paul, Acts xvii. 28. we are his people; by choice and covenant; by his Father's gift, and his own purchaſe; and by the power of his grace, bringing to a voluntary ſurrender and ſubjection to him; even the Gentiles particularly, who were not his people, but now his people, 1 Pet. ii. 9, 10. and the ſheep of his paſture; his ſheep alſo by gift and purchaſe, called by him, made to know his voice, and follow him; for whom he provides paſture, leads to it, and feeds them with it himſelf; ſee Pſ. lxxiv. 1. and xcv. 7.

℣. 4. Enter into his gates with thankſgiving, &c.] The ſame with the gates of Zion, loved by the Lord more than all the dwellings of Jacob; the gates of Jeruſalem, within which the feet of the ſaints ſtand with pleaſure; the gates of wiſdom, or Chriſt, where his followers watch and wait; the gates into his houſe, the church, and the public ordinances of it, to be entered into with thankfulneſs for all mercies, temporal and ſpiritual; for the goſpel, and goſpel-opportunities and ordinances: and into his courts with praiſe; with the ſacrifice of praiſe, as in Pſ. xcvi. 8. of theſe courts, ſee Pſ. lxv. 4. and lxxxiv. 2. be thankful unto him; for all bleſſings of grace in him, and by him; for all things, and at all times: and bleſs his name; by aſcribing honour, bleſſing, and glory to him, ſaying, bleſſed be his glorious name for ever, Pſ. lxxii. 19. ſee Pſ. ciii. 1.

℣. 5. For the Lord is good, &c.] Both in a providential way, and in a way of grace, and does good; he is the good ſhepherd, that has laid down his life for the ſheep; and the good Samaritan, that pours in the wine and oil of his love and grace, and his precious blood, to the healing of the wounds made by ſin: whilſt he was on earth, he went about doing good to the bodies and ſouls of men; and he continues to do good unto them, and therefore ſhould be praiſed, ſerved, and worſhipped: his mercy is everlaſting; or his grace[e]; there's always a ſufficiency of it for his people; and his loving-kindneſs, which may be alſo here meant, is always the ſame; having loved his own which were in the world, he loves them to the end, John xiii. 1. and his truth endureth to all generations; or his faithfulneſs in fulfilling his promiſes, and performing his engagements; he was faithful to his Father that appointed him, and to the covenant he made with him; and he is faithful to his people, to keep what they commit to his care and charge now, and to give them the crown of righteouſneſs at the laſt day, which is laid up for them; and upon all theſe conſiderations, and for theſe reaſons, ought to be praiſed and adored.

A pſalm of David.

THE title of this pſalm, in the Syriac verſion, is, "for Aſaph, an exhortation of David, concerning thoſe things which are required in the miniſtry of the houſe of the Lord; and a prophecy of the praiſe of the conqueror, and of the perfect man in God." Theodoret thinks it was written by David concerning good Joſiah, whom he foreſaw, by a ſpirit of prophecy, would riſe up a great reformer of the people, and whom he propoſes as a pattern of perfection to others; but it was, no doubt, written by him of himſelf; very likely, after he was delivered out of his troubles by the death of Saul, and was come to the kingdom, ſince he reſolves to ſing of mercy and judgment; though by the interrogation, when wilt thou come unto me? it looks as if he had not arrived to the height of his honour: wherefore, perhaps, this pſalm was penned between his being made king over Judah, and his being made king over all the tribes; but be it as it may, the deſign of it is to ſhew his reſolutions, how he would behave as a king in his court, and as a maſter in his family; ſo that it is very inſtructive to kings and civil magiſtrates, and to parents and maſters of families: and as David was a type of Chriſt, he ſeems, throughout the whole, to perſonate him; and, indeed, there are ſome things in it which agree with none ſo well as with him; ſuch as behaving wiſely, in a perfect way, and walking in his houſe with a perfect heart; not ſuffering any evil thing to cleave unto him, and knowing none, and the like.

℣. 1. I will ſing of mercy and judgment, &c.] Either of mercy and juſtice, exerciſed by him towards his people, which he reſolved to do, and did, 2 Sam. viii. 15. which are two very principal points in government, are the glory of a reign, the ſupport of the throne, and the happineſs of a people, Prov. xx. 28. or rather of the mercy of God to himſelf, in delivering him from his enemies, and raiſing him to the throne; and of the judgment of God in maintaining his cauſe, and avenging him on thoſe that hated him: every good man has reaſon to ſing of the mercy of God; not only of his providential mercy, but of his ſpecial mercy, prepared in council and covenant for him, diſplayed in regeneration, in the pardon of ſin, and in his everlaſting ſalvation: or of grace and goodneſs, as the word [f] ſignifies; of the grace and goodneſs of God laid up in Chriſt, ſhewn forth through him, and to which the whole of ſalvation is owing; ſinging of this ſhews a ſenſe of it, thankfulneſs for it, and a chearful diſpoſition of ſoul, in a view of intereſt in it: and he may alſo ſing of judgment; of righteous puniſhment inflicted upon his enemies, and the enemies of God, and Chriſt, and true religion; not as taking delight in the miſery of fellow-creatures, but as rejoicing in the glory of divine juſtice diſplayed therein, and in a deliverance from them; as Iſrael did at the Red Sea; and as the church will, when Babylon is deſtroyed: moreover, a good man may ſing of mercy and judgment together, with reſpect to himſelf; there being, in the courſe of his life, a mixture of proſperity and adverſity, of merciful and afflictive diſpenſations, which work together for his good; and he has reaſon to be thankful for the one as for the other, as Job was, Job i. 21. ſo the Targum, "if thou rendereſt mercy to me; if thou exerciſeſt judgment on me; for all I will praiſe thee:" judgment ſometimes ſignifies chaſtiſement, Jer. x. 24. 1 Cor. xi. 32. it may be underſtood of Chriſt, who ſung of the mercy of God, as ſhewn in the miſſion of him into the world to ſave men, and which was glorified in their redemption by him; and of the juſtice of God exerciſed on him, as their ſurety, on whom judgment came unto condemnation for their ſins; and when the ſword of juſtice was awaked againſt him, the hand of mercy was turned on the little ones, Zach. xiii. 7. unto thee, O Lord, will I ſing; on the above ſubjects.

℣. 2. I will behave myſelf wiſely in a perfect way, &c.] So David did before he came to the throne, which made Saul fear him, and the people love him, 1 Sam. xviii. 14, 15, 16. and ſo he reſolved to do, and did afterwards; and thus it becomes all good men, in every ſtation of life, to do: and then do they behave wiſely, when they walk circumſpectly, not as fools, but as wiſe, redeeming the time; when they make the perfect law of liberty, the word of God, the rule of their faith; take Chriſt for their pattern and example, and the Spirit for their guide; when they walk as becomes the goſpel of Chriſt, ſeek the glory of God, and the good of others; behave inoffenſively to all, and live as pilgrims and ſtrangers here; attending cloſely to their duty, walking in all the commandments of the Lord blameleſs: and yet it is certain, that no man lives without ſin, or does or can behave himſelf wiſely in ſo perfect a way and manner, as to have no fault in him; wherefore this ſeems moſt applicable to Chriſt, who, as it was propheſied he ſhould, ſo he did deal prudently, or behave wiſely, Iſ. lii. 13. where the ſame word is uſed as here; and this is true of Chriſt throughout the whole of his life; in his infancy, when but twelve years of age; in his public miniſtry, in his conduct towards all men; in his anſwers to the enſnaring queſtions of his enemies; in his behaviour at his apprehenſion, arraignment, condemnation, and crucifixion; and this to perfection, ſo as that the leaſt fault could not be found in him: O when wilt thou come unto me? and perform thy promiſe in bringing me to rule over all the tribes of Iſrael: or it may be read without an interrogation, when thou wilt come unto me [g]; that is, when thou wilt grant me thy gracious preſence, and divine aſſiſtance, then I will behave myſelf wiſely, in a perfect way; or in the way of perfect [h] and upright men, and will walk with them, and do as they do: without the grace of God, and ſtrength of Chriſt, and the aſſiſtance of the Spirit, nothing is to be done that is wiſe and good: if it is applied to Chriſt, it reſpects the time of his ſufferings and death, when he was without the divine preſence and help: I will walk within my houſe with a perfect heart; or in the integrity of my heart [i]; in a ſincere and upright manner, ruling my own houſe well, and ſetting a good example to all in the family; and ſo ſhould all good men do, performing all duties of religion in the family; be a pattern of good works, bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and neglect nothing that may contribute to their real good and the glory of God: the houſe of Chriſt is his church and people; here he walks, and manifeſts himſelf, giving proofs of his ſincere love and affection to them: the Targum paraphraſes it, "the houſe of my doctrine;" ſuch is the church of Chriſt, Iſ. ii. 3.

℣. 3. I will ſet no wicked thing before mine eyes, &c.] Either the eyes of the body, which are the inlets of luſt, and are eaſily catched with objects that inflame the heart, and ſhould be turned aſide from beholding vanity; or the eyes of the mind; ſo the Targum, "I will not propoſe to my heart;" or as Kimchi, "in my thought;" that is, I will not ſet up an evil thing in my imagination, to dwell upon in my thoughts, and take delight and pleaſure in meditating upon it; or ſet it before me, to imitate as a pattern, to work by, and copy after: Chriſt did not ſo; he ſet the Lord always before him, Pſ. xvi. 8. not any thing of Belial [k], or, Satan, as the phraſe here may be rendered, no, he always bid Satan, or any thing of his, be gone, and get behind him, Matt. iv. 10. and xvi. 23. I hate the work of them that turn aſide; from God, and from his law; from the paths of religion, truth and virtue; and from the goſpel, and a profeſſion of it; ſuch are not fit for the kingdom of God, and in theſe God and Chriſt have no pleaſure, Heb. x. 38. it ſhall not cleave to me; neither the wicked thing, or thing of Belial, nor the work of apoſtacy; that is, he would have no familiarity nor fellowſhip with it; not come near it, nor connive at it, but hate and abhor it: the Jews ſaid, an evil diſeaſe, or a thing of Belial, cleaveth faſt unto him, Pſ. xli. 8. but they were miſtaken.

℣. 4. A froward heart ſhall depart from me, &c.] A man of a froward heart, that deviſes frowardneſs in his heart, and ſpeaks it out with his mouth; that which is perverſe, and contrary to the law of God and goſpel of Chriſt, to the light of nature and the word of God; contrary to the ſentiments of all good men, and repugnant to truth and good manners: ſuch ſort of perſons are diſagreeable companions, and good men would not chuſe to have any thing to do with them; they are hateful to Chriſt, and ſhall be bid to depart from him; ſee Prov.

Prov. viii. 13. and vi. 14. I will not know a wicked perſon; ſo as to be familiar with him, or ſhew him any reſpect; have any affection for him, or take any notice of him; ſuch Chriſt will not know at the great day, Matt. vii. 23. or I will not know wickedneſs[l], or any wicked work and action, approve of it, love it, delight in it, and do it: the Targum interprets it of the evil concupiſcence, corruption of nature, or indwelling ſin, which is hated by the believer, Rom. vii. 15. and is utterly unknown to Chriſt; he was not conſcious of it; he knew no ſin, 2 Cor. v. 21. original or actual; he had no ſin in him, nor was any done by him.

ỳ. 5. Whoſo privily ſlandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off, &c.] That raiſes and ſpreads a falſe report of him; that inſinuates evil things of him; that brings falſe charges and accuſations againſt him, in a private manner, when he has no opportunity to defend himſelf: ſuch an one, David threatens to cut off from his preſence, as Kimchi interprets it; from all communion and converſation with him; and yet he liſtened to the ſlanders of Ziba againſt Mephiboſheth: but Chriſt, who knows the hearts and the ſecret actions of men, will reject and cut off all perſons of ſuch a character: the Targum is, "he that ſpeaketh with a triple tongue againſt his neighbour, him will I deſtroy, and he ſhall be ſmitten with the leproſy:" a ſlandering tongue is called a triple tongue with the Jews[m], becauſe, as they ſay, it kills three perſons; him that carries the ſlander, him that receives it, and him of whom it is related; ſee Eccleſiaſticus xxviii. 16. him that hath an high look, and a proud heart, will not I ſuffer; or, I cannot[n]; that is, cannot bear him in my preſence and company; cannot look upon him with any pleaſure and delight: the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and the Oriental verſions, render it, with him I will not eat; have no familiarity or acquaintance with him; ſee 1 Cor. v. 11. ſuch who looked above others, and with contempt upon them, whoſe hearts were large, as the word[o] ſignifies, were ambitious and inſatiable, and never had enough of riches and honour; ſuch were very contrary to David's character, and could never be agreeable to him, Pſ. cxxxi. 1, 2. as the proud and haughty phariſees were not to Chriſt, Luke xviii. 9—14. and the man of ſin that exalts himſelf above all that is called god, that little horn, whoſe look is more ſtout than his fellows, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. 8. Dan. vii. 20.

ỳ. 6. Mine eyes ſhall be upon the faithful of the land, &c.] To look them out, bring them to court, and promote them to places of honour and truſt; ſuch an one was David himſelf, and ſuch there were in the land of Iſrael, though but few, and of which he complains, Pſ. xii. 1. Chriſt's eyes are upon faithful perſons, on faithful miniſters of the word, who preach the goſpel faithfully, adminiſter the ordinances truly, are faithful to the ſouls of men in watching over them, reproving and exhorting them; his eyes are upon them to keep and preſerve them, and to honour and reward them with a crown of life that fadeth not away; and his eyes are alſo on faithful members of churches, ſuch who truly believe in him, who hold faſt the faithful word, and keep cloſe to his worſhip and ordinances; his eyes are upon them, to ſhew favour to them, to beſtow bleſſings upon them, and to protect and defend them, and preſerve them from periſhing: that they may dwell with me; or, ſit with me[p]; at his table, or at the council-board, or in judgment, and aſſiſt him in the affairs of government: ſo ſuch as are faithful ſhall dwell with Chriſt both here and hereafter; they dwell in him, and with him by faith, and have communion with him; they dwell in his houſe below, and ſhall dwell with him above for evermore: he that walketh in a perfect way; in God's way, in the way he has preſcribed and directed, to what is perfect; in a way agreeable to his word, in all his commandments and ordinances, in Chriſt, the way, the truth, and the life: and in the way of perfect men[q], as it may be rendered; in the way that ſuch walk; and though he does not walk perfectly, or without ſin, yet ſincerely and uprightly: he ſhall ſerve me; be taken into my ſervice, be employed by me, as a prime-miniſter, a counſellor, a ſecretary of ſtate, or in other leſſer places under David. But as it refers to Chriſt, it ſignifies that ſuch an one ſhall be a ſervant of his, which is no ſmall honour; for where he is, there ſhall his ſervant be, John xii. 26. The Targum is, "he ſhall ſtand with my ſervants;" in his houſe here, and at his right hand hereafter.

ỳ. 7. He that worketh deceit ſhall not dwell within my houſe, &c.] Flatterers, ſycophants, tricking and fraudulent perſons, who ſeek to ſupplant others, and get into their places; theſe ſhould loſe the favour they had, when detected. So hypocritical perſons, that have only a form of godlineſs, a maſk of religion, and falſe teachers that lie in wait to deceive; and Antichriſt, whoſe coming was with all deceivableneſs of unrighteouſneſs; who has ſeduced men by his miracles, doctrines, and ſorceries; theſe ſhall have no place, neither in Chriſt's houſe below nor above. The Targum is, "he that works deceit ſhall not dwell in the midſt of the houſe of my ſanctuary:" he that telleth lies, ſhall not tarry in my ſight; or, he ſhall not be eſtabliſhed before mine eyes[r]; he ſhall not continue in his poſt and place, in his office and ſtation; he ſhall ſoon be diſmiſſed from it; lying is very abominable to God, very prejudicial to men, and hated by Chriſt, who is truth itſelf. All ſorts of lies and liars are ſo, religious and doctrinal ones; ſuch who ſpeak lies in hypocriſy, as the emiſſaries of Rome; all that make an abomination, or a lye, will have no place with Chriſt in the new Jeruſalem, Rev. xxi. 27.

ỳ. 8. I will early deſtroy all the wicked of the land, &c.] Of the land of Iſrael, ſignifying that he would make a general reformation throughout the kingdom; that as ſoon as wicked men were diſcovered in any part of the land, he would cut them off, would take the firſt opportunity of puniſhing them as the law directs: or he would do it in mornings[s], as in the Hebrew text; that is, every morning, conſtantly and continually; or it may be, mention is made of the morning, becauſe that was the uſual time of hearing and judging cauſes, Jer. xxi. 12. or this may have reſpect to the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, whoſe coming will be as the morning; when the heathens ſhall periſh out of his land, when ſinners ſhall be conſumed out of the earth, and the wicked ſhall be no more, and he will deſtroy them that deſtroy the earth, Pſ. x. 16. and civ. 35. Rev. xi. 18. The Targum agrees with this, "in the world to come, which is like to the light of the morning, I will deſtroy all the wicked of the earth:" that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord; from the city of Jeruſalem, as the Targum and Kimchi interpret it; and it may be underſtood of the church of God, in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, into which ſhall enter no more the uncircumciſed and the unclean; and all that offend and do iniquity ſhall be gathered out of it, Iſ. lii. 1. Matt. xiii. 41. or of the new Jeruſalem church-ſtate, in the perſonal reign of Chriſt, into which no wicked doers will be admitted, but will remain for ever without, Rev. xxi. 27. and xxii. 15.

PSALM CII.

A prayer of the afflicted when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before the Lord.

WHETHER this pſalm was written by David, under a prophetic ſpirit, concerning future times; or whether by one of the Babyloniſh captivity, as Daniel, Nehemiah, Ezra, or any other; either juſt at the cloſe of it, or upon their return from it; ſince it is ſaid that the ſet time to favour Zion was come, is not certain: however, ſince Zion was a type of the goſpel-church, it may be very well applied to goſpel-times; and the rather, ſince ſome paſſages in it are cited by the apoſtle in Heb. i. 10, 11, 12. as to be underſtood of Chriſt; ſee ℣. 25, 26, 27. The Syriac verſion calls it, "a prophecy concerning the new people, namely, the Gentiles in the faith:" it is entitled, a prayer of the afflicted, or poor[e]; which Auſtin underſtood of Chriſt, who became poor for our ſakes, and was afflicted of God and men. Aben Ezra, Jarchi, and Kimchi, interpret it of the Jews ſuffering affliction in the Babyloniſh captivity; the former obſerves, that it was the opinion of ſome of their interpreters, that this prayer was compoſed by ſome wiſe and underſtanding man that fell into the hand of his enemies. It may very well be applied to any afflicted perſon; all the people of God are more or leſs a poor and afflicted people; outwardly afflicted in body, in eſtate, and in their good name and character; inwardly with the corruptions of their own hearts, the temptations of Satan, and divine deſertions; when it is a very proper time for prayer, Jam. v. 13. and it is their privilege that they have a God of grace and mercy to pray unto, a throne of grace to come at, at all times, a ſpirit of grace and ſupplication to aſſiſt them, and Chriſt their advocate and high-prieſt, to preſent their petitions for them: and this every one may do, when he is overwhelmed; preſſed with the burden of ſin, without a view of pardon, covered, as the word[f] ſignifies, with ſhame and ſorrow for it; almoſt overſet with, and ready to faint, and ſink under afflictions, which like waves and billows roll over him; and at the ſame time is attended with much darkneſs and unbelieving frames of ſoul: and poureth out his complaint before the Lord; concerning his trials and afflictions, eſpecially concerning the badneſs and naughtineſs of his heart, the hardneſs of it, being ſo unaffected with providences, and under the word, and at the ordinances; concerning his leanneſs, barrenneſs, and unfruitfulneſs under the means of grace; his lukewarmneſs and indifference, his deadneſs and dulneſs in duty; his unbelief, diſtruſt, and dejection of mind; as well as of the low eſtate of Zion, the little ſucceſs of the goſpel, the few inſtances of converſion, and the unbecoming walk of many profeſſors. Such a complaint as this, or meditation[g], which he has thought of and digeſted in his mind; or all that is in his heart, as Aben Ezra obſerves, he pours out; which denotes enlargement in prayer, the abundance of his heart, out of which his mouth ſpeaketh; the fulneſs of his petition, as alſo freedom of expreſſion; it ſignifies a ϖαρρησια, a telling all one's mind, ſpeaking out with great liberty; laying it in a humble manner before the Lord, before whom all things are naked and open, and leaving it with him, in entire ſubmiſſion and reſignation to his will, to do as ſeems good in his ſight.

℣. 1. Hear my prayer, O Lord, &c.] The prayer of a poor, deſtitute, and afflicted one; his own, and not another's; not what was compoſed for him, but compoſed by him; which came out of his own heart, and out of unfeigned lips, and expreſſed under a feeling ſenſe of his own wants and troubles; and though dictated and inwrought in his heart by the Spirit of God, yet, being put up by him in faith and fervency, it is called his own, and which he deſires might be heard: and let my cry come unto thee; he calls his prayer a cry, becauſe it was uttered in diſtreſs, and with great vehemency and importunity; and he prays that it might come unto God, even into his ears, and be regarded by him, and not ſhut out: prayer comes aright to God, when it comes through Chriſt, and out of his hands, perfumed with the incenſe of his mediation.

℣. 2. Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble, &c.] Thy Shekinah, as the Targum: when God hides his face at any time from his people, it is a trouble to them, and very grievous; but eſpecially, when they are in any other trouble beſides; it is very afflicting, indeed, when to their outward trouble this is added, which was Job's caſe, Job xxiii. 1, 2, 3. incline thine ear unto me; condeſcend, in great grace and goodneſs, to ſtoop and bow thine ear, and liſten to the voice of my ſupplication: in the day when I call, anſwer me ſpeedily; good men are always for ſpeedy anſwers of prayer; they would have them the day, the hour, the moment they are calling upon God: ſometimes anſwers are returned as ſoon, Iſ. lxv. 24. the caſe of the pſalmiſt was very diſtreſſing, and, as he thought at leaſt, required haſte, and therefore requeſts a ſpeedy anſwer.

℣. 3. For my days are conſumed like ſmoke, &c.] Which ſuddenly riſes up, is eaſily diſſipated, and quickly diſappears; ſo ſudden, ſhort, and tranſient are the days of man's life; ſee James iv. 14. or in ſmoke[h], as the Syriac verſion; his days were ſpent in great obſcurity, in the darkneſs of affliction, temptation, and deſertion; and in ſo much vexation, trouble, and uneaſineſs, as if he had lived in ſmoke all his time: and my bones are burnt as an hearth; on which fire is continually made for the preparation of food, and other uſes: or as a trivet, or gridiron; ſo the Targum: or as a frying-pan; ſo the Arabic verſion: the meaning is, that, through trouble and grief, his bones, the ſtrongeſt parts of his body, the props and ſupports of it, were ſo weakened and enfeebled, the ſtrength of them ſo exhauſted, that they were as if they had been parched and burnt up, as the hearth by fire; ſee Prov. xvii. 22. Pſ. xxii. 15.

℣. 4. My heart is ſmitten, and withered like graſs, &c.] Like graſs in the ſummer ſolſtice[d], which being ſmitten with the heat of the ſun, or by ſome blaſt of thunder and lightning, is dried up, and withers away; ſo his heart was ſmitten with a ſenſe of ſin, and of God's wrath and diſpleaſure at him, and with the heat of affliction and trouble, that it failed him, and he could not look up with joy and comfort: ſo that I forget to eat my bread; ſometimes, through grief and trouble, perſons refuſe to eat bread, as Jonathan and Ahab, which is a voluntary act, and purpoſely done; but here, in the pſalmiſt, there was ſuch a loſs of appetite, through ſorrow, that he forgot his ſtated meals, having no manner of inclination to food: ſome underſtand this of ſpiritual food, the bread of life, refuſing to be comforted with it; ſo the Targum, "for I forgot the law of my doctrine."

℣. 5. By reaſon of the voice of my groaning, &c.] Under the burden of ſin, and preſſure of afflictions: my bones cleave to my ſkin; was quite emaciated, reduced to a ſkeleton, became nothing but ſkin and bone[e]; which ſometimes is occaſioned as by outward afflictions, ſo by ſoul-troubles: or to my fleſh[f]; fleſh is put for ſkin; ſee Job xix. 20. Lam. iv. 8.

℣. 6. I am like a pelican of the wilderneſs, &c.] It may be ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from another of the ſame name that lives upon the waters; which has the name of Pelican in the Greek tongue, as is ſaid, from its ſmiting and piercing its breaſt, and letting out blood for the reviving of its young; and in the Hebrew language, from its vomiting ſhell-fiſh it has ſwallowed down; ſee the note on Lev. xi. 18. where the word is rendered a pelican as here, and in Deut. xiv. 17. the ſame we call the ſhovelard; but a cormorant in Iſ. xxxiv. 11. Zeph. ii. 14. however, it ſeems to be a bird of ſolitude, and therefore the pſalmiſt compares himſelf to it. According to Iſidore[g], it is an Egyptian bird, that inhabits the deſert of the river Nile, from whence it has the name of Canopus Ægyptus: I am like an owl of the deſert; or of deſert places; ſo the Tigurine verſion; it is tranſlated the little owl in Lev. xi. 17. Deut. xiv. 16. It delights to be on old walls, and in ruined houſes, and cares not to conſort with other birds, and it makes a hideous ſorrowful noiſe[h]. Jarchi renders it the hawk, but that, as Kimchi[i] obſerves, is found in habitable places. Bochart[k] thinks the Onocrotalos is meant, a bird ſo much of the ſame kind with the Pelican, that they are promiſcuouſly uſed by learned men; and which is a creature, as Jerom[l] ſays, that is uſed to dwell in deſert places; and Iſidore[m] obſerves, that there are two ſorts of them, one that lives in the water, and another in the deſert; it has its name from its braying like an aſs; and Ælianus[n] ſpeaks of a bird of this ſort in India, which has a large crop like a ſack; and the Hebrew word Cos here uſed, ſignifies a cup or veſſel, from whence it may have its name; and which he ſays makes a very diſagreeable noiſe, to which the pſalmiſt may compare the voice of his groaning, ℣. 5.

℣. 7. I watch, &c.] Night after night, and take no ſleep; can't get any by reaſon of thoughtfulneſs, care, and trouble: and am as a ſparrow alone upon the houſe top; or, as a bird[o]; for there is no neceſſity of limiting it to a ſparrow, to which the account does not ſeem ſo well to agree; for ſparrows will not only perch on houſe-tops and ſolitary places, but will make their neſts in dwelling-houſes, and in places of public reſort, as temples; hence David ſpeaks of the ſparrow finding an houſe near the altars of God, Pſ. lxxxiv. 3. and Herodotus[p] makes mention of ſparrows and other birds making their neſts in the temple at Branchides; which may ſerve to illuſtrate the text laſt mentioned: wherefore this may be underſtood of any ſolitary bird, and eſpecially of the owl[q]: the Jews had flat roofs upon their houſes, and here birds of ſolitude would come and ſit alone in the night-ſeaſon, to which the pſalmiſt likens himſelf; being either forſaken by his friends and acquaintance, or being in melancholy circumſtances, he choſe to be alone, mourning over his ſorrowful ſtate and condition.

℣. 8. Mine enemies reproach me all the day, &c.] For his principles and practices, being different from theirs; for his religion, and preciſeneſs in it; for his faith and profeſſion of it, and for his holy walk and converſation. Good men have their enemies, and always had; but then they are ſuch who are alſo enemies to God and Chriſt, and true religion; and theſe, not content to reproach now and then, continually throw out their ſcoffs and jeers; which is not grateful, and is here mentioned as an article of complaint; though the ſaints ſhould reckon reproach for the ſake of Chriſt and religion, greater riches than all the treaſures in Egypt: and they that are mad againſt me; as the Jews were againſt Chriſt, becauſe of his miracles, doctrine, and ſucceſs, and therefore ſought to take away his life; and as the apoſtle Paul before converſion was, even exceeding mad againſt the ſaints, and perſecuted them to ſtrange cities, Luke vi. 11. Acts xxvi. 11. ſo were the pſalmiſt's enemies quite outrageous and implacable, being his ſworn enemies, as follows: are ſworn againſt me; laid themſelves under a curſe, to do him all the miſchief they could, and it may be to take away his life; as thoſe who ſware they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul, Acts xxiii. 12. or they ſware to lies, falſe charges and accuſations brought againſt him, like thoſe that Jezebel ſuborned againſt Naboth: or they ſware by me[r]; as the words may be rendered, rendered; they ſware by his calamities and diſtreſſes, and wiſhed they might be as he was, if they did not do ſo and ſo; and took his name for a curſe.

℣. 9. For I have eaten aſhes like bread, &c.] He ſitting in aſhes, as Job did, and rolling himſelf in them in the manner of mourners; and having no other table than the ground to eat his food upon, he might eat aſhes along with it; and by an hypallage of the words, the ſenſe may be, that he eat bread like aſhes, no more ſavoured and reliſhed it, or was nouriſhed by it, than if he had eat aſhes; the meaning is, that he was fed with the bread of adverſity, and water of affliction: and mingled my drink with weeping; that is, with tears; as he drank, the tears ran down his cheeks, and mixed with the liquor in his cup; he was fed with the bread of tears, and had them to drink in great meaſure; theſe were his meat and his drink, day and night, whilſt enemies reproached him, ſwore at him, againſt him, and by him; ſee Pſ. lxxx. 5. and xlii. 3.

℣. 10. Becauſe of thine indignation and thy wrath, &c] This was the burden of his complaint, what gave him the greateſt uneaſineſs; not ſo much the reproach of his enemies, and his other outward afflictions, as the ſenſe he had of God's wrath and indignation. The people of God are as deſerving of his wrath, as others; and when they are awakened to a ſenſe of ſin and danger, or the law enters into their conſciences, it works wrath there, and leaves nothing but a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, till comfort is given; and under afflictive providences, they are very ready to conclude, that the wrath of God is upon them; but this is only their apprehenſion of things; it is not in reality: for God has not appointed them to wrath, and has ſwore he will not be wroth with them; Chriſt has bore it for them, in their room and ſtead; and being juſtified by his blood and righteouſneſs, they are ſaved from it; but then the ſenſe they have of it is very terrible, and there is no reſt, peace, and comfort in their ſouls, whilſt under the apprehenſions of it: for thou haſt lifted me up, and caſt me down; as a man that, in wreſtling, has the advantage of his antagoniſt, lifts him up as high as he can, that he may throw him with the greater force upon the ground; in like manner the pſalmiſt thought the Lord was dealing with him: or this may expreſs his changeable ſtate and condition, ſometimes lifted up, and ſometimes caſt down, and which is the caſe of every believer, more or leſs; all have their liftings up, and their caſtings down: when God firſt calls them by his grace, he raiſes them from a low eſtate, lifts them up out of an horrible pit, takes them from the dunghil, ſets them among princes to inherit the throne of glory: when he comforts them with the conſolations of his Spirit, he is the lifter up of their heads; when he grants his preſence, and lifts up the light of his countenance; when he diſcovers his love, and makes their mountain to ſtand ſtrong; when he ſhews them their intereſt in himſelf, as their covenant-God, in Chriſt, as their Redeemer and Saviour, and grants them the communion of the Holy Ghoſt; and when their graces are in lively exerciſe, then is it a time of lifting up: and they are caſt down when corruptions prevail, when grace is weak, when God hides his face, and when afflictions lie heavy on them: this was now the caſe of the pſalmiſt, and perhaps the remembrance of his liftings up in former times was an aggravation of it.

℣. 11. My days are like a ſhadow that declineth, &c.] Or, that is ſtretched out [s], which, though it may appear long, is ſoon at an end; as it does appear longer when the ſun ſets [t], and departs from the earth: he reckons his life not by months and years, but by days; and theſe he compares to a ſhadow, which has no ſubſtance in it; his age being as nothing before the Lord, and has much darkneſs and obſcurity in it; his days being days of darkneſs, affliction and trouble, and quickly gone, as man's life is; there is no abiding; ſee 1 Chron. xxix. 15. Job xiv. 2. Pindar [u] calls man the dream of a ſhadow: and I am withered like graſs; which in the morning is flouriſhing, is cut down at noon, and withered at evening: this is the caſe of all fleſh, however beautiful and goodly it may look; it is weak, frail, and mortal; cannot ſtand before the force of afflictions, which quickly conſume ſtrength and beauty, and much leſs before the ſcythe of death; ſee Pſ. xc. 5, 6. Iſ. iv. 6, 7, 8.

℣. 12. But thou, O Lord, ſhalt endure for ever, &c.] This addreſs is made to Chriſt, as is clear from ℣. 25, 26, 27. compared with Heb. i. 10, 11, 12. who is a divine perſon, endures for ever, is from everlaſting to everlaſting, unchangeably the ſame in his love, power, wiſdom, faithfulneſs, &c. and though he died as man, he will die no more; he is alive, and lives for evermore; and becauſe he lives, his people ſhall live alſo; and he will come again to take them to himſelf: and, as Mediator, he is king for ever; always continues as ſuch, to rule over, protect, and defend his people; and is a prieſt for ever, and ever lives to make interceſſion for them; and his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, have a conſtant virtue in them, to take away ſin, and ſecure from it: the conſideration of the perpetuity of Chriſt, in his perſon and offices, was a comfort to the pſalmiſt under his troubles, and in a view of his own declining ſtate: the Targum is, "but thou, O Lord, thy habitation continues for ever in heaven:" and thy remembrance to all generations; the remembrance of his name Jehovah, or Jeſus, or Immanuel, or any other, is ſweet and precious to his ſaints in all ages; and ſo the remembrance of his works, of what he has done and ſuffered, eſpecially the great work of redemption; for the remembrance of which the ordinance of the Lord's Supper is appointed to be continued till his ſecond coming; and his goſpel is an everlaſting one, which will tranſmit the memory of him to men in every age, to the end of the world; and though all fleſh is as graſs, and every man dies, even the miniſters of the Word, yet that itſelf lives for ever. Aben Ezra reads, thy throne, as agreeing with Lam. v. 19. but Kimchi obſerves, that this reading is owing to a bad copy.

℣. 13. Thou ſhalt ariſe, and have mercy on Zion, &c.] Exert his power, and diſplay the riches of his grace and mercy; not by delivering the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, to which ſome reſtrain it; but by redeeming his church and people by power and price; or rather by raiſing up and reſtoring them to great glory and proſperity in the latter day: for the time to favour her, yea the ſet time is come; not the ſeventy years of the captivity made known to the prophet Jeremiah; rather the ſeventy weeks of Daniel fixed for the Meſſiah's coming; or the fulneſs of time agreed upon between Chriſt and his Father, for him to come and redeem his people; but it may beſt of all deſign the end of the forty-two months, or the 1260 days, or years, fixed for the treading under foot the holy city, for the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, and for the reign of Antichriſt; which when come will uſher in glorious times in favour of Zion, the church of God, Rev. xi. 2, 3. and xiii. 5.

℣. 14. For thy ſervants take pleaſure in her ſtones, &c.] Meaning not Cyrus and Darius, who gave leave and orders for the rebuilding of the city and temple of Jeruſalem, as ſome; nor Nehemiah, and Ezra, and others, who took more pleaſure in the ſtones and rubbiſh of the temple, as it lay in ruins, than in all the ſtately palaces in Babylon; and who were very deſirous of, and took delight in, gathering theſe ſtones, and putting them together again, as others; but the miniſters of the goſpel, and other Chriſtians, in the latter day, who will take pleaſure in the great number of converts that there will then be, who, as lively ſtones, will be built up a ſpiritual houſe; and eſpecially when thoſe ſtones ſhall be laid with fair colours, and the head-ſtone ſhall be brought in with acclamations, crying grace, grace unto it; ſee 1 Pet. ii. 5. Iſ. liv. 11, 12. Zach. iv. 7. and favour the duſt thereof; which ſometimes deſign multitudes, Numb. xxiii. 10. perhaps here it may denote the meaneſt of the Lord's people, who will be regarded, and not deſpiſed by his ſervants; but they will ſhew favour to them, do them all the good they can, and wiſh well to them, and pray for their proſperity, and for the peace of Zion; that God would make it the joy of the whole earth; and when there ſhall be ſuch a delight in the ſtones and duſt of Zion, and a ſpirit of grace and ſupplication poured forth upon the ſervants of the Lord, to pray for the promiſed glory and happineſs of it; it will be a token for good, and an intimation that the ſet time to favour her is at hand; which ſeems to be the ſenſe of the pſalmiſt: ſuch great reverence and reſpect have the greateſt of the wiſe men among the Jews for the land of Iſrael, literally underſtood, that they kiſs the borders, the ſtones of it, and roll themſelves in its duſt[a], having perhaps in mind this paſſage of ſcripture.

℣. 15. So the heathen ſhall fear the name of the Lord, &c.] Whoſe name is reverend, and to be feared; eſpecially the glorious and fearful name Jehovah, expreſſive of the divine exiſtence, of his eternity and immutability; though the name of the Lord frequently ſignifies himſelf, and here particularly the Meſſiah, the Son of God, in whom the name of the Lord is, the King of ſaints; whom all men will fear in the latter day, when the ſet time to favour Zion is come; will ſtand in awe of him, be careful of offending him, and will ſerve and worſhip him; even the very heathen, who knew not God, and had no fear of him before their eyes, or in their hearts; the pagan nations, whoſe kingdoms will become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt; ſee Rev. xi. 15. and xv. 3, 4. and all the kings of the earth thy glory; which may be ſupplied thus, either all the kings of the earth ſhall ſee thy glory, or ſhall fear thee becauſe of thy glory; the glory of Chriſt's perſon, as the Son of God; the glory of his offices, as prophet, prieſt, and king; eſpecially the glory of his kingly office, to which that of the kings of the earth is not to be compared; the glory of his works of creation, providence, and redemption; and as it will be held forth in the goſpel, with which the earth will now be full, and ſo be filled with the glory of the Lord, Pſ. lxxii. 19. and will be ſo remarkable and conſpicuous as to be taken notice of by the kings of the earth, even by all of them, who, when the glory of the Lord ſhall be riſen in Zion, will come to the brightneſs of it, and look upon it, and admire it, and fear becauſe of it, Iſ. lx. 1. 3.

℣. 16. When the Lord ſhall build up Zion, &c.] The church of God, fallen down, and in a ruinous condition, as it may be ſaid to be when the doctrines of the goſpel are departed from; the ordinances of it are corrupted and altered, or not attended to; the worſhip and diſcipline of the Lord's houſe are neglected; great declenſions in faith, love, and zeal among the profeſſors of religion, and but few inſtances of converſion: and it may be ſaid to be built up again, as it will be in the latter day, when the doctrines of grace will be revived; the ordinances will be adminiſtered in their primitive purity; great ſpirituality, holineſs, and brotherly love among the ſaints, and large numbers converted and brought into it: and this will be the work of Chriſt, the great maſter-builder; the materials of this building are the ſaints, thoſe lively ſtones which will now be laid with fair colours; the miniſters of the Word will be the inſtruments that Chriſt will make uſe of, in rebuilding his church; it is his ſpirit, power, and grace, which will make all effectual; and he will have the glory, as follows: the Targum is, "for the city of Zion is built by the word of the Lord:" he ſhall appear in his glory; or ſhall be ſeen in his glory[b], which will be upon his church and people, and on which there will be a defence, ſo that it ſhall continue; and this will lie chiefly in the purity of goſpel-truths, ordinances, and worſhip; in the number of converts; in the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God upon them; in their peace, proſperity, unity, and ſpirituality; and in the preſence of Chriſt with them, who will be ſeen in all the glory and majeſty of his kingly office; he will now reign before his antients gloriouſly.

℣. 17. He will regard the prayer of the deſtitute, &c.] Of the deſtitute of human help and ſupport, protection and defence; as the church in the wilderneſs; of the poor, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions, both in ſpirit and in purſe; of the humble, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin: the word[c] ſignifies a low ſhrub or plant; it is rendered, the heath in the wilderneſs, Jer. xvii. 6. and deſigns the ſaints in their low and afflicted ſtate, during the reign of Antichriſt, and whilſt the witneſſes propheſy in ſackcloth; theſe are the elect that pray day and night, and give the Lord no reſt till he eſtabliſh and make Jeruſalem a praiſe in the earth; and the prayers of theſe are regarded, and looked to by the Lord; his eyes are upon and his ears are open to theſe praying ones; and all the glorious things which ſhall be done for the church of God, will be in conſequence of their prayers: and not deſpiſe their prayer; not reject it with contempt and abhorrence; more is intended than is expreſſed: the meaning is, that he will receive it with pleaſure, and return an anſwer to it; the prayer of theſe poor deſtitute ones is delightful to him, Prov. xv. 8.

℣. 18. This ſhall be written for the generation to come, &c.] This prayer, as the Targum paraphraſes it, is a directory to ſaints in diſtreſſed circumſtances; or that which was juſt now ſaid, that the Lord will regard, and not deſpiſe the prayer of the deſtitute; this ſhall ſtand on record, for the encouragement of praying ſouls in all generations; or this whole prophecy, concerning the glory of the church in the latter day; this ſhall be written for the next generation, and ſo on, until it is accompliſhed, to keep up the faith and expectation of the fulfilment of it: and the people which ſhall be created; born at the time when all this ſhall be done; or who ſhall become new creatures; be created in Chriſt Jeſus, and made new men; theſe ſhall praiſe the Lord, when he ſhall ariſe and have mercy on Zion; when he ſhall favour and rebuild her, in anſwer to the prayers of his people; then their prayers will be turned into praiſe; then will thoſe voices be heard among them, hallelujah, ſalvation, glory, honour, and power unto the Lord our God, Rev. xix. 1.

℣. 19. For he hath looked down from the height of his ſanctuary, &c.] From heaven, as it is explained in the next clauſe, which is the Lord's ſanctuary, or holy place, where he dwells, even in the height of it; it is both high and holy, as he himſelf is; yet he condeſcends to look down from hence on ſinful mortals: from heaven did the Lord behold the earth; the inhabitants of it, good and bad: it deſigns the general notice he takes of men and things in a providential way; he beholds the world, that lies in wickedneſs, and all the wickedneſs committed in it; and will one day call to an account, and puniſh for it: he beholds good men, not only with an eye of providence, to take care of them, protect and defend, but with an eye of love, grace, and mercy; he has a ſpecial and diſtinct knowledge of them; and it may here particularly regard the notice he takes of his people, under antichriſtian tyranny; he ſees all the barbarity and cruelty exerciſed upon them, and will requite it, ere long, to their adverſaries, and free them from it, as follows.

℣. 20. To hear the groanings of the priſoner, &c.] Not of a ſingle perſon only, but of many, who lie in priſons in popiſh countries, eſpecially in the Inquiſition; where they lie and groan, in darkneſs and miſery, under dreadful tortures; their cries and groans the Lord hears; his heart yearns towards them; he looks with pity on them; and becauſe of the ſighing of theſe poor and needy ones, he will ariſe in due time, and ſet them in ſafety from him that puffs at them: it is true alſo of ſuch who are priſoners of ſin, Satan, and the law; and, when ſenſible of it, groan under their bondage, and cry to the Lord for help, who hears them, and directs them, as priſoners of hope, to turn to Chriſt, their ſtrong hold, Zach. ix. 11, 12. to looſe thoſe that are appointed to death; delivered to death, as the Targum; delivered over to the ſecular power, in order to be put to death; who are arraigned and condemned as malefactors, and put into the condemned hold, in order for execution; theſe the Lord will looſe, and ſave them from the death they are appointed to by men; for this is not to be underſtood of perſons appointed by the Lord to death, either corporal or eternal, from which none can be looſed, ſo appointed: in the original text the phraſe is, children of death [d]; the ſame as children of wrath, Eph. ii. 3. that is, deſerving of death, and under the ſentence of it; as all men are in Adam, even the Lord's own people; and who are, in their own apprehenſion, as dead men, when awakened and convinced of their ſtate by the Spirit of God; theſe Chriſt looſes from the ſhackles and fetters of ſin, from the bondage of the law, from the tyranny of Satan, and from fears of death, and puts them into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

℣. 21. To declare the name of the Lord in Zion, &c.] That is, that the priſoners and perſons appointed to death, being looſed, might declare, in the church, what great things the Lord has done for them; and ſo ſpeak well of his wiſdom, power, grace, and goodneſs in their deliverance; profeſs his name, and confeſs him before men, and expreſs a value for his name, and ſhew forth the honour of it, and ſeek his glory: and his praiſe in Jeruſalem; the goſpel-church-ſtate, the ſame with Zion; when it ſhall be the praiſe of the whole earth; then and there will thoſe, that are delivered from the antichriſtian yoke, praiſe the Lord, ſing the ſong of Moſes and the Lamb, and glorify God for all that he has done for them.

℣. 22. When the people are gathered together, &c.] When the people of the Jews ſhall be gathered together, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, the Meſſiah, and appoint them one head, even Chriſt; and when the Gentiles ſhall gather together, in great numbers, to the church of God, Hoſ. i. 11. and iii. 5. Iſ. lx. 4—8. and the kingdoms to ſerve the Lord; even the kingdoms of this world, which will become his, and will ſerve him in righteouſneſs and holineſs, freely and chearfully, with one ſhoulder and one conſent; their kings will fall down before the Lord, and all nations ſhall ſerve him, Pſ. lxxii. 11. and then will be the time when the priſoners ſhall be looſed, and the Lord ſhall be praiſed in Zion.

℣. 23. He weakened my ſtrength in the way, &c.] The pſalmiſt here returns to his complaint of his afflictions, weakneſs, and frailty, which ended ℣. 11. after which ſome hints are given of the latter-day-glory, which though he deſpaired of ſeeing, by reaſon of his frailty and mortality; yet comforts himſelf with the eternity and immutability of Chriſt, and that there would be a ſucceſſion of the church, a ſeed of true believers, who would ſee and enjoy it: as for himſelf, he ſays, that God, for he is that he, and not the enemy, as ſome, had weakened his ſtrength in the way, by afflictions, as the word [e] ſignifies; which weakens the ſtrength and vigour of the mind, and diſcourages and diſpirits it, and enfeebles the body: many are the afflictions which the people of God meet with in the courſe of their life, in their way to heaven, which have ſuch an effect upon them; through many tribulations they paſs to enter the kingdom, as the Iſraelites in their way to Canaan, and Chriſt to glory: ſome think the pſalmiſt perſonates the Jews in their return from the Babyloniſh captivity, meeting with difficulties and diſcouragements in the way; rather the church of God, in the expectation of the Meſſiah, who, becauſe his coming was delayed, grew feeble in their faith and hope, had weak hands and feeble knees, which needed ſtrengthening by freſh promiſes: though it may be, beſt of all, the people of God, waiting for latter day-glory, enfeebled by the perſecutions of Antichriſt, or grown weak in the exerciſes of their grace, faith, hope, and love; which will be their caſe before theſe glorious times, and now is; ſee Rev. iii. 2. 8. he ſhortened my days; which he thought he ſhould live, and expected he would; and which, according to the courſe of nature, and the common term of man's life, he might, in all human appearance, have lived; otherwiſe, with reſpect to the decree of God, which has fixed the bounds of man's days, they cannot be ſhorter or longer than they are, Job xiv. 5.

℣. 24. I ſaid, O my God, take me not away in the midſt of my days, &c.] Which was always reckoned as a judgment, as a token of God's ſore diſpleaſure, and as what only befell wicked men, Pſ. lv. 23. in the Hebrew it is, cauſe me not to aſcend [f]; either as ſmoke, which aſcends, and vaniſhes away; or rather it deſigns the ſeparation of the ſoul from the body at death, when it aſcends upwards to God that gave it; ſo Aben Ezra compares it with Eccl. xii. 7. the Targum is, "do not take me out of the world in the midſt of my days, bring me to the world to come:" ſome, who think that Daniel was the penman of this pſalm, or ſome other, about the time of the Babyloniſh captivity; curiouſly obſerve, that that period was much about the middle between the building of Solomon's temple and the coming of Chriſt, the antitype of it; which was about a thouſand years, of which four hundred and ninety were to come, according to Daniel's weeks; ſo, perſonating the church, prays they might not be deſtroyed as ſuch; but be continued 'till the Meſſiah came: thy years are throughout all generations; which are not as mens years, of the ſame meaſure or number; but are boundleſs and infinite: the phraſe is expreſſive of the eternity of God, or Chriſt; which the pſalmiſt oppoſes to his own frailty, and which he illuſtrates in the following verſes, by ſetting it in contraſt with the diſcontinuance and changeableneſs of the heavens and the earth; ſee Job x. 5. and xxxvi. 26.

℣. 25. Of old haſt thou laid the foundation of the earth, &c.] The lower part of the creation, the Lord's footſtool, called the earth beneath: this has its foundation; though what it is cannot be well ſaid, it cannot be ſearched out; it is ſometimes ſaid to be founded upon the waters, and yet ſo as not to be removed for ever, Jer. xxxi. 37. Pſ. xxiv. 2. and civ. 5. this ſhews the wiſdom of God, as a wiſe maſter-builder, and the ſtability of the earth; and is a proof of the deity of Chriſt, to whom theſe words belong: this is ſaid to be done of old, or at or in the beginning, as Jarchi and the Targum; and ſo in Heb. i. 10. where they are applied to the Meſſiah, the Son of God; and this, as it proves the eternity of Chriſt, who muſt be in the beginning, and before all things, ſo it confutes the notion of the eternity of the earth, received by ſome philoſophers: beſides, the words may be rendered, before [g] thou foundedſt the earth; and ſo refers to the preceding, thy years, &c. were before the earth was; that is, from eternity, and ſo fully expreſs the eternal exiſtence of Chriſt: and the heavens are the work of thy hands; theſe are the airy and ſtarry heavens, and the heaven of heavens; which are creatures, and not to be worſhipped, made by Chriſt himſelf, and are expreſſive of his power, wiſdom, and glory.

℣. 26. They ſhall periſh, &c.] Both the heavens and the earth, though ſo well founded, and ſo firmly made; they ſhall be diſſolved, melt, and paſs away; not as to the ſubſtance, but as to the quality of them: or, as R. Judah Ben David ſays, whom Aben Ezra on the place cites, and calls the firſt grammarian in the Weſt, not as to generals, but as to particulars: but thou ſhalt endure; as the eternal God, from everlaſting to everlaſting; and, even as man, he'll die no more; and, as mediator, will ever remain; he will be king for ever; his throne is for ever and ever; his kingdom is an everlaſting one; he is a prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchizedeck; his ſacrifice is of an eternal efficacy, and he ever lives to make interceſſion for his people; he will always continue, as the prophet, in his church, to teach by his ſpirit, word, and ordinances in the preſent ſtate; and hereafter will be the light of the new Jeruſalem, and of his ſaints, for ever: yea, all of them ſhall wax old like a garment; not only the heavens, which are as a curtain and garment about the earth, but the earth itſelf, Iſ. li. 6. will loſe their beauty and glory, and become uſeleſs, as to the preſent form of them: as a veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed; as to their form, as a garment that is turned or folded up, and laid aſide, as to preſent uſe: this ſeems to favour the above ſenſe given, that the earth and heavens will not periſh, as to the ſubſtance of them; but as to their form, figure, faſhion and ſcheme; and as to the qualities of them, all noxious ones being purged away by fire, the curſe removed, and new heavens and new earth ariſe out of them.

℣. 27. But thou art the ſame, &c.] That haſt created them, as the Targum adds; or thou art he [h], the everlaſting I am, the unchangeable Jehovah; immutable in his nature and perfections; in his love and affections to his people; in his power to protect and keep them; in his wiſdom to guide and direct them; in his righteouſneſs to clothe them, and render them acceptable to God; in his blood to cleanſe them, and ſpeak peace and pardon to them; in his fulneſs to ſupply them, and in his interceſſion for them: and thy years ſhall have no end; ſee the note on ℣. 24. now he, that made the heavens and the earth, and will be when they will not be, eſpecially in the preſent form they are, muſt be able to rebuild his Zion, and bring on the glory he has promiſed; and, from his eternity and immutability, may be concluded the continuance of his church and intereſt in the world, until all the glorious things ſpoken of it ſhall be fulfilled, as follows.

℣. 28. The children of thy ſervants ſhall continue, &c.] The ſervants of the Lord are the apoſtles of Chriſt, and miniſters of the word, in all ſucceſſive generations, with whom Chriſt will be to the end of the world: their children are ſuch whom they have begotten again, through the goſpel, to whom they are ſpiritual fathers; regenerated ſouls are meant; of theſe there will be a ſucceſſion in all ages, until latter day-glory takes place; theſe are the church's ſeed, and her ſeed's ſeed, from whom the word of the Lord, the goſpel, will never depart, Iſ. lix. 21. or theſe ſhall inhabit [i], as the word may be rendered, the earth, as the Targum adds; that is, the new heavens, and the new earth, when the old ones are paſt away; here they ſhall dwell with the Lord, who is the ſame to-day, yeſterday, and for ever: and their ſeed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee; the ſame with the children, the ſpiritual ſeed of the church and of faithful miniſters; theſe, with the church, in which they are born and brought up, ſhall be eſtabliſhed in Chriſt; the church will be no more in an unſtable and fluctuating ſtate, but will be as a tabernacle, that ſhall not be taken down; yea, ſhall be eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills; ſee Iſ. ii. 2. and xxxiii. 20.

PSAL. CIII.

A pſalm of David.

THE Targum adds, "ſpoken in prophecy," as doubtleſs it was, under the inſpiration of the Holy Spirit. Some think it was written by David, after a fit of illneſs, and his recovery from it, ſince he ſpeaks of his diſeaſes being healed, and his youth renewed; for which reaſon the Syriac interpreter ſuggeſts it was written in his old age; for he makes the ſubject of the pſalm to be, "concerning coldneſs which prevailed upon him in old age;" but rather he wrote it when his heart was warm with a ſenſe of the love of God, and ſpiritual bleſſings of grace flowing from thence; and in it celebrates and ſings the benefits of new teſtament-times; and it is a pſalm ſuitable to be ſung by every believer, under a quick ſenſe of divine favours: wherefore the above interpreter better adds, "alſo an inſtruction and thankſgiving by men of God;" whom the pſalmiſt may very well be thought to perſonate, even in goſpel-times; and much rather than the Jews in captivity, as Kimchi thinks.

℣. 1. Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, &c.] His better part, his ſoul, which comes immediately from God, and returns to him, which is immaterial and immortal, and of more worth than the world: God is to be ſerved with the beſt we have; as with the beſt of our ſubſtance, ſo with the beſt of our perſons; and it is the heart, or ſoul, which he requires to be given him; and ſuch ſervice as is performed with the ſoul or ſpirit is moſt agreeable to him; he being a Spirit, and therefore muſt be worſhipped in ſpirit, and in truth: unleſs the ſpirit or ſoul of a man is engaged in the ſervice of God, it is of little avail; for bodily exerciſe profiteth not; preaching, hearing, praying, and praiſing, ſhould be both with the ſpirit, and with the underſtanding: here the pſalmiſt calls upon his ſoul to bleſs the Lord; not by invoking or conferring a bleſſing on him, which as it is impoſſible to be done, ſo he ſtands in no need of it, being God all-ſufficient, and bleſſed for evermore; but by proclaiming and congratulating his bleſſedneſs, and by giving him thanks for all mercies, ſpiritual and temporal: and all that is within me bleſs his holy name; meaning not only all within his body, his heart, reins, lungs, &c. but all within his ſoul, all the powers and faculties of it; his underſtanding, will, affections, and judgment; and all the grace that was wrought in him, faith, hope, love, joy, and the like; theſe he would have all concerned and employed in praiſing the name of the Lord; which is exalted above all bleſſing and praiſe; is great and glorious in all the earth, by reaſon of his works wrought, and bleſſings of goodneſs beſtowed; and which appears to be holy in them all, as it does in the works of creation, providence, and redemption; at the remembrance of which holineſs, thanks ſhould be given; for he that is glorious in holineſs is fearful in praiſes, Pſ. xcvii. 12. Exod. xv. 11.

℣. 2. Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, &c.] Which is repeated to ſhew the importance of the ſervice, and the vehement deſire of the pſalmiſt, that his ſoul ſhould be engaged in it: and forget not all his benefits; not any of them; the leaſt of them are not to be forgotten, being ſuch as men are altogether unworthy of; they flow not from the merit of men, but from the mercy of God; and they are many, even innumerable; they are new every morning, and continue all the day; and how great muſt the ſum of them be, and not one ſhould be forgotten; and yet even good men are very apt to forget them; as the Iſraelites of old, who ſung the praiſes of the Lord, and ſoon forgot his works: the Lord, knowing the weakneſs of his people's memories, has not only, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, appointed an ordinance to be continued to the end of the world, to commemorate a principal bleſſing and benefit of his, redemption by his Son; but has alſo promiſed his Spirit, to bring all things to their remembrance; and this they ſhould be concerned for, that they do remember what God has done for them, in order both to ſhew gratitude and thankfulneſs to him, and for the encouragement of their faith and hope in him.

℣. 3. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, &c.] The pſalmiſt explains here what he means by benefits, and gives a particular enumeration of them; and begins with the bleſſing of pardon, which is a ſpecial and peculiar benefit; it is according to the riches of divine grace, and the multitude of tender mercies; without which all outward bleſſings ſignify nothing; and without a ſenſe of this, a man is not in a ſuitable and proper frame to bleſs the Lord; and this being the firſt benefit, a ſoul ſenſible of ſin, its guilt and demerit, is concerned for, and ſeeks after; ſo enjoying it, it is the firſt he is thankful for: this is rightly aſcribed to God; for none can forgive ſins but he; and what he forgives are not mere infirmities, peccadillo's, the leſſer ſins of life; but iniquities, groſſer ſins, unrighteouſneſſes, impieties, the moſt enormous crimes, ſins of a crimſon and ſcarlet dye; yea, all of them, though they are many, more than the hairs of a man's head; he abundantly pardons, multiplies pardons, as ſins are multiplied, and leaves none unforgiven; original ſin, actual ſins, ſins of heart, lip, and life, of omiſſion and commiſſion, all are forgiven for Chriſt's ſake: and the ſpecial mercy is when a man has an application of this to himſelf, and can ſay to his ſoul, as David to his, God has forgiven thine iniquities; for though it may be obſerved with pleaſure, and it is an encouragement to hope in the Lord, that he is a forgiving God, and has forgiven others, yet what would this avail a man, if his ſins ſhould not be forgiven? the ſweetneſs of the bleſſing lies in its being brought home to a man's own ſoul: and it may be further obſerved, that this is a continued act; it is not ſaid who has forgiven, and will forgive, though both are true; but forgiveth, continues to forgive; for as there is a continual virtue in the ſacrifice of the Lamb of God to take away the ſin of the world, and in his blood to cleanſe from all ſin, ſo there is a continual flow of pardoning grace in the heart of God, which is afreſh applied to the conſciences of his people by his Spirit; and this is a bleſſing to be thankful for: who healeth all thy diſeaſes; not bodily ones, though the Lord is the phyſician of the bodies as well as of the ſouls of men, and ſometimes heals the diſeaſes of ſoul and body at once, as in the caſe of the paralytick man in the goſpel; but ſpiritual diſeaſes, or ſoul-maladies, are here meant; the ſame with iniquities in the preceding clauſe: ſin is a natural, hereditary, epidemical, nauſeous, and mortal diſeaſe; and there are many of them, a complication of them, in men, which God only can cure; and he heals them by his word, by means of his goſpel, preaching peace, pardon, and righteouſneſs by Chriſt; by the blood, wounds, and ſtripes of his Son; by the application of pardoning grace and mercy; for healing diſeaſes, and forgiving iniquities, are one and the ſame thing; ſee Iſ. xxxiii. 24. and this the Lord does freely, fully, and infallibly, and for which thanks are due unto him; and it would be very ungrateful, and juſtly reſented, ſhould they not be returned to him; ſee Luke xvii. 15—18.

℣. 4. Who redeemeth thy life from deſtruction, &c.] Not from temporal deſtruction, to which the natural life is ſubject, through diſeaſes, dangerous occurrences, and the malice of enemies; to be delivered from which is a bleſſing, and for which God is to be praiſed; but from eternal deſtruction, the deſtruction of the body and ſoul in hell; and ſo the Targum, "who redeemeſt thy life from hell;" to which deſtruction all men are liable through ſin; their ways lead unto it, and grace only prevents it: the people of God are redeemed from ſin, the cauſe of it; and from the curſe of the law, in the execution of which it lies; and from Satan, the executor of it; and all this by Chriſt, who is the redeemer appointed and ſent, and who being mighty, and ſo equal to the work, has obtained eternal redemption; through which the ſaints are ſecure from going down to the pit of deſtruction, or from wrath to come; and this is a bleſſing they can never be enough thankful for; ſee Luke i. 68. Rev. v. 9. who crowneth thee with loving-kindneſs and tender mercies; with all other bleſſings which flow from the loving-kindneſs and tender mercy of God, even all the bleſſings of the everlaſting covenant, the ſure mercies of David; all the ſpiritual bleſſings with which the ſaints are bleſſed in Chriſt, the grace given them in him, and the mercy kept with him for evermore; all things pertaining to life and godlineſs given in regeneration; the fruits of great love and abundant mercy, with all the other ſupplies of grace between that and eternal glory: crowning with theſe denotes an application and enjoyment of them, the great plenty and abundance of them, a being ſurrounded and loaded with them; as alſo the honour that goes along with them, which makes thoſe that have them great and glorious, rich and honourable; as well as preſervation and protection by them; theſe encompaſſing about as a crown the head, and as a ſhield the body; ſee Pſ. v. 12. where the ſame word is uſed as here.

℣. 5. Who ſatisfieth thy mouth with good things, &c.] With the good things in the heart of God, with his favour and loving kindneſs, as with marrow and fatneſs; with the good things in the hands of Chriſt, with the fulneſs of grace in him, with pardon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him; with the good things of the Spirit of God, his gifts, and graces; and with the proviſions of the Lord's houſe, the goodneſs and fatneſs of it; theſe he ſhews unto his people, creates hungrings and thirſtings in them after them, ſets their hearts a longing after them, and then fills and ſatisfies them with them: hence the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions render it, who filleth thy deſire with good things: the word uſed has ſometimes the ſignification of an ornament; wherefore Aben Ezra interprets it of the ſoul, which is the glory and ornament of the body, and renders it, who ſatisfieth thy ſoul with good things; which is not amiſs: ſo that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's; not the youth of the body, or the juvenile vigour of it; nor the outward proſperity of it; but the youth of grace, or a renewal of ſpiritual love and affection to divine and heavenly perſons and things; of holy zeal for God, his ways and worſhip, for Chriſt, his goſpel, truths and ordinances; of ſpiritual joy and comfort, ſtrength, livelineſs, and activity, as formerly were in the days of eſpouſals, in the youth of firſt converſion, or when firſt made acquainted with the beſt things; ſo that though the outward man may decay, yet the inward man is renewed day by day: and this is ſaid to be like the eagles, whoſe youth and ſtrength are renewed, as ſome obſerve [a], by dropping their feathers, and having new ones, by feeding upon the blood of ſlain creatures; and whereas, when they are grown old, the upper part of their bill grows over the lower part [b], ſo that they are not able to eat, but muſt die through want; Auſtin [c] ſays, that by rubbing it againſt a rock, it comes to its uſe of eating, and ſo recovers its ſtrength: but there is no need to have recourſe to any of theſe things; for as the old age of an eagle is lively and vigorous, like the youth of another creature; ſo it is here ſignified, that ſaints, through the grace of God, even in old age, become fat and flouriſhing, and fruitful, and are ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, run and are not weary, walk and faint not, Iſ. xl. 31. all which are ineſtimable mercies, and the Lord is to be praiſed for them.

℣. 6. The Lord executeth righteouſneſs and judgment for all that are oppreſſed.] Not only for the Iſraelites oppreſſed by the Egyptians, though the pſalmiſt might have them in his view, by what follows; for whom the Lord did juſtice, by delivering them out of the hands of their oppreſſors, and by puniſhing Pharaoh and his people, and bringing down judgments upon them, both in Egypt and at the Red Sea; but for all other oppreſſed ones in common, the poor, the widow, and the fatherleſs, who are often oppreſſed by the rich and mighty; the Lord judges their cauſe, and does them right, and frees them from their oppreſſion; and ſo all good men, who are oppreſſed by tyrannical princes, and cruel perſecutors, and all ſuch whom the man of the earth, the man of ſin, Antichriſt, oppreſſes, Pſ. x. 18. and all thoſe who are oppreſſed by the devil, buffeted by Satan, and bore down with his temptations; the Lord rebukes him in his own time, and delivers his people out of his hands; which is matter of praiſe and thankfulneſs: the pſalmiſt, in this verſe and the following, paſſes to the conſideration of the good things God did for others, in order to keep up a warm ſenſe of divine goodneſs upon his heart.

[c] Opera, tom. 8. in Pſ. 102. fol. 474. c.

℣. 7. He made known his ways unto Moſes, &c.] The ways in which he himſelf walks, the ſteps and methods which he has taken to ſhew forth his glory; his way in creation, and the order of it, as in Gen. i. 1—30. for though, by the light of nature, it might be known that God created all things; yet, without a revelation from him, it could never have been known in what manner he made them, and the peculiar work of each of the ſix days, in which they were made; this was made known to Moſes; as alſo his way in providence, which ſometimes is in the deep, and paſt finding out: Moſes was made acquainted with the methods of divine providence, with many ſpecial inſtances of it, relating both to himſelf in his infancy and in riper years, and to the people of Iſrael in their march from Egypt to Canaan's land; and the Lord likewiſe made known unto him his way of grace and mercy, life and ſalvation by Chriſt, which he deſired to ſhew him, and he did, Exod. xxxiii. 13. 18, 19. and xxxiv. 6, 7. Chriſt was made known to him, as the ſeed of the woman that ſhould break the ſerpent's head, as God's ſalvation old Jacob waited for: he was ſhewn him in the types of the Paſſover-Lamb, the brazen ſerpent, and the rock in the wilderneſs, and in other things; the way of atonement, by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, was made known to him through the ſacrifices which he from God enjoin'd the people of Iſrael: hence he wrote of Chriſt, and of what he ſhould do and ſuffer; and ſo fully, that the apoſtle Paul ſaid no other things than what he did, John v. 46. Acts xxvi. 22, 23. moreover, the Lord made known to him the ways in which he would have him and the people of Iſrael to walk; the way of his commandments, his ſtatutes and ordinances; which were made known to him, to deliver to them, and was a peculiar favour, Pſ. cxlvii. 19, 20. his acts unto the children of Iſrael; his works, his wonderful works; his plagues on their enemies the Egyptians; his redemption of them out of the houſe of bondage; his leading them through the Red Sea as on dry land; his feeding them with manna in the wilderneſs, protecting them from their enemies, bringing them into the land of Canaan, and ſettling them there; ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 11, 12. Deut. xxix. 2, 3.

℣. 8. The Lord is merciful and gracious, &c.] So he made himſelf known to Moſes, Exod. xxxiv. 6. and ſo David found him to be, and therefore calls upon his ſoul to bleſs his name. God is merciful in the moſt tender and affectionate manner; he has bowels of mercy, which yearn towards his people, as thoſe of a tender parent to its child, as the word ſignifies; his mercy is free, without any motive or merit in men to engage it; he delights in ſhewing it; he conſtantly beſtows it; it is the ſource of all good things; it is communicated thro' Chriſt; all mercies temporal and ſpiritual come by him; and this lays a foundation for faith and hope: and he is gracious, as appears in the eternal choice of his people to ſalvation; in providing a Saviour and a ranſom for them; in giving all grace and the bleſſings of it to them in his Son; in giving him for them, and all things to them with him; in juſtifying them by his righteouſneſs; in pardoning their ſins for his ſake; in taking them into his family; in regenerating, calling, preſerving, and ſaving them: ſlow to anger, or long-ſuffering[d]; even to wicked men, to the veſſels of wrath, to the old world, yea to Jezebel, to whom he gave ſpace to repent; which long-ſuffering being abuſed and deſpiſed, is an aggravation of condemnation: but rather here it intends God's long-ſuffering to his people, as before converſion, waiting till the time comes that he is gracious to them; and after converſion, notwithſtanding their backſlidings and revoltings; and this long-ſuffering is their ſalvation: and plenteous in mercy; large and abundant in it, as appears by the various inſtances of it, and ways and methods in which he ſhews it; in election, in the covenant, in redemption, in regeneration, in pardon and eternal life; and by the abundance of it which he beſtows on every one of his people; and by the vaſt numbers which do partake of it.

℣. 9. He will not always chide, &c.] He ſometimes does chide his children, though never but when they have done a fault; always for their ſins, in order to bring them to a ſenſe and acknowledgment of them, and to depart from them; not for chiding-ſake, as ſome parents, to gratify their paſſion and ill humour, who correct for their own pleaſure; but the Lord chides and corrects for the profit of his children, that they may be partakers of his holineſs; he ever does it for their good, but he will not always chide, or continue it ever: or he will not always contend[e]; ſtrive with them, litigate a point with them, hold out a controverſy, not being able to ſtand before him; he knows their frame, their weakneſs, and frailty; ſee Iſ. lvii. 16. neither will he keep his anger for ever; though he does with the wicked, yet not with his own people; that endures but for a moment, and is rather ſeeming than real; and what does appear is ſoon turned away; he does not retain it long, he is quickly pacified towards them, for all they have done, and ſmiles again upon them, Mic. vii. 18.

℣. 10. He hath not dealt with us after our ſins, &c.] God deals with his people, and deals with them roundly for their ſins, reproving them by his Spirit, and by his miniſters, and by his chaſtizing rod; but not after or according to them, or as they deſerve: in this David acknowledges himſelf and other ſaints, with whom he joins, to be ſinners, to have been guilty of ſins, as none live without them; and that God had taken notice of them, and chaſtized them for them; but in great moderation, and not according to the due demerit of them: nor rewarded us according to our iniquities; had he, if every tranſgreſſion had received its juſt recompence of reward, they muſt have been ſent to hell; the lake burning with fire and brimſtone muſt have been their portion; the wages of ſin is eternal death: the reaſon why God deals not with, nor rewards his people, according to the due deſert of their ſins, is becauſe Chriſt has bore them, and the chaſtiſement of them, and made ſatisfaction to divine juſtice for them; ſee Ezr. ix. 13.

℣. 11. For as the heaven is high above the earth, &c.] Which is the greateſt diſtance known, or can be conceived of; the ſpace between the heaven and the earth is ſeemingly almoſt infinite; and nothing can more illuſtrate the mercy of God, which reaches to the heavens, and is in heaven; though this is but a faint repreſentation of the largeneſs and abundance of it, and which indeed is boundleſs and infinite: ſo great is his mercy towards them that fear him, him; or, his mercy hath prevailed over them that fear him [a]: as the waters of the flood prevailed upon the earth, and reached and overflowed the higheſt hills, Gen. vii. 18. ſo abundant and ſuperabundant is the grace of God over them that fear him. Which character is given, not as being the cauſe of their obtaining mercy, but as deſcriptive of the perſons that partake of it; on whom it has ſuch an effect, as to cauſe them to fear the Lord, and his goodneſs; and is mentioned to prevent obſtinate and preſumptuous ſinners expecting it, or truſting to it.

℣. 12. As far as the eaſt is from the weſt, &c.] Which Kimchi thinks is mentioned, becauſe it contains the length of the habitable world; and therefore it is not ſaid, as far as the north is from the ſouth; ſince a man can go from eaſt to weſt, but not from north to ſouth, becauſe of the extreme heat and cold. But this diſtance is not given with reſpect to thoſe oppoſite parts of the earth, which ſcarcely exceed 2700 miles; but with reſpect to thoſe oppoſite points in the heavens: and the meaning is, that as far as the eaſtern point of the heavens is from the weſtern point of them; which more illuſtrates the matter in hand, or the bleſſing aftermentioned, than the other. So far hath he removed our tranſgreſſions from us; which removed men and angels from God, and ſet them at a diſtance from him; and which, if not removed, are ſuch burdens as muſt ſink men down into the loweſt hell; and yet cannot be removed by any thing that they can do; not by any ſacrifices, ſervices, or duties of any kind; nor in any other way, nor by any other perſon than the Lord himſelf: and this is to be underſtood not of a removal of the being of ſin out of his people, for that is not done in this life; rather of the removal of the guilt of ſin, by a ſpecial application of pardoning grace and mercy; ſee 2 Sam. xii. 13. Zech. iii. 4. but beſt of all, of a removal of ſins to Chriſt, and of them by his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction: Chriſt engaged as a ſurety for his people; Jehovah the Father conſidered him as ſuch; and therefore did not impute their ſins to them, but to him; and when he ſent him in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, he removed them from them, and laid them upon him; who voluntarily took them on himſelf, chearfully bore them, and by bearing them, removed the iniquity of the land in one day; and carried them away to the greateſt diſtance, and even put them away for ever by the ſacrifice of himſelf; and upon the ſatisfaction he gave to divine juſtice, the Lord removed them both from him and them; juſtified and acquitted him, and his people in him: and by this means ſo effectually, and ſo far are their tranſgreſſions removed, that they ſhall never be ſeen any more, nor ever be imputed to them, nor be brought againſt them to their condemnation; in conſequence of which, pardon is applied to them, and ſo ſin is removed from their conſciences, as before obſerved; ſee Lev. xvi. 21, 22. Zech. iii. 9.

℣. 13. Like as a father pitieth his children, &c.] When in any affliction, diſorder or diſtreſs: the Lord ſtands in the relation of a father to his people; they are his children by adopting grace, thro' the covenant of grace with them; by a ſovereign act of his own will, he puts them among the children, predeſtinates them to the adoption of children; and ſends his Son to redeem them, that they might receive it, and his Spirit to bear witneſs to their ſpirits, that they are his children; and towards theſe he has all the affections of a tender parent. So the Lord pitieth them that fear him; not with a ſervile fear, which is unſuitable to the relation of children; but with reverence and godly fear, with a fear of him and his goodneſs, and on account of that; a filial fear, ſuch a reverence as children ſhould have of a father: and this character belongs to all the ſaints of all nations, Jews or Gentiles; and ſeems to be here given on purpoſe to include all; and that the divine pity and compaſſion might not be thought to be reſtrained to any particular nation. And, as the fruit of his tender mercy, he looks upon his children in their loſt eſtate, and brings them out of it; he ſuccours them under all their temptations; he ſympathizes with them under all their afflictions: being full of compaſſion, he forgives their iniquities; and in the moſt tender manner receives them when they have backſlidden, and heals their backſlidings. The Targum in the king of Spain's Bible is, "ſo the "Word of the Lord pities, &c." See Hebrews iv. 15.

℣. 14. For he knoweth our frame, &c.] The outward frame of their bodies, what brittle ware, what earthen veſſels they be; he being the potter, they the clay, he knows what they are able to bear, and what not; that if he lays his hand too heavy, or ſtrikes too hard, or repeats his ſtrokes too often, they will fall in pieces: he knows the inward frame of their minds, the corruption of their nature, how prone they are to ſin; and therefore does not expect perfect ſervices from them: how impotent they are to that which is good; that they can do nothing of themſelves; nor think a good thought, nor do a good action; and that their beſt frames are very uncertain ones; and that though the ſpirit may be willing, the fleſh is weak. The word uſed is the ſame that is rendered imagination, Gen. vi. 5. and viii. 21. and by which the Jews generally expreſs the depravity and corruption of nature; and ſo the Targum here paraphraſes it, "for "he knows our evil concupiſcence, which cauſes "us to ſin;" and to this ſenſe Kimchi. He remembereth that we are duſt [b]; are of the duſt originally, and return to it again at death; and into which men ſoon crumble when he lays his hand upon them; this he conſiders, ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 38, 39. The Targum is, "it is remembered before him, "that we are of the duſt:" the Septuagint verſion makes a petition of it, remember that we are duſt; and ſo the Arabic verſion. And we ſhould remember it ourſelves, and be humble before God; and wonder at his grace and goodneſs to us, Gen. xviii. 27.

℣. 15. As for man, his days are as graſs, &c.] He himſelf is like the graſs which ſprings out of the earth, continues on it for a time, and then drops into it; the continuance of the graſs is very ſhort, it flouriſhes in the morning, is cut down at evening, and withers; ſee Pſal. xc. 5, 6. As a flower of the field, ſo he flouriſheth; which denotes the goodlineſs of man, and deſcribes him in his beſt eſtate, as poſſeſſed of health, riches, honour, and all the gifts and endowments of nature; and yet with all theſe, is only like a field-flower, expoſed to every wind, liable to be cropped by every hand, and to be trampled upon by the beaſts of the field; and therefore flouriſhes not long: ſo very precarious and uncertain is man in his moſt flouriſhing circumſtances; ſee Iſa. xl. 6, 7, 8.

[b] Pulvis & umbra ſumus, Horat. Carmin. l. 4. ode 7. v. 16.

℣. 16. For the wind paſſeth over it, and it is gone, &c.] A ſtormy wind, as the Targum, which tears it up by its roots, or blows off the flower, and it is ſeen no more; or a blighting eaſterly wind, which blowing on it, ſhrivels it up, and it dies at once; ſuch an one as blaſted the ſeven ears of corn in Pharaoh's dream, Gen. xli. 23. or any impetuous, drying and noxious wind: and ſo when the eaſt wind of adverſity paſſes over a man, his riches, and honour and eſtate, are preſently gone; or ſome bodily diſtemper, which takes away health, ſtrength and beauty, and impairs the mind; and eſpecially death, which removes at once into another world. And the place thereof ſhall know it no more; the place where the flower grew ſhall know it no more; or it ſhall be ſeen no more in it: ſo man, when he dies, though he is not annihilated, he is ſomewhere; he is in another world, either of happineſs or wo; yet he is not in this world, in the houſe and family, in the ſtation and buſineſs he was; he is no longer known nor ſeen among men on earth; ſee Job vii. 10.

℣. 17. But the mercy of the Lord is from everlaſting to everlaſting upon them that fear him, &c.] In oppoſition to the frailty of man, the ſtability and duration of the mercy of God is obſerved. This reaches from one eternity to another; it is from everlaſting in the heart of God: it appeared in the choice of the veſſels of mercy; in the covenant of grace, which is founded upon it, and filled with it; every bleſſing of which flows from it, and therefore are called the ſure mercies of David. And it appears in time in the regeneration of God's elect, which is according to his abundant mercy; in the forgiveneſs of their ſins, which is according to the multitude of his tender mercies; and in their whole ſalvation, which is by that, and not by works of righteouſneſs; and will endure for ever, for the mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is unto eternal life. It reaches from the world paſt to the world to come, as the Targum; and it is ſo upon them that fear the Lord; not with a ſervile, but a filial fear; a fear of the Lord and his goodneſs; which only is conſiſtent with the grace and mercy of God, and a ſenſe of it: not that the fear of God is the cauſe of mercy or grace; but, on the contrary, grace and mercy are the cauſe of the fear of God; which is a bleſſing of the covenant of grace, and one of the firſt things which appear in converſion; but this properly deſcribes the perſons, who openly and manifeſtly ſhare in the grace or mercy of God, and to whom he manifeſts it yet more and more; nor have any reaſon to believe they are the objects of it, until the true fear of God is wrought in their hearts; and beſides, this character may be given to ſhew, that the mercy and grace of God are not limited to the Iſraelites only, but belong to ſuch of all nations that fear the Lord. And his righteouſneſs unto childrens children; not the eſſential righteouſneſs of God, but rather his faithfulneſs in the performance of his promiſes, which he will not ſuffer to fail: the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt is here meant; which is an everlaſting one, and is unto and upon all them that believe, in all ſucceſſive generations; which is meant by the phraſe of childrens children, even the ſpiritual ſeed of Chriſt, the ſeed of the church, the ſeed of Iſrael; to all and each of which, in every age, the word of God comes, and his promiſes are fulfilled; and who are juſtified by and glory in Chriſt, their righteouſneſs; and who are further deſcribed in the next verſe, which ſhews, that not the carnal ſeed of them that fear the Lord are meant.

℣. 18. To ſuch as keep his covenant, &c.] The covenant of grace, which is peculiarly the Lord's covenant, as diſtinct from man's; and which he keeps himſelf, and is ever mindful of it. This he makes known to his people at converſion; his ſecret is with them, and he ſhews them his covenant; the bleſſings and promiſes of it; their intereſt in them, and in himſelf, as their covenant-God: which they obſerve [c], as the word here uſed ſignifies; and obſerving it, they lay hold upon it by faith, as belonging to them; and laying hold upon it, they keep it as their own, and keep it faſt, and will not part with their intereſt in it for all the world. And to thoſe that remember his commandments to do them; ſome read them and hear them, but forget them, at leaſt to do them: theſe are like a man that beholds his face in a glaſs, and forgets what manner of man he is; ſo James compares one that is a forgetful hearer, and not a doer of the word, Jam. i. 23, 24. The commandments of God are beſt remembered ſo as to be done, when he puts his laws into the minds of men, and writes them in their hearts, and puts his Spirit within them, to cauſe them to walk in his ſtatutes, and do them, Jer. xxxi. 34. Ezek. xxxvi. 27.

℣. 19. The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens, &c.] The heaven is his throne; here he ſits enthroned in all the glory of his majeſty, with all his attendants upon him, and courtiers about him. The Lord Chriſt is now in heaven; and where he will continue to the reſtitution of all things, and from whence his people expect him at the laſt day. Here he is on the ſame throne with his divine Father; which throne he has prepared or eſtabliſhed [d], ſo as it cannot be moved: when others are caſt down, this ſhall ſtand; his throne is for ever and ever. The Targum in the king's Bible is, "the Word of the Lord hath prepared, &c." And his kingdom ruleth over all; over all created beings; over angels, good and bad; over men, righteous and wicked; over the greateſt of men, the kings and princes of the earth. Good angels are ſubject to him; devils tremble at him; ſaints acknowledge him as their King; the wicked he rules with a rod of iron; and kings reign by him, and are accountable to him; ſee Pſal. xxii. 28.

℣. 20. Bleſs the Lord, ye his angels, &c.] For their creation, being made by him; for their preſervation, living, moving, and having their being in him; and for their happineſs in which they are continued, owing to their being choſen of God in Chriſt, and to their confirmation by Chriſt. Theſe are always employed in the work of bleſſing and praiſing the Lord; nor are they in the leaſt backward to it, nor remiſs in it; nor does this addreſs unto them ſuppoſe any thing of this kind. The deſign of the pſalmiſt is only to ſhew how great and good the Lord is; that angels, the more excellent order of creatures, are under obligation to him, and are bound to praiſe him: and his further view is, to ſtir up himſelf and others to this work, from ſuch a conſideration, that ſuch noble creatures are employed in the ſame, and who are further deſcribed: That excel in ſtrength; or, are mighty in ſtrength [e]; they are called mighty angels, 2 Theſſ. i. 7. an inſtance of the might and power of an angel, ſee in 2 Kings xix. 35. Theſe not having ſinned, have loſt nothing of their original ſtrength and power, and therefore muſt greatly excel fallen man; who is become a very weak creature, and unable to do the will and work of God, which angels are, as follows: That do his commandments; or, his word [f]; what he orders to be done: this they do readily and willingly, conſtantly, perfectly, and completely; ſee Matt. vi. 10. Hearkening to the voice of his word; they ſtand before the Lord, waiting his orders; liſtening with great attention to what he ſays, and then readily execute it. Or, at hearing the voice of his word; that is, as ſoon as they hear the voice of his word, or hear him ſpeaking [g], immediately they apply themſelves to the performance of it.

℣. 21. Bleſs ye the Lord, all ye his hoſts, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, ſometimes called the hoſts of heaven; and who in their way bleſs and praiſe the Lord; ſee Pſal. cxlviii. 2, 3. Others, of the angels, as before; who are ſometimes ſtiled the heavenly hoſt, Luke ii. 13. and may be ſo called from their numbers, there being legions of them; and for their military employment, in guarding and protecting the ſaints, in encamping about them, and fighting for them. Or rather, ſince theſe ſeem to be diſtinguiſhed from the angels before addreſſed, by them may be meant the church militant and her members; who are like an army with banners, conſiſting of voluntier ſoldiers under Chriſt, the captain of their ſalvation; whoſe battles they fight againſt ſin, Satan, and the world; and have a great deal of reaſon to bleſs and praiſe the Lord, for all the great and good things he has done to them, and for them. Ye miniſters of his that do his pleaſure; ſo the angels are called, and they do the will of God; what is acceptable to him, and well-pleaſing in his ſight, Heb. i. 7, 14. But rather, as diſtinct from them, the miniſters of the goſpel are intended; a name which the preachers of it bear, both in the Old and in the New Teſtament, Iſa. lxi. 4. 1 Cor. iv. 1. They are miniſters of Chriſt's appointing, calling, qualifying and ſending; and who are employed in his ſervice, in preaching him, his goſpel, and the truths of it; and who do his pleaſure, that which is grateful to him, when they ſpeak his word faithfully, declare his whole counſel, and keep back nothing that is profitable: and theſe have reaſon to bleſs the Lord for the gifts beſtowed upon them, and for their ſucceſs and uſefulneſs; and indeed they bear a leading part in giving praiſe and glory to God, Rev. iv. 9, 10.

℣. 22. Bleſs the Lord, all his works, in all places of his dominion, &c.] Which ſome interpret of all his creatures, animate or inanimate, rational or irrational, throughout the whole world, which is all under his government; and who all of them, objectively, bleſs and praiſe the Lord, Pſal. cxlviii. 7—13. Or rather, regenerate perſons, his ſons and daughters, the work of his hand, in the ſeveral parts of the world where they live, are here called upon to bleſs the Lord; who, of his abundant mercy, hath begotten them again to a glorious inheritance: theſe are his workmanſhip in Chriſt; formed for himſelf, his ſervice and glory; and are under the higheſt obligations to ſhew forth his praiſe. Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul: thus the pſalmiſt ends the pſalm as he begun it; not excuſing himſelf by what he had done, nor by calling upon others to this ſervice; knowing that this is conſtant employment for time and eternity; a work in which he delighted, and was deſirous of being concerned in, now and for ever.

PSALM CIV.

THIS pſalm, though without a title, was probably wrote by David, ſince it begins and ends as the former does, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and to him the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions aſcribe it. The inſcription of the Syriac verſion is, "a pſalm of David, when he went to worſhip before the ark of the Lord with the prieſts; and as to us, it teaches us confeſſion and prayer; and intimates to us the conſtitution of the beginning of the creatures; and declares ſome things concerning the angels." Some copies of the Septuagint verſion have it, "a pſalm of David concerning the conſtitution of the world;" which indeed is the ſubject-matter of it; for it treats of the creation of all things, of the heavens and the earth, and of all creatures in them; and of the providence of God in taking care of them. Chriſt is the divine perſon addreſſed and deſcribed throughout the whole, as appears from the quotation of ℣. 5. and the application of it to him in Heb. i. 7.

℣. 1. Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, &c.] As for the bleſſings of grace and mercy expreſſed in the preceding pſalm, ſo on account of the works of creation and providence, enumerated in this; in which Chriſt has an equal concern, as in the former. O Lord my God, thou art very great; the Meſſiah, who is Jehovah our righteouſneſs, Lord of all, truly God, and the God of his people; ſee John xx. 28. and who is great, and very great, in his divine perſon, being the great God and our Saviour; great in all his works of creation, providence, and redemption; great in all his offices of prophet, prieſt, and king; a Saviour, and a great one; the great ſhepherd of the ſheep; the man, Jehovah's fellow. Thou art clothed with honour and majeſty; being the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and having on him the glory of the only-begotten of the Father, and a natural majeſty in him as the Son of God and King of the whole univerſe; and as Mediator he has honour and majeſty laid upon him by his Father, Pſal. xxi. 5. he has all the regalia and enſigns of royal majeſty; he is on a throne high and lifted up, even the ſame with his divine Father; he has a crown of glory on his head, he is crowned with glory and honour; he has a ſceptre of righteouſneſs in his hand, and is arrayed in robes of majeſty; and as thus ſituated is to look upon like a jaſper and ſardine ſtone; or as if he was covered with ſparkling gems and precious ſtones, Rev. iv. 2, 3. and having all power in heaven and earth, over angels and men; honour and glory are given him by both.

℣. 2. Who covereſt thyſelf with light as with a garment, &c.] Referring, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi think, to the light which was firſt created; and indeed this was commanded out of darkneſs by God the Word, or by the eſſential Word of God. Light is expreſſive of the nature of God himſelf, who is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all, and who dwells in light[h] inacceſſible, and ſo may be ſaid to be clothed with it; which is applicable to Chriſt as a divine perſon, 1 John i. 5. 1 Tim. vi. 16. and to whom this term light well agrees; light being one of the names of the Meſſiah in the Old Teſtament, Pſal. xliii. 3. Dan. ii. 22. and is often given him in the New Teſtament, as the author of the light of nature, grace and glory, John i. 9. and viii. 12. Rev. xxi. 23. He is now poſſeſſed of the light and glory of the heavenly ſtate, of which his transfiguration on the mount was an emblem, when his face ſhone like the ſun, and his raiment was as the light, Matt. xvii. 2. Who ſtretcheſt out the heavens like a curtain; alluding to the firmament or expanſe, which being ſpread out like a curtain, divided between the waters and the waters, Gen. i. 6, 7. Heaven is repreſented as a tent ſtretched out, with curtains drawn around it, to hide the dazzling and unapproachable light in which the Lord dwells, Iſa. xl. 22. and it is as a curtain or canopy ſtretched out and encompaſſing this earth; the ſtretching of it out belongs to God alone, and is a proof of the deity of Chriſt, to whom it is here and elſewhere aſcribed, Job ix. 8. Zech. xii. 1. Iſa. xliv. 24. Here Chriſt dwells inviſible to us at preſent; he is received up into heaven, retained there, and from thence will deſcend at the laſt day; and in the mean while is within the curtains of heaven unſeen by us.

℣. 3. Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters, &c.] Or his upper rooms[i]; one ſtory over another being built by him in the heavens, Amos ix. 6. the chambers where he reſides; his courts, as the Targum; his palace and apartments, his preſence-chamber particularly, the floor and beams of them are the waters bound up in the thick clouds; or the region of the air, from whence the rain deſcends to water the hills, as in ℣. 13. Who maketh the clouds his chariot; to ride in; in theſe ſometimes Jehovah rides to execute judgment on his enemies, Iſa. xix. 1. and in theſe ſometimes he appears in a way of grace and mercy to his people, Exod. xiii. 21. and xix. 9. 1 Kings viii. 11. Matt. xvii. 5. in theſe, as in chariots, Chriſt went up to heaven; and in theſe will he come a ſecond time; and into theſe will the ſaints be caught up to meet the Lord in the air at his coming, Acts i. 9. Rev. i. 7. 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. Who walketh upon the wings of the wind; ſee Pſal. xviii. 10. which is expreſſive of his ſwiftneſs in coming to help and aſſiſt his people in time of need; who helps, and that right early; and may very well be applied both to the firſt and ſecond coming of Chriſt, who came leaping upon the mountains, and ſkipping upon the hills, when he firſt came; and when he comes a ſecond time, will be as a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of ſpices, Cant. ii. 8. and viii. 14. The Targum is, "upon the ſwift clouds, like "the wings of an eagle;" hence perhaps it is the heathens have a notion of Jupiter's being carried in a chariot through the air, when it thunders and lightens[k].

℣. 4. Who maketh his angels ſpirits, &c.] The angels are ſpirits, or ſpiritual ſubſtances, yet created ones; and ſo differ from God, who is a ſpirit, and from the holy Spirit of God, who are creators and not creatures; angels are ſpirits, without bodies, and ſo differ from the ſouls or ſpirits of men, and are immaterial and ſo die not; theſe are made by Chriſt, by whom all things are made, Col. i. 16. and ſo he muſt be greater and more excellent than they; for which purpoſe the paſſage is quoted in Heb. i. 7. Some render it, who maketh his angels as the winds; to which they may be compared for their inviſibility, they being not to be ſeen no more than the wind, unleſs when they aſſume an external form; and for their penetration through bodies in a very ſurpriſing manner; ſee Acts xii. 6—10. and for their great force and power, being mighty angels, and ſaid to excel in ſtrength, Pſal. ciii. 20. and for their ſwiftneſs in obeying the divine commands; ſo the Targum, "he maketh his "meſſengers, or angels, ſwift as the wind." His miniſters, a flaming fire; angels are miniſters to God, ſtand before him, behold his face, wait for and liſten to his orders, and execute them; they are miniſters to Chriſt, they were ſo at his incarnation, in his infancy, when in the wilderneſs and in the garden, at his reſurrection and aſcenſion, and will attend him at his ſecond coming; and theſe are miniſters to his people, take the care of them, encamp about them, do many good offices to them in life, and at death carry their ſouls to Abraham's boſom: theſe are made a flaming fire, or as flaming fire, for their force and power; ſo the Targum, "his miniſters ſtrong as flaming fire;" and for their ſwiftneſs as before; and becauſe of their burning love to God, Chriſt, and his people, and their flaming zeal for his cauſe and intereſt; hence thought by ſome to be called Seraphim; and becauſe they are ſometimes the executioners of God's wrath; and have ſometimes appeared in fiery forms, as in forms of horſes of fire and chariots of fire, and will deſcend with Chriſt in flaming fire at the laſt day; ſee 2 Kings ii. 11. and vi. 17. 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8. Some invert the words, both reading and ſenſe, thus, who maketh the winds his angels, or meſſengers, and flaming fire his miniſters; ſo Jarchi, Aben Ezra and Kimchi; we read of ſtormy wind fulfilling his word, Pſal. cxlviii. 8. he ſends out his winds at his pleaſure to do his errands; as to dry up the waters of the flood, to drive back the waters of the Red ſea and make dry land, to bring quails from thence and ſcatter them about the camp of Iſrael, and in many other inſtances. So flaming fire was uſed as his miniſters in burning Sodom and Gomorrah; and multitudes of the murmuring Iſraelites, and the captains with their fifties; but this ſenſe is contrary to the order of the words, and the deſign of them, and to the apoſtles ſenſe of them, Heb. i. 7. which is confirmed by the Targum, Septuagint, and all the Oriental verſions.

℣. 5. Who laid the foundations of the earth, &c.] Or founded the earth upon its baſes[l]; which ſome take to be the waters, according to Pſalm xxiv. 2. others the centre of gravity in it; others the mountains; others the circumambient air, by which it is poized; rather the almighty power of God by which it ſubſiſts; this is the work of Chriſt the almighty; ſee Heb. i. 3, 10. That it ſhould not be removed for ever; for though it may be ſhaken by earthquakes, yet not removed; nor will it be until the diſſolution of all things, when it ſhall flee away before the face of the Judge, and a new a new earth ſhall ſucceed, Rev. xx. 11. and xxi. 1.

℣. 6. Thou covereſt it with the deep as with a garment, &c.] This refers not to the waters of the flood, when the earth was covered with them, even the tops of the higheſt mountains; but to the huge maſs of waters, the abyſs and depth of them, which lay upon the earth and covered it as a garment, at its firſt creation, as the context and the ſcope of it ſhew; and which deep was covered with darkneſs, at which time the earth was without form and void, Gen. i. 2. an emblem of the corrupt ſtate of man by nature, deſtitute of the image of God, void and empty of all that is good, having an huge maſs of ſin and corruption on him, and being darkneſs itſelf; though this depth does not ſeparate the elect of God in this ſtate from his love; nor theſe aboundings of ſin hinder the ſuperaboundings of the grace of God; nor the operations of his Spirit; nor the communication of light unto them; nor the forming and renewing them, ſo as to become a curious piece of workmanſhip; even as the ſtate of the original earth did not hinder the moving of the Spirit upon the waters that covered it, to the bringing of it into a beautiful form and order. The waters ſtood above the mountains; from whence we learn the mountains were from the beginning of the creation; ſince they were when the depths of water covered the unformed chaos; and which depths were ſo very great as to reach above the higheſt mountains; an emblem of the univerſal corruption of human nature; the higheſt, the greateſt men that ever were, comparable to mountains, have been involved in it, as David, Paul, and others.

℣. 7. At thy rebuke they fled, &c.] The depths of water that covered the earth fled, went off apace, when Chriſt the eſſential Word gave the word of command that they ſhould; ſaying, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear, and it was ſo, Gen. i. 9. and this being called a rebuke, ſuggeſts as if there was ſomething amiſs, irregular and diſorderly, and to be amended; as if theſe waters were not in their proper place. At the voice of thy thunder they haſted away; ran off with great precipitance; juſt as a ſervant when his maſter puts on a ſtern countenance, and ſpeaks to him in a thundering menacing manner, haſts away from him to do his will and work. This is an inſtance of the mighty power of Chriſt; and by the ſame power he removed the waters of the deluge, when they covered the earth and the tops of the higheſt hills; and rebuked the Red ſea, and it became dry land; and drove back the waters of Jordan for the Iſraelites to paſs through; and who alſo rebuked the ſea of Galilee when his diſciples were in diſtreſs: and with equal eaſe can he and does he remove the depth of ſin and darkneſs from his people at converſion; rebukes Satan, and delivers out of his temptations, when he comes in like a flood; and commands off the waters of affliction when they threaten to overwhelm; who are his ſervants, and come when he bids them come, and go when he bids them go.

℣. 8. They go up by the mountains, they go down by the valleys, &c.] The Targum is, "they aſ"cend out of the deep to the mountains;" that is, the waters when they went off the earth at the divine orders, ſteered their courſe up the mountains, and then went down by the vallies to the place appointed for them; they went over hills and dales, nothing could ſtop them or retard their courſe till they came to their proper place; which is another inſtance of the almighty power of the Son of God. Some render the words, the mountains aſcended, the vallies deſcended [m]; and then the meaning is, when the depth of waters were called off the earth the mountains and vallies appeared, the one ſeemed to riſe up and the other to go down; but the former reading ſeems beſt, and emblematically deſcribes the ſtate of God's people in this world in their paſſage to their appointed place; who have ſometimes mountains of difficulties to go over, and which ſeem inſuperable, and yet they ſurmount them; ſometimes they are upon the mount of heaven by contemplation, and have their hearts and affections above, they mount up with wings as eagles; ſometimes they are upon the mount of communion with God, and by his favour their mount ſtands ſtrong, and they think they ſhall never be moved; at other times they are down in the vallies, in a low eſtate and condition; in low frames of ſoul, in a low exerciſe of grace, and in the valley of the ſhadow of death, of afflictive providences in ſoul or body: and as the waters thus ſteering their courſe under a divine direction, and by an almighty power, at length came unto the place which, the pſalmiſt ſays, thou haſt founded for them, meaning the ſeas; which the Lord founded and prepared for the reception of them; and which collection of waters in one place he called by that name, Gen. i. 10. So the Lord's people, through a variety of circumſtances, trials and exerciſes, will be all brought ſafe to the place appointed for them, and prepared by Chriſt in his Father's houſe; where they will be ſwallowed up in the boundleſs ocean of everlaſting love.

℣. 9. Thou haſt ſet a bound, that they may not paſs over, &c.] The Targum adds, "to the rolling waves "of the ſea." Set doors with bolts and bars, cliffs, rocks, and ſhores: and, what is more ſurpriſing, ſand, which is penetrable, flexible and moveable, is ſet as a perpetual bound to the raging ocean and its waves, which they cannot paſs over; ſee Job xxxviii. 8—11. Jer. v. 22. So the Lord has ſet a bound to the proud waters of afflictions, and ſays, Thus far ſhall ye go and no farther; and to the life of man, which he cannot exceed, Job xiv. 5. But he has given man a law, as a rule to walk by, as the boundary of his converſation, and this he tranſgreſſes; in which he is leſs tractable than the raging ſea and its waves. That they turn not again to cover the earth; as they did when it was firſt made, ℣. 6. that is, not without the divine leave and power; for they did turn again and cover the earth, at the time of the flood; but never ſhall more. Some think there is no need to make this exception; ſince this was written after the flood, and when God had ſwore that the waters ſhould no more go over the earth, Iſa. liv. 9.

℣. 10. He ſendeth the ſprings into the vallies, &c.] The Targum is, "who ſendeth fountains into the "rivers." Either from the waters of the ſea, which being drained through the ſand, become ſweet and drinkable; or from the hills and mountains. This is an inſtance of divine goodneſs, that having removed the waters from the earth, and ſhut them up in the ſea, and which, through the ſaltneſs of them, not being proper drink for men and beaſts; he has been pleaſed to form and open ſprings, fountains, wells, and rivers of freſh water in the vallies, for the ſupply of both. Though this is not to be compared with the wells of ſalvation, and ſprings and fountains of grace, which he has opened for his choſen people. God himſelf is a ſpring or fountain of living water; his love is a river, whoſe ſtreams delight the city of God; his covenant a ſource and ſpring of all bleſſings and promiſes. Chriſt is the fountain of gardens; his fulneſs is a ſupply for all his people: the Spirit of God and his grace, are a well of living water, ſpringing up unto eternal life. The word and ordinances are the ſprings in Zion, which run among the hills, the ſeveral congregated churches, to the watering and refreſhing of them; juſt as ſprings and rivers of water run in the dales and vallies among the hills, by which they are bounded.

[m] So Pagninus, Muſculus, Cocceius.

℣. 11. They give drink to every beaſt of the field, &c.] Theſe fountains, ſprings and rivers, afford water for all the beaſts of the field; who are therefore ſaid to honour and praiſe the Lord on account of it, Iſa. xliii. 19, 20. The wild aſſes quench their thirſt; or break [n] it. Thoſe creatures that live in dry and deſert places, and are themſelves dry and thirſty; and though ſo ſtupid as they be, yet proviſion of water is made for them, and they are directed where to ſeek for it, and find it; ſee Job xxxix. 5, 6. And if God takes care of the beaſts of the field, even the moſt wild and ſtupid, will he not take care of his own people? He will, and does. He opens rivers in high places, and fountains in the midſt of the vallies; he gives waters in the wilderneſs, and rivers in the deſert, to give drink to his people, his choſen, Iſa. xli. 18, 19. and xliii. 19, 20.

℣. 12. By them ſhall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation, &c.] Another uſe of the ſprings, fountains and rivers of water; by the ſides and on the ſhores of theſe, ſome birds delight to be, and on trees that grow here do they build their neſts; and here, having wetted their throats, they ſit, and chirp and ſing: to doves by rivers of water, is the alluſion in Cant. v. 12. Which ſing among the branches; of trees that grow by the ſides of fountains and rivers; ſee Ezek. xvii. 23. Matt. xiii. 32. To ſuch birds may ſaints be compared; being, like them, weak, defenceleſs and timorous; liable to be taken in ſnares, and ſometimes wonderfully delivered; as well as given to wanderings and ſtrayings: and to fowls of the heaven, being heaven-born ſouls, and partakers of the heavenly calling. Theſe have their habitation by the fountain of Jacob, by the river of divine love, beſide the ſtill waters of the ſanctuary; where they ſing the ſongs of Zion, the ſongs of electing, redeeming and calling grace.

℣. 13. He watereth the hills from his chambers, &c.] The houſe of his ſuperior treaſures, as the Targum. The airy regions, ℣. 3. with the clouds of heaven, by the rain which they drop down upon them; the uſefulneſs of which bleſſings of nature is largely deſcribed in this and ſome following verſes. The hills, which are naturally dry and barren, and receive but little advantage from the ſprings, fountains, and rivers below, are ſupplied with water from above; and become fruitful, bear herbage, and are cloathed with flocks. This ſeems to refer to the firſt rain that was upon the earth, Gen. ii. 5, 6. and which favour is continued to all lands, excepting ſome part of the land of Egypt, and in all ages ſince; ſee Pſal. lxv. 9—13. So miniſters of the word, who are ſet in the firſt place, and are eminent in the church of God, and who water others, are watered themſelves with the gifts and graces of the Spirit deſcending from above, as the apoſtles were, in an extraordinary manner, at the day of Pentecoſt; and as others in a more ordinary manner daily are. So likewiſe the churches of Chriſt, comparable to hills and mountains for firmneſs and viſibility, and the ſeveral members thereof, are watered with the dews of divine favour, with the rain of the divine Word; which comes down from heaven as the rain does, and drops and diſtils like that; and with the grace of the divine Spirit, whereby their ſouls become as a watered garden, whoſe ſprings fail not. The earth is ſatisfied with the fruit of thy works; with the fruits which grow out of it by means of rain, as are after mentioned; herbs, graſs and trees, ſo Aben Ezra: or with the influences of the heavens, which are the work of God's hands, and by which the earth is made fruitful; or more particularly with the virtue and efficacy of the rain, ſo Kimchi; which is the Lord's peculiar work, Jer. xiv. 22. This the earth drinking in, is as ſatisfied with, as a thirſty man is with drinking a draught of water; ſee Deut. xi. 11. Heb. vi. 7. So the people of God, comparable to the good earth that drinks in the rain that often comes upon it, are ſatisfied with the love of God, with the bleſſings of his grace, with the doctrines of his goſpel, and with the ordinances of his houſe.

℣. 14. He cauſeth the graſs to grow for the cattle, &c.] By means of rain falling upon the tender herb, and upon the mowen graſs, whereby proviſion of food is made for thoſe creatures that live upon graſs. And herb for the ſervice of man; ſome herbs being for phyſic for him, and others for food, and all more or leſs for his uſe. Herbs were the original food of man, Gen. i. 29. and ſtill a dinner of herbs, where love is, is better than a ſtalled ox, and hatred therewith, Prov. xv. 17. Some render it, and herb at the tillage of man [o]: graſs grows of itſelf for the uſe of the cattle; but the herb, as wheat and the like, which is for the uſe of man, is cauſed to grow when man has taken ſome pains with the earth, and has tilled and manured it: but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt. That he may bring forth food out of the earth; either that man may do it by his tillage; or rather, that the Lord may do it, by ſending rain, and cauſing the graſs and herbs to grow. However, man's food, as well as the food of beaſts, comes out of the earth, as he himſelf does, and to which he muſt return.

℣. 15. And wine that maketh glad the heart of man, &c.] That is, by means of rain watering the earth, vines are cauſed to grow out of it; which produce wine, that has ſuch a virtue in it, as to chear the heart of man, even of a miſerable, diſtreſſed and afflicted man, as the word [p] is ſuppoſed to ſignify, Judg. ix. 13. Prov. xxxi. 6, 7. Of this nature are, and therefore are compared to wine, or expreſſed by it, the love of God and Chriſt; the bleſſings of grace, the doctrines of the goſpel, the ordinances of it; particularly that of the Lord's ſupper, and even the joys of heaven. And oil to make his face to ſhine; or, to make his face ſhine more than oil [q]; and ſo it continues the account of the virtue of wine, which not only chears the heart, but makes the countenance briſk and lively, and even ſhine again: but according to our verſion, and others, this is a diſtinct effect of the rain cauſing olive-trees to grow out of the earth, productive of oil; which being eat, fattens, and ſo makes the face to ſhine; as it alſo does by anointing with it, which was much in uſe for that purpoſe in the eaſtern countries, as well as for chearing and refreſhing; ſee Ruth iii. 3. Pſal. xxiii. 5. Matt. vi. 17. Pliny[r] ſays, oil purifies or clears; and particularly of oil of almonds, he ſays, that it makes clean, makes bodies ſoft, ſmooths the ſkin, procures gracefulneſs; and, with honey, takes ſpots or ſpecks out of the face. Kimchi makes mention of another uſe of oil, in lighting lamps; by which the face of man is enlightned, or light is given him. So the Targum, "to enlighten the face with oil." To this the grace of the Spirit is often compared in ſcripture, with which both Chriſt and his members are ſaid to be anointed, Acts x. 38. 2 Cor. i. 21. 1 John ii. 20, 27. This not only chears and refreſhes them, and is therefore called the oil of joy and gladneſs, Pſal. xlv. 7. Iſa. lxi. 3. but beautifies and adorns them, and even makes them fat and flouriſhing, and ſo their faces to ſhine; as well as cauſes their lamps of profeſſion to burn clearly, and the light of their good works to ſhine before men to the glory of God. And bread which ſtrengthens man's heart: the earth being watered with rain, cauſes the wheat ſown in it to grow up; of which bread is made for the ſupport of man's life, and is the chief ſuſtenance of it; and is therefore commonly called the ſtaff of life, and, by the prophet, the whole ſtay of bread, Iſa. iii. 1. by which human nature is invigorated, and the ſtrength of man is kept up and increaſed; for the phraſe, ſee Gen. xviii. 5. Judg. xix. 5. Of this nature are the proviſions of God's houſe, which go by the ſame name, the word and ordinances; and eſpecially Chriſt Jeſus himſelf, the true and living bread; by which the Chriſtian's ſpiritual life is ſupported and maintained, and he is comforted and refreſhed, and ſtrengthned for every good work.

℣. 16. The trees of the Lord are full of ſap, &c.] Or ſatiated[s]; that is, with rain; and through it are filled with fruits. This is to be underſtood not only of the talleſt and largeſt trees; which are therefore called the trees of the Lord, as high mountains are called the mountains of the Lord, Pſal. xxxvi. 6. and ſo other things excellent in their kind: but of trees of the field and foreſt; ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions; which are not planted and cultivated by man, as trees in gardens and orchards are; but are more eſpecially under the care and cultivation of the Lord himſelf, and may deſign ſuch as were produced by him at the creation. The cedars of Lebanon which he hath planted; a mountain on the borders of Judea, ſo called from its whiteneſs through the ſnow on it, as the Alps are; and where grew great quantities of large and ſpreading cedars, which were not of man's, but of the Lord's planting: theſe were watered and made to grow with the rain of heaven. Rauwolff[t], who was upon this mountain in 1574, ſays, "tho' this hill in former ages has been quite covered over with cedars, yet they are ſo decreaſed, that I could tell, ſays he, no more but twenty four, that ſtood round about in a circle; and two others, the branches whereof are quite decayed with age." But Thevenot[u], who has been there ſince, affirms, there are no more nor leſs than twenty three, great and ſmall; of the largeneſs, thickneſs and height of theſe trees, ſee the note on Iſa. xxxvii. 24. Saints are often compared to trees, which are planted by the Lord in Chriſt, and in his churches; and particularly to cedars, for their height, ſtrength and durableneſs; ſee Pſal. xcii. 13, 14. and theſe, through the grace of God, are full of ſap and ſpiritual life, and are filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, and are often repreſented as planted and growing by rivers of water; ſee Numb. xxiv. 6. Pſal. i. 3. Jer. xvii. 8.

℣. 17. Where the birds make their neſts, &c.] As they do in large, tall, ſpreading trees: not any particular birds, as the ſparrows, to which the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, and Apollinarius, reſtrain it: but birds in general are intended; and eſpecially ſuch as build in large trees, as before and after mentioned. Jarchi applies it to the Iſraelites dwelling among the trees in the garden of Eden: and it may be much better applied to the ſaints dwelling in the churches, among the trees of righteouſneſs, under the ſhadow of goſpel-ordinances; ſee Ezek. xvii. 23. Matt. xiii. 31, 32. As for the ſtork, the fir-trees are her houſe; where ſhe makes her neſt, and brings up her young. Kimchi ſays, it is a large bird, and builds its neſt in high trees, as in cedars: but the bird which goes by the name of pelargus with the Greeks, and of ciconia with the Latins, and of ſtork with us, for the moſt part builds its neſt on the tops of towers and temples, and the roofs of high houſes[w], and ſeldom in trees; and when it does, it is in ſuch that are not far from the habitations of men, which it loves to be near: perhaps the reaſon of its not building on houſes in Paleſtine, might be becauſe their roofs were flat and frequented, and therefore built on high trees there, as fir-trees and cedars. And Olympiodorus[x] ſays, it does not lay its eggs on the ground, but on high trees; and Michaelis on the text, atteſts, that he himſelf had ſeen, in many places in Germany, ſtorks neſts on very high and dry oaks. It has its name in Hebrew from a word[y], which ſignifies holy, merciful and beneficent; becauſe of the great care which it takes of its dam when grown old[z]: and a like behaviour among men is called piety by the apoſtle, 1 Tim. v. 4. But in the Chaldee tongue, and ſo in the Targum, it has its name from its whiteneſs; for though its wings are black, the feathers of its body are white: and ſo Virgil[a] deſcribes it as a white bird, and as an enemy to ſerpents; for which reaſon the Theſſalians forbad the killing them, on pain of baniſhment[b]. It was an unclean bird, according to the ceremonial law, Lev. xi. 19. Good men are called by the ſame name, holy and beneficent; and though they are unclean by nature, yet Chriſt, the green fir-tree, Hoſ. xiv. 8. is the houſe of their habitation; in him they dwell by faith, who receives ſinners, and eats with them, Luke xv. 2. It is uſual with the Latin poets to call the neſts of birds their houſes[c].

℣. 18. The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats, &c.] Who have their name in Hebrew[d], from their climbing and aſcending them. What we commonly call a wild gooſe chace, ſhould be expreſſed a wild goat's chace; for not geeſe, but goats are chaſed; and when they are, they flee to the hills for refuge. Hence they are ſometimes called the wild goats of the rocks, Job xxxix. 1. and ſometimes the rocks are called from them, the rocks of wild goats, 1 Sam. xxiv. 2. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions, render it, for the harts, or deer; and ſo Apollinarius: but the word is not uſed of them. And the rocks for the conies; who being a feeble folk, make their houſes in them, to protect them from creatures of ſuperior power and ſtrength, Prov. xxx. 26. Some interpret it of the hedge-hog, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions: others of hares, as the Syriac and Arabic, and ſo Apollinarius; and others, of mountain-mice. Now what the hills and rocks are to the above creatures, a refuge and a habitation for them, that Chriſt is to thoſe that fly to him for refuge; though weak and feeble, ſinful and unworthy, he is their rock, the rock of their refuge, their ſtrong tower, and place of defence.

℣. 19. He appointeth the moon for ſeaſons, &c.] Or, he made[e]; for the moon is the work of his hands, Pſal. viii. 3. as is likewiſe the ſun. From the rain the pſalmiſt paſſes to the luminaries; for this reaſon, as Aben Ezra thinks, becauſe they are the cauſe of rain; the moon is taken notice of in the firſt place, becauſe, as Kimchi obſerves, the night was before the day; and in the night of the fourth day, were the ſun, moon, and ſtars; but the ſun roſe in the morning. The moon was made for ſeaſons as well as the ſun, Gen. i. 16. or that times might be numbered by it, as the Targum, both months and years; one of its courſes and revolutions making a month, and twelve of theſe a year; which lunar years were in uſe among ſome nations: as alſo it is ſuppoſed to have an influence on the ebbing and flowing of the tides; and ſerved to regulate the feſtivals of the Jews, their ſet appointed times, as the word ſignifies, and is uſed of them, and which were governed by it. And this Jarchi takes to be the ſenſe of the paſſage; though Aben Ezra more truly remarks, that it purely belongs to the work of creation, and the original deſign and uſe of this luminary. It was an emblem of the ceremonial law; which conſiſted, among other things, in the obſervation of new moons; which gave ſome light in the time of Jewiſh darkneſs, though but a dim one, in compariſon of the goſpel; had its imperfections, was changeable, waxed old, and vaniſhed away; and which the church is ſaid to have under her feet, being aboliſhed, Rev. xii. 1. Though ſome think the world is meant, which is changeable and fading. It was alſo an emblem of the church, Cant. vi. 10. which receives her light from Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs; has its different phaſes and appearances; ſometimes being in proſperity, and ſometimes in adverſity; has its ſpots and imperfections, and yet beautiful, through the grace of God and righteouſneſs of Chriſt. The ſun knoweth his going down; not the going down of the moon, which is the ſenſe of ſome, according to Kimchi; but his own going down; and ſo he knows his riſing, to which this is oppoſed, Pſal. l. 1. and every revolution, diurnal or annual, he makes; and which he conſtantly and punctually obſerves, as if he was a creature endued with reaſon and underſtanding; ſee Pſal. xix. 5, 6. Job xxxviii. 12. He knows the time of his ſetting, as the Targum, Syriac and Arabic verſions; and alſo the place where he is to ſet, at the different ſeaſons of the year, and indeed every day. This luminary is an emblem of Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs, Pſal. lxxxiv. 11. Mal. iv. 2. the fountain of all light; the light of nature, grace and glory; and of all ſpiritual life and heat, as well as fruitfulneſs. He aroſe at his incarnation, and ſet at his death, the time of both which he full well knew; and he has his riſings and ſettings, with reſpect to the manifeſtation of himſelf to his people, or hiding himſelf from them, which depend on his pleaſure.

℣. 20. Thou makeſt darkneſs, and it is night, &c.] The darkneſs was before the light, and the night before the day, Gen. i. 2, 4, 5. and now the darkneſs and night are made by the ſetting of the ſun before mentioned; ſee Iſa. xlv. 7. Wherein all the beaſts of the field do creep forth; out of their dens, and range about for their prey, as the evening-wolves and others: and theſe are not the only creatures that chuſe the night and darkneſs; all wicked men do the ſame; whoſe deeds are evil, and do not care to come to the light, leſt they ſhould be reproved; particularly drunkards, adulterers, thieves and murderers, John iii. 20, 21. 1 Theſſ. v. 7. Job xxiv. 13—17. So the ſcribes and phariſees, when they conſulted to take away the life of Chriſt, and agreed with Judas to betray him, did it in the night: ſo falſe teachers, who are wolves in ſheeps clothing, when it is a night of darkneſs with the church, take the advantage of it, to creep about and ſpread their pernicious doctrines; ſee 2 Tim. iii. 6. Jude 4.

℣. 21. The young lions roar after their prey, &c.] Or, at the prey[f]; for, according to the ſcriptures, it ſeems as if their time of roaring was when they have got their prey, and are tearing it and feeding on it, and not till then, Amos iii. 4. Iſa. xxxi. 4. though naturaliſts tell us, that when they are pinched with hunger, they make ſuch a hideous roaring, as quite ſtupifies, as well as terrifies other creatures; that they have no power to ſtir, till they come up to them, and become their prey, who otherwiſe could outrun them; for the lion is neither a ſwift creature, nor of good ſcent: wherefore, according to credible accounts, a creature called a jackal, little bigger than a fox, hunts its prey for it, and ſecures it till it comes up to it. Young lions are rather mentioned, becauſe their appetite is keeneſt, and their voice loudeſt and ſtrongeſt. This creature is an emblem of Satan, who goes about like a roaring lion, ſeeking whom he may devour, 1 Pet. v. 8. And ſeek their meat from God; as all creatures in their way do; as the ravens by crying, ſo the young lions by roaring; neither one nor other can provide for themſelves, but God, in his providence, ſupplies them all with food; ſee ℣. 27, 28. and Pſal. cxlv. 15, 16. And ſhould not we ſeek and aſk our meat of God too, even both temporal and ſpiritual? And may we not expect it from him? Does he feed the ravens, and alſo the young lions, and will he not take care of his own people, and feed them with food convenient for them, and eſpecially when they aſk it of him? Pſal. xxxiv. 10. Luke xii. 24. and xi. 13.

℣. 22. The ſun ariſeth, they gather themſelves together, &c.] Having gone ſome one way ſome another, ſeeking their prey; but upon the ſun's riſing gather together in order to return from whence they came, abhorring the light of the ſun, as ſome creatures do, and fearing being hunted and taken by men, the fear of whom is ſtill in ſome meaſure upon the beaſts of the field, Gen. ix. 2. So wicked men do not care for the light of the day, nor do falſe teachers chooſe to come to the light of the word; theſe owls and bats, theſe lucifugæ, as Tertullian calls them; and Satan himſelf chooſes to ſet upon perſons when they are in darkneſs, and in melancholy and diſconſolate frames; and is afraid of believers, when they put on the armour of light, eſpecially the ſhield of faith, and reſiſt him with it, then he flees from them. And lay them down in their dens; for reſt and ſafety, and to feed themſelves and young ones with the ravin they bring with them; ſee Cant. iv. 8. Nahum ii. 12.

℣. 23. Man goeth forth to his work, &c.] Having taken ſleep in the night, being comfortably refreſhed, and his ſtrength recruited; he riſes with the riſing ſun, and goes forth chearfully and with intrepidity to his work in the field, or elſewhere, the beaſts being fled and gone. And to his labour until the evening; to till the ground, and do other ſervices and labour, either of the head or hand; for man is born and deſigned for labour, and not for ſloth and idleneſs: in his innocent ſtate he was ſet to dreſs the garden, and keep it; and after the fall his doom was to get his bread by the ſweat of his brow; and he is to work while the day laſts, till the evening and night come on, when he betakes himſelf to ſleep and reſt again. So the believer, though the work of redemption and ſalvation is wrought for him, and the work of grace is wrought in him, each by another hand; yet he has work enough to do, which he is created for, and under obligation to perform; and in which he is to continue ſtedfaſt and immoveable, while the day of life laſts, till the night of death comes, and no man can work; and then he reſts from his labours and his works follow him.

℣. 24. O Lord, how manifold are thy works! &c.] The pſalmiſt having taken notice of many of the works of creation, ſtops and wonders at the number of them; though he had not gone through them all, and there were even things innumerable behind; ſee ℣. 25. he admires the ſum of them, how great it was; and not only the quantity but the quality of them; for ſo the words may be rendered, how great are thy works[g], as for number, ſo for nature; in which there is ſuch an amazing diſplay of the greatneſs and power of God, and particularly of his wiſdom, as is obſerved in the next clauſe. In wiſdom haſt thou made them all; not only one thing, as the heavens, Pſal. cxxxvi. 5. but every thing is wiſely contrived and made; there is a moſt glorious diſplay of the wiſdom of God in the moſt minute thing his hands have made; he has made every thing beautiful in its ſeaſon: a ſkilful artificer, when he has finiſhed his work and looks it over again, often finds ſome fault or another in it; but when the Lord had finiſhed his works of creation and looked over them, he ſaw that all was good; infinite wiſdom itſelf could find no blemiſh in them; what weak, fooliſh, ſtupid creatures muſt they be that pretend to charge any of the works of God with folly, or want of wiſdom? Some by wiſdom here underſtand Chriſt himſelf, the wiſdom of God; and not amiſs, ſince without him was not any thing made; ſee Prov. iii. 19. The earth is full of thy riches; or poſſeſſions[h]; for as the Lord is the maker, he is the proprietor and the poſſeſſor of heaven and earth and all that is in them, and can and does diſpoſe thereof as ſeems good in his ſight; and whatever of the riches and good things of the earth men may have, they are only ſtewards, the Lord is the rightful owner and poſſeſſor of them; ſee Gen. xiv. 19. Pſal. xxiv. 1. with which compare Pſal. xxxiii. 5. and the note there.

℣. 25. So is this great and wide ſea, &c.] One of the great and manifold works of God, made in his wiſdom, and full of his riches and poſſeſſions as the earth is; this is that collection of waters which God called ſeas, Gen. i. 10. and is, as Kimchi obſerves, great in length, and wide and ſpacious in breadth; or broad of hands[i], as in the original; or ſpacious in borders, as the Targum; it waſhing the ſeveral parts of the continent, and encompaſſing and embracing the whole earth with both arms as it were. Nor is it unuſual with other writers to call the ſea the great ſea[k], and to ſpeak of an arm or arms of the ſea[l], as we do. Iſidore ſays[m], the great ſea is that which flows out of the ocean from the weſt, and goes to the ſouth, and then to the north, called ſo in compariſon of other ſeas that are leſs, and is the Mediterranean ſea. This is an emblem of the world, which may be compared to the ſea for the multitude of nations and people in it, as numerous as the waves of the ſea; for the temper of the inhabitants of it, being like the troubled ſea, reſtleſs and uneaſy, caſting up the mire of dirt and ſin; and for the inſtability of it, and the fluctuating ſtate and condition of all things in it. Wherein are things creeping innumerable; ſo that it ſeems there are reptiles in the water as well as on land; and indeed every creature without feet, and that goes upon its belly, in the element where it is, whether earth or water, is a creeping thing; of theſe ſwimming or creeping things the number is exceeding great, eſpecially of the latter ſort; fiſhes increaſing much more than the beaſts of the earth. Their ſpecies are innumerable; ſo their kinds or ſorts are reckoned up by ſome 144[n], by others 153[o], and by others 176[p]; the Malabarians reckon up 900,000 fiſhes, and 1100,000 creeping things[q]. Theſe are an emblem of the common people of the world which are innumerable; ſee Hab. i. 14. Both ſmall and great beaſts; for there are creatures in the ſeas which anſwer to thoſe on the dry land, both of the leſſer and greater ſort, as ſea-lions, ſea-horſes, ſea-cows, ſea-hogs, &c. theſe may repreſent the rulers and governors of the world, ſupreme and ſubordinate; it is no unuſual thing for great monarchies, and perſons of great power and authority, to be ſignified by beaſts riſing out of the ſea, Dan. vii. 3. Rev. xiii. 1.

℣. 26. There go the ſhips, &c.] From place to place, from one end of the world to the other, for the ſake of merchandiſe[r]; this is one of the four things that were too wonderful for Solomon, the way of a ſhip in the midſt of the ſea, Prov. xxx. 19. though navigation was improved in his time, indeed deed not ſo much as it is now. The original of ſhips was doubtleſs Noah's ark, ſo that they owe their firſt draught to God himſelf. They ſeem to be an emblem of the church and people of God paſſing through the ſea of this world to the haven of eternal reſt. The ſhip is but a ſmall veſſel, and takes up but a ſmall room in compariſon of the vaſt ocean on which it is; and ſo the church of Chriſt is but ſmall, a little city and few men in it, a little flock, a ſmall remnant: a ſhip is unfixed, and unſettled, ſometimes here and ſometimes there; ſo the church of Chriſt is ſometimes in one place, and ſometimes in another; nor is this world the reſt of God's people, nor have they any continuing city here; for as a ſhip is toſſed with tempeſts, ſo are they with the waves of afflictions, the temptations of Satan, and the perſecutions of men; and ſometimes like Paul, and the mariners with him, have no ſight of ſun and ſtars for many days, of the ſun of righteouſneſs, or of the ſtars, the miniſters of the word; when ſailing is dangerous it bodes perilous times, through the impure lives of profeſſors, and impious doctrines of falſe teachers, whereby many ſuffer ſhipwreck; yet all the Lord's people get ſafe aſhore, having a good pilot, Chriſt, to conduct them; and the good anchor of hope, ſure and ſtedfaſt. There is that leviathan, whom thou haſt made to play therein; the Targum adds, "for the righteous at the feaſt of the houſe of his "habitation." Of this creature there is an account in Job xli. Some take it to be the crocodile, which is both a ſea and river-fiſh; the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, and Arabic verſions, and ſo Apollinarius, call it, the dragon; it is more generally thought to be the whale; Aben Ezra ſays it is the name of every great fiſh; it is a ſportive creature, tumbles about in the great ſea, and plays with the waters of it, which it toſſes up in great quantities; and with the fiſhes of the ſea, which it devours at pleaſure; and laughs at the ſhaking of the ſpear; and to which mariners throw out their empty caſks to play with, when near them, and they in danger by it; ſee Job xli. 5, 29. This creature is generally reckoned by the ancients a figure of Satan, it being king over all the children of pride, Job xli. 34. as he is the prince of the power of the air, and god of this world; who has been playing his tricks in it from the beginning of it, not only deceiving our firſt parents, but all the nations of the world; nor are ſaints ignorant of his devices. It ſometimes deſcribes a tyrannical prince, as the kings of Babylon and of Egypt, Iſa. xxvii. 1. Ezek. xxxii. 2. and is a true picture of antichriſt the beaſt which roſe out of the ſea; nor is there any like him on earth; ſee Rev. xiii. 1, 4. Job xli. 33.

℣. 27. Theſe wait all upon thee, &c.] Or hope in thee [*]; not only the fiſhes of the ſea, but the beaſts of the field; for to them the pſalmiſt returns, as Aben Ezra obſerves; to whom hope and expectation of their food, and waiting for it at the hands of God, are aſcribed; the alluſion ſeems to be to tame creatures, who come at their certain times and wait on them that have been uſed to give them their food; and it may inſtruct us to wait on the Lord, as for our daily bread, ſo for our ſpiritual food, in prayer, and in public ordinances, where, and from whom we may hope and expect to have it. That thou mayeſt give them their meat in due ſeaſon; or in his time [†]; every one in its own time, which is natural to them, and they have been uſed to; at which time the Lord gives it to them and they take it; it would be well if men would do ſo likewiſe, eat and drink in proper and due time, Eccleſ. x. 17. Chriſt ſpeaks a word in ſeaſon to weary ſouls; his miniſters give to every one their portion of meat in due ſeaſon; and a word ſpoken in due ſeaſon how good and ſweet is it? Iſa. l. 4. Luke xii. 12. Prov. xv. 23.

℣. 28. That thou giveſt them, they gather, &c.] What God beſtows upon them as a bounty of providence they take and make uſe of, and in their way thankfully and without repining; ſome gather it up for immediate uſe and ſervice, and not into barns; others gather it up for time to come, as the ant, Matt. vi. 26. Prov. vi. 8. Kimchi underſtands this of a time of ſcarcity, when they gather here a little and there a little; as he does the following clauſe of a time of plenty. Thou openeſt thine hand, they are filled with good; God, in whoſe hand all things are, and from whence all things come, opens his hand of providence and liberally and bountifully gives, as this phraſe ſignifies, Deut. xv. 11. and all his creatures are filled with his good things to their ſatisfaction: and thus the ſpiritual food which he gives his people, they gather it by the hand of faith, as the Iſraelites gathered the manna in the wilderneſs every morning, and according to their eating, what was ſufficient for them; and to whom he gives liberally, even all things richly to enjoy; all things pertaining to life and godlineſs; Chriſt, and all things along with him; abundance of grace here, and glory hereafter; and they are ſatisfied with his good things as with marrow and fatneſs.

℣. 29. Thou hideſt thy face, they are troubled, &c.] God may be ſaid to hide his face from the creatures when he withholds their food from them, when there is a ſcarcity of proviſions, a famine in the land; when there is no paſture for them to feed on, nor brooks of water to drink of; then are they troubled or perplexed, as in Joel i. 18, 20. and know not what to do, nor where to go for help, but faint, and ſink, and die. So in a ſpiritual ſenſe when God hides his face from his people, removes his ſhekinah, or divine majeſty and preſence, as the Targum here; and withdraws the influences of his grace and Spirit; or when they have no food for their ſouls, or what they have is not bleſſed, then are they troubled, Pſal. xxx. 7. Thou takeſt away their breath, they die, and return to their duſt; their original duſt, from whence they ſprung, as man himſelf does; the breath of all is from the Lord; he gives it to his creatures, and when he pleaſes he takes it away; and when he does, they die and become duſt again.

℣. 30. Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, they are created, &c.] Thy holy Spirit, as the Targum, who was at firſt concerned in the creation of all things, the heavens and the earth, and man upon it, Gen. i. 2. Pſal. xxxiii. 6. Job xxvi. 13. and xxxiii. 4. which may be alluded to here; though it ſeems chiefly to intend the generation and production of creatures in the room of thoſe that die off; that ſo their ſpecies may be preſerved, and there may be a conſtant ſucceſſion of them, as there is in all ages, Eccleſ. i. 4. And thou reneweſt the face of the earth; by a new ſett of creatures of all kinds being brought upon it to fill it. As there is alſo a daily renewing it every morning by the riſing ſun, giving freſh life and vigour to all created beings; and a yearly one every ſpring, when the face of all nature is renewed and revived. Jarchi and Arama underſtand it of the reſurrection of the dead; this ſenſe Kimchi mentions as an article of their faith, but not as the ſenſe of the text. It may be applied to the renewing work of the Spirit of God in the ſouls of men, by whom they are made new, and by whom they are daily renewed in the ſpirit of their minds. And there are particular ſeaſons in which God ſends forth his Spirit and renews the face of things in the world, and in his churches; upon the effuſion of his Spirit in the firſt times of the goſpel, there was a new face of things, not only in the land of Judea, but throughout the whole Gentile world, where old things paſſed away and all things became new; as in the latter day, when the Spirit ſhall be poured forth from on high, there will be a renewing of the face of the earth again; it will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the ſea; the kingdoms of it will become Chriſt's; new heavens and a new earth will be created, and Jeruſalem will be made a rejoicing, and her people a joy, Iſa. lxv. 17, 18.

℣. 31. The glory of the Lord ſhall endure for ever, &c.] The glory which ariſes from the works of his hands, which is due unto him, and ſhall be given him; this is oppoſed to the periſhing and fading glory of all created beings: and as Chriſt is the perſon ſpoken of throughout the whole pſalm, this may be underſtood of his glory as the only begotten of the Father; and which is equal to his Father's glory, and is the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever; and of the glory of his office as Mediator; and of all his works of nature and grace, of creation and redemption: nor will there be creatures wanting, angels and men, to glorify his name to all eternity. The Targum, Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, render it as a prayer, Let the glory of the Lord be for ever; or, let him be for ever glorified, on account of the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hands; as he will and ought to be. The Lord ſhall rejoice in his works; being well pleaſed with them, as he was with the works of creation; they appearing, on a ſurvey of them, to be all very good, Gen. i. 31. ſo he rejoices in the ſuſtentation and preſervation of them; and the rather, when he is glorified in them. And this ſhould be a reaſon why glory ſhould be given him, that he may rejoice in his works, and not be grieved, as he is ſometimes ſaid to be, and to repent of his making them, Gen. vi. 6. Chriſt rejoices in the work of redemption, which he undertook and performed with pleaſure; he rejoiced at the finiſhing it, and he rejoices in the application of it to his people; and will rejoice in their complete enjoyment of it; they being the objects of his love, in whom he has an intereſt; whom he engaged for, are the purchaſe of his blood, and for whom he prays and intercedes: he rejoices in them as the work of his hands now; in their perſons, who are his hephzibah, in whom he delights; his beulah, to whom he is married: he rejoices in his own grace wrought in them, and in the exerciſe of it on him; he rejoices over them to do them good, and never ceaſes doing good to them and for them.

℣. 32. He looketh on the earth, and it trembleth, &c.] As Sinai did when he deſcended on it, Pſal. lxviii. 8. and lxxvii. 19. to which the alluſion ſeems to be: and a look from him, a ſevere one, a frowning one, will make the inhabitants of the earth to tremble; a providential look, ſending famine, peſtilence or the ſword among them. A diſpleaſed look will make the hearts of his own children tremble, as no doubt Peter's did, when the Lord looked upon him, and he remembered his word; and if a look, much more a word, an awful word, as his voice in the law, pronouncing ſuch curſed as keep it not; and eſpecially the tremendous ſentence he will pronounce on the wicked at the laſt day, Go, ye curſed, &c. and if a look and a word are ſo terrible, what will be the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger upon thoſe, who have refuſed to give him glory? For the words ſeem to carry in them a reaſon why he ſhould be glorified, taken from the conſequence of not glorifying him, who has ſuch a majeſty in his looks, ſuch a terror in his countenance, and ſuch power in his hands. He toucheth the hills, and they ſmoke; as Sinai likewiſe did, when he was upon it, Exod. xix. 18. and as other hills do, when touched with lightning; the tops of mountains, the higher they are, the ſooner and the more they ſmoke[u]. God, with a touch of his hand, can ſet mountains on fire, open vulcanos, and cauſe them to burn for years together; as Ætna, Veſuvius, Hecla, and others: and how eaſily can he ſet on fire the courſe of nature, burn the world, and all that is in it! It is but touching it, and it takes fire immediately: this he can as eaſily do, as a man can light a torch or a candle; and as eaſily can he deſtroy ſinners with the fire of his wrath, or caſt them into everlaſting fire, with the devil and his angels, which will burn to the loweſt hell; and what are hills and mountains, or the greateſt perſonages on earth, if he does but touch them, or lay his hand upon them in wrath? They are cruſhed as the moth; they are nothing before our great Zerubbabel.

℣. 33. I will ſing unto the Lord as long as I live, &c.] Or, in my life or lives[w], throughout the whole of it. This was what the pſalmiſt determined to do, let others do what they would; even ſing ſongs of praiſe to the Lord; ſince he was the God of his life, who had fed him all his life long; from whom he had all the mercies of life, and by whom he had been followed with goodneſs and mercy all his days, and on whom his life and the comforts of it depended. I will ſing praiſe unto my God, while I have my being; becauſe he lived, and moved, and had his being in him; and it was continued to him, and he was upheld in it; and not only for his being, but for his well-being; as for his temporal, ſo for his ſpiritual mercies, which he had from him as his God, as his covenant-God; ſuch as peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and eternal life: a view of God as our own God, ſuch a view as Thomas had of Chriſt, when he ſaid, My Lord, and my God, is enough to make a man ſing: and when the pſalmiſt ſays he would do this as long as he lived and had a being, this is not to be underſtood as if this work would end with his life, or that he had no thought of praiſing him hereafter; but it ſignifies his conſtancy in this employment, whilſt in the land of the living; knowing that in the grave he could not praiſe the Lord with his bodily organs as now; though he knew that this would be his eternal employ in the world of ſpirits, in his ſoul, during its ſeparate ſtate, and in ſoul and body after the reſurrection.

℣. 34. My meditation of him ſhall be ſweet, &c.] Of the glories, excellencies and perfections of his perſon; of his offices, as Mediator, King, Prieſt and Prophet, the Saviour and Redeemer; of his works of creation, providence and redemption; of his word, the bleſſed truths, and comfortable doctrines of it; of his providential diſpenſations, and gracious dealings with his people in the preſent ſtate; which to meditate upon, when grace is in exerciſe, is very ſweet, delightful and comfortable. The Targum renders it as a petition, "Let my meditation be ſweet before him;" that is, grateful and acceptable to him: or, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, Let my ſpeech, diſcourſe, colloquy, addreſs in prayer; ſee Pſal. cxli. 2. or, Let my praiſe, ſo the Arabic and Syriac verſions: the ſpiritual ſacrifices both of prayer and praiſe, are acceptable to God through Chriſt; and the ſpeech of the church, and every believer, whether in the one way or the other, is ſweet to Chriſt, very pleaſant and delightful to him, Cant. ii. 14. I will be glad in the Lord: the Targum is, "in the Word of the Lord;" in the eſſential Word, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; in his perſon, the greatneſs, glory, beauty and fulneſs of it; in his righteouſneſs, its purity, perfection and perpetuity; in his ſalvation, being ſo ſuitable, complete and glorious.

℣. 35. Let the ſinners be conſumed out of the earth, &c.] Not in common, for all men are ſinners, even good men are not without ſin; but notorious ſinners, whoſe lives are one continued ſeries and courſe of ſinning; ſuch as will not have Chriſt to reign over them, and do not give him the glory due unto him; particularly Antichriſt, the man of ſin, and his followers; they that worſhip the beaſt and his image: theſe will be conſumed with the breath of his mouth, and with the brightneſs of his coming, and will periſh out of his land, 2 Theſſ. ii. 3, 4, 8. Pſal. x. 16. And let the wicked be no more; as the wicked one, Antichriſt, will be no more when conſumed; there will never riſe another, when the beaſt and falſe prophet are taken and caſt alive into the lake of fire; there will no more of the antichriſtian party remain, the remnant of them will be ſlain with the ſword; after the battle of Armageddon, there will be none left of the followers of Antichriſt, nor any ever riſe up any more. Bleſs thou the Lord, O my ſoul; as for his mercies, ſpiritual and temporal, ſo for the deſtruction of all his enemies. The pſalm begins and ends alike as the preceding. Praiſe ye the Lord; or hallelujah: this is the firſt time this word is uſed in this book of Pſalms, though frequently afterwards; and it is obſervable, that it is only uſed in the New Teſtament, at the prophecy of the deſtruction of Antichriſt, Rev. xix. 1, 3, 4, 6. which may ſerve to confirm the ſenſe before given; and is to be conſidered as a call upon the ſaints to praiſe the Lord, on account of his righteous judgments on his and his church's enemies; ſo Aben Ezra.

PSALM CV.

THIS pſalm was penned by David, and ſung at the time when the ark was brought from the houſe of Obed Edom, to the place which David had prepared for it; at leaſt the firſt fifteen verſes of it, the other part being probably added afterwards by the ſame inſpired penman, as appears from 1 Chron. xvi. 1—7. The ſubject-matter of the pſalm is the ſpecial and diſtinguiſhing goodneſs of God to the children of Iſrael, and to his church and people, of which they were typical: the hiſtory of God's regard to and care of their principal anceſtors, Abraham, Jacob, Joſeph, &c. and of the whole body of the people, in bringing them out of Egypt, leading them through the wilderneſs, and ſettling them in the land of Canaan, is here recited, as an argument for praiſe and thankfulneſs.

℣. 1. O give thanks unto the Lord, &c.] Theſe are the words of David, either to the ſingers, or rather to the whole congregation of Iſrael, the ſeed of Abraham, and children of Jacob, ℣. 6. ſtirring them up to praiſe and thankfulneſs for their mercies temporal and ſpiritual; for the Meſſiah they had hope and expectation of, typified by the ark now brought home; for the word and ordinances, and opportunities of waiting upon God in them; for heaven and happineſs, figured by Canaan's land given them to enjoy. Or, confeſs or celebrate the Lord[x]; his greatneſs and goodneſs; his being and perfections; his ſovereignty over all creatures: confeſs him as your Creator, Benefactor, covenant-God and Father; or, confeſs to the Lord[y] your ſins and tranſgreſſions committed againſt him, his great grace and kindneſs to you, and your unworthineſs to receive any favour from him. Call upon his name; as ſuch may to advantage, who are thankful for what they have received from him; theſe may and ought to call upon him, or pray to him, in faith and fervency, with frequency and importunity, in the truth and ſincerity of their ſouls; and at all times, eſpecially in times of trouble. Some, as Aben Ezra, interpret it, proclaim his name, make it known to others; call upon them to ſerve and worſhip him. This ſenſe is mentioned by Kimchi, and agrees with what follows: Make known his deeds among the people; which are the effects of his counſel, wiſdom, power and goodneſs; ſuch as the works of creation and providence, and eſpecially of grace and ſalvation; and which were to be publiſhed among the heathen, for the glory of his name: and indeed the goſpel, which is ordered to be preached to all nations, is nothing elſe than a declaration of what Jehovah, Father, Son and Spirit, have done and do.

℣. 2. Sing unto him, ſing pſalms unto him, &c.] Both vocally and inſtrumentally, with the voice and upon inſtruments of muſic, as were uſed in David's time. Pſalms, hymns and ſpiritual ſongs, are to be ſung now, even the ſong of Moſes, and of the Lamb. The wondrous things God had done for his people, were ſufficient matter for a ſong; and theſe were to be put into one, to be tranſmitted to poſterity: it was uſual in ancient times to hand down the hiſtory of memorable events by a ſong. Talk ye of all his wondrous works: all the works of the Lord are wonderful; what David elſewhere ſays of himſelf, may be ſaid of them, that they are wonderfully made, even the leaſt and moſt inconſiderable of them; and eſpecially his works of grace, when it is obſerved for whom they are performed, or on whom they are wrought; ſinful creatures, enemies to God, and deſerving of his wrath. Theſe are to be talked of freely and frequently, in friendly converſation, in order to gain a further knowledge of them, and warm each others hearts with them, and to lead into adoring and admiring views of the love and grace of God in them; and all of them deſerve notice, none ſhould be omitted, all are worthy of conſideration and contemplation; for ſo the words may be rendered, meditate[z] on all his wondrous works. Here is a large field for meditation; and when the heart is in a proper frame for it, meditation on the works of God is ſweet, pleaſant and profitable.

[x] הודו ליהוה celebrate Jehovam, Junius & Tremellius.

[y] Confitemini Domino, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

℣. 3. Glory ye in his holy name, &c.] In the knowledge of it, as proclaimed in Chriſt; in being called by his name, and in having the honour to call upon his name; in the holineſs of it; and in Chriſt being made ſanctification as well as righteouſneſs, in whom all the ſeed of Iſrael are juſtified and glory; as they may alſo of intereſt in him, and communion with him. Let the heart of them rejoice that ſeek the Lord; while he may be found, and where he may be found; who ſeek him in Chriſt, and under the guidance and direction of his Spirit; who ſeek him with their whole hearts, diligently and conſtantly. The Targum is, "who ſeek doctrine from the Lord." Such may and ſhould rejoice in him, and in him only; and that always, as they have reaſon to do, even in their hearts, ſince they that ſeek him find him: and whether it be at firſt converſion, or afterwards, or when he has for a time hid his face; it muſt be matter of joy to them, even to their very hearts, to find him whom they ſeek.

℣. 4. Seek the Lord and his ſtrength, &c.] The ark which is called his ſtrength, and the ark of his ſtrength, Pſal. lxxviii. 61. and cxxxii. 8. becauſe he had ſhewn his great ſtrength by it, in dividing the waters of Jordan, throwing down the walls of Jericho, and plaguing the Philiſtines becauſe of it, when among them. This was a ſymbol of God's preſence, before which he was ſought by his people; and was a type of our Lord Jeſus, the man of God's right hand, whom he has made ſtrong for himſelf, and who is called his ſtrength, Pſal. lxxx. 18. Iſa. xxvii. 5. Some render it, and which Aben Ezra makes mention of, though he rejects it, ſeek the Lord in his ſtrength; or by it: God is to be ſought in Chriſt; he is the way of acceſs to him. Or the meaning is, ſeek ſtrength from the Lord; ſpiritual ſtrength, ſtrength to aſſiſt in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty; ſeek it from him, in whom are both righteouſneſs and ſtrength. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions render it, ſeek the Lord, and be ye ſtrengthned. The way to gain an increaſe of ſpiritual ſtrength, is to ſeek the Lord by prayer, or in his ordinances; ſee Pſal. cxxxviii. 3. The Targum is, "ſeek the doctrine of the Lord, and his law:" It follows: Seek his face evermore; his favour and loving-kindneſs; his ſmiling countenance, which beholds the upright; his gracious preſence, and communion with him; which is always deſirable, ever to be ſought after, and will be eternally and without interruption enjoyed in another world.

℣. 5. Remember his marvellous works which he hath done, &c.] Which Aben Ezra interprets of the works of creation; rather they ſeem to deſign the works of providence in favour of the children of Iſrael: beſt of all, works of grace done for his ſaints, none of which are to be forgotten; eſpecially the great work of redemption and ſalvation, for the remembrance of which, under the New Teſtament, an ordinance is particularly appointed. His wonders, and the judgments of his mouth; the above Jewiſh writer, by wonders, underſtands the miracles in Egypt, the plagues inflicted on the Egyptians; and by the judgments of his mouth, the laws and ſtatutes given at Sinai; each of which were indeed to be remembered: but his wonders may take in all the wonderful things done in Egypt and in the wilderneſs, and in ſettling the Iſraelites in the land of Canaan; and his judgments may alſo intend the judgments which he threatened to bring upon the enemies of Iſrael, and which he did bring upon them as he ſaid. The wonders of his grace, of his law and goſpel, his judgments and his teſtimonies, are not to be forgotten.

℣. 6. O ye ſeed of Abraham his ſervant, &c.] Theſe are the perſons all along before addreſſed, the Iſraelites who deſcended from Abraham, were his natural ſeed and offſpring, and who had reaſon to give thanks unto the Lord and praiſe his name, ſince ſo many and ſuch wonderful things had been done for them; though all that were his natural ſeed were not the children of God; and ſuch who have the ſame faith he had, and tread in the ſteps he did, are Chriſt's, and partakers of his grace; theſe are Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe; and are under the greateſt obligations to praiſe the Lord. Abraham is here called his ſervant, as alſo in ℣. 42. being a true worſhipper of God; though ſometimes his friend, which is not inconſiſtent; though this character, according to the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, belongs to his ſeed, they rendering it in the plural, his ſervants. It follows, Ye children of Jacob his choſen; this is added to diſtinguiſh the perſons intended from the other ſeed of Abraham in the line of Iſhmael; for in Iſaac his ſeed was called, which were the children of the promiſe, and that in the line of Jacob, and not in the line of Eſau; from whom they were called Iſrael or Iſraelites, a people whom the Lord choſe above all people on the face of the earth; for the word choſen may be connected with the children, as well as with Jacob. The whole ſpiritual Iſrael of God, whether Jews or Gentiles, all ſuch who are Iſraelites indeed, as they appear to be the choſen of God, ſo they are bound to praiſe his name.

℣. 7. He is the Lord our God, &c.] Here begin the arguments to excite to praiſe and thankfulneſs; and the firſt is taken from what God is, and is to us; he is Jehovah, the being of beings, a ſelf-exiſtent being, the author of all beings, but receives his own from none; being undivided, independent, and ſelf-ſufficient, invariably and unchangeably the ſame, which is, and was, and is to come; and who has a ſovereign power and authority over all creatures, whoſe name alone is Jehovah; nor is that name applicable or communicable to any created being; and yet this Jehovah is our God, our God in covenant, our God in Chriſt; our God that has bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt; our God that has regenerated, adopted, and juſtified us; that ſupplies all our wants, and will be our God and our portion for ever; and therefore worthy of all praiſe, honour, and glory. His judgments are in all the earth; not his laws and ſtatutes, his word and ordinances, or the revelation of his mind and will as to faith and worſhip, which are ſometimes meant by his judgments; for theſe were not in all the earth, were only known to the people of the Jews at this time, Pſal. cxlvii. 19, 20. rather his judgments on the Egyptians, or his plagues upon them for refuſing to let Iſrael go, the fame of which was ſpread throughout the world; and may take in all the judgments of God in other parts of the world, as on Sodom and Gomorrah, and eſpecially the univerſal deluge which deſtroyed the world of the ungodly; and by ſuch judgments the Lord is known, Pſal. ix. 16. and for theſe he is to be praiſed; as they are expreſſive of his holineſs and juſtice; as he will be for his judgments on Antichriſt, when they are made manifeſt, Rev. xv. 4. and xix. 1, 2. This may alſo reſpect in general God's government of the world, and his righteous judging in it; who is a God that judgeth in the earth, and governs it by his power and wiſdom, and in righteouſneſs; and this righteous judge is our God.

[z] שיחו meditamini, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 8. He hath remembered his covenant for ever, &c.] Another argument of praiſe taken from the covenant of grace, in which he is our God, and of which he is ever mindful; he remembers his covenant-ones, whom he perfectly knows, and never forgets them; he remembers his covenant-promiſes to them, and allows them to put him in remembrance of them; he has reſpect unto his covenant, and the bleſſings of it, and beſtows them on his people; gives them the ſure mercies of David; and he remembers his love, which is the ſource and ſpring of all. The word which he commanded to a thouſand generations; that which is properly a covenant with Chriſt our head on our account, is a word of promiſe to us; a promiſe of grace and glory; a free promiſe, abſolute and unconditional: and this he has commanded, or ordered, decreed, and determined that it ſhall ſtand good, and be punctually performed, to a thouſand generations; that is, for ever; for all his promiſes are yea and amen in Chriſt.

℣. 9. Which covenant he made with Abraham, &c.] Or made it known unto him, and ſhewed him his particular intereſt in it; promiſed that he would be his God, that he would bleſs him, and that in his ſeed, the Meſſiah, that ſhould ſpring from him, all nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, Gen. xii. 2, 3. and xvii. 2—8. and xxii. 16—18. compare with this Luke i. 72, 73. And his oath unto Iſaac; he made known to Iſaac the oath which he ſwore to Abraham, and promiſed to perform it, Gen. xxvi. 3. or concerning Iſaac[a]; in whom his ſeed was to be called, and in whoſe line from him the Meſſiah was to come, the grand article of this covenant.

℣. 10. And confirmed the ſame unto Jacob for a law, &c.] The ſon of Iſaac, and the grandſon of Abraham, to whom it was renewed and confirmed, Gen. xxviii. 13, 14. It is true of his poſterity that go by his name, and even of all the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, to whom this covenant is confirmed and made ſure: or cauſed to ſtand[b], as the word is; by the faithfulneſs of God, by his oath annexed to his word, and by the death of his Son: when this is ſaid to be for a law, the meaning is, not as if this covenant had the nature of a law as the covenant of works had; indeed one of the articles of it is, that the law of God ſhould be put into the inward part, and written on the heart; but this refers here not to men but to God; and the ſenſe is, that this covenant has the force of a law with reſpect to God, who of his condeſcending grace and goodneſs has hereby laid himſelf under obligation to do ſuch and ſuch things; which is marvelous grace indeed. And to Iſrael for an everlaſting covenant; for being remembered, commanded, repeated, and confirmed by the Lord, it can never be broken; and being well ordered, remains ſure, and is as immoveable as rocks and mountains, and more ſo: as it was made with Chriſt from everlaſting, it will continue to be made good to his people to everlaſting; and is a juſt reaſon for praiſe, it being the baſis of faith and hope; the ground of joy, peace, and comfort here, and of eternal happineſs hereafter.

℣. 11. Saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, &c.] To each of the above perſons, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and to their poſterity, the children of Iſrael. Not that the word ſaying, as Guſſetius[c] well obſerves, ſignifies that the words following it are expreſſive of the covenant, for that is expreſſed ℣. 7. the main article, ſum, and ſubſtance of it being this, that the Lord was their God; but it only ſignifies that this earthly promiſe was pronounced when that everlaſting covenant was given, Gen. xvii. 7, 8. Beſides this muſt be conſidered as typical of the heavenly inheritance; as that was a land of promiſe ſo is this; it is the promiſe, the grand promiſe which God has promiſed; as that was a land prepared and ready furniſhed with houſes, fields, and vineyards, ſo is heaven a kingdom prepared by God the Father, and by the preſence and mediation of his Son; as the Iſraelites paſſing through the wilderneſs met with many difficulties, and fought many battles, before poſſeſſed of it, ſo the people of God paſs through the wilderneſs of this world, go through many tribulations, and fight the good fight of faith before they lay hold on eternal life; and as not Moſes but Joſhua led the people into the land, ſo not the law but Jeſus the Saviour, the great captain of ſalvation, brings the many ſons to glory; and as that was a land of reſt after fatiguing travels, ſo is heaven the ſabbatiſm or reſt for the people of God, a reſt from all their toil and labour; and as the one was the pure gift of God, ſo is the other; to thee will I give, &c. And as the land of Canaan is here called the lot of your inheritance, it being divided and diſtributed by lot to the children of Iſrael, who had each their proper ſhare and portion, Joſh. xiv. 1, 2. ſo heaven is an inheritance, not purchaſed, nor acquired, but bequeathed by the will of God; comes through the death of the teſtator Chriſt, belongs only to children, and is, as inheritances are, for ever; this is alſo by lot, as the word is in Eph. i. 11. not that it is a caſual thing, for it is appointed by the Lord for his people, and they for that; it is what they are predeſtinated to, as in the forementioned text; but it denotes that every one ſhall have their part and portion in it.

℣. 12. When they were but a few men in number, &c.] Or men of number[d], that might eaſily be numbered; ſee Gen. xxxiv. 30. when this covenant, promiſe and oath were firſt made to Abraham he was alone and had no child; and when his poſterity were increaſed in Jacob's time, and ſojourned in Egypt, they were but few, tho' greatly enlarged, when they came out of it: in compariſon of other nations, they were the feweſt of all people, and therefore had this grant of Canaan, not for their numbers any more than their goodneſs. And this circumſtance is mentioned to ſhew the unmerited goodneſs of God unto them; ſee Deut. vii. 6, 7, 8. and xxvi. 5. And ſo the Lord's people, to whom he gives the kingdom of heaven, are a little flock; they are only a few that find the way to eternal life, Luke xii. 32. Matt. vii. 14. Yea, very few; few; or, as a little thing[*]: ſo were the people of Iſrael a little contemptible body of men in the eyes of others, and in compariſon of them. And ſuch are the ſaints in this world; the filth of it, and the offſcouring of all things; yea, things that are not; that ſcarce deſerve, in the opinion of men, to be reckoned entities or beings. And ſtrangers in it; as Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob were, Heb. xi. 9, 13. and ſo are the people of God, who are the heirs of the heavenly Canaan. Theſe are ſtrangers to the men of the world, who know them not; and the men of the world to them; with whom they have no converſation and fellowſhip in things ſinful and criminal; for which they are deſpiſed by the world: yet theſe are the fellow-citizens of heaven, and of the houſhold of God, which ſhews his diſcriminating grace.

℣. 13. When they went from one nation to another, &c.] From Chaldea to Meſopotamia; from thence to Canaan, and then into Egypt; and after that to Canaan again: which was the tour that Abraham took; and when in Canaan, and travelling from place to place there, might be ſaid to go from nation to nation, ſince there were ſeven nations in that country. From one kingdom to another people; from the kingdom of Paleſtine or Canaan, to Egypt; which was a ſtrange people, and of another language, as appears by the uſe of an interpreter between them, Gen. xlii. 23. So Iſaac, Jacob and his poſterity, journeyed from one of theſe kingdoms to the other. Thus the children of God are pilgrims and ſtrangers in this world; they are unſettled in it; they are travelling through it, and a troubleſome journey they have of it; they are bound to another country to which they belong; and their hearts are there beforehand; and they look upon this world as a ſtrange place, and at beſt but as an inn; where they tarry but for a time, till they get to their own country, the better and heavenly one.

℣. 14. He ſuffered no man to do them wrong, &c.] Though ſtrangers and unſettled, and moving from place to place; and few in number, and weak, and defenceleſs. Thus the herdſmen of Gerar were not ſuffered to do any hurt to Iſaac and his herdſmen; but, on the contrary, the king of the place, with ſome of his chief men, ſought an alliance, and entred into one with Iſaac. Thus Laban was not ſuffered to hurt Jacob, nor the Sichemites to hurt him and his ſons; the terror of God falling on all the cities round about, Gen. xxvi. 20, 26—31. and xxxi. 29. and xxxv. 5. The people of God are in this world expoſed to the injuries of the men of it, being as ſheep among wolves; and it is often in the power of their hands to hurt them, as it was in the power of Laban to hurt Jacob; nor do they want an inclination, there being a rooted enmity in the ſeed of the ſerpent to the ſeed of the woman: but God will not ſuffer them; though they would willingly, like Balaam, curſe them, yet they cannot curſe whom God has bleſſed; he will not ſuffer them to injure them. Yea, he reproved kings for their ſakes; as Pharaoh king of Egypt, and Abimelech king of Gerar; whom he reproved both verbally and really, with words and ſtripes, Gen. xii. 17. and xx. 3, 18. Kings are to be reproved by men, when they do amiſs, as Herod was by John Baptiſt; and may expect to be reproved by the King of kings, when they do wrong, eſpecially to his people; who are themſelves kings and prieſts unto God, and are eſteemed by him above the kings of the earth, and made higher than they.

℣. 15. Saying, Touch not mine anointed, &c.] Or, mine anointed ones; my Chriſts, as Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob were; who, though not anointed with material oil, yet were all that, that ſuch were, who in after-times were anointed with it. They were prophets, prieſts, and kings; and which all met in one perſon, particularly in Abraham, Gen. xx. 7. and xxii. 13. and xxiii. 6. beſides, they were anointed with the oil of grace, with an unction from the holy One, with the holy Ghoſt, and his gifts and graces, as all true believers are: they are the Lord's Chriſts, or his anointed ones; which ſtand before him, and have the name of Chriſtians from hence. Theſe the Lord will not have touched, ſo as to be hurt; they are ſacred perſons; they are near unto God, in union with him; and he that toucheth them, toucheth the apple of his eye; ſo dear are they to him. And do my prophets no harm; ſo Abraham is expreſly called a prophet, Gen. xx. 7. and ſo were Iſaac and Jacob; men to whom the Lord ſpoke familiarly in dreams and viſions, as he uſed to do with prophets; and who taught and made known the mind and will of God to others, as well as foretold things to come; they being the Lord's ſervants, his prophets, they were revealed unto them, Num. xii. 7. Amos iii. 7. ſee Gen. xii. 7. and xviii. 17, 19. and xxvii. 27. and xlix. 1. Theſe the Lord will have no harm done to them; he guards them by his power; he holds them in his right hand; and covers them under the ſhadow of his wing.

℣. 16. Moreover, he called for a famine upon the land, &c.] On the land of Egypt; or rather on the land of Canaan, where Jacob and his ſons ſojourned; and which reached to all lands, Gen. xli. 56, 57. and xlii. 5. and calling for it, it came, being a ſervant at the command of the Lord; ſee 2 Kings viii. 1. Haggai i. 11. He brake the whole ſtaff of bread; ſo called, becauſe it is the ſupport of man's life, the principal of his ſuſtenance; as a ſtaff is a ſupport to a feeble perſon, and which, when broke, ceaſes to be ſo. The ſtaff of bread is broken, when either the virtue and efficacy of it for nouriſhment is taken away or denied; or when there is a ſcarcity of bread-corn; which latter ſeems to be intended here; ſee Iſa. iii. 1. Lev. xxvi. 26.

℣. 17. He ſent a man before them, even Joſeph, &c.] Who, though but a lad of ſeventeen years of age when he was ſold into Egypt, yet was a grown man when he ſtood before Pharaoh, and interpreted his dreams of plenty and famine to come; and adviſed him to lay up ſtore in the years of plenty, againſt the years of famine; by which he appeared to be a wiſe man, as the Targum here calls him; ſee Gen. xxxvii. 3. and xli. 46. Him God ſent before into Egypt; before Jacob and his ſons went down thither, to make proviſion for them, to ſupport them in the time of famine, and preſerve their lives. God is ſaid to ſend him, though his brethren ſold him out of envy; there being ſuch a plain hand of providence in this matter; and which is obſerved by Joſeph himſelf over and over again, Gen. xlv. 5, 7, 8. in which he was a type of Chriſt, in whom all proviſions are made, and by whom they are communicated unto his people; who all receive out of his fulneſs, and grace for grace. Who was ſold for a ſervant; either to a ſervant; as to Potiphar, as Aben Ezra, who was a ſervant of Pharaoh's; or rather to be a ſervant, as Joſeph was in his houſe: he was ſold for twenty pieces of ſilver, as Chriſt, his antitype, for thirty; the price of a ſervant, Gen. xxxvii. 28. Zech. xi. 13. Exod. xxi. 32. and who not only appeared in the form of a ſervant, but did the work of one; and a faithful and righteous ſervant he was to his Father, and on the behalf of his people.

ỳ. 18. Whoſe feet they hurt with fetters, &c.] For it ſeems Joſeph was not only caſt into priſon, upon the calumny of his miſtreſs; but had fetters put upon him, and his feet were made faſt with them; and theſe were ſo cloſe and heavy, as to pinch, and gall and hurt him; which, though not mentioned in his hiſtory, was undoubtedly true; ſee Gen. xxxix. 20. He was laid in iron; or, the iron (or, as the Targum, the iron chain) went into his ſoul[f]; his body; it eat into him, and gave him great pain: or rather, as it is in the king's Bible, his ſoul went into the iron chain; there being, as Aben Ezra obſerves, an ellipſis of the particle ב and which is ſupplied by Symmachus, and ſo in the Targum; that is, his body was incloſed in iron bands, ſo Buxtorf[g]. In all this he was a type of Chriſt, whoſe ſoul was made exceeding ſorrowful unto death: he was ſeized by the Jews, led bound to the high-prieſt, faſtened to the curſed tree, pierced with nails, and more ſo with the ſins of his people he bore; and was laid in the priſon of the grave; from whence and from judgment he was brought, Iſa. liii. 8.

ỳ. 19. Until the time that his word came, &c.] Either the word of Joſeph, interpreting the dreams of the butler and baker, till that came to be fulfilled; ſo the Syriac verſion, till his word was proved by the event: or rather, till the fame and report of that came to Pharaoh's ears, Gen. xli. 13, 14. or elſe the word of the Lord, concerning his advancement and exaltation, ſignified in dreams to him, Gen. xxxvii. 7—10. as it follows: The word of the Lord tried him; it tried his faith and patience before it was accompliſhed; and when it was, it purged him and purified him, as ſilver in a furnace, and cleared him of the imputation and calumny of his miſtreſs; for even in the view of Pharaoh, he appeared to be a man in whom the Spirit of God was, Gen. xli. 38. Some think that Chriſt, the eſſential Word, is intended, who came and viſited him, tried and cleared him.

ỳ. 20. The king ſent and looſed him, &c.] That is, Pharaoh king of Egypt ſent meſſengers to the priſon, and ordered Joſeph to be looſed, as ſoon as ever he heard the account which the chief butler gave of him, and of his ſkill in interpreting dreams. Even the ruler of the people; or peoples; the ſubjects of Pharaoh's kingdom being very numerous. And let him go free; ordered his fetters to be taken off, and him to be ſet at liberty, to go where he pleaſed; or however, that he might come to court, whither he was brought, and which was the end of his releaſement; ſee Gen. xli. 14. in this he was a type of Chriſt in his reſurrection from the dead; who for a while was under the dominion of death, was held with the pains and cords of it, and was under the power and in the priſon of the grave; but it was not poſſible, conſidering the dignity of his perſon, and the performance of his work as a ſurety, that he ſhould be held here. Wherefore the cords and pains of death were looſed, and he was brought out of priſon; God his Father, the King of kings, ſent an angel from heaven, to roll away the ſtone of the ſepulchre, and let the priſoner free; ſo that he was legally and judicially diſcharged and acquitted; as it was proper he ſhould, having ſatisfied both law and juſtice; he was juſtified in the Spirit when he roſe from the dead, and all his people were juſtified in him, for he roſe again for their juſtification.

ỳ. 21. He made him lord of his houſe, &c.] That is, Pharaoh made Joſeph lord-chamberlain of his houſhold; after he had him to court, and he had interpreted his dreams to him to his great ſatisfaction, and had given him ſuch prudent advice to provide againſt the years of famine; ſee Gen. xli. 4. So Chriſt, after his reſurrection, was received up into heaven, and was made and declared Lord and Chriſt, Lord of all, having all power in heaven and earth given to him; particularly had the care of the church committed to him, which is the houſe of God, of his building, and where he dwells; where his children are born, brought up and provided for. Here Chriſt is as a Son over his own houſe, as the owner and proprietor of it; here he is King, Prieſt and Prophet; and is the provider for all in it, both of food and cloathing: of him the whole family in heaven and in earth is named, Eph. iii. 15. though he makes uſe of under-ſtewards, to give to every one their portion of meat in due ſeaſon. And ruler of all his ſubſtance; or poſſeſſion[h]; lord-treaſurer of all his revenues, Gen. xli. 40, 41, 43. Herein alſo he was a type of Chriſt, who, as God, is poſſeſſor of heaven and earth, being the Creator of them; but, as Mediator, he has all things delivered into his hands; all are at his diſpoſe, to ſubſerve the ends of his mediatorial office; he has all temporal things, gold and ſilver, riches and honour, to beſtow upon men at pleaſure: more eſpecially all ſpiritual things are with him; the gifts of the Spirit, which he has without meaſure; and the fulneſs of all grace, which it has pleaſed the Father ſhould dwell in him; the bleſſings of the everlaſting covenant, and the promiſes of it; all the riches of grace, pardoning, juſtifying and adopting grace, and all the riches of glory.

ỳ. 22. To bind his princes at his pleaſure, &c.] Not to lay them in priſon, and bind them with fetters, as he had been bound; but to give laws unto them as he pleaſed, and bind and oblige them to obſerve them: for, according to his word, all the people of Egypt, high and low, rich and poor, were to be ruled; and, without his leave, no man was to lift up his hand or foot in all the land, Gen. xli. 40, 44. All Chriſt's people are princes, to whom he gives laws at his pleaſure, as one having authority, though they are not grievous; and theſe he binds, obliges and conſtrains his people by love to obſerve, and which they do. Jarchi's note is, "this is an expreſſion of love like that; and the "ſoul of Jonathan was bound unto the ſoul of David: when he (Joſeph) interpreted the dream, "they all loved him." The Targum is, "to bind "his nobles as to his ſoul." And teach his ſenators wiſdom; his elders, his privy-counſellors: he made him preſident of his council; where he was a curb upon them, and reſtrained them from taking wrong or bad meaſures; ſo Schultens[i], from the uſe of the word in the Arabic language, renders it, to bridle, or reſtrain his ſenators; which conveys an idea agreeable to the preceding clauſe. Nor were theſe the only perſons he taught; he not only inſtructed the nobles and courtiers in politics, but the prieſts and men of learning in the arts and ſciences; and all, no doubt, in the myſteries of the true religion, as he had an opportunity. And this is the ſource of the wiſdom of the Egyptians; which Moſes was afterwards brought up in; and for which that people were ſo famous, that many of the ancient philoſophers, as Pythagoras, Plato, and others, travelled thither to acquire it. This they had from Joſeph, and his people that dwelt in their land. Chriſt's ſenators are his apoſtles and miniſters, the elders that rule well and labour in the word and doctrine: theſe are taught wiſdom by him; the knowledge of divine and ſpiritual things; the words and doctrines of the wiſe, are all from him, that one Shepherd; that they, as under-ſhepherds and paſtors, may feed others with knowledge and underſtanding.

℣. 23. Iſrael alſo came into Egypt, &c.] That is, Jacob, as afterwards expreſſed, who had the name of Iſrael, from his wreſtling with God and prevailing. He came into Egypt, being invited by Pharaoh, and having heard of his ſon Joſeph being alive, and of his exaltation. And Jacob ſojourned in the land of Ham: the ſame with Egypt; Mizraim, from whence Egypt has its name, being the ſon of Ham, Gen. x. 6. Hence Egypt is called by Plutarch[k] Chemia; and Diodorus Siculus[l] ſpeaks of a city in Thebais, or Upper Egypt, which was called by the inhabitants Chemmis, interpreted by them the city of Pan; and Plutarch[m] mentions a place called Chennis, inhabited by Pans and Satyrs. The ſame is mentioned by Herodotus[n], which he calls a large city of the Thebaic nome; a city of the ſame name is obſerved by Heliodorus[o]; and both Herodotus[p] and Mela[q] ſpeak of an iſland called Chemmis, which the Egyptians repreſent as floating. In all which there are plain traces of the name of Ham, the ſame with Jupiter Ammon; or Amun, as Plutarch; worſhipped in Egypt; and from whom all Africa was ſometimes called Ammonia[r], the country of Ammon or Ham. And Herodotus[s] ſpeaks of a people called Ammonii, about ten days journey from Thebes in Upper Egypt; who, according to him[t], had their name from Jupiter Ammon, or Ham. And Pliny[u] makes mention of the oracle of Hammon, as twelve days journey from Memphis, and of the Hammoniac nome; and the Egyptian prieſts are called Ammonean[w]. Here Jacob was a ſojourner, as all the Lord's people are in this world; they are ſojourners, as all their fathers were; and their time here is a time of ſojourning, 1 Chron. xxix. 15. 1 Pet. i. 17. They are not natives of the place where they are; they are indeed ſo by their firſt birth, but not by their new birth; being born from above, they belong to another place, are citizens of another city; their houſe, eſtate and inheritance, are in heaven: neither their ſettlement nor ſatisfaction are here; they do not reckon themſelves at home, whilſt they are in this world; they are indeed in an enemy's country, in a curſed land; or that is nigh unto curſing, and its end to be burned. Such the land of Ham was, where Jacob ſojourned.

℣. 24. And he increaſed his people greatly, &c.] God increaſed the people of Iſrael greatly in the land of Egypt; they went down few, and became a populous nation; only ſixty ſix perſons, beſides Jacob's ſons wives; and when they came out from thence were ſix hundred thouſand footmen; yea, they increaſed the more they were afflicted, Exod. i. 12. So the people of God in this world ſometimes increaſe in number, and that even amidſt the perſecutions of their enemies; as the Chriſtians did in the firſt times of the goſpel under the Roman emperors; and they increaſe in grace, in every grace, and oftentimes the more they are tried and exerciſed by afflictions. And made them ſtronger than their enemies; in their bodies, being more healthy, ſtrong and robuſt; and which was ſeen, obſerved and owned by their enemies, Exod. i. 9. So ſaints, being ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, are a match for their enemies; are ſtronger than they, and are even more than conquerors thro' Chriſt, that has loved them.

℣. 25. He turned their heart to hate his people, &c.] Whom before they loved and eſteemed: when Pharaoh and his ſervants heard of Joſeph's father and brethren, they were greatly pleaſed, and invited them into Egypt; and when come, placed them in the land of Goſhen; but when a new king aroſe, and a new generation, which knew not Joſeph, the hearts of theſe were turned to hate them. This is ſaid to be of the Lord: not that he put any hatred into them, there was no need of that; there is enough of that naturally in every man's heart againſt good men, and all that is good: but he did not reſtrain that hatred, as he could have done, but ſuffered them to let it have vent; and moreover, he did thoſe things which were an occaſion of it, and which ſerved to ſtir up their hatred; as increaſing their numbers, and making them ſtronger and mightier than they, Exod. i. 9, 10. To deal ſubtilly with his ſervants; by putting them to hard labour, and uſing them with great rigour, in order to weaken their ſtrength; by commanding the midwives to kill every ſon that was born; and by publiſhing an edict, to caſt every male child into the river and drown it, and ſo hinder the increaſe of them. Thus the people of God have their enemies that hate them; that are ſubtil and cunning, wiſe to do evil, full of all ſubtilty and wicked craft; Satan, at the head of them, has his artful methods, wiles, ſtratagems and devices: but the Lord is wiſer than all, and knows how to deliver his people out of the hands of all their enemies, as he did the children of Iſrael; of which there is an account in the following verſes.

℣. 26. He ſent Moſes his ſervant, &c.] Into Egypt, to deliver his people Iſrael out of the hands of the Egyptians; in which, as in other things, he approved himſelf to be a faithful ſervant to the Lord; of this miſſion of his, ſee Exod. iii. 10—14. In this he was a type of Chriſt, who appeared in the form of a ſervant, and really was one; God's righteous ſervant as Mediator, though his Son as a divine perſon; ſent by him to redeem his people out of worſe than Egyptian bondage, from ſin, Satan, the law, its curſe and condemnation. And Aaron whom he had choſen; to go along with Moſes, to be a mouth for him, and a prophet to him, Exod. iv. 16. and vii. 1. who alſo was a type of Chriſt, being a prieſt and good ſpokeſman, choſen and called of God, a holy and an anointed one. The Targum is, "in whom he was well pleaſed."

℣. 27. They ſhewed his ſigns among them, &c.] The Egyptians to whom they were ſent; that is, Moſes and Aaron did. In the original it is, the words words of his ſigns [x]. They declared the words of God to them, that he would do ſuch ſigns and wonders among them; or inflict ſuch plagues upon them, in caſe they did not let Iſrael go: or they performed them according to the word of the Lord, as he commanded them, as well as taught the doctrines and inſtructions to be learned from them. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it in the ſingular number, though contrary to the Hebrew text, and underſtand it of God, he put the words of his ſigns in them; in Moſes and Aaron; or gave them orders and power to perform them: he put them in both, as the Arabic verſion has it; or, he did his ſigns by them, as the Syriac verſion. And wonders in the land of Ham; or Egypt, as in ẏ. 23. meaning the miracles of the plagues, which are next particularly mentioned, though not all of them: the plagues of the murrain, and of the boils and blains, are omitted; the reaſon of which, according to Aben Ezra, is, becauſe Pharaoh did not ſeek to Moſes to remove them; and the other eight that are mentioned, are not placed in the order in which they were done, the laſt but one being obſerved firſt.

ẏ. 28. He ſent darkneſs, and made it dark, &c.] The land of Egypt; either he, God, or it, darkneſs, made it dark, or it was made dark; the Targum is, "made them dark;" that is, the Egyptians; darkneſs was a meſſenger of the Lord's, who forms the light and creates darkneſs; it came at his word and covered all the land, excepting the dwellings of Iſrael; even a thick darkneſs that might be felt, ſo that the Egyptians could not ſee one another, nor riſe from their place for three days together; ſuch as ſometimes riſes at ſea, and is ſaid to be ſo dark that for five days together day and night are the ſame; this was the ninth of the ten plagues, Exod. x. 21—23. and was an emblem of the darkneſs which is on the minds of men in an unregenerate ſtate; who are covered with groſs darkneſs, and are even darkneſs itſelf; which is univerſal as to perſons, and the powers and faculties of their ſouls concerning divine things: and it alſo bears ſome reſemblance to the darkneſs which will be in the kingdom of the beaſt upon the pouring out of the fifth vial, or plague, on ſpiritual Egypt, Rev. xvi. 10. And they rebelled not againſt his word; the plague of darkneſs, and the reſt of the plagues which God commanded; theſe, as they were his ſervants, were not diſobedient to him, they came at his word; ſee ẏ. 31, 34. ſo Jarchi interprets it; or elſe Moſes and Aaron, who were ſent of God to inflict thoſe plagues, did not refuſe to obey the divine orders; though Pharaoh threatned them hard, yet they feared not the wrath and menaces of the king, but did as the Lord commanded them. Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech mention both theſe ſenſes, but the latter ſeems moſt agreeable. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions leave out the word not; and ſo ſome copies of the Vulgate Latin verſion, and Apollinarius in his metaphraſe, and they rebelled againſt his word; that is, the Egyptians did not hearken to the word of the Lord, nor to the ſigns and wonders he wrought, but their hearts were hardned, and they would not let Iſrael go. But this is contrary to the original text; though Arama interprets it of them, that they did not rebel, but confeſſed this miracle, which being the greateſt of all, as he obſerves, is firſt mentioned. Dr Lightfoot [y] thinks it is to be underſtood of Iſrael, and of ſome ſpecial part of obedience performed by them; which he takes to be circumciſion, which they had omitted in Egypt, at leaſt many of them, and was neceſſary to their eating of the paſſover, which was to be done in a few days, Exod. xii. 48. and it was a fit time to perform this ſervice while darkneſs for three days was upon the Egyptians; in which they were ſhut up by the Lord that they might not take the opportunity againſt his people, now ſore through circumciſion.

ẏ. 29. He turned their waters into blood, &c.] With which Egypt abounded; their ſtreams, rivers, ponds, and pools, ſo that they had no water to drink; a juſt judgment upon them for ſhedding the innocent blood of infants, by drowning them in their rivers; this was the firſt of the ten plagues, Exod. vii. 19—21. with this compare the ſecond and third vials poured out on ſpiritual Egypt, whereby blood will be given to antichriſt, and to the antichriſtian ſtates, for they are worthy, having ſhed ſo much of the blood of the ſaints, Rev. xvi. 3—6. And ſlew their fiſh; which ſhewed that the miracle was real, that the waters were really turned into blood, ſince the fiſh could not live in them, as they might if it had been only in appearance; the rivers of Egypt abounded with fiſh, this was a principal part of their food, and therefore muſt greatly diſtreſs them; ſee Numb. xi. 5. Iſa. xix. 8.

ẏ. 30. Their land brought forth frogs in abundance, &c.] The land of Egypt, the moiſt, marſhy, and watry places of it, the banks of the river Nile, out of the ſlime and mud of which theſe ſprung; or, as Kimchi obſerves, wherever there were waters in the land there were frogs, for theſe came out of the ſtreams, rivers, and ponds; this is the ſecond plague, Exod. viii. 3—6. In the chambers of their kings; that is, they came into the chambers of their kings; not that they were produced there; they entered not only into the kneading troughs, and ovens, and bed-chambers of the common people, but into the chambers of the king, and his ſons, and his nobles, and princes of the land, who may be called in the plural number kings; ſee Iſa. x. 8. with theſe compare the three unclean ſpirits, like frogs, under the pouring out of the ſixth vial, that will go forth to the kings of the earth, and gather them to the battle of the Lord God almighty; by whom are meant the emiſſaries of Rome, prieſts and jeſuits; ſo called for their impurity and impudence, for their noiſe and loquaciouſneſs, and for the ways and means they uſe to get into the cabinet-councils of princes, and prevail upon them to do things which will iſſue in their ruin; ſee Rev. xvi. 13, 14, 16. and xix. 20.

ẏ. 31. He ſpake, and there came divers ſorts of flies, &c.] Or a mixture [z] of various inſects, and as ſome interpret it, of wild beaſts; and ſo Kimchi ſays, evil beaſts are meant, which were raiſed up to go into all their borders; the Arabic verſion renders it dog-flies, after the Septuagint; ſee the note on Pſal. lxxviii. 45. this was the fourth plague, Exod. viii. 24. And lice in all their coaſts; this is the third plague, and what the magicians could not imitate, but were obliged to own the finger of God was in it, Exod. viii. 16—19. God can make uſe of mean and deſpicable inſtruments to do his work; the weakneſs of God is ſtronger than men.

℣. 32. He gave them hail for rain, &c.] Egypt, at leaſt part of it, was not uſed to rain, but was watered by the overflowings of the Nile; but now it had hail for rain, and a grievous hail-ſtorm it was, ſuch as was never ſeen in the land of Egypt before; hail being rare, if ever there, and ſo froſt and ſnow [a]; this was the ſeventh plague, Exod. ix. 18—26. compare with this the terrible ſtorm of hail which will fall on men at the pouring out of the ſeventh vial on ſpiritual Egypt, Rev. xvi. 21. And flaming fire in their land; for a ſtorm of thunder and lightning went along with the hail; fire was mingled with it, and ran upon the ground, Exod. ix. 23, 24.

℣. 33. He ſmote their vines alſo, and their fig-trees, &c.] So that they died; for in Pſal. lxxviii. 47. it is ſaid, he killed them; and it is not only uſed in common ſpeech with us, but with claſſical writers [b] to ſpeak of killing inanimate things, as trees, herbs, &c. That is, the hail ſmote them, or God by the hail; theſe are particularly mentioned becauſe moſt uſeful, producing grapes and figs. And brake the trees of their coaſts; all the trees within the borders of their land, Exod. ix. 25.

℣. 34. He ſpake, and the locuſts came, &c.] A great army of them, and covered the land, that it was even darkened by them; and were ſuch as had never been ſeen before, or ever were ſince; this is the eighth plague, Exod. x. 12—15. with theſe compare the locuſts in Rev. ix. 3, 4. And caterpillers, and that without number; of theſe no mention is made in Exodus; they ſeem to be one of the kinds of locuſts, or a different word is here uſed for the ſame, and ſo Kimchi interprets it; ſome render it the white locuſt; it has its name from licking up the herbs and graſs of the field; as the other name for the locuſt ſeems to be taken from its great abundance and increaſe.

℣. 35. And did eat up all the herbs in their land, &c.] As theſe creatures uſually do, unleſs reſtrained, Exod. x. 15. ſee Rev. ix. 4. And devoured the fruit of their ground; which the hail left, Exod. x. 15.

℣. 36. He ſmote alſo all the firſt-born in their land, &c.] Both of men and beaſts; the firſt-born of the king on the throne, and of the maid-ſervant behind the mill, and of the captive in the dungeon; this was the laſt plague, and which prevailed upon the Egyptians to let Iſrael go, Exod. xi. 5. and xii. 29—33. The chief of all their ſtrength; or the firſt of their ſtrength; the ſame in different words as before, their firſt-born; ſee Gen. xlix. 3.

℣. 37. He brought them forth alſo with ſilver and gold, &c.] That is, God brought forth the Iſraelites out of Egypt by means of the above plagues, laden with great riches, with jewels of gold and of ſilver, which they borrowed of the Egyptians at the command of the Lord; and ſo to be juſtified in what they did; and beſides it was but juſt and equitable that they ſhould be paid for their ſervice and hard labour in Egypt for a long courſe of time; and this was the method in providence they were directed to take to do themſelves juſtice; and hereby was accompliſhed an ancient propheſy concerning them, that they ſhould come out with much ſubſtance, Gen. xv. 14. ſee Exod. xi. 2. and xii. 35, 36. Beſides, in the paſſages quoted, the words ſhould be rendered of the Iſraelites that they aſked, and of the Egyptians that they gave; the Jews, ſome of them ſay [c] that theſe were given not with the will of the Egyptians, and others ſay not with the will of the Iſraelites, but neither of them true. And ſo in like manner will the people of God, when reſcued from the tyranny of the antichriſtian ſtates, enjoy great riches and honour; ſee Rev. xvii. 16. Iſa. lx. 3, 9, 11, 16. And there was not one feeble perſon among their tribes; though there were ſix hundred thouſand footmen, Numb. xi. 21. and tho' they had been uſed to hard and rigorous ſervice in order to weaken their ſtrength; and though they came from among a people plagued with diſeaſes and deaths. This confronts a lying ſtory told by ſome heathen writers [d], that the Iſraelites were driven out of Egypt becauſe they had the itch, leproſy, and other diſeaſes upon them. Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it, there was not a poor or neceſſitous man among them, for they abounded with gold and ſilver; compare with this the caſe of God's people in the latter day, Zech. xii. 8. Iſa. lx. 22.

℣. 38. Egypt was glad when they departed, &c.] The Egyptians, as the Targum; they were glad when the Iſraelites were gone, for whoſe ſake they had been ſo much and ſo long plagued. So wicked men are glad to be rid of the company of good men, which is very diſagreeable to them; ſo the Gergeſenes were glad when Chriſt departed out of their coaſts, which they requeſted he would. So the inhabitants of the earth will rejoice, be merry, and ſend gifts one to another, when the witneſſes are ſlain, the two prophets that tormented them with their doctrines and religious lives. For the fear of them fell upon them; their firſt-born being ſlain, they looked upon themſelves as dead men; and feared that if the Iſraelites ſtaid, their lives muſt go next; and therefore being ſeized with a panic they were urgent upon them to depart; not out of any good will to them, but through fear of them, Exod. xii. 33.

℣. 39. He ſpread a cloud for a covering, &c.] That is, the Lord ſpread one over their heads as an umbrella, to protect them from the heat of the ſun; this refers to the pillar of cloud, Exod. xiii. 20, 21. though that ſeems to have been in an erect poſture, and to go before the children of Iſrael to direct them in their journey, and not a covering to them. Kimchi ſays, it was a covering to them when they reſted, but not when they journeyed; but when they reſted it only covered the tabernacle, not the people, for any thing we read of it, Numb. ix. 21, 22. it looks as if there were more clouds than one, and indeed the Jews ſpeak of many, and particularly make mention [e] of one that was over the heads of the Iſraelites that the heat of the ſun, and the hail and rain might not have power over them; and of ſuch uſe this cloud was, at leaſt at certain times, if not always; a type of Chriſt, who is the covering and ſhelter of his people from the heat of the fiery law, of the flaming ſword of juſtice, of the wrath of God, of the fiery darts of Satan, and of the fury of wicked men. And fire, to give light in the night; this reſpects the pillar of fire which gave them light by night; an emblem of Chriſt, who is the light of his people, when it is a night-ſeaſon with them, as it ſometimes is; a night of affliction and diſtreſs, of darkneſs and deſertion, of temptation, of carnal ſecurity and ſleepineſs; when Chriſt ariſes as a light in darkneſs, and enlightens by his preſence, by his Spirit, and by his word; as well as is as fire to warm, refreſh, quicken, and comfort them when chil and cold, in ſuch ſeaſons.

℣. 40. The people aſked, and he brought quails, &c.] The Targum is, "they aſked fleſh, and he "brought quails," or pheaſants; ſome render it partridges, others locuſts; that is, the people of Iſrael aſked fleſh of the Lord, and he gave them quails; which he did twice, firſt at the ſame time the manna was firſt given, Exod. xvi. 13. and ſome years after that a ſecond time, when the wrath of God came upon them and ſlew them whilſt their meat was in their mouths, Numb. xi. 31, 33. it is the firſt time that is here referred to, ſince it is mentioned among the benefits and bleſſings beſtowed upon them; this was typical of the ſpiritual meat believers eat of, even the fleſh of Chriſt, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed. The quail was a fat and fleſhy bird, delicious food, ſent from heaven in the evening; ſo Chriſt came from heaven in the evening of the world, and gave his fleſh for the life of his people, and on which they live by faith. And ſatisfied them with the bread of heaven; the manna, called the corn of heaven; a type of Chriſt the hidden manna, who is ſoul-ſatisfying food to believers; ſee the notes on Pſal. lxxviii. 24, 25.

℣. 41. He opened the rock, and the waters guſhed out, &c.] That is, God opened the rock, who before is ſaid to ſpread the cloud, and bring the quails, for it was a miraculous affair; or Moſes, by divine orders, which was done by ſmiting it, when waters flowed out in great abundance, ſufficient to give drink to men and beaſts, and which continued, Exod. xvii. 6. Numb. xx. 11. This was typical of Chriſt the rock, 1 Cor. x. 4. and of the opening of his ſide, from whence flowed blood and water, John xix. 34. and of his being ſmitten with the rod of juſtice, and by the law of Moſes, from whom flow abundance of grace, and the bleſſings of it, freely to all his people; ſee the notes on Pſalm lxxviii. 15, 16. They ran in the dry places like a river; and did not ſink and ſoak into them, but continued their flow, and followed the Iſraelites wherever they went; ſee 1 Cor. x. 4.

℣. 42. For he remembered his holy promiſe, &c.] It was not owing to the goodneſs of this people, to their obedience to the divine will, to any worthineſs or merit of theirs, that ſuch ſigns and wonders were wrought for them in Egypt; and that they were brought out from thence in ſuch a manner as they were; and were protected and ſo plentifully provided for in the wilderneſs; but it was owing to the grace and goodneſs of God, to his covenant and promiſe, which he ſacredly and inviolably obſerved; the grace and covenant of God are the ſource and ſpring of all bleſſings of goodneſs; he is ever mindful of his covenant, and therefore ſends meat to them that fear him, as he did to the Iſraelites, Pſal. cxi. 5. And Abraham his ſervant; or the promiſe he made to Abraham his ſervant; ſo the Targum, "which was with A"braham his ſervant;" that is, which holy word or promiſe was with Abraham, was ſpoken to him, and was with him, that he would give him and his ſeed the land of Canaan; and that though they ſhould be afflicted long in Egypt, yet ſhould come out from thence with great ſubſtance, Gen. xv. 13, 14, 18. this he remembered, as he never forgets any promiſe of his, nor ever ſuffers his faithfulneſs to fail, nor his covenant to be broken. Hence it follows, ℣. 43. And he brought forth his people with joy, &c.] Or therefore[f], in conſequence of his promiſe, and the remembrance of it, he brought Iſrael out of Egypt with great joy to them, they coming out with ſo much health and wealth; having their liberty, and in hope of ſhortly being ſettled in a land flowing with milk and honey. And his choſen with gladneſs; or ſinging[g]; eſpecially when they had got through the Red-ſea; their enemies drowned, and they quite clear of them, Exod. xv. 1. And when they are called his choſen, this opens another ſource of thoſe bleſſings to them, not only the promiſe and covenant of God, but their election of God, which was free and ſovereign, to chooſe them above all people; not becauſe they were better or more than others, but becauſe he loved them; and hence he did all the above things for them. In like manner when God's elect are in effectual vocation, brought out of bondage to liberty, out of darkneſs to light, out of an horrible pit, and have their feet ſet on a rock; are brought to Chriſt and into his church, and have a place and a name there; it is with exceeding great joy and gladneſs to them; and to the church above ſhall they at laſt be brought with everlaſting joy on their heads, Iſa. xxxv. 10.

℣. 44. And gave them the lands of the heathen, &c.] The countries of the ſeven nations that dwelt in Canaan; the Lord did it, who had a right to do it, being the poſſeſſor of heaven and earth; and who was provoked unto it by the ſins of theſe heathens, as well as promiſed it to his people the Iſraelites. And they inherited the labour of the people; dwelled in the houſes they had built, which they found full of all good things; enjoyed the vineyards and olive trees they had planted, and poſſeſſed the wells which they had dug, Deut. vi. 10, 11. In like manner the heavenly Canaan is enjoyed by the ſaints without any labour of theirs; this inheritance is not of the law, nor of the works of it, it is the gift of God, Rom. iv. 14. and vi. 23.

℣. 45. That they might obſerve his ſtatutes, and keep his laws, &c.] All this the Lord did for them, to engage them by his goodneſs to them to obſerve the ſtatutes he appointed them, and the laws he gave them; the contrary to which the Canaanites had done, which cauſed him to caſt them out of the land; but on theſe his people he heaped benefits, thereby to influence them to a chearful obedience to his will; and this was all he required of them, and the leaſt that they could do, being ſo highly favoured by him. And this is the end of our ſpiritual and eternal redemption by Chriſt, and of our effectual vocation by his grace and ſpirit, that we be zealous of good works; live unto righteouſneſs, live to him that died for us; glorify him with our bodies and ſpirits, which are his; and be holy in all manner of converſation. Praiſe ye the Lord; all the Iſraelites ought to have done ſo, upon the remembrance of the manifold inſtances of the divine goodneſs to them, recorded in this pſalm: and ſo the ſpiritual Iſrael of God ought to praiſe him for their redemption by Chriſt, out of a worſe than Egyptian bondage, the bondage of ſin, Satan, and the law; and for their vocation into liberty, and to marvellous light; for their meetneſs for heaven, and right unto it; they ſhould praiſe him now with joyful lips, as they will in the other world to all eternity.

PSALM CVI.

THIS pſalm is without the name of its author, as the Syriac interpreter obſerves. Aben Ezra, on ℣. 47, ſays, that one of the wiſe men of Egypt (perhaps Maimonides) was of opinion, that it was wrote in the time of the Judges, when there was no king in Iſrael; and another, he ſays, thought it was written in Babylon: but he was of opinion, it was wrote under the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt, or by a prophetic ſpirit, concerning their preſent captivity; and ſo Kimchi. The petition in ℣. 47, Gather us from among the heathen; has led moſt interpreters to conclude, that it was written either in the Babyloniſh captivity, or, as ſome, in the times of Antiochus: but by comparing it with 1 Chron. xvi. 7. it appears that it was written by David, at the time of the bringing up of the ark to Zion; ſince the firſt and two laſt verſes of it are there expreſly mentioned, in the pſalm he gave Aſaph to ſing on that occaſion, ℣. 34, 35, 36. who therein might have reſpect to the Iſraelites, that had been taken captive by ſome of their neighbours, as the Philiſtines, and ſtill retained; tho' there is no difficulty in ſuppoſing that David, under a prophetic ſpirit, foreſaw future captivities, and perſonates thoſe that were in them. As the preceding pſalm treats of the mercies and favours God beſtowed upon Iſrael, this of their ſins and provocations amidſt thoſe bleſſings, and of the goodneſs of God unto them; that notwithſtanding he did not deſtroy them from being a people; for which they had reaſon to be thankful.

℣. 1. Praiſe ye the Lord, &c.] Or hallelujah; which, according to the Arabic verſion, is the title of the pſalm; and ſo it ſtands in the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions. Several pſalms following begin in like manner; it begins as the former ended, and ends as it begins; praiſe being due to God at all times, and on all occaſions. O give thanks unto the Lord; always, for all things, temporal and ſpiritual, ſince not worthy of any: or, confeſs unto the Lord[h]; his great goodneſs, and your unworthineſs; and all your ſins and tranſgreſſions committed againſt him, who only can pardon. For he is good; eſſentially, ſolely and originally; is communicative and diffuſive of his goodneſs; is the author of all good, and of no evil; and is gracious, and merciful, and ready to forgive. For his mercy endureth for ever; notwithſtanding the ſins of his people; though he may ſometimes hide his face from them, and rebuke them in his providence; and though he cauſes grief by ſo doing, he ſtill has compaſſion upon them, his mercy continues towards them; yea, his mercies are new every morning, as to temporal things; and ſpiritual mercies, the ſure mercies of David, redemption, remiſſion of ſins and ſanctification, iſſue in eternal life; the mercy of God is from eternity to eternity: theſe are reaſons why he ſhould be praiſed, and thanks be given to him.

℣. 2. Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord? &c.] Or powers[i]; to which anſwers the Greek word for the miracles of Chriſt, Matt. xi. 20, 21. and Kimchi here reſtrains them to the wonders wrought in Egypt, and at the Red-ſea: but they may as well be extended to the mighty acts of God, and the effects of his power, in the creation of all things out of nothing; in the ſuſtentation and government of the world; in the redemption of his people by Chriſt; in the converſion of ſinners, and in the final perſeverance of the ſaints; in all which there are ſuch diſplays of the power of God, as cannot be uttered and declared by mortal tongues. Who can ſhew forth all his praiſe? all thoſe things done by him, worthy of praiſe, they are ſo many and ſo great? ſee Pſal. xl. 5.

℣. 3. Bleſſed are they that keep judgment, &c.] Or obſerve[k] it; the righteous judgment of God on wicked men; by which he is known in his juſtice, holineſs, truth and faithfulneſs; and by which the inhabitants of the earth obſerving it, learn to do righteouſneſs, as follows: or elſe it may intend the word of God, his laws, ſtatutes and ordinances, after called his judgments, Pſal. xix. 9. and cxlvii. 19, 20. which ſhould be obſerved and kept, as the rule of our actions, walk and converſation. And he that doth righteouſneſs at all times; continually believes in Chriſt for righteouſneſs, and puts on that as his juſtifying righteouſneſs; whereby he becomes righteous as he is, 1 John iii. 7. and performs acts of righteouſneſs from a principle of grace, as a fruit of regeneration, and an evidence of it, 1 John ii. 29. that does it with right views, aims and ends; not to be juſtified and ſaved by it, but becauſe God requires it; and it is for his glory, and to teſtify ſubjection to him, and thankfulneſs for favours received from him. And this is to be done at all times; we ſhould never be weary of well-doing, but be always abounding in good works; and happy are thoſe that will be found ſo doing, ſuch are bleſſed perſons: not that their bleſſedneſs lies in or ariſes from righteouſneſs done by them; but this is deſcriptive of ſuch that are bleſſed in Chriſt, with the remiſſion of ſins, and his juſtifying righteouſneſs. And theſe are the proper perſons to ſhew forth the mighty acts and praiſe of the Lord; they are moſt capable of it, and more likely to perform it with acceptance than any other; ſee Pſal. l. 14, 16, 23.

℣. 4. Remember me, O Lord, with the favour that thou beareſt unto thy people, &c.] The Lord has a ſpecial and peculiar people, whom he has choſen, taken into covenant, given to his Son, redeemed by him, who are called by grace, and brought to glory: to theſe he bears a peculiar favour, loves with an everlaſting love; which he has ſhewn, in the choice of them; in the gift of his Son to them; in their regeneration, and eternal ſalvation. Now nothing can be more deſirable than an intereſt in this favour, in which is life, ſpiritual and eternal; is the ſtrength and ſecurity of believers, the ſource of their comfort, and the foundation of their happineſs: to be remembred with this, is to have a view of intereſt in it, a comfortable ſenſation of it, and an application of benefits by it. O viſit me with thy ſalvation; a prayer, either for the coming of Chriſt, as God's ſalvation, promiſed, expected and wiſhed for; or however, for an application of ſpiritual ſalvation, to be wrought out by him; for a view of intereſt in it; to have the joys and comforts of it now, and the full poſſeſſion of it hereafter. A gracious and deſirable viſit this! The ends of ſuch requeſts, or of ſuch a viſit, follow:

℣. 5. That I may ſee the good of thy choſen, &c.] The elect, according to the foreknowledge of God; who are choſen in Chriſt to holineſs and happineſs, through ſanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth unto ſalvation by him; the veſſels of mercy afore prepared unto glory, both of Jews and Gentiles. The good of thoſe is not any goodneſs of their own, for there is none in them naturally; they are by nature no better than others, none are good, nor do good, no not one: but the goodneſs of God laid up for them, and beſtowed on them; the bleſſings of goodneſs with which Chriſt is prevented for them; all the good things ſecured for them in a well-ordered covenant; which they partake of in time, and to eternity. To ſee theſe, is not to have a ſuperficial, notional knowledge of them, as hypocrites may have; or a diſtant view of them, as Balaam, and the rich man in hell; but to have an experience of them, poſſeſs them, and enjoy them. That I may rejoice in the gladneſs of thy nation; all the nations of the world are the Lord's; but there is a choſen generation, an holy nation, that is peculiarly his; a nation taken out of a nation, nay taken out of all nations that are upon earth: and theſe have a joy peculiar to them, which foreigners know nothing of, and ſtrangers intermeddle not with; a ſpiritual joy in the holy Ghoſt; a rejoicing in Chriſt Jeſus, in his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice, and in hope of the glory of God; and ſuch joy is deſirable, a joy unſpeakable, and full of glory. That I may glory with thine inheritance; the ſame with his choſen people and nation: for the Lord's people is his portion, and the lot of his inheritance; they are choſen for an inheritance, given to Chriſt as ſuch, with which he is well pleaſed, eſteeming them a goodly heritage; they are his purchaſed poſſeſſion, his jewels and peculiar treaſure. Theſe glory not in themſelves, in their ſtrength and wiſdom, their riches and righteouſneſs; but in Chriſt and in his righteouſneſs, and in what he is made unto them. And the pſalmiſt deſires to join with them, and glory in what they did, and in no other; and unite with them in giving glory to God and Chriſt, now and hereafter, for his ſalvation, and all good things from him.

℣. 6. We have ſinned with our fathers, &c.] Sinned in their firſt father Adam; derived a corrupt nature from their immediate anceſtors; ſinned after the ſimilitude of their tranſgreſſions; ſinned after their example, in like manner as they did; guilty of the ſame groſs enormities as they were: though ſufficiently warned by the words of the prophets, and by puniſhments inflicted, they continued their ſins, a conſtant ſeries and courſe of them, and filled up the meaſure of their iniquities; they roſe up in their ſtead an increaſe of ſinful men, to augment the fierce anger of God, Numb. xxxii. 14. And this the pſalmiſt, in the name of the people of Iſrael, confeſſes, as it was his and their duty and intereſt ſo to do, Lev. xxvi. 40. and as we find it was uſual with Old-Teſtament-ſaints, Jer. iii. 25. and xiv. 20. Dan. ix. 8. We have committed iniquity, we have done wickedly; this heap of words is uſed to denote not only the multitude of their ſins, but the aggravated circumſtances of them; that they had committed all manner of ſins, not ſins of ignorance, frailty and infirmity only; but preſumptuous ſins, ſins againſt light and knowledge, grace and mercy; ſins againſt both tables of the law, againſt God and their neighbour; and theſe attended with many aggravations: all which a ſenſible ſinner is ready to make a frank and ingenuous confeſſion of, and forſake; and ſuch an one finds mercy with a God pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin: this form of confeſſion is followed by Solomon and Daniel, 1 Kings viii. 47. Dan. ix. 5.

℣. 7. Our fathers underſtood not thy wonders in Egypt, &c.] Or, our fathers in Egypt [l]; whilſt they were there, they did not underſtand, or wiſely conſider and attend unto the miracles there wrought, the plagues inflicted on the Egyptians. Theſe were done in their ſight, they ſaw them with their eyes; yet had not hearts to perceive them, and underſtand the true uſe and deſign of them: not only that theſe were for the deſtruction of their enemies, and for their deliverance from them; but that they were proofs of the power of God, and of his being the one only and true God, in oppoſition to the idols of the Egyptians; and that he only ought to be adhered unto, worſhipped, and truſted in. Had they adverted to theſe things, they would not ſo eaſily have given in to a murmuring and repining ſpirit, to a diſtruſt of the power and providence of God, and to idolatry, as they did; ſee Deut. xxix. 2, 3, 4. ſomething of this kind may be obſerved in the diſciples of Chriſt, Mark vi. 52. They remembred not the multitude of thy mercies; the mercies of God beſtowed on his people are many, both temporal and ſpiritual; there is a multitude of them; the ſum of them is great, it cannot well be ſaid how great it is: but though they are ſo many as not to be reckoned up in order, yet a grateful remembrance of them ſhould be kept up; it is ſinful to forget them, and argues great ingratitude. Paſt mercies ſhould be remembred, both for the glory of God, and to encourage faith and hope in him, with reſpect to future ones, as well as to preſerve from ſinning againſt him. The ſtupidity and ingratitude of this people, here confeſſed, were the ſource of their rebellion againſt God, as follows: But provoked him at the ſea, even at the Red-ſea; or, ſea of Suph [m]; ſo called, either from a city of this name, which it waſhed, as Hillerus [n] thinks; ſee Numb. xxi. 14. Deut. i. 1. or from the ſedge and weeds in it, or reeds and ruſhes that grew upon the banks of it. When they were come hither, though juſt brought out of Egyptian bondage, and had ſeen the wonders the Lord had done; and though now in the utmoſt diſtreſs, the Egyptian army behind them, and the ſea before them; yet neither paſt mercies nor preſent danger could keep them from rebelling againſt the Lord. They provoked him by their language to Moſes; Becauſe there were no graves in Egypt, haſt thou taken us away to die in the wilderneſs? Exod. xiv. 11, 12. The Targum is, "but they rebelled againſt thy word."

℣. 8. Nevertheleſs, he ſaved them for his names ſake, &c.] Not for any worth or worthineſs in them; not for their righteouſneſs-ſake, for they were a rebellious and diſobedient people; but for his name's-ſake, becauſe his name was called upon them, and he was called the God of the Hebrews, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, their anceſtors; to whom he had promiſed the land of Canaan, and was their covenant-God; and becauſe of his covenant, and of his divine perfections, and the glory of them, which were engaged to make it good; therefore he ſaved them, ſee Ezek. xx. 9, 14. And ſo the ſpiritual Iſrael of God are ſaved, not for any ſuperior excellencies in them, for they are in no wiſe better than others; nor for their righteouſneſs-ſake; but to diſplay the wiſdom and faithfulneſs of God, his grace and mercy, his juſtice and holineſs, power, goodneſs and truth. And ſo here it follows; That he might make his mighty power to be known; not only among the Iſraelites, but among the nations of the world; who, had he not ſaved them, might have thought, and ſaid, That it was for want of power, and that he could not do it; ſee Deut. ix. 28.

℣. 9. He rebuked the Red-ſea alſo, and it was dried up, &c.] By ſending a ſtrong eaſt-wind, which drove the waters back, and made the ſea a dry land, Exod. xiv. 21. So he led them through the depths; that is, the deep waters of the ſea, which were caſt up as an heap, and ſtood as a wall on each ſide, through which they paſſed. As thro' the wilderneſs; or rather, as on a plain; for a paſſage through a wilderneſs where no roads are, and many obſtructions be, is not eaſy; and ſo it is manifeſtly to be underſtood in Iſa. lxiii. 13. where Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it, a plain and ſmooth ground, a champain country; and ſo the word is uſed for a plain, in oppoſition to mountains, in Jer. ix. 10. and then the ſenſe is, that God led them through the ſea, being dried up, as if they were led through a plain and open country, where was nothing to obſtruct their march; an emblem of baptiſm, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2. and of the paſſage of the people of God through this world; ſee the note on Pſal. lxxviii. 13.

℣. 10. And he ſaved them from the hand of him that hated them, &c.] As Pharaoh and his people did, becauſe of their numerous increaſe, which they endeavoured to prevent; and ſtill more becauſe of the plagues inflicted on them; and now becauſe they were got away from them, and therefore purſued them in great wrath and indignation, Exod. xv. 9. And redeemed them from the hand of the enemy; the ſame thing in different words; ſo the Lord Chriſt has ſaved and redeemed his people out of the hand of all their ſpiritual enemies; and thoſe that hate them and war againſt them, as ſin, Satan, and the world, Luke i. 71, 74.

℣. 11. And the waters covered their enemies, &c.] They purſuing the Iſraelites into the ſea, the waters returned and covered Pharaoh and all his hoſt, and drowned them, ſo that they ſunk as a ſtone, and as lead into the bottom of the ſea, Exod. xiv. 28. and xv. 4, 5, 10. There was not one of them left; to return back to Egypt and give an account of what became of the army, Exod. xiv. 28. an emblem this of the utter deſtruction of all our ſpiritual enemies by Chriſt; who has not only ſaved us from them, but has entirely deſtroyed them; he has made an end of ſin, even of all the ſins of his people; he has ſpoiled Satan and his principalities and powers; he has aboliſhed death, the laſt enemy, and made his ſaints more than conquerors over all. Likewiſe it may be a repreſentation of the deſtruction of the wicked at the laſt day, who will be all burnt up at the general conflagration, root and branch, not one will be left; ſee Mal. iv. 1.

℣. 12. Then believed they his words, &c.] And not till then; for this is obſerved, not to their commendation, but to ſhew the ſlowneſs of their hearts to believe; they believed on ſight, but not before, as Thomas did; whereas, bleſſed are they that have not ſeen and yet have believed, John xx. 29. When they ſaw the Egyptians dead on the ſea-ſhore, then they believed the Lord and his ſervant Moſes; what he ſaid by his ſervant Moſes, that he would ſave them from the Egyptians, whom they ſhould ſee no more, that is, alive, Exod. xiv. 13, 14, 31. The Targum is, "and they believed in the name of his "Word." They ſang his praiſe; Moſes with the men, and Miriam with the women; the ſong is recorded Exod. xv. and thus when the people of God have got the victory over the antichriſtian beaſt, they will ſtand on a ſea of glaſs and ſing the ſong of Moſes and of the Lamb, Rev. xv. 2, 3.

℣. 13. They ſoon forgat his works, &c.] The miracles he wrought in Egypt, the deliverance of them from thence with a mighty hand and outſtretched arm, and the leading them through the Red-ſea as on dry land, and deſtroying all their enemies; all theſe they ſoon forgat, for they had gone but three days journey into the wilderneſs after this, ere they began to murmur and ſhew diſtruſt of the power and providence of God, Exod. xv. 22, 24. it is in the Hebrew text, they made haſte, they forgat his works[o]; as ſoon as they were out of Egypt they were for entering into the land of Canaan at once, and were much diſpleaſed that they were not immediately led into it. They waited not for his counſel; they did not aſk counſel of God, though it belongs to him, and he is wonderful in it, and does all things after the counſel of his own will; nor would they take it when given by Moſes and Joſhua; they did not chooſe to wait his time and way of working; they were for limiting the holy one of Iſrael to their time and way; they were for being in the land of Canaan before his time; and were for eating fleſh, when it was his counſel to feed on manna he provided for them every day.

℣. 14. But luſted exceedingly in the wilderneſs, &c.] Or luſted a luſt[p], as in Numb. xi. 4. to which ſtory there related this refers; they were not content with the manna they had every day, though very nouriſhing and of a ſweet taſte; they luſted after the fiſh and fleſh of Egypt, and other things they eat there; ſo that this was not a natural luſt, or craving after food and drink, to ſatisfy nature, which would not have been criminal; but a voluptuous luſt to gratify their appetite: it was luſting after evil things, as the apoſtle interprets it, 1 Cor. x. 6. Luſt after ſinful things, or any unlawful object, or after any thing in an unlawful way, is ſin. And tempted God in the deſert; which is expreſsly forbidden by a law which our Lord referred to when he was tempted by Satan in the wilderneſs: a very ungrateful action this, ſince God tempts no man to ſin; a very daring impiety, a ſin of the firſt magnitude, and which lay in making experiments, in trying whether the preſence of God was among them or no; and putting God as it were on proving that he had power ſufficient to provide for them in the wilderneſs; ſee Exod. xvii. 7. Pſal. lxxviii. 18, 19, 20. It ſeems it was Jeſus Chriſt whom they tempted, from whence it appears that he is truly God, 1 Cor. x. 9. Both in this and the preceding clauſe an emphaſis lies on the place where all this was done, the wilderneſs or deſert, where God had done ſuch great things for them, and where they could not help themſelves, but were wholly and immediately dependent on him.

℣. 15. And he gave them their requeſt, &c.] Fleſh and feathered fowl in great abundance; ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 27—29. So God ſometimes gives to wicked men what they aſk for, as much as they can deſire, yea more than heart could wiſh. But ſent leanneſs into their ſoul; or body; the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, read, he ſent fulneſs into their ſouls; he gave them fleſh to the full, even to a nauſea; they fed too heartily on it, and were ſurfeited with it; which not being digeſted brought a repletion, and iſſued in a conſumption; or rather death, immediate death is meant, as Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech interpret it; for whilſt the fleſh was in their mouths, and they were chewing it between their teeth, the wrath of God came upon them and ſlew them, Numb. xi. 33. Pſal. lxxviii. 29, 30. It is true in a ſpiritual ſenſe, that while the bodies of wicked men are fed and pampered, their ſouls are ſtarved, and at laſt eternally loſt; as the rich man's in the goſpel, who fared ſumptuouſly every day: and worldly profeſſors are very lean ones; ſuch who mind earth and earthly things never thrive in ſpirituals; and either they ſoon drop their profeſſion, err from the faith, and turn apoſtates; or if they continue, the cares of the world, and the deceitfulneſs of riches, choke the word; ſo that it is unprofitable to them, not being mixed with faith by them; and hence leanneſs under the beſt of means: yea there is ſometimes a leanneſs in the ſouls of the people of God, when corruptions prevail, the graces of the Spirit are low in exerciſe; when there is a want of a ſpiritual appetite to the word; and when they fall into bad company, or do not improve converſation with one another in a ſpiritual way; or are too much taken up, enſnared, and entangled with the things of the world; ſee Iſaiah xxiv. 16.

℣. 16. They envied Moſes alſo in the camp, &c.] That he ſhould be generaliſſimo there, have the ſole command of the people, and be their leader and chief magiſtrate. Gifts qualifying men for civil government are from the Lord, and theſe commonly draw the envy of others upon them; who, though they pretend patriotiſm and the good of their country, yet ſeek themſelves; and would be in the places of thoſe they envy and ſpeak againſt; which was the caſe of Dathan and Abiram, the ſons of Reuben, who thought themſelves as fit, and had a better right, as being the ſons of Jacob's firſt-born, to command, than Moſes. And Aaron the ſaint of the Lord; who was not only a holy, good man, but was ſeparated from his brethren, and ſanctified, and put into the prieſt's office, and this drew upon him the envy of many of the Levites, at the head of whom was Korah a Levite; theſe envied that he ſhould be the high-prieſt, and that this office ſhould be reſtrained to his family; now the envy to each of theſe is aſcribed to the whole body of the people, though diſcovered only in ſome, becauſe it was not oppoſed by them; ſee Numb. xvi. 1, 2, 3.

℣. 17. The earth opened and ſwallowed up Dathan, &c.] One of the heads of the conſpirators againſt Moſes and Aaron; the earth clave aſunder under him and his company; opened itſelf, or its mouth, and devoured them at once. This was a new, marvellous, and unheard of thing, and which manifeſtly ſhewed the divine diſpleaſure and reſentment at their proceedings; and ſerved greatly to confirm the authority and office of Moſes and Aaron; ſee Numb. xvi. 30—33. And covered the company of Abiram; another of the heads of the confederacy. Korah is not mentioned, though the earth ſwallowed up him and all that belonged to him, their houſes and their goods; ſome think the reaſon is, becauſe it was well known that this was his caſe, when Dathan and Abiram are not ſo expreſsly mentioned in the hiſtory by Moſes; as alſo becauſe the ſons of Korah were now in eſteem as ſingers; nor is On the ſon of Peleth mentioned, becauſe, as Kimchi ſays, he repented and deſiſted from the conſpiracy.

℣. 18. And a fire was kindled in their company, &c.] This ſeems to be the company of Korah, or however a part of it, the two hundred and fifty men that had cenſers, and ſo were of the Levitical race, as Korah was; this fire came from the Lord out of heaven. The flame burned up the wicked; the two hundred and fifty men with cenſers, Num. xvi. 35. this was an emblem of that fire which ſhall conſume thoſe that hurt the witneſſes; or of that vengeance of eternal fire which wicked men will ſuffer for ever.

℣. 19. They made a calf in Horeb, &c.] A golden one, of the earings of gold which were in the ears of their wives, ſons, and daughters; theſe they took and melted down, and caſt into the figure of a calf, or an ox, as it is afterwards ſaid, in imitation of the Egyptians, who worſhipped the ox; a people that had uſed them ill, from whoſe bondage they were juſt delivered; on whom they had ſeen the judgments of God inflicted, and who were notoriouſly wicked and an idolatrous people, and yet theſe they imitated; and which was ſtill a greater aggravation, this they did in Horeb, the mountain in which God appeared in ſo terrible a manner, with thunder and lightenings, and in fire, out of which he ſpoke to them; and when he gave them a body of laws, among which were one that forbid the worſhipping of graven images; and yet they made and worſhipped one in this very place, from whence they received this law; as follows. And worſhipped the molten image; when faſhioned with a graving tool, and made a molten calf, they ſaid, Theſe be thy gods, O Iſrael, which brought thee out of Egypt; and they brought their burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and eat and drank before it, and danced about it; all which were acts of idolatrous worſhip, Exod. xxxii. 1—6. 1 Cor. x. 7. This was ſo heinous a ſin, that the Jews ſay it is not expiated to this day, and that there is no puniſhment comes upon them but there is an ounce of the golden calf in it [s].

℣. 20. Thus they changed their glory, &c.] God, who is glorious in all the perfections of his nature, and is glory itſelf, and was the glory of theſe people; it was their greateſt honour that they had knowledge of him, nearneſs to him, the true worſhip of him among them, and that they were worſhippers of him; and who, though he is unchangeable in himſelf, may be ſaid to be changed when another is ſubſtituted and worſhipped in his room, or worſhipped beſides him; which was what the heathen did, and in which the Iſraelites exceeded them, Rom. i. 23, 25. Jer. ii. 11. the Targum is, "they changed the glory of their Lord." Into the ſimilitude of an ox that eateth graſs; which was monſtrous ſtupidity, to leave the worſhip of the true God, El-ſhaddai, God all-ſufficient, all-powerful, that ſtands in need of nothing, but upholds and ſupports all creatures in being, and provides them with neceſſaries; and worſhip an ox, yea the figure of one that eats graſs, that lives on hay, and is ſupported by that which is ſo weak and withering; ing; the Targum adds, "and makes dung;" or defiles itſelf with it, as the ox does while it is eating graſs; Jarchi obſerves, there is nothing more abominable and filthy than an ox when it is eating graſs, which then makes much dung and defiles itſelf; this the Targumiſt adds, to make the worſhip of ſuch a creature the more contemptible.

℣. 21. They forgat God their ſaviour, &c.] Not only forgat the works of God, ℣. 13. but forgat God that did thoſe mighty works; forgat that there was a God; or however forgat him that is the only true and living God, when they ſaid of the molten image, theſe are thy gods, O Iſrael; and what aggravated their crime was, they forgot that God that had ſaved them in ſo wonderful a manner out of the hand of their enemies, for his own name-ſake; and had led them ſafely through the Red-ſea as on dry land, and deſtroyed thoſe that hated them. Which had done great things in Egypt; meaning the ten plagues on the Egyptians, and the deliverance of the Iſraelites from them.

℣. 22. Wondrous works in the land of Ham, &c.] The ſame with Egypt; Mizraim, from whence Egypt had its name, being the ſon of Ham; ſee the note on Pſal. lxxviii. 51. and cv. 23. and theſe wondrous things are the ſame plagues as before, ſo called becauſe they exceeded the power of nature; the magicians themſelves confeſſed the finger of God in one of them; and they were all of them ſuch as might be truly ſaid to be miracles. And terrible things by the Red-ſea; or in it, as the Syriac and other verſions; as the utter deſtruction of Pharoah and his army, not one being left, which was doing terrible things in righteouſneſs; and by which it appeared that with God is terrible majeſty; and who ſhews himſelf to be terrible in his works, and even to the kings and princes of the earth; but all theſe things were ſoon forgot, which it might have been thought, being ſo amazing and terrible, would have made a laſting impreſſion on them.

℣. 23. Therefore he ſaid that he would deſtroy them, &c.] He ſaid in his word, the Targum adds; he thought within himſelf he would; he ſeemed determined in his own mind to deſtroy them, being provoked at their wretched forgetfulneſs of him, and their idolatry; he ſaid to Moſes, Let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot againſt them, and that I may conſume them, Exod. xxxii. 10. The decree indeed was not gone forth, but there was ſuch an appearance of diſpleaſure as if ruin was detertermined; and a great number was deſtroyed, and the whole body was threatned. Had not Moſes his choſen ſtood before him in the breach; made between God and the Iſraelites by their ſin; the alluſion is either to an hedge broken down, at which a ſpoiler enters, unleſs made up, Ezek. xxii. 30. or to a breach made in the wall of a beſieged city, at which the beſieger enters, unleſs ſtopped by the beſieged, Iſa. xxx. 13. or to the bank or dam of a river broken down, which lets in a flood of waters, 2 Sam. v. 20. So Moſes made up the hedge, and ſtood in the gap; he preſented himſelf to God, ruſhing in like a man of war, and pouring out his wrath like an inundation of waters: this is to be underſtood of his fervent and importunate prayer to God on the behalf of this people, and which ſucceeded. To turn away his wrath, leſt he ſhould deſtroy them; Exod. xxxii. 11, 12, 13, 14, 30, 31, 32. ſo the Targum, "unleſs Moſes his choſen had "roſe up and ſtrengthened, or prevailed in his "prayer before him to turn away his wrath from "deſtroying." This ſhews the power and efficacy of prayer, and of what avail it is with God, eſpecially the prayer of his elect: it was Moſes, his choſen, that prayed, a choice ſervant of his; and whom he had choſen to everlaſting life, as well as to be the deliverer, guide and governor of Iſrael; ſee Luke xviii. 7. Herein he was an eminent type of Chriſt, as in other things; as Moſes was a mediator between God and the people of Iſrael, ſo is Chriſt between God and his people. Sin is a tranſgreſſion of God's law, a breaking of his ſtatutes, which he has ſet as an hedge, fence or wall, about man; and this has made a breach between God and man; which lets in the wrath of God as a flood, and juſtice as an armed man: and terrible it is to conſider there is no ſtanding before him, and making up the breach; but Chriſt has interpoſed as a ſurety, made ſatisfaction to law and juſtice, and procured peace and reconciliation; and ſo by his atonement and interceſſion, has made up the breach, appeaſed the wrath of God, and turned it away, and prevented the ruin and deſtruction of his people.

℣. 24. Yea, they deſpiſed the pleaſant land, &c.] Or land of deſire[r]; the land of Canaan; a very delightful and deſirable country, the glory of all lands, a land that abounded with every thing for neceſſity and pleaſure. The ſpies themſelves that brought an ill report of it, owned it was a land flowing with milk and honey; but that there were ſuch difficulties to poſſeſs it, which they thought inſuperable: and hence the people deſpiſed it, inaſmuch as when they were bid to go and poſſeſs it, they refuſed; and did not chooſe to be at any difficulty in ſubduing the inhabitants of it, or run any riſk or hazard of their lives in taking it, though the Lord had promiſed to give it them, and ſettle them in it; but they ſeemed rather inclined to make themſelves a captain, and return to Egypt, when they were juſt on the borders of Canaan; which was interpreted a deſpiſing the land, Numb. xiv. 1, 2, 3, 4, 31. This was a type of heaven, the good land afar off; the better country, the land of promiſe and reſt; in which is fulneſs of proviſions, and where there will be no hunger and thirſt; where flows the river of the water of life, and ſtands the tree of life, bearing all manner of fruits; where there is fulneſs of joy, and pleaſures for evermore: the moſt delightful company of Father, Son and Spirit, angels and glorified ſaints; and nothing to diſturb their peace and pleaſure, neither from within nor from without. And yet this pleaſant land may be ſaid to be deſpiſed by ſuch, who do not care to go through any difficulty to it; to perform the duties of religion; to bear reproach for Chriſt's ſake; to go through tribulation; to walk in the narrow and afflicted way, which leads unto it: and by all ſuch who do not care to part with their ſinful luſts and pleaſure; but prefer them, and the things of this world, to the heavenly ſtate. They believed not his word; his word of promiſe, that he would be with them, and lead them into the pleaſant land, and put them into the poſſeſſion of it: which diſbelief of his word was highly provoking to him; and therefore he ſwore they ſhould not enter into his reſt; and becauſe of their unbelief, they did not, Numb. xiv. 11. Heb. iii. 18, 19. This is a very heinous ſin, to diſbelieve God that is true, and cannot lie; it is to make him a liar; nothing can more diſhonour him; it is a departure from him, very provoking to him, and of very dangerous conſequence; unbelievers ſhall have their part and portion in the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone, Rev. xxi. 8.

[r] בארץ חמדה in terra deſiderii, Montanus, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 25. But murmured in their tents, &c.] Throughout their tents; the murmuring was general; they murmured often; but what is here referred to, ſeems to be their murmuring upon the report of the ſpies, Numb. xiv. 2, 27, 29. To murmur againſt God and his providence, is a very great evil; and which generally proceeds on one or other of theſe two things; either becauſe men have not ſo much of the good things of this world, as others have; or becauſe they endure more afflictions, and ſo are ready to charge the ways of God with inequality; not conſidering that God is a ſovereign, and may do with his own what he pleaſes; and that they are deſerving of nothing at his hands; and that their puniſhment or chaſtiſement is leſs than their ſins deſerve. And hearkned not unto the voice of the Lord; to go up and poſſeſs the land; they diſbelieved his word, and were diſobedient to his command. The uſe the apoſtle makes of this, ſee Heb. iii. 7, 8. and of their other provocations, of their luſt, idolatry, fornication, tempting of God, and murmuring againſt him, ſee 1 Cor. x. 6—11.

℣. 26. Therefore he lifted up his hand againſt them, &c.] A geſture uſed in ſwearing, Gen. xiv. 22, 23. Rev. x. 5, 6. So the Targum underſtands it here, "and he lift up his hand with an oath, becauſe of them:" and ſo it is interpreted by Aben Ezra, Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech; and agrees with Numb. xiv. 28, 29, 30. The ſame geſture was uſed by the heathens in ſwearing, as by Latinus[s]. Or he lifted up his hand, in a way of judgment, to ſtrike the blow; and which, when it lights on man with the indignation of his anger, falls heavy; ſee Iſa. xxvi. 11. and xxx. 30. To overthrow them in the wilderneſs; as he did all the murmuring generation that came out of Egypt, all but Caleb and Joſhua; all from twenty years and upwards, their carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs; there they were waſted, conſumed and died, Numb. xiv. 32, 33, 35. 1 Cor. x. 5. Heb. iii. 17.

℣. 27. To overthrow their ſeed alſo among the nations, &c.] Their poſterity was not overthrown in the wilderneſs; they were ſpared to poſſeſs the land their fathers deſpiſed. This reſpects after-times, as does what follows: And to ſcatter them in the lands; which Kimchi explains by the diſcomfiture of them by the Amalekites and Canaanites, when they preſumed, contrary to the will of God, to go up to the top of the hill; and by Arad's taking ſome of them priſoners afterwards, Numb. xiv. 45. and xxi. 1. But this was not done, nor to be done in the wilderneſs: but the meaning is, that God lift up his hand in the wilderneſs, and ſware there, as Ezekiel ſays, chap. xx. 23. that he would ſcatter them, and diſperſe them among the heathen; that is, at one time or another; which he did in part at the Babyloniſh captivity, and completely by the Romans: which is now their caſe, and is a ſtanding proof of this prophecy, and an accompliſhment of the oath of God.

℣. 28. They joined themſelves alſo unto Baal Peor, &c.] Or to the idol Peor, as the Targum. Baal, which ſignifies lord or maſter, was a common name for an idol in many countries; wherefore to diſtinguiſh one from another, an additional name was uſed. Baal-Zephon was the god of the Egyptians; Baal-Zebub the god of the Ekronites; and here Baal-Peor the god of the Moabites: for the fact referred to, was committed when the children of Iſrael were on the borders of Moab, and when Balak ſent for Balaam to curſe them; who at laſt adviſed him to draw them to commit fornication with the daughters of Moab; who might then prevail upon them to commit idolatry, which would bring the wrath of God upon them. And in this he ſucceeded. The above idol had its name of Peor, either from the obſcene actions done in the worſhip of it, too filthy to be related, and which, it is thought, are referred to in Hoſ. ix. 10. It ſeems to be the Priapus of the heathens. Or, as others, from a mountain of this name, where was the houſe or temple in which it was worſhipped: hence we read of mount Peor, and of Beth-Peor, Numb. xxiii. 28. Deut. iii. 29. So Suidas[t] ſays, Baal is Saturn, and Peor the place where he was worſhipped. Or elſe, from ſome great man of this name, Lord Peor; who being of great fame and note among the Moabites, for ſome extraordinary things done by him, was deified and worſhipped after his death; as was common among the heathens. To this idol the Iſraelites joined or yoked themſelves, as the word[u] ſignifies: they withdrew themſelves from the yoke of the true God, whoſe yoke is eaſy, and put their necks under the yoke of an idol; which was to be unequally yoked: or they were tempted unto it; they committed ſpiritual whoredom with it, which is idolatry; they left their firſt and lawful huſband, to whom they were married, and joined themſelves to an idol, and cleaved to it. The phraſe is expreſſive of their fellowſhip with it, and with the idolatrous worſhippers of it; they devoted and gave up themſelves to the worſhip of it; juſt as the true worſhippers of God are ſaid to join themſelves to him, Jer. l. 6. they were, as the Septuagint renders it, initiated into the rites and myſteries of this idol. And ate the ſacrifices of the dead; which were offered up to this lifeleſs ſtatue. So idols are called the dead, in oppoſition to and diſtinction from the living God, Iſa. viii. 20. Or they partook of the feaſts which were kept in honour of their dead, deified hero, Lord Peor; ſee the hiſtory in Num. xxv. 1, 2. Theſe were ſacrifices offered to the Stygian Jupiter, or Pluto, called by the Phœnicians, Mot[w], the ſame with Chemoſh, the god of the Moabites; and who alſo was Baal-Peor, according to Jerom[x].

℣. 29. Thus they provoked him to anger with their inventions, &c.] Sin is an invention of man's: when our firſt parents ſinned, they found out many inventions; and their poſterity ever ſince have been inventers of evil things; and man's invention is very quick at that work. All falſe doctrine and falſe worſhip are of men's finding out; all idolatrous practices are their inventions, and which are here intended; ſee ℣. 39. And theſe are very provoking to God, who is jealous of his glory, and which is taken from him hereby; and even when he forgives ſuch ſins of men, he takes vengeance on their inventions, as in this caſe, Pſal. xcix. 8. For it follows: And the plague brake in upon them; like an inundation of water, and carried off four and twenty thouſand perſons, Numb. xxv. 9.

℣. 30. Then ſtood up Phinehas, and executed judgment, &c.] When none elſe would, he roſe up in great zeal for the Lord of hoſts; and took on him the work of a civil magiſtrate, and ſlew two perſons ſons of noble birth in the very act of fornication. The Targum is, "he prayed;" and ſo the Syriac verſion, "he interceded with the Lord, that the "plague might ſtop." This he might do, as well as the other, though it is not elſewhere recorded, and in which he ſucceeded: but in the Talmud[y], it is obſerved that it is not ſaid יתפלל (that is, he prayed) but יפלל from whence may be learned, if it is proper to ſay ſo, that he executed judgments with his Maker. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, be appeaſed; made atonement or propitiation; and this is ſaid of him, Numb. xxv. 13. And ſo the plague was ſtayed; it was reſtrained from proceeding further; no more execution was done by it. In this he was a type of Chriſt, who, by doing righteouſneſs, by the atoning ſacrifice of himſelf, and by his interceſſion, has appeaſed the wrath of God, and ſatisfied divine juſtice; ſo that there is no condemnation to them that are intereſted in him; no evil of puniſhment ſhall befal them, nor plague come nigh them.

℣. 31. And that was counted unto him for righteouſneſs, &c.] Not for his juſtifying righteouſneſs before God; for all the works of righteouſneſs done by the beſt of men, cannot juſtify them before him, much leſs a ſingle action: but his executing judgment in the manner he did, or ſlaying the above two perſons, was eſteemed a righteous action by the Lord himſelf; who upon it cauſed the plague to ceaſe, and likewiſe gave to Phinehas the covenant of an everlaſting prieſthood, and to his poſterity; whereby the action had eternal honour put upon it, and was ſufficiently ſecured from the calumny of men; who might condemn it as a raſh action done by a private perſon, aſſuming the office of a public magiſtrate; and as being a cruel one, not giving the criminals time for repentance. But all this is wiped off by the teſtimony of God himſelf, approving of it; and ſo it continues to be eſteemed, as it is ſaid it ſhould, Unto all generations for evermore: whenever it is ſpoken of, it is ſpoken of with commendation, as a righteous action, as expreſſive of true zeal for the Lord of hoſts. Moreover, the covenant made with him upon it, which confirmed the juſtneſs of it, that taking place in Zadok, a prieſt of his line, continued in it till the Meſſiah came, who is a Prieſt for ever; ſee Ezek. xliv. 15. Jer. xxxiii. 17—22.

℣. 32. They angred him alſo at the waters of ſtrife, &c.] Or, at the waters of Meribah[z]; that is, Meribah Kadeſh, as it is called in Deut. xxxii. 51. to diſtinguiſh it from Meribah Rephidim, where alſo were waters of ſtrife or contradiction; at which the people murmured and ſtrove with the Lord, and greatly diſpleaſed him, Exod. xvii. 7. So that it went ill with Moſes for their ſakes; he was not ſuffered to go with them into the good land; though he moſt earneſtly deſired it, it could not be granted: but when he was juſt upon the borders of it, he is bid to go up to the mount, and take a view of it, and die; and all becauſe of what was done at this place; ſee Numb. xx. 12. Deut. iii. 26. and xxxii. 50, 51.

℣. 33. Becauſe they provoked his ſpirit, &c.] Tho' he was a very meek man, meeker than any upon the face of the earth, Numb. xii. 2. yet being greatly provoked, let fall ſome paſſionate and undue expreſſions: and this was not only his ſin, but the fault of thoſe alſo that provoked him, and with this view it is mentioned. The Targum is, "for "they rebelled againſt his holy Spirit;" the holy Spirit of God, as in Iſa. lxiii. 10. Jarchi interprets it of Moſes and Aaron provoking the Spirit of God; which ſenſe is mentioned by Aben Ezra and Kimchi; though they ſeem to prefer the former, and which ſeems beſt. Some interpret it of the Iſraelites, that they cauſed Moſes and Aaron to provoke his Spirit. So that he ſpake unadviſedly with his lips; that is, Moſes ſpake, ſaying, Hear now, ye rebels, muſt we, or can we fetch you water out of this rock? Which words were ſpoken in an angry, paſſionate way, calling them rebels, and expreſſing diffidence about getting water out of the rock; which was the thing that was ſo diſpleaſing to God, becauſe they did not believe him to ſanctify him in the eyes of the children of Iſrael, Numb. xxv. 10, 12. Jarchi, as before, underſtands this of God, of his ſpeaking, pronouncing and declaring, that Moſes and Aaron ſhould not bring the congregation into the land of Canaan, Numb. xxv. 13. and ſo the word unadviſedly may be left out, and only read, he ſpake with his lips; but the other ſenſe is to be preferred.

℣. 34. They did not deſtroy the nations, &c.] Here begins an account of their ſins and provocations, after they were ſettled in the land of Canaan. They did not deſtroy the inhabitants of the land, of the ſeven nations; whoſe land was given to them as an inheritance, and of which the Canaanites were diſpoſſeſſed for their ſins, and to be deſtroyed. Concerning whom the Lord commanded them; that they ſhould deſtroy them; the command is in Deut. vii. 1, 2. God's commands are to be obeyed; they are neither to be added to, nor diminiſhed from: his commands are tranſgreſſed and violated by ſins of omiſſion or commiſſion; the Iſraelites might plead mercy, but this was no excuſe to an expreſs command: the ſame ſin Saul was afterwards guilty of, with reſpect to one of theſe nations, 1 Sam. xv. 2, 8, 9. Thoſe ſpiritual Canaanites, the ſinful deeds of the body, are to be mortified, and not indulged and ſpared, Col. iii. 5. Rom. viii. 13.

℣. 35. But were mingled among the heathen, &c.] Not only dwelt among them, but made covenants and contracts, carried on trade and commerce, and intermarried with them, contrary to the expreſs law of God, Deut. vii. 2, 3, 4. Nor ſhould ſaints have communion with wicked men, eſpecially in things ſinful and ſuperſtitious, 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15, 16. Eph. v. 11. And learned their works; not their civil works and actions, their trades and buſineſs, but their idolatrous works; of which a detail is given in the following verſes: evil communications corrupt good manners, 1 Cor. xv. 33.

℣. 36. And they ſerved their idols, &c.] Of gold and ſilver, wood and ſtone; the works of men's hands, ſenſeleſs creatures; which are nothing in the world, and bring grief and ſorrow to the worſhippers of them, from whence they have their name here given them; ſee Pſal. xvi. 4. They ſerved their idols, the idols of the Canaanites, who were diſpoſſeſſed of their land for their idolatries and other ſins; and theſe Iſraelites were put in their place. They ſerved thoſe which they were ordered to deſtroy; they who knew the true God, whoſe ſervants they were, or ought to have been, and profeſſed to be, and were ſo called; and yet ſerved the idols of the nations driven out before them. Which were a ſnare unto them; either the Canaanites were, who were left in the land, with whom they mixed, and whoſe works they learned; theſe enſnared them, and drew them into idolatry, Joſh. xxiii. 13. or the idols they worſhipped, which were the cauſe of many evils and calamities, Judg. ii. 3. or the act of ſerving and worſhipping them, Exod. xxiii. 33. Deut. vii. 16. They were by theſe means like a bird or beaſt in a ſnare, and brought into trouble and diſtreſs, out of which they could not extricate themſelves.

℣. 37. Yea, they ſacrificed their ſons and their daughters unto devils.] Who have their name here given them from a word that ſignifies to waſte and deſtroy, they being the deſtroyers of mankind. So the Targum renders it by מזיקיא which ſignifies ſpirits noxious and hurtful; but R. Elias Levita, in his Tiſhbi, p. 233, ſays, it is a miſtake to derive it from the root, which ſignifies to waſte and deſtroy; for then he ſays the daleth ſhould have a dageſh, but does not tell us from whence it is derived. De Dieu on Matt. ix. 32. derives it from the Arabic word שאר to rule, for theſe demons were heroes, princes who ruled over others, and ſo were reckoned among the gods. As Satan, the head of them, was a murderer from the beginning, the cauſe of the ruin of our firſt parents, and of all their poſterity; and may be truly called as the king of the locuſts is, Apollyon or Abaddon, John viii. 44. Rev. ix. 11. theſe the Iſraelites ſacrificed unto, as the Gentiles did, Lev. xvii. 7. Deut. xxxii. 17. 1 Cor. x. 20. and not lambs and rams, ſheep, goats and bullocks, but their ſons and daughters; which they not only cauſed to paſs through the fire to Moloch, which was a luſtration of them by the flame, or cauſing them to paſs between two fires; but they ſacrificed them to be devoured, and actually burned them; ſee Jer. vii. 31. Ezek. xvi. 20, 21. From whence we may ſee of what a hardening nature ſin is, and how by degrees perſons may be brought to commit things the moſt ſhocking to nature, and which they ſome time before ſhuddered at. Firſt theſe Iſraelites mix themſelves with the heathens they ſpared, whom they ſhould have deſtroyed; then they learn by being among them to do as they did, to walk in the vanity of their minds like them; and then they are enticed to ſerve their idols, and at laſt to ſacrifice their ſons and daughters to devils; which was no other than murder, and that of the moſt heinous nature: as follows.

℣. 38. And ſhed innocent blood, &c.] The blood of innocent perſons; not that any of Adam's poſterity, deſcending from him by ordinary generation, are ſtrictly and properly innocent, or free from ſin; ſelf-righteous perſons have thought themſelves touching the righteouſneſs of the law blameleſs; and ſome perfectioniſts have pretended to be free from ſin, but are not ſuch; they who are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and waſhed in his blood are, ſo conſidered, all fair and without ſpot; are without fault before the throne, and unreproveable in the ſight of God: but conſidered in themſelves, are not without ſin; only the man Chriſt Jeſus is perfectly holy and free from ſin, being born of a virgin, under the overſhadowing of the holy Ghoſt; otherwiſe all deſcending from Adam ſinned in him, are conceived in ſin, and polluted with it; nor can a clean thing be brought out of an unclean, no not one: though infants may be ſaid to be innocent in compariſon of adult perſons, guilty of actual tranſgreſſions, who have lived in ſin, and committed many groſs iniquities; as alſo they may be ſo called as being undeſerving of ſuch barbarous and inhuman uſage here mentioned. Even the blood of their ſons and of their daughters, whom they ſacrificed unto the idols of Canaan; this was a farther aggravation of their wickedneſs, that it was not only innocent blood, but the blood of their own children they ſhed; their own fleſh and blood, pieces of themſelves; and their near alliance to them gave them no power over their lives; but on the contrary the nearer they were in blood to them, the greater and more horrid was their ſin; and what ſtill added to it was, that they were the idols of Canaan, of that people whom the Lord abhorred, and had drove out before them, and had given their land; to them they ſacrificed them; ſo that here was a complication of wickedneſs in this affair. And the land was polluted with blood; with innocent blood, the blood of their own children; with the ſins of murder, as the Targum; which only can be cleanſed with the blood of the murderers, Numb. xxxv. 33. even the land which the Lord ſeparated from all others for his people; in which his tabernacle was placed, and his worſhip ſet up, and therefore called the holy land, Zech. ii. 12.

℣. 39. Thus were they defiled with their own works, &c.] Not the land only, but they themſelves alſo; or with their works [a], with the works of the heathen they learned, ℣. 35. or rather with their own works, the works of the fleſh, eſpecially their ſhocking idolatries: ſin is of a defiling nature; it has defiled all men, it defiles all of men, all the faculties of their ſouls, and all the members of their bodies; nor can any thing truly and thoroughly cleanſe from it but the blood of Chriſt: even mens works of righteouſneſs are as filthy rags and defiling, and much more their evil works. And went a whoring with their own inventions; after other gods; idolatry is often in ſcripture ſignified by whoredom; the idolatry of Iſrael and Judah is repreſented by two harlots and their lewd practices, in Ezek. xxiii. and hence the apoſtate church of Rome is compared to a whore, becauſe of her idolatry, Rev. xvii. 1, 2, 5.

℣. 40. Therefore was the wrath of the Lord kindled againſt his people, &c.] Sin is the cauſe of wrath, which is compared to fire kindled by the breath of the almighty, and is intolerable; this ſhews that the offence muſt be very great, as to incenſe the Lord againſt a people he had choſen above all others to be his peculiar people; as well as it was an aggravation of their ſin, ſo highly to provoke the Lord whom they had vouched to be their God. There may be appearances of wrath for ſin againſt thoſe who are the Lord's people in the higheſt and beſt ſenſe. Inſomuch that he abhorred his own inheritance; the people of Iſrael, whom he had choſen for his inheritance, and were his portion, and the lot of his inheritance. This muſt be underſtood of the body of the people, not of every individual; not of the remnant according to the election of grace among them, of which there were ſome in all ages; for this would be contrary to his love, and the unchangeableneſs of it; and however not of the perſons of his people, but of their ſins; and of the appearances of his providence towards them, which look like wrath, indignation, and abhorrence; for God will not caſt off his people, nor forſake his inheritance, Pſalm xciv. 14. the following verſes explain this wrath and abhorrence. The Targum in the king's Bible is, "the Word of the Lord abhorred, &c." ſee Zech. xi. 8.

℣. 41. And he gave them into the hand of the heathen, &c.] In the times of the Judges; as into the hands of the Meſopotamians, Moabites, Canaanites, ites, Midianites and Philiſtines, to whom they became tributaries; ſee the book of Judges. And they that hated them ruled over them; as it was threatned and foretold they ſhould, in caſe they did not obſerve the law of God, Lev. xxvi. 17.

[a] במעשיהם operibus earum, Muis; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 42. Their enemies alſo oppreſſed them, &c.] By taxes, and taking the increaſe of their fields and ſuſtenance, which often obliged them to cry for a deliverer, who upon this was ſent to them; ſee Judg. ii. 9, 15. and vi. 1—7. And they were brought into ſubjection under their hand; or were humbled under their hand, as the Targum; they were not only made to ſubmit to their enemies, but they were humbled before the Lord; brought to a ſenſe of their ſins and acknowledgment of them, when the Lord appeared for their deliverance, as follows.

℣. 43. Many times did he deliver them, &c.] By means of the judges, Othniel, Ehud, Barak, Gideon, Jephtha, Samſon, and others. But they provoked him with their counſel; in aſking a king, whom he gave in his anger, and took away in his wrath, Hoſ. xiii. 11. and with their idolatries which they deviſed, ſetting up the calves at Dan and Bethel; and by taking counſel of others, and not of the Lord; ſeeking for help from the Aſſyrians and Egyptians, and truſting in them, Iſa. xxx. 1, 2. all which was very provoking, and ſhewed great ingratitude, after ſo many deliverances: or, though they provoked him with their counſel[b]; with their inventions, as in ℣. 29. yet ſuch were his grace and goodneſs, that he frequently wrought ſalvation for them. And were brought low for their iniquity; or when they were weakned, or impoveriſhed by their iniquity[c], ſo that they could not help themſelves; as they were particularly by the Midianites, Judg. vi. 1—6. Unleſs this ſhould rather refer to ſome after-times, as the times of Ahaz when Judah was brought low for their tranſgreſſions, 2 Chron. xxviii. 19. as alſo the time of the Babyloniſh captivity. Sin is of a weakning and impoveriſhing nature; it has weakned all mankind, and took from them their moral ſtrength to do good; and has brought them to poverty and want; to be beggars on the dunghil; to a pit wherein is no water; and left them in a hopeleſs and helpleſs condition: yea it brings the people of God oftentimes after converſion into a low eſtate, when God hides his face becauſe of it; temptations are ſtrong, grace is weak, and they become lukewarm and indifferent to ſpiritual things.

℣. 44. Neverthleſs he regarded their affliction, &c.] Or looked on them in diſtreſs[d]; he ſaw their affliction, and had compaſſion on them; he was ſo far from abhorring and deſpiſing the affliction of the afflicted, that he pitied them and ſympathized with them; in all their afflictions he was afflicted; he looked upon them with an eye of pity and concern, and helped them out of their troubles. When he heard their cry; or their prayer, as the Targum, and ſo other verſions; crying is prayer; and it denotes vocal and vehement prayer, ſuch as is put up to God in diſtreſs; and which he hears and anſwers; his ears are open to the cries of his people.

℣. 45. And he remembered for them his covenant, &c.] At Sinai, according to Aben Ezra; rather that made with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; ſee Pſal. cv. 8, 9, 10. not their covenant who promiſed to hear and do all that the Lord commanded, and did it not; but his covenant, his promiſe of giving them the good land, and ſettling them in it: the Lord is ever mindful of the covenant of his grace for his people, for their good; he remembers the promiſes he has made, where they are, in Chriſt; and ſo as to fulfil and apply them; he remembers the bleſſings of it, the ſure mercies of David, and gives them; he remembers for whom it is made, and never forgets them; he remembers with whom it is made, with his Son, the ſurety, meſſenger, and mediator of it; he remembers that he is their covenant-God and Father, and will be ſo for evermore; he remembers his loving-kindneſs which has been ever of old, which is the ſource and foundation of it. And repented according to the multitude of his mercies; his mercies temporal and ſpiritual are many; and there is an abundance of mercy diſplayed eſpecially in ſpiritual ones, in redemption, in regeneration, and in the forgiveneſs of ſin. Or according to the abundance of his grace, or gracious benefits[e]; there is an abundance of grace in his heart, in his Son, in his covenant, in ſalvation by Chriſt, and in every part of it; and which appears at converſion, as ſuperabundant: and by this multitude of mercy, and abundance of grace he is moved to repent. This is ſometimes denied of him; and indeed he never repents ſo as to change his mind, to alter his purpoſes, to revoke his promiſes or his gifts, theſe are all without repentance; but he ſometimes changes his ways and his works, his conduct in providence, and the courſe of it; and then he may be ſaid to repent of the evil he threatned to do, or was doing, when he puts a ſtop to it; and inſtead of that beſtows favours and bleſſings.

℣. 46. He made them alſo to be pitied of all thoſe that carried them captives.] He not only pitied them himſelf, but cauſed them to be pitied by others, even by their enemies; he has the hearts of all men in his hands, and can turn them as he pleaſes; as he ſometimes turned their hearts to hate his people, Pſal. cv. 25. ſo he turned them to pity them, as he promiſed he would when they turned to him, 2 Chron. xxx. 9. ſo he did, by ſtirring up Cyrus to proclaim liberty to them, and his ſucceſſors to encourage and aſſiſt in rebuilding their city and temple.

℣. 47. Save us, O Lord our God, &c.] Here the pſalmiſt perſonates the people in captivity, and repreſents them as praying for deliverance; as well knowing that none but God could ſave them: and a prayer of this nature with reſpect to ſpiritual ſalvation, ſuppoſes danger, and a ſenſe of it; that they are not able to ſave themſelves, nor any creature able to ſave them; only the Lord, who is both willing and able; and of this kind is the prayer of faith. And gather us from among the heathen; in Babylon, and other countries; ſee the note on the title. To give thanks unto thy holy name; bring us out of captivity to our own land, to Jeruſalem, to the temple there, to give thanks to thy holy name for the merciful deliverance of us; ſee Pſal. cxxii. 4. And to triumph in thy praiſe; in thy ſalvation, in thy wondrous works, worthy of praiſe; or whilſt praiſing thee: the word ſignifies to glory therein; and ſuch who are ſenſible of the mercies they receive from the Lord, will make their boaſt of him and them, and glory; ſee Pſal. xxxiv. 1, 2, 3.

℣. 48. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] God is to be bleſſed as the Father of mercies; as the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and as the covenant-God and Father of his people in him, of the true Iſrael of God: which is done by celebrating his bleſſedneſs in himſelf; by aſcribing to him all bleſſedneſs enjoyed, as the author of it; and by giving him honour, glory, and bleſſing for it. From everlaſting to everlaſting; here and hereafter, in time and to all eternity; from this world to that which is to come, as the Targum; and which Arama obſerves are the days of the Meſſiah. And let all the people ſay, Amen; ſo be it; to giving thanks to God, to praiſing his name, and aſcribing bleſſing to him. Praiſe ye the Lord; or hallelujah; ſo theſe two words Amen, Hallelujah, are joined together in Rev. xix. 4. The pſalm ends as it began; for though the greateſt part of it is taken up in relating the ſins of the people of Iſrael; yet as the Lord was merciful to them and forgave them, and notwithſtanding beſtowed great mercies on them, there was reaſon for praiſe and thankſgiving. Here ends the fourth part of the book of Pſalms, the fifth part begins with the following pſalm.

PSALM CVII.

THIS pſalm, from its ſtile, and from its connection with the preceding pſalms, ſeems to have been written by David. The two foregoing pſalms reſpect the children of Iſrael; this is generally thought to concern all mankind, and its view to aſſert a general providence which attends all in whatſoever condition and circumſtance; and to encourage men in their diſtreſſes to cry unto the Lord. According to Kimchi, Aben Ezra, and others, four ſorts of perſons are mentioned, travellers through a wilderneſs, priſoners, ſick perſons, and ſuch who uſe the ſeas; to which ſome add a fifth, huſbandmen; theſe are inſtanced in, not to the excluſion of others, but from them it may be concluded that whatſoever ſtate or condition perſons may be in, they are known and taken notice of by the Lord, and are relieved by him when they call upon him. Some reſtrain the whole to the Iſraelites, as the Targum, R. Obadiah, Arama, and others, where they make any application; and others apply the pſalm to New Teſtament-times; and indeed though the literal ſenſe ſhould be attended unto and preſerved, yet it ſeems to be applicable to ſpiritual perſons and things. The title of it in the Syriac verſion is pretty remarkable, "it is ſaid concerning Joab and Abiah the ſons of Samuel, who recited the commandments of the Lord. God gathered the Jews out of captivity, and brought them out from Babylon. Alſo the only begotten Son of God, Jeſus Chriſt, gathered the Gentiles from the four corners of the world, by preaching to baptiſm."

℣. 1. O give thanks unto the Lord, &c.] As all men ſhould do, at all times and for all things; the pſalm begins as the former does, and gives the ſame reaſons for thankſgiving. For he is good; and does good, and is the author of all good. For his mercy endureth for ever; and men in every age are partakers of it.

℣. 2. Let the redeemed of the Lord ſay ſo, &c.] That the Lord is good, and his mercy everlaſting; ſince their redemption is a proof of his goodneſs, and an inſtance of his mercy; this is not to be underſtood of the Iſraelites redeemed from Egyptian bondage, or from the Babyloniſh captivity, though they had abundant reaſon to ſay as above; but rather of all ſuch who are delivered from any ſort of ſlavery, bondage, and confinement; whether from the power of a diſeaſe, or from a priſon, or from wicked and unreaſonable men; and from captivity in an enemy's country, where they have been uſed very ſeverely; and as the providence of God is concerned in all ſuch deliverances, thanks ſhould be given him: it ſeems beſt of all to underſtand it of thoſe who are ſpiritually redeemed by Chriſt; this phraſe being frequently uſed of ſuch, Iſa. xxxv. 10. and li. 11. and lxii. 12. who may be ſaid to be ſo, ſince Chriſt is the author of their redemption; they are redeemed, not by themſelves, nor by any creature, but by the Lord; who being their God, and near kinſman, had a right to redeem them, and being God was able to do it, and who has effected it by his precious blood; ſo that he has a right unto them and a property in them, which this phraſe alſo ſuggeſts; and for all which they have great reaſon to praiſe the Lord and his goodneſs, and ſing the new ſong of redeeming love. Whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy; from all their ſins which war againſt their ſouls; from Satan their implacable adverſary, who is ſtronger than they; from the law, which curſes and threatens them with damnation and death; from death itſelf, the laſt enemy, and indeed from the hand of all their enemies, be they who they may.

℣. 3. And gathered them out of the lands, &c.] This cannot have reſpect to the bringing of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt; for they were not then brought out of ſeveral countries, but from one land only: nor to the Babyloniſh captivity; for though ſome might be gathered out of different provinces, yet not from eaſt, weſt, north and ſouth, as here expreſſed. It beſt ſuits with the gathering of the redeemed in effectual vocation, and particularly the calling of the Gentiles in goſpel-times; to which the title of the Syriac verſion before-mentioned has reſpect. The elect of God are gathered in conſequence of being redeemed, Zech. x, 8. they are gathered out of the world, and from among the men of it; they are gathered to Chriſt and by him; they are gathered into his churches, and to communion with them, and to a participation of all privileges and ordinances: and this is uſually done by the miniſtration of the goſpel, which is ſent into all the world for this purpoſe; and a diſtinguiſhing bleſſing of grace it is, to be gathered out from the reſt of the world, and favoured with ſuch rich mercies. Such have reaſon to adore the grace of God, and to ſhew forth his praiſe, who has called them by his grace, and ſeparated them from others for himſelf. From the eaſt and from the weſt, and from the north and from the ſouth; or, from the ſea[f]; the ſouthern ſea, as the Targum; or the Red-ſea, the Arabian or Perſian ſea. The elect of God, and redeemed of the Lord, lie in all parts of the world; and from thence they are gathered by the miniſtry of the word unto Chriſt: this was fulfilled in the firſt times of the goſpel, and will be more ſo in the latter day; ſee Iſa. xliii. 5, 6.

℣. 4. They wandred in the wilderneſs in a ſolitary way, &c.] Not the people of Iſrael, as the Targum. Theſe ſeem not to be particularly intended, whatever alluſion there may be to their paſſage thro' the wilderneſs to Canaan's land; but rather in general, travellers through waſte places, eſpecially the wild deſerts of Arabia; where the wind blowing the ſand, covers the roads with it, ſo that frequently travellers loſe their way, and wander about, till directed to it by one providence or another. Some compare this with the caſe of the Old-Teſtament-ſaints, mentioned in Heb. xi. 37, 38. others with the church in the wilderneſs, and the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, Rev. xi. 2. and xii. 14. But it is certain, that the redeemed and gathered are here meant; and this fitly deſcribes their caſe, before and at effectual vocation: they are in the wilderneſs of the people, Ezek. xx. 35. from whence they are gathered; are in a ſtate of error and ignorance; are like ſtraying ſheep, gone out of the right way; and are as loſt ſheep, they have loſt their way; and tho' there may be many ways that preſent unto them, and which they think bid fair to be the right way; yet the true way of peace, life, and ſalvation by Chriſt, they know not, whilſt in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy; and when they come to be effectually called, they ſee themſelves to be in a bewildered ſtate and condition. They found no city to dwell in; nor even to call at or lodge in, for miles together; which is the caſe of travellers in ſome parts, particularly in the deſerts of Arabia. Spiritual travellers find no ſettlement, reſt, peace, joy and comfort, but in Chriſt; nor any indeed in this world, and the things of it; here they have no continuing city, Heb. xiii. 14.

℣. 5. Hungry and thirſty, &c.] As travellers in deſerts ſometimes are; their proviſions being ſpent they bring with them, and none to be had on the road; there being no inns to ſtop at, nor any ſort of food to eat, nor ſprings of water to drink of. In ſuch a condition are ſouls, when, like the prodigal, they come to themſelves, and are thoroughly convinced of their ſtate and condition by nature; they find themſelves ſtarving and famiſhing, and no proviſion to be had from themſelves or the creature: they hunger after Chriſt, the bread of life, and thirſt after his grace, the water of life, and the bleſſings of it; they hunger and thirſt after his righteouſneſs, and juſtification by it; after the pardon of their ſins through his blood, and after ſalvation by him, and an intereſt in it; after more knowledge of him, and communion with him. Their ſoul fainted in them; for want of food and drink; as men do, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, for want of Chriſt, the bleſſings of his grace, particularly ſalvation; for want of views of intereſt in it, of the joys and comforts of it; ſee Pſal. cxix. 81. Some refer all this to the apoſtles and apoſtolic men, wandring in the Gentile world, hungry, thirſty, and without any certain dwelling-place; ſee 1 Cor. iv. 11.

℣. 6. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, &c.] To be directed in their way, and for food and drink, as travellers do when in ſuch diſtreſs. Natural men, even the very heathens, when in diſtreſs, will cry unto God for relief, as Jonah's mariners did, Jonah i. 5. It is a time of trouble with awakened ſinners, when they are convinced of ſin by the Spirit of God; when they are pricked to the heart with a ſenſe of it; when the terrors of death and hell get hold of them; when they ſee themſelves loſt and undone, and in a wrong way, and know not what to do; when they find themſelves ſtarving and ready to periſh; and then they cry, that is, pray unto the Lord, the God of their lives, whoſe ears are open to their cries. And he delivered them out of their diſtreſſes; by leading them in a right way, and by ſatisfying and filling their hungry ſouls with good things, as it is explained, ℣. 7, 9.

℣. 7. And he led them forth by the right way, &c.] Thus God by his providence directs travellers that have loſt their way, and puts them into the right way. There is no doubt a very great concern of providence in ſuch a caſe, and which ought to be acknowledged with thankfulneſs. And thus the Lord leads awakened and inquiring ſouls to the right way of ſalvation; to Chriſt, who is the way, the truth, and the life; and directs and enables them to believe in him, to walk by faith, and to continue to walk in him, as they have received him; and which is a plain and ſtraight way, in which they ſhall not ſtumble; yea, in which men, though fools, ſhall not err, wander or loſe themſelves: and tho' this way is attended with many afflictions and tribulations, and ſo may be ſaid to be a narrow and a rough way; yet it is a right one, and a ſafe one, it brings at laſt to eternal life: the Syriac verſion renders it, by the way of truth. That they might go to a city of habitation; a city to dwell in; the Targum is, "to Jeruſalem, a city to dwell in:" but any city neareſt for travellers is here meant; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe may be intended, either Chriſt, the city of refuge, where awakened ſinners are directed to flee to, and where they find ſafety and plenty of proviſions; or the church of God, the ſtrong city, about which ſalvation is as walls and bulwarks; and to which they come when effectually called, and become citizens of it; or the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate, in which the tabernacle of God will be, and he will dwell with men, and they with him; or the ultimate glory and happineſs of the ſaints in heaven, that city which has foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God; in which are everlaſting habitations, and manſions of peace and reſt for the people of God to dwell in, after they have gone through their troubleſome paſſage in this wilderneſs.

℣. 8. O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, &c.] For his providential goodneſs, in providing food and drink for them, when fainting; in directing them to their right way, when they had loſt it; and in bringing them ſafe to the place they were bound for: and particularly for his ſpecial grace and goodneſs, in redemption and effectual vocation; for bringing out of a wilderneſs-ſtate and condition, and ſupplying them with all ſpiritual proviſions, and putting them in the right way to eternal glory and happineſs. And for his wonderful works to the children of men! as all the above things are wonderful ones, both in providence and grace. This verſe is repeated at the cloſe of each of the inſtances produced; in which the goodneſs of God appears to perſons in diſtreſs, and who being delivered, ought to acknowledge it, and be thankful for it: or confeſs; that is, declare to God his goodneſs, and to the children of men his wonderful works; ſo the Targum.

℣. 9. For he ſatisfieth the longing ſoul, &c.] The ſoul that is hungry and thirſty, and longs for food and drink, which nature in ſuch circumſtances craves. And ſo ſuch who long for Chriſt and his grace, for an intereſt in him, and fellowſhip with him, the Lord ſatisfies with theſe things, as with marrow and fatneſs. And filleth the hungry ſoul with goodneſs; with the goodneſs and fatneſs of his houſe; with good things; with the good things laid up in Chriſt and in the covenant; with the good things of the goſpel; with the grace and goodneſs of God in Chriſt; ſee Pſal. lxv. 4. and ciii. 5.

℣. 10. Such as ſit in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, &c.] This is the ſecond inſtance of perſons in diſtreſs calling on the name of the Lord; and who, being delivered, are under obligation to praiſe him, ſuch as are captives and priſoners. The Targum applies it to the Iſraelites in the Babyloniſh captivity; but it is much better to interpret it of priſoners in common; whoſe priſons are generally dark cells or dungeons, and where they are alone, and deprived of the company of the living; and ſo are not only in darkneſs, but ſeem as if they were in the ſtate of the dead; their condition is the ſhadow of it, and bears ſome reſemblance to it. And it may be applied, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, to the caſe and condition of the people of God in a ſtate of unregeneracy, which is deſcribed in the ſame language, Iſa. ix. 2. and xlii. 7. and xlix. 9. Luke i. 79. and which is a ſtate of darkneſs and ignorance; they are darkneſs itſelf, and are ignorant of themſelves and their caſe; of the nature of ſin, and the evil of it; of the ſpirituality of the law; of God in Chriſt; of Chriſt, and the way of ſalvation by him; of the Spirit, and his work; of the ſcriptures, and the doctrines of the goſpel contained in them; and, like perſons in a dark priſon, cannot behold the ſun, nor ſee to read nor work; and are like thoſe that are in the ſtate of the dead; and indeed are dead in Adam, dead in law, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; having no ſpiritual life, ſenſe, nor motion. And here they ſit, continue and remain, during the time of their ignorance, till it pleaſes the Lord to enlighten, quicken and convert them. Theſe phraſes are uſed of the people of God after converſion, when in darkneſs and deſertion, and under afflictive providences, Pſal. xxiii. 4. and xliv. 19. and lxxxviii. 5, 6. Mic. vii. 9. Being bound in affliction and iron; that is, with fetters of iron, which is very afflicting; ſee Pſal. cv. 18. and fitly deſcribes the people of God in a ſtate of nature, who are led captive by Satan, at his will; are held with the cords and fetters of their own ſins, and are ſhut up under the law, as a miniſtration of condemnation and death: or, bound with affliction, as with iron; hence we read of fetters and cords of affliction, Job xxxvi. 8. with which good men may be held for their iniquities; or, however, are chaſtened with them for their good. Some refer all this to the ſtate of the chriſtian church under the ten perſecutions, Rev. ii. 10.

℣. 11. Becauſe they rebelled againſt the words of God, &c.] All afflictions, as captivity and impriſonment, are generally for ſin; which is a rebellion againſt God, and a tranſgreſſion of his laws. Adam rebelled againſt the words of God, not giving credit to them, but believing the words of the devil; and ſo brought himſelf and all his poſterity into that ſtate of darkneſs, captivity and death, before deſcribed. Some underſtand this only of the light of nature, and the dictates of it, againſt which men rebel; but rather it deſigns any and every revelation of the will of God, either in the law or in the goſpel; diſobedience to which is rebellion againſt the words of God, and is highly reſented by him. And contemned the counſel of the moſt High; the advice he gives in his law, and by his prophets, what to do, and what to avoid: and which he gives by the miniſters of the word, in his goſpel and in his ordinances; which are both called his counſel, Luke vii. 30. Acts xx. 27. the contempt of which is very diſpleaſing to him, Prov. i. 25.

℣. 12. Therefore he brought down their heart with labour, &c.] Humbled them under his mighty hand; brought down their haughty ſpirits and proud ſtomachs by one afflictive providence or another; by which the Lord humbles men, as he did the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and hides pride from them: or with trouble of mind, under a conviction of ſin; when pride, which is the cauſe of rebellion againſt God, and of contempt of his counſel, is brought down, and the haughtineſs of man laid low; and when men, humbled under a ſenſe of ſin, are made willing to ſubmit to Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, to God's way of ſaving ſinners by him, to the law of God, and to the goſpel of Chriſt. They fell down; they threw themſelves proſtrate at his feet for mercy; their heart and ſtrength failed them, as the word ſignifies, and is uſed in Pſal. xxxi. 10. terrified with a ſenſe of divine wrath, they could not ſtand before the Lord, nor brave it out againſt him. And there was none to help; they could not help themſelves, nor was there any creature that could. There is ſalvation in no other than in Chriſt; when he ſaw there was none to help him in that work, his own arm brought ſalvation to him; and when ſinners ſee there is help in no other, they apply to him, as follows.

℣. 13. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, &c.] Their affliction, their hearts being brought down with labour, and they being and finding themſelves in a ſtate of darkneſs, in the ſhadow of death, in affliction and iron; or in ſoul-troubles, under a ſenſe of ſin, and in a view of wrath and diſpleaſure; under apprehenſions of imminent danger, as the diſciples in the ſtorm; and therefore cry to the Lord, as they did, Lord, ſave us, we periſh, Matt. viii. 25. And he ſaved them out of their diſtreſſes; from all their ſins; from the curſe of the law; from wrath to come; from hell and death; being both able and willing. The following verſe further explains this.

℣. 14. He brought them out of darkneſs, &c.] In which they were by nature, into marvellous light; to ſee their intereſt in Chriſt, and his ſalvation; and to have the light of joy and comfort in him. And the ſhadow of death; quickning them by his Spirit and grace; cauſing them to live by faith upon him; intitling them to eternal life, and ſecuring them from eternal death. And brake their bands in ſunder; their cords and fetters of affliction; or their bands of ſin, and the power of it; and looſed them whom Satan had bound and kept ſo for many years, and brought them into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

℣. 15. O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, &c.] Or, confeſs to the Lord his goodneſs, or grace, or mercy [g]; own and acknowledge it, in delivering them from ſuch a ſtate of darkneſs and death, of thraldom and captivity; ſee Rom. vi. 17. And for his wonderful works to the children of men! or, confeſs them before them; relate and declare them to them, what wonderful things he has done for them; that they may be affected with them, and that they may praiſe his name together; ſee the note on ℣. 9.

℣. 16. For he hath broken the gates of braſs, &c.] The priſon-doors made of braſs, as ſometimes of iron, for the ſecurity of the priſoners; ſee Acts xii 10. And cut the bars of iron in ſunder; with which they were barred and ſecured. Hyperbolical phraſes theſe, as Kimchi; expreſſing how exceeding ſtrong the priſon-doors were, and the impoſſibility of an eſcape out of them, unleſs the Lord had delivered them: but when he works, none can let; all obſtructions are eaſily removed by him; which is the ſenſe of the words, ſee Iſa. xlv. 2. Vitringa, on Rev. xii. 2. interprets this of the ſubjection of the Roman emperors to the faith and obedience of Chriſt.

[g] So Pagninus, Montanus, Cocceius, Michaelis.

℣. 17. Fools, becauſe of their tranſgreſſion, &c.] Or, becauſe of the way[h] of it; their ſinful courſe of life: for it is not for a ſingle tranſgreſſion they are afflicted, but for a continued ſeries of ſinning, which is a tranſgreſſion of the law of God. By fools are meant not idiots, men devoid of common ſenſe and natural underſtanding, but immoral perſons; ſuch who have no underſtanding of divine and ſpiritual things; are deſtitute of the fear of God, which is the beginning of wiſdom; without the true knowledge of God himſelf; place their happineſs in ſenſual enjoyments; ſeek only the gratification of their luſt; ſcoff at religion, make a mock at ſin, and have no concern about a future ſtate, and the welfare of their immortal ſouls. And becauſe of their iniquities are afflicted; or afflict themſelves, or find themſelves afflicted[i]; rather bring affliction on themſelves[k]. Not that theſe are the only perſons that are afflicted; for many truly wiſe, good and gracious perſons, have a large ſhare of afflictions; tho' not in a way of puniſhment for ſin, or in wrath and hot diſpleaſure, but in a way of fatherly chaſtiſement and in love: nor are fools for the moſt part afflicted, nor ſo much as others; they are not in trouble, and plagued as other men; which has been a ſtumbling to good men: however, ſometimes they are afflicted in this life, and in a way of puniſhment for ſin; and very often are but the more hardened by it; though to ſome it is an ordinance for good; they are awakened by it to a ſenſe of ſin, and acknowledgment of it, and to ſeek for pardoning grace and mercy. This is the third inſtance of perſons in diſtreſs calling on the Lord, and finding relief[l], and being under obligation to praiſe him.

℣. 18. Their ſoul abhorreth all manner of meat, &c.] Not only bread and common food, but dainty meat, the moſt delicious fare, Job xxxiii. 20. in which they moſt delighted in time of health, and too much indulged themſelves in; and by that means brought diſeaſes upon them, which cauſed this lothing in them, as is common. Thus to thoſe who are diſtempered with ſin, whoſe taſte is not changed, nor can it diſcern perverſe things; the word of God, the goſpel of Chriſt, which is delicious food, is diſreliſhed by them; the doctrines of it are inſipid things, they lothe them as light bread, as the Iſraelites did the manna. And they draw near unto the gates of death; that is, the grave; the houſe appointed for all living; the dwelling place of men till the reſurrection; and ſo is ſaid to have gates and doors; ſee Job xxxiii. 22. and xxx. 23 and men ſometimes are brought ſo low by affliction, as that they ſeem to be near to death, juſt upon the brink of eternity, ready to enter into the grave, and lie down among the dead.

℣. 19. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, &c.] A time of affliction is a time of trouble, and a proper ſeaſon for prayer; and by it perſons are brought to the throne of grace when humbled under the mighty hand of God, to ſeek for relief. Hezekiah in his affliction prayed to the Lord, though Aſa ſought to the phyſicians only, and not to the Lord; this is to be underſtood of ſuch who are convinced of their folly, brought to a ſenſe of ſin and danger, and therefore cry to the Lord for his ſparing mercy, and pardoning grace. And he ſaveth them out of their diſtreſſes; their afflictions which were diſtreſſing to them, by removing their diſorders and reſtoring them to health again; as follows.

℣. 20. He ſent his word, and healed them, &c.] It was his will and pleaſure they ſhould be healed, and accordingly they were; he iſſued his orders for the removal of the affliction, and it was done; diſeaſes are his ſervants, which come and go at his command; ſo Chriſt, in the days of his fleſh, healed by a word ſpeaking, Matt. viii. 3, 8. This is true of Chriſt the eſſential Word, who was ſent in the fulneſs of time, and was made fleſh and dwelt among men, and went about healing all manner of diſeaſes among the people; and who is alſo the phyſician of ſouls who came with healing in his wings; that is, with pardon of ſin, for which his blood was ſhed: he is the only phyſician, the ſkilful, univerſal, and infallible one, and does all freely, and in a moſt marvellous manner, by his ſtripes, blood and wounds, and by an application of theſe to diſeaſed perſons ſenſible of their caſe. It may alſo be applied to the word of the goſpel; the law is the means of wounding, it is the killing letter; the goſpel is the means of healing, the doctrines of it are the leaves of the tree of life, which are for the healing of the nations; it is the doctrine of remiſſion of ſins by the blood of Chriſt, and by it Chriſt ſpeaks peace and pardon to wounded conſciences. And delivered them from their deſtructions; from the deſtruction of the body, of the beauty and ſtrength of it by diſeaſes; reſtoring to health is a redeeming of the life from deſtruction; from the grave the pit of corruption and deſtruction, ſo called becauſe in it bodies corrupt, putrify, and are deſtroyed by worms; and ſuch who are ſavingly convinced of ſin, and bleſſed with pardoning grace and mercy, are delivered from the everlaſting deſtruction of body and ſoul in hell.

℣. 21. Oh, that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, &c.] Both in reſtoring to bodily health, which is an inſtance of divine goodneſs; and in healing the diſeaſes of the ſoul, or in the pardon of ſin, which is according to the multitude of his mercies, and the riches of his grace. And for his wonderful works to the children of men; bodily health is ſometimes reſtored in a wonderful manner, when all means uſed are without ſucceſs, and the preſcriptions of phyſic fail; and pardon of ſin is a wonder of grace now, and will be to all eternity; and for theſe things praiſe ought to be given to the Lord, and they ſhould be declared to men for his glory.

℣. 22. And let them ſacrifice the ſacrifices of thankſgiving, &c.] Not legal ſacrifices, but ſpiritual and evangelical ones, the ſacrifices of praiſe and thankfulneſs which God has enjoined, are well-pleaſing to him through Chriſt, glorify him, and are but our reaſonable ſervice; ſee Heb. xiii. 15. And declare his works with rejoicing; tell them to the children of men, what he has done for them, for ſoul and body; let them come to Zion with joy and everlaſting joy on their heads; to the gates thereof, or to the public aſſemblies of the ſaints, and there declare what great things the Lord has done for them; and has had compaſſion upon them in healing their bodily diſeaſes, and curing them of their ſoul maladies.

℣. 23. They that go down to the ſea in ſhips, &c.] This is the fourth inſtance of perſons in diſtreſs crying to the Lord for help, and having it, are laid under obligation to praiſe him; the caſe of ſeafaring men: ſo the Targum introduces it, "mariners that go down to the ſea in ſhips;" the ſame form of expreſſion as here is uſed in Iſa. xlii. 10. Some affirm the ſea to be higher than the earth, but by this it ſhould be lower; beſides the earth is ſaid to be founded on the ſeas, which ſuggeſts ſuperiority; and all the rivers run into the ſea, which ſuppoſes a declivity; but be it ſo, that it is higher than the earth, yet this phraſe is to be juſtified by the ſhores being higher than the ſea, from whence men go down to take ſhipping, as Kimchi obſerves; though Kimchi's father is of opinion that it reſpects perſons going down into the ſhip, which is deep, as Jonah is ſaid to do, Jonah i. 3. That do buſineſs in great waters; which refers either to the ſteering and working of the ſhip, and every thing relating to the management of the ropes and ſails, and other affairs; and in a ſtorm much buſineſs is done, all hands are employed: or elſe to the buſineſs they go to ſea about, as catching fiſh, curing them, and carrying them to market; or elſe to traffic and merchandize of goods, they convey from place to place. The phraſe is much like that, as many as trade by ſea, Rev. xviii. 17.

℣. 24. Theſe ſee the works of the Lord, &c.] In creation, the ſea itſelf, its flux and reflux; the creatures in it, fiſhes of various forms and ſizes: and in providence, in preſerving ſhips and men in the moſt imminent danger, and even to a miracle; ſometimes cauſing the wind to change or to ſubſide, in a moment, whereby deliverance is wrought. And his wonders in the deep; the ſtrange and wonderful creatures that are in the deep waters of the ſea, and to be ſeen no where elſe; and the amazing appearances of divine providence, in delivering when in the greateſt diſtreſs, and none at hand to help, and all hope of ſalvation gone.

℣. 25. For he commandeth, and raiſeth the ſtormy wind, &c.] Winds are not raiſed by men, nor by devils, nor by angels, but by the Lord himſelf; who has created them, holds them in his fiſt, brings them out of his treaſures, and ſends them forth to do his will; if he ſpeaks the word, gives but the order, a ſtorm ariſes at once, and executes what he pleaſes, Pſal. cxlviii. 8. Which lifteth up the waves thereof; that is, the waves of the ſea; it comes down into it, and cauſes ſurges; which riſe above the ſhip, and ſometimes cover it, and ready to ſink it; yea, even they are lifted up to the heavens, as it follows.

℣. 26. They mount up to the heaven, &c.] The waves which are lifted up by the ſtormy wind, and the ſhips which are upon them, and the men in them. They go down again to the depths; one while they ſeem to reach the ſkies, and preſently they are down, as it were, in the bottom of the ſea, and are threatened to be buried in the midſt of it: diſtreſs at ſea is deſcribed in much the ſame language by Virgil and Ovid [m]. Their ſoul is melted becauſe of trouble; becauſe of the danger of being caſt away; ſo it was with Jonah's mariners, and with the diſciples in the ſtorm; ſea roaring, and mens hearts failing for fear, are joined together in Luke xxi. 25, 26.

℣. 27. They reel to and fro, and ſtagger like a drunken man, &c.] Through the agitation of the water, and motion of the ſhip, not being able to ſtand upon deck. And are at their wits end; or, all their wiſdom is ſwallowed up [n]; their wiſdom in naval affairs, their art of navigation, their ſkill in managing ſhips, all nonpluſſed and baffled; they know not what method to take to ſave the veſſel and themſelves; their knowledge fails them, they are quite confounded, and almoſt diſtracted. So Apollinarius paraphraſes it, "they forget navigation, and their "wiſe art does not appear;" ſo Ovid, deſcribing a ſtorm, uſes the ſame phraſe, deficit ars, "art "fails."

℣. 28. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, &c.] As in a ſtorm ſeafaring perſons are uſed to do; ſo did Jonah's mariners, though heathens, every one cried to his god. With the Romans [o] tempeſts were reckoned deities, and had temples erected, and ſacrifices offered to them; but theſe perſons were ſuch as knew and owned the true Jehovah, and called upon him in their diſtreſs: ſo did the apoſtles of Chriſt. And he bringeth them out of their diſtreſſes; by ſtilling the winds and the waves, cauſing them to proceed on their voyage with pleaſure, and landing them ſafe on ſhore, as follows.

℣. 29. He maketh the ſtorm a calm, &c.] As Chriſt did by a word ſpeaking, Mark iv. 39. So that the waves thereof are ſtill; and roar and toſs no more, but ſubſide; and the ſea becomes ſmooth and quiet, its raging ceaſes: the angry ſea, as Horace [p] calls it, becomes calm and peaceable; ſee Pſal. lxxxix. 9.

℣. 30. Then are they glad becauſe they be quiet, &c.] The mariners are glad that the waves are quiet, and they free from danger, and at eaſe and in repoſe themſelves. So he bringth them unto their deſired haven; the port, city, border or tract of land [q], they are bound to; which they deſire to be at, and eagerly look out for, and rejoice when arrived at it. This is all the Lord's work in providence: mariners too often take it to themſelves, as if it was owing to their own ſkill and management, that they have brought home the ſhip ſafe to the appointed port; but it is owing to the ſecret guidance and protection of divine providence, which ſhould be acknowledged. The late Mr Huſſey [r] thinks, that all this is not to be underſtood of ſeamen and naval affairs in common, but is a prophecy of what ſhould befal the diſciples of Chriſt, when on ſhipboard with him; who are the perſons that went down to the ſea of Galilee in a ſhip; whoſe buſineſs in the great waters was fiſhing; when, by the will of God, there came down a ſtormy wind, which lifted up the waves of the ſea, ſo that the ſhip in which they were was filled with them, and in danger of being ſunk; when they went up and down, as here deſcribed, and reeled as they went along on the deck, to awake their Maſter; their hearts melting, and they at their wits end through fear, when they ſaw ſuch wonders, what no common mariner ever did; the God-man and Mediator riſing up, and in a majeſtic manner rebuked the winds and waves, and cauſed a calm, and ſo brought them to the country of the Gadarenes, whither they were bound; ſee Luke viii. 23—26. But it may be applied, in a more ſpiritual manner, to the people of God in common; who are embarked in the cauſe of Chriſt, and in a church-ſtate, comparable to a ſhip, of which Chriſt is the maſter, governor and pilot; and who are ſailing through the tempeſtuous ſea of this world, and are toſſed with tempeſts in it; and have buſineſs to do here, not only of a civil, but of a ſpiritual nature; and who not only ſee the wondrous works of creation and providence, but of grace and redemption; the deep things of God, the myſteries of his grace and love: and who ſometimes are covered with the billows and waves of affliction, and in the utmoſt diſtreſs; which are all under the direction and at the command of God, to whom they apply for relief; and he commands a calm in their breaſts, and cauſes their afflictions to ceaſe, which produce joy and gladneſs in them; and at laſt they are brought ſafe to heaven, their deſired haven, which they are bound unto, are ſeeking after, and deſirous of; and where they are at intire reſt, brought hither by the Lord himſelf.

℣. 31. O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, &c.] Seafaring men particularly, beforementioned, as Jonah's mariners did, Jonah i. 16. or all the four ſorts of perſons inſtanced in, as Kimchi thinks: and even all men whatſoever ſhould do this, high and low, rich and poor, of every age, ſex and condition; ſince they all receive favours from the Lord, and ſhould return thanks to him; and eſpecially good men, who are bleſſed with ſpiritual bleſſings by him: theſe ſhould all confeſs to the Lord his goodneſs, as it may be rendered, ſee the note on ℣. 15. they ſhould own the mercy received as the Lord's doing, and acknowledge their unworthineſs of it, and give him the glory of it. And for his wonderful works to the children of men! or, confeſs and declare his wonderful works to the children of men: the wonderful works of creation and providence, which thoſe that go to ſea ſee in the deeps, and every thing of the ſame kind which others obſerve; and eſpecially the wonderful works of grace, or what God has done in a wonderful manner for the ſouls of his people; ſee Pſal. lxvi. 16. Mark v. 19. and ℣. 8, 15, 21.

℣. 32. Let them exalt him alſo in the congregation of the people, &c.] Of the people of God, who are gathered out of the world into a church-ſtate; and who gather themſelves together to attend the worſhip and ſervice of God in ſome one place; and here the Lord ſhould be praiſed, and his name exalted, by thoſe who have received favours from him; ſee Pſal. cxi. 1. the Targum explains it, "in the con-"gregation of the people of the houſe of Iſrael." And praiſe him in the aſſembly of the elders; or, in the ſeat, or chair of the elders[s]: not of the ſcribes and phariſees, and elders of the people, that ſat in Moſes's chair; but rather of the four and twenty elders, who are ſaid to have four and twenty ſeats round the throne, where they worſhip and praiſe God; and which are emblems of goſpel-churches, the members of which, for their grace, gravity and prudence, are called elders; and over which elders in office preſide, and who rule well and labour in the word and doctrine; ſee Rev. iv. 4. 1 Tim. v. 17. The Targum renders it, "the ſanhedrim of the "wiſe men."

℣. 33. He turneth rivers into a wilderneſs, &c.] A country abounding with rivers, as the country round about Sodom and the land of Canaan were, Gen. xiii. 10. Deut. viii. 7. Such an one is ſometimes, by the juſt judgment of God, turned into a deſert. And the water-ſprings into dry ground; what was like a well-watered garden, becomes like dry and barren earth, on which nothing grows.

℣. 34. A fruitful land into barrenneſs, &c.] Or, into ſaltneſs[t]; as Sodom and the land adjacent became a ſalt ſea; and the land of Canaan was threatned to become brimſtone, ſalt and burning, like Sodom; in which nothing was ſown, and which bore no graſs; ſee Gen. xiv. 3. Deut. xxix. 23. and ſo the Targum, "the land of Iſrael, which brought "forth fruit, he hath deſtroyed, as Sodom was o-"verthrown." For the wickedneſs of them that dwell therein; this was the cauſe of the overthrow of Sodom, and of the deſtruction of that fine country, as alſo of Canaan afterwards; ſee Gen. xiii. 13. Deut. xxix. 22, 23. The very heathens had a notion, that barrenneſs and unfruitfulneſs in countries were owing to the ſins of men; hence the ſterility and famine at Mycenas were attributed to the wickedneſs of Atreus[u]. This may figuratively be underſtood of the preſent ſtate and condition of the Jews; who were once a people well watered with the word and ordinances, and had the firſt preaching of the goſpel among them; but rejecting and deſpiſing it, are now become like a deſert, barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of divine things: and it might be illuſtrated by the caſe of ſeveral chriſtian churches; the ſeven churches of Aſia, and others, once as well-watered gardens, but now are no more; and the places where they ſtood are deſtitute of ſpiritual knowledge, and the means of it.

℣. 35. He turneth the wilderneſs into a ſtanding water, &c.] On the other hand, when it is the pleaſure of God, a country uncultivated and like a deſert, he makes it fruitful as one that is well-watered and tilled; as this country of ours, and the colonies in America, once waſte places, now fruitful ones. And dry ground into water-ſprings; which is expreſſive of the ſame thing, and may be figuratively underſtood of the Gentile world; which, before the coming of Chriſt, and the preaching of the goſpel, and the pouring down of the Spirit, was like a wilderneſs and dry ground; but now watered with the word and ordinances, and the grace of God, and in many places, has become fruitful in grace and good works. The Targum prefaces this verſe thus, "when they return unto the law, he "turneth, &c."

℣. 36. And there he maketh the hungry to dwell, &c.] In thoſe fruitful places which they find agreeable to them, and ſo fix upon them as the places of their abode, and build houſes, and dwell there; having all the conveniencies of life, which they wanted elſewhere: ſo ſuch as hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs, make to ſuch places where the waters are, the word is preached, and ordinances adminiſtered; and here they take up their dwelling, their bread being given them, and their waters ſure unto them. That they may prepare a city for habitation; thoſe poor, neceſſitous perſons, as they were when they firſt came; building houſes, and others continually coming to them, by degrees form a well-regulated city, in which are a large number of inhabitants: which may be conſidered as an emblem of the church of God, often compared to a city; and is an habitation for

God, and where ſaints deſire and delight to dwell.

℣. 37. And ſow the fields, and plant vineyards, &c.] And ſo raiſe a ſufficient ſupply of corn and wine, for the ſupport of themſelves and families. In a ſpiritual ſenſe the fields are the world, and the ſeed which is ſown is the word; the perſons that ſow it are the miniſters of the goſpel, which, by a divine bleſſing, brings forth fruit, in ſome thirty, ſome ſixty, and ſome an hundred fold: the vineyards are the churches, planted by Chriſt and by his miniſters, as his inſtruments; believers are the pleaſant plants in them, and young converts are the tender grapes. Which may yield fruits of increaſe; or fruit and increaſe; the fields yield all ſorts of grain for food, and the vineyards wine for drink. So the ſeed of the word being ſown, and churches planted, they increaſe with the increaſe of God, and bring forth fruits of righteouſneſs to the glory of his name.

℣. 38. He bleſſeth them alſo, ſo that they are multiplied greatly, &c.] Not only their fields and vineyards are bleſſed with an increaſe, but theſe huſbandmen themſelves; as man at his firſt creation was bid to do, being bleſſed of God; and as the Iſraelites were in Egypt, Gen. i. 28. Exod. i. 7. and which may ſpiritually denote the great number of converts to chriſtian churches, eſpecially in the latter day, Jer. xxx. 19. And ſuffereth not their cattle to decreaſe; their ſheep and oxen, which is reckoned a great temporal happineſs, Pſal. cxliv. 13, 14. and may ſignify that God does, and will give a ſufficient number of goſpel-miniſters, comparable to oxen for their laboriouſneſs, that ſhall in all ages miniſter to his churches; ſee 1 Cor. ix. 9, 10. 1 Tim. v. 17.

℣. 39. Again they are miniſhed, &c.] Or leſſened, in their families, cattle and ſubſtance; either the ſame perſons as before, or others. The Targum paraphraſes it, "but when they ſin, they are leſſen-"ed;" for ſin is the cauſe of it, as follows: And brought low through oppreſſion, affliction and ſorrow; either becauſe of their oppreſſion of the poor, the evil they do to them, and the ſorrow they bring upon them; or they are brought into a low eſtate through the tyranny and oppreſſion of others, and by the afflictions and ſorrows they are brought into by them. This may be applied to the Jews, at their deſtruction by the Romans, when they were greatly leſſened and brought low by their oppreſſion of them: or rather to the Chriſtians; not under the heathen perſecutions, for then they increaſed more and more; but under antichriſtian tyranny, when the beaſt had power over them, and overcame and ſlew them; and their numbers were ſo reduced, that the whole world is ſaid to wonder after the beaſt, Rev. xiii. 3, 7, 8. and which will be the caſe again, when the witneſſes will be ſlain: the number of Chriſtians is greatly leſſening now; there are but a few names in Sardis; Jacob is ſmall, but will be ſmaller and fewer ſtill.

℣. 40. He poureth contempt upon princes, &c.] That is, the Lord does, who is above them; he laughs at them, and has them in deriſion, when they are raging againſt his people, cauſe, and intereſt; he ſets them up and pulls them down at his pleaſure; he hurls them from their ſeats and thrones, and makes them contemptible to their ſubjects; he ſometimes brings them to a ſhameful end, as Herod who was eaten with worms; and wicked princes if they are not brought to diſgrace in this world, they will riſe to ſhame and everlaſting contempt in the other; and will ſtand with the meaneſt and loweſt before the Judge of the whole earth; and ſeek to the rocks and mountains to cover them from his wrath. This particularly will be true of the antichriſtian princes, when the vials of God's wrath will be poured out upon them, Rev. xvi. 1. And cauſeth them to wander in the wilderneſs, where there is no way; no beaten track or path; whither being driven out of their kingdoms, they flee for ſhelter, and wander about in untrodden paths; as Nebuchadnezzar, when he was driven from men, and had his dwelling with the beaſts of the field: or this may be interpreted, as it is by Aben Ezra and Kimchi, of the infatuation of their wiſdom, and of their being left without counſel, and erring thro' it; being at their wits end, not knowing what ſtep to take or meaſures to concert; being in a maze, in a wilderneſs, at an entire loſs, what they ſhould do; ſee Job xii. 17—21.

℣. 41. Yet ſetteth he the poor on high from affliction, &c.] On the other hand the Lord ſometimes exalteth men of low degree, raiſeth men of mean extract and parentage, who have made a poor figure in life, to high places of honour, free from adverſity and diſtreſs; as David from the ſheepfold, and from following the ewes great with young, to be king of Iſrael. This may be applied to the ſaints and people of God, who for the moſt part are poor in purſe, the poor of this world, whom he chooſes, calls, and ſaves; poor in knowledge, capacity, and gifts; poor as to their ſpiritual circumſtances, having neither food nor clothing, nor money to buy either; poor in ſpirit, and ſenſible of it; and poor by reaſon of afflictions: theſe the Lord ſets on high, ſets them among the princes of his people, makes them kings and prieſts; ſets them on Chriſt the rock, who is higher than they, higher than the angels, and than the heavens; ſets them above the angels, their nature being advanced above theirs in Chriſt, and they being repreſented by him in heavenly places; and ſtanding in the relation of ſons to God, and of ſpouſe and bride to Chriſt, and angels being their miniſtring ſervants; and ere long they will be ſet on thrones, and have a crown of glory, life and righteouſneſs, put upon them, and be poſſeſſed of an everlaſting kingdom, and be out of the reach of affliction. They are not clear of it in this world; it is needful for them, they are appointed to it, and through it they muſt enter the kingdom; but then they will come out of all tribulation, and there will be no more pain, ſorrow, and death: it may be rendered, after affliction, after their time of affliction is over, then God will exalt and glorify them; ſee 1 Pet. v. 10. this may reſpect the proſperity of the church in the latter day; ſee Dan. vii. 27. And maketh him families like a flock; that is, the Lord makes the poor families like a flock of ſheep, ſo greatly does he increaſe them; this is a very apt figure that is here uſed, ſince the people of God are often compared to ſheep, and to a flock of them; and theſe are creatures that greatly increaſe; and here it denotes the large number of the ſaints, as in the firſt times of the goſpel, both in Judea and in the Gentile world; and as it will be in the latter day, when they ſhall be multiplied and not be few, glorified and not be ſmall; and that they ſhould be branched out into families, or particular churches, which, like families, conſiſt of children, young men, and fathers, of which Chriſt is maſter, and miniſters ſtewards; ſo it has been from the beginning of the goſpel-diſpenſation, and will be much more ſo in the latter day, when the earth will be full of theſe families every where. The Targum introduces this verſe thus, "when they turn to the law he ſetteth, "&c."

℣. 42. The righteous ſhall ſee it, and rejoice, &c.] Shall ſee the increaſe and proſperity of the ſaints, the glory of the church in the latter day, and rejoice at it; the judgments of God upon the wicked, upon antichriſtian princes and ſtates, and rejoice on that account; ſee Rev. xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2. and the ſeveral deliverances of perſons in diſtreſs before mentioned, and rejoice with them that rejoice; which is what good men ought to do, Rom. xii. 15. And all iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth; men of iniquity, very bad men, the man of ſin and his followers, and all profane and atheiſtical perſons, who will be ſilenced and have nothing to ſay againſt the providence of God; will be confounded, and through ſhame lay their hand on their mouths and be ſtruck with admiration at the wonderful things done by the Lord for his people; nor will they have any thing to ſay againſt their own condemnation.

℣. 43. Whoſo is wiſe, &c.] Or as it may be read interrogatively, Who is wiſe? as in Jer. ix. 12. Hoſ. xiv. 9. that is, ſpiritually wiſe, wiſe unto ſalvation; who is made to know wiſdom in the hidden part; for not ſuch as are poſſeſſed of natural wiſdom, or worldly wiſemen, much leſs who are wiſe to do evil, are here meant. And will obſerve theſe things; the remarkable appearances of divine providence to perſons in diſtreſs; the various changes and viciſſitudes in the world; the ſeveral afflictions of God's people, and their deliverances out of them; the wonderful works of God in nature, providence and grace; theſe will be obſerved, taken notice of, laid up in the mind, and kept by ſuch who are truly wiſe, who know how to make a right uſe and proper improvement of them. Even they ſhall underſtand the loving kindneſs of the Lord; every one of the wiſemen; they will perceive the kindneſs of God unto all men, in the ſeveral diſpenſations of his providence towards them, and his ſpecial love and kindneſs towards his own people, even in all their afflictions; they will perceive this to be at the bottom of every mercy and bleſſing; they will underſtand more of the nature and excellency of it, and know more of the love of God and Chriſt which paſſeth knowledge. Or the kindneſſes of the Lord ſhall be underſtood; that is, by wiſe men; ſo R. Moſes in Aben Ezra renders the words.

PSALM CVIII.

THIS pſalm conſiſts of ſeveral paſſages out of the fifty ſeventh and ſixtieth pſalms, with very little variation. Jarchi and Kimchi refer it to the times of the Meſſiah. The title in the Syriac verſion is, "concerning the calling of the Gentiles," to which no doubt it has reſpect.

℣. 1. O God, my heart is fixed, I will ſing and give praiſe, &c.] From hence to ℣. 6. the words are taken out of Pſal. lvii. 7—11. which ſee. Even with my glory; my tongue; in Pſal. lvii. 8. it is read, awake up my glory.

℣. 4. For thy mercy is great above the heavens, &c.] It is in Pſal. lvii. 10. thy mercy is great unto the heavens.

℣. 6. That thy beloved may be delivered, &c.] From hence to the end of the pſalm the words are taken out of Pſal. lx. 5—12.

℣. 9. Over Philiſtia will I triumph, &c.] In Pſal. lx. 8. it is, Philiſtia, triumph thou becauſe of me; ſee the note there.

℣. 11. And wilt not thou, O God, go forth with our hoſts, &c.] In Pſal. lx. 10. it is, and thou, O God, which didſt not go out with our armies.

PSALM CIX.

To the chief muſician, A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm was wrote by David, under the inſpiration of the holy Spirit, concerning Judas the betrayer of Chriſt, as is certain from Acts i. 16, 20. hence it is uſed to be called by the ancients the Iſcariotic pſalm. Whether the occaſion of it was the rebellion of Abſalom, as ſome, or the perſecution of Saul, as Kimchi; and whoever David might have in view particularly, whether Ahithophel or Doeg the Edomite, as is moſt likely; yet it is evident that the holy Ghoſt foreſaw the ſin of Judas, and propheſies of that, and of the ruin and miſery that ſhould come upon him; for the imprecations in this pſalm are no other than predictions of future events, and ſo are not to be drawn into an example by men; nor do they breathe out any thing contrary to the ſpirit of chriſtianity, but are proofs of it, ſince what is here predicted has been exactly accompliſhed. The title in the Syriac verſion is, "a pſalm of David when they created "Abſalom king without his knowledge, and for "this cauſe he was ſlain; but to us it expounds "the ſufferings of the Chriſt of God;" and indeed he is the perſon that is all along ſpeaking in this pſalm.

℣. 1. Hold not thy peace, &c.] Or be not as a deaf or dumb man, or like one that turns a deaf ear and will give no anſwer; ſo the Lord ſeems to his people when he does not give an immediate anſwer to their prayers, and does not ariſe to help them; he ſeems to have forſaken them, and to ſtand at a diſtance from them; nor does he avenge them of their enemies; it is the Meſſiah, as man, that puts up this petition, and it agrees with Pſal. xxii. 2. O God of my praiſe; worthy of all praiſe, becauſe of the perfections of his nature, and for the mercies he beſtows; and is and ought to be the conſtant object of the praiſe of his people, and was the object of the praiſe of Chriſt; ſee Pſalm xxii. 22, 25. who praiſed him for his wonderful formation as man, having ſuch a holy human nature, ſo ſuitable to his divine perſon, and ſo fit for the ſervice of his people; for his preſervation from his enemies, and the deliverance of him from death and the grave, by his reſurrection; for hearing his petitions, and for the ſpecial grace beſtowed on his people; ſee Pſal. cxxxix. 14. and cxviii. 21, 22. John xi. 41, 42. Matt. xi. 25, 26. Or, O God of my my glorying [w]; in whom he gloried, of whom he boaſted; as he often with exultation ſpoke of him as his God and Father: or, the God that praiſes me; for his praiſe was not of men but of God, who by a voice from heaven declared him his beloved Son, in whom he was well-pleaſed, Matt. iii. 17. and xvii. 5.

℣. 2. For the mouth of the wicked, and the mouth of the deceitful are opened againſt me, &c.] Or of deceit [x] itſelf; moſt wicked and very deceitful men, who ſometimes flattered and pretended friendſhip, as the Jews did to Chriſt, when they deſigned ill againſt him; though at other times their mouths were opened, and they poured out their calumnies and reproaches very freely and largely; traducing his perſon, and aſperſing his character as a wicked man; blaſpheming his miracles, as if done by the help of the devil; charging his doctrine with novelty, falſhood and blaſphemy; loading him with invidious names, as Samaritan, madman, &c. repreſenting him as an enemy to the ſtate, as a ſeditious perſon, and a diſturber of the nation's peace; particularly their mouths were opened againſt him when they called for his crucifixion, and would have no denial; and eſpecially when he was on the croſs, where they gaped upon him with their mouths, and poured out their ſcoffs and jeers at him; ſee Pſal. xxii. 14. They have ſpoken againſt me with a lying tongue; falſe witneſſes roſe up againſt him, and laid things to his charge he knew nothing of, and which they could not prove, Matt. xxvi. 59, 60, 61.

℣. 3. They compaſſed me about alſo with words of hatred, &c.] They ſurrounded him as he hung on the croſs, and expreſſed their malice and hatred againſt him; then was he encloſed with theſe ſpiteful ſnarling dogs, and encompaſſed by them as with ſo many bees, who every one left their ſting in him, Pſal. xxii. 16. and cxviii. 12. And fought againſt me without a cauſe; they were of an hoſtile ſpirit, enemies and enmity itſelf againſt him; fought againſt him both with words and blows, with their tongues and with their fiſts; ſought his life, and at length took it away; he was attacked by the body of the Jewiſh nation, and by the whole poſſe of devils; and all this without any cauſe or juſt reaſon: he gave them no occaſion for this enmity and malice, and oppoſition to him; and it was in the iſſue without effect, it was in vain and to no purpoſe; for though they gained their point in putting him to death, yet he roſe again a triumphant conqueror over them all.

℣. 4. For my love, they are my adverſaries, &c.] For the love that Chriſt ſhewed to the Jews; to their bodies, in going about and healing all manner of diſeaſes among them; to their ſouls, in preaching the goſpel to them in their ſeveral cities; and for the love he ſhewed to mankind in coming into the world to ſave them, which ſhould have commanded love again; but inſtead of this they became his implacable adverſaries: they acted the part of Satan; they were as ſo many Satans to him, as the word ſignifies. But I give myſelf unto prayer; or, I am a man of prayer [y], as Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſupply it; ſo he was in the days of his fleſh, Heb. v. 7. he was conſtant at it, and fervent in it; ſometimes a whole night together at it: his uſual method was, when at Jeruſalem, to teach in the temple in the day-time, and at night to go to the mount of Olives, and there abide and pray, Luke vi. 12. and xxi. 37. and xxii. 44. This was the armour he alone made uſe of againſt his enemies, when they fought againſt him, and acted the part of an adverſary to him; he betook himſelf to nothing elſe but prayer; he did not return railing for railing, but committed himſelf in prayer to God, who judgeth righteouſly, 1 Pet. ii. 23. yea, he prayed for thoſe his adverſaries: and ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it, that he was a man of prayer for them, and prayed for them; as it is certain Chriſt did, when he was encompaſſed by his enemies, and they were venting all their ſpite and malice againſt him, Luke xxiii. 34.

℣. 5. And they have rewarded me evil for good, &c.] For the good words and ſound doctrine he delivered to them; for the good works and miracles he wrought among them, to the healing of them; ſee John x. 32 And hatred for my love; he came to ſeek and ſave that which was loſt, and yet they hated him, and would not have him to rule over them, Luke xix. 10, 14.

℣. 6. Set thou a wicked man over him, &c.] Or them, as the Syriac verſion; over every one of his adverſaries, and all of them: and which may be interpreted, as it is by Cocceius, of tyrannical princes and governors, ſet over the Jews, as Tiberius, Caius, Claudius, Nero, &c. and their deputies, Pilate, Felix, Feſtus, Florus; all wicked men, and which were a judgment on them for their uſage of Chriſt. Though here ſome ſingle perſon is deſigned, even Judas, notorious for his enmity and ingratitude to Chriſt; and by the wicked one ſet over him, may be meant Satan, as in the next clauſe, as he is ſometimes called, Matt. xiii. 38. 1 John v. 18. into whoſe hands and power Judas was put, under whoſe influence he was; who entred into him, took poſſeſſion of him, and put it into his heart to betray his Maſter, John xiii. 2, 27. And let Satan ſtand at his right hand; to direct and influence him, to ſolicit and tempt him to do the evil he did, and to accuſe him for it when done; ſee Zech. iii. 1.

℣. 7. When he ſhall be judged, let him be condemned, &c.] When he ſhall be arraigned at the bar of his own conſcience, and be charged with the ſin of which he is guilty; let conſcience, which is as a thouſand witneſſes, riſe up againſt him, and condemn him; ſo it did Judas, Matt. xxvii. 3, 4. or when he ſhall ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt at the laſt day, let him go out a wicked, or a guilty, or condemned man [z]; let him hear the awful ſentence, Go thou curſed, into everlaſting fire; and let him go out immediately from the preſence of the Judge into eternal puniſhment, the condemnation of the devil: ſo Judas is ſaid to go to his own place, Acts i. 25. And let his prayer become ſin; let it be fruitleſs and in vain; and ſo far from being heard, let it be treated as an abomination; let it be conſidered as an aggravation of his crime, as Haman's was, Eſther vii. 7, 8. let his prayer, being without faith in the blood of Chriſt, be reckoned ſinful as it was; let his cries, and tears, and repentance, iſſue in deſperation, and that in ſin, as it did in deſtroying himſelf, Matt. xxvii. 5.

℣. 8. Let his days be few, &c.] The days of men in common are but few at moſt: length of days, either beyond or according to the uſual term of life, is reckoned a bleſſing; and to be cut off in the midſt of a man's days, a curſe; when this is by the immediate hand of God, as a viſible token of his diſpleaſure; or by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, for ſome capital offence; or by a man's own hands, which was the caſe of Judas; whoſe days were but few, in compariſon of the other apoſtles, who outlived him many years; eſpecially the apoſtle John, who lived ſixty years after at leaſt. The Syriac verſion renders it, let their days be few; and ſo it reads the whole context in the plural number, both in the verſes preceding and following; and the whole may be interpreted of the Jews, as it is by Theodoret, as well as of Judas; ſince they were concerned in the ſame ſin, and are equally charged as the betrayers and murderers of Chriſt, Acts vii. 52. and their days as a nation and church after the death of Chriſt were very few; within forty years, or thereabout, their city and temple were deſtroyed. And let another take his office; or biſhoprick, as the Septuagint verſion, and the apoſtle Peter call it; who cites this paſſage, and applies it to Judas, in Acts i. 20. His office was the office of an apoſtle, an high and honourable one, the chief office in the church: it was a charge, as the word ſignifies; a charge of ſouls, an overſight of the flock; which is to be taken not by conſtraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre's ſake, but of a ready mind. Judas took it for filthy lucre's ſake, and it was taken away from him, and given to another; to Matthias, on whom the lot fell, and who was numbered with the apoſtles in his room, Acts i. 21—26. This is true alſo of the prieſts, ſcribes and phariſees, who were diveſted of their offices in a very little time; three ſhepherds were cut off in one month, Zech. xi. 8. There being a change of the prieſthood, law and ordinances, there was a change of offices and officers; new ordinances were appointed by Chriſt, and new officers created, on whom gifts were beſtowed ſuitable to their work.

℣. 9. Let his children be fatherleſs, and his wife a widow.] This ſometimes is the caſe of good men, who leave widows and fatherleſs children, whom the Lord ſhews mercy to; being the Father of the fatherleſs, and the Judge of the widow, Pſal. lxviii. 5. but ſometimes it is threatened and comes as a judgment, when the Lord ſhews no mercy and favour to them, Exod. xxii. 24. Iſa. ix. 17. And this is the caſe here, which very probably was literally fulfilled in Judas, who might have a wife and children; ſince it looks as if the other apoſtles had, and certain it is that one of them had a wife, even Peter, in the times of Chriſt; ſee 1 Cor. ix. 5. Matt. viii. 14. And this was verified in the people of the Jews; whom the Lord divorced from himſelf, and wrote a Lo-ammi upon them, and left them as orphans and fatherleſs, Hoſ. i. 9. This will never be the caſe of Chriſt's people, or the chriſtian church, John xiv. 18. though it will be of the antichriſtian one, Rev. xviii. 7, 8.

℣. 10. Let his children be continually vagabonds, and beg, &c.] Wander from place to place, begging their bread: this is denied of the children of good men in David's time, Pſal. xxxvii. 25. yet was threatened to the children of Eli, 1 Sam. ii. 36. and was very likely literally true of the children of Judas; and was certainly the caſe of multitudes of the children of the Jews, the poſterity of them that crucified Chriſt, at the time of their deſtruction by the Romans; when great numbers were diſperſed, and wandered about in various countries, as vagabonds, begging their bread from door to door; which is reckoned [a] by them a great affliction, and very diſtreſſing. Let them ſeek their bread alſo out of their deſolate places; either deſcribing, as Kimchi thinks, the miſerable cottages, forlorn and deſolate houſes, in which they lived, and from whence they went out to every one that paſſed by, to aſk relief of them: or it may be rendered, becauſe of their deſolate places [b]; or, after them; ſo the Targum, "after their deſolation was made;" when their grand houſe was left deſolate, their temple, as our Lord ſaid it ſhould, and was, Matt. xxiii. 38. and all their other houſes in Jeruſalem and in Judea; then were they obliged to ſeek their bread of others elſewhere, and by begging. The Syriac verſion wants this verſe.

℣. 11. Let the extortioner catch all that he hath, &c.] Or, lay a ſnare for all [c]; as the Romans did, by bringing in their army, invading the land of Judea, and beſieging the city of Jeruſalem; who are the extortioner or exacter that demanded tribute of them; which they refuſed to pay, and therefore they ſeized on all they had for it. The Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, the creditor; who ſometimes for a debt would take wife and children, and all that a man had; ſee 2 Kings iv. 1, 2. Matt. xviii. 25. It might be literally true of Judas; who dying in debt, his wife and children, and all he had, might be laid hold on for payment. And let the ſtranger ſpoil his labour; plunder his houſe of all his goods and ſubſtance he had been labouring for: which was true of the Romans, who were aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael; who came into the land, and ſpoiled their houſes, fields and vineyards, they had been labouring in; they took away their place and nation, and all they had, John xi. 48.

℣. 12. Let there be none to extend mercy unto him, &c.] No pity is ever expreſſed at hearing or reading the ſad caſe of Judas; and though the Jews were pitied of thoſe that carried them captive to Babylon, Pſal. cvi. 46. yet in their laſt deſtruction by the Romans, no mercy was ſhewn them; the wrath of God and man came upon them to the uttermoſt, 1 Theſſ. ii. 16. Neither let there be any to favour his fatherleſs children; to beſtow any benefit upon them; to relieve their wants, nor to protect their perſons; no more reſpect ſhewn them than to their father, being ſhunned and hated for their father's ſake.

℣. 13. Let his poſterity be cut off, &c.] As the ſeed of the wicked are ſaid to be, Pſal. xxxvii. 28. or cut down, as a tree to the very root; as the Jewiſh nation was by the ax of God's judgment, which John ſays, was laid to the root of the tree, and the blow juſt going to be given, as it was in a few years after, Matt. iii. 10. or, as the Targum, "let his end "be for deſtruction;" and ſo the Syriac verſion, let their end be for deſtruction; their laſt end, which it is ſaid, ſhall be cut off, and iſſue in death, eternal death; when the end of a good man is peace and eternal life, ſee Pſal. xxxvii. 37, 38. Rom. vi. 21. And in the generation following let their name be blotted out; or, in another age [d]; the next age, the third generation; meaning the name of the poſterity of Judas, and the name of the people of the Jews, ſo as to be ſpoken of with honour and reputation; but inſtead of that, they are for a taunt, a proverb and a curſe, in all places.

℣. 14. Let the iniquity of his fathers be remembred with the Lord, &c.] Not of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob;

Jacob; who; though they had their failings, they were not remembred, and much leſs puniſhed in their poſterity, but were forgiven: rather of the Amorites and Hittites; the one being ſaid to be the father, and the other the mother of the Jews, Ezek. xvi. 3. they ſucceeding them in their land, and imitating their example, and committing the ſame ſins they did: or rather, of their wicked anceſtors, who killed the prophets; and the meaſure of whoſe ſins Judas and the Jews filled up in crucifying Chriſt, ſee Matt. xxiii. 31, 32. The iniquity of theſe may be ſaid to be remembred, it not being forgiven, when it was brought to account, and puniſhed in their poſterity, doing the ſame wicked actions; compare with this Rev. xvi. 19. and xviii. 5. And let not the ſin of his mother be blotted out; or forgiven; but ſtand as a debt to be accounted for: meaning not the ſin of his mother Eve, nor of his immediate parent; but either of the Hittite as before, or of the ſynagogue of the Jews, or Jeruſalem, which killed the prophets of the Lord.

℣. 15. Let them be before the Lord continually, &c.] And not caſt behind his back, or into the depths of the ſea, never to be ſeen more, as ſins are when forgiven; but be always in ſight, as loathſome and abominable, and cauſing thoſe that committed them to be abhorred for them; and be before him, as a Judge, to examine them, the nature and deſert of them, and to condemn and puniſh for them; ſee Exod. xx. 5. The Targum is, "let them be before the Word of the Lord always; ſee Heb. iv. 13. That he may cut off the memory of them from the earth; ſo that they may not be remembered with any applauſe, or their name ſpoken of with any commendation; ſee Job xviii. 17.

℣. 16. Becauſe that he remembered not to ſhew mercy, &c.] As Judas did not; neither to the poor, whom he cared not for, John xii. 6. nor to Chriſt, whom he betrayed with a kiſs to his enemies: nor had theſe words of Chriſt any effect upon him, to move his pity and compaſſion, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Matt. xxvi. 49, 50. nor did the Jews ſhew mercy to him: they were a mercileſs and hard hearted people; though mercy was one of the weightier matters of the law, this they omitted, Matt. xxiii. 23. their want of compaſſion may be obſerved in the prieſt and Levite paſſing by the man wounded by thieves, Luke x. 30, 31, 32. Nor did they ſhew any mercy to Chriſt, when they ſmote and buffeted him; nor did it move their pity, when Pilate brought him forth, with a crown of thorns on his head, and in a miſerable condition, ſaying, Behold the man; but they cried out, Crucify him, crucify him; and gave him gall for his meat, and vinegar to drink; and mocked him when in all his miſeries and agonies. But perſecuted the poor and needy man; Chriſt, who became poor for our ſakes, and ſtood in need of the miniſtration of others to him, 2 Cor. viii. 9. Luke viii. 3. and was poor in ſpirit, a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with griefs; him, Judas and the Jews perſecuted to death, as follows: That he might even ſlay the broken in heart; Chriſt, whoſe heart was broken with the reproach and cruel uſage of men, Pſal. lxix. 20. whoſe life the Jews ſought to take away, and by means of Judas did.

℣. 17. As he loved curſing, ſo let it come unto him, &c.] Judas loved that which brought a curſe upon him, ſin; and ſo he may be ſaid to love the curſe; juſt as ſinners are ſaid to love death, Prov. viii. 36. He was deſirous of, and ſought after it, to bring Chriſt to an accurſed death; and which he accompliſhed and pleaſed himſelf with; and therefore it was a juſt retaliation upon him, that the curſe ſhould light on him, and he himſelf come to a ſhameful and ignominious death. The Jews loved the curſing law, the flying roll, called the curſe in Zech. v. 2, 3. which curſes every tranſgreſſor of it: they boaſted of it, reſted in it, and ſought for righteouſneſs by it; and ſubmitted not unto, but deſpiſed the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and therefore it was but juſt they ſhould come under the curſe of the law: they imprecated the curſe on them and their children, ſaying, His blood be upon us and them, Matt. xxvii. 25. and which accordingly came upon them, and remains to this day. As he delighted not in bleſſing, ſo let it be far from him; Judas delighted not in the good will and good wiſhes of any to Chriſt, as appears from his diſlike of the ointment being poured on his head by the poor woman, in John xii. 4, 5. and ſo the Jews were diſpleaſed at the children, and at the diſciples in the temple, bleſſing Chriſt, pronouncing him bleſſed, and wiſhing bleſſings to him, Matt. xxi. 15, 16. Luke xix. 38, 39. yea, they delighted not in their own bleſſedneſs, or in that which only could give it to them; they delighted not in Chriſt, who was ſent to bleſs them, but deſpiſed and rejected him; nor in the goſpel, which is full of bleſſings; and particularly not in the doctrine of juſtification by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which commonly makes a man bleſſed: yea, in a ſenſe, they judged themſelves unworthy of everlaſting life; and therefore it was but a righteous thing that bleſſing ſhould be far from Judas and the Jews, as it was; even temporal, ſpiritual and eternal bleſſings: yet there have been a ſort of heretics [e], that have highly praiſed and commended Judas, as doing a brave and noble action in betraying Chriſt, whereby the work of ſalvation was haſtened.

℣. 18. As he clothed himſelf with curſing like as with his garment, &c.] He was full of it; his mouth was full of curſing and bitterneſs; it was viſible in him, eaſy to be diſcerned; he took pride as well as pleaſure in it, it was in his eſteem an ornament to him, as his clothes were. The Syriac verſion renders it, as armour; as if it was a protection to him, or he thought it to be ſo. So let it come into his bowels like water; the meaning is, let the wrath of God and the curſe of the law come into his conſcience, and make ſad work there, and fill him with dread and terror, and that in great abundance, and with great force; like a flood of waters that carry all before it; or like the waters of jealouſy which made the belly to ſwell and the thigh to rot; or the flying roll of the curſe, which entering into the houſe of the ſinner deſtroyed it, and all in it, Numb. v. 22. Zech. v. 4. And like oil into his bones; which is more piercing and penetrating than water; and ſignifies the inward and quick ſenſe he ſhould have of his ſins, and of the wrath of God for them; ſee Job xx. 11.

℣. 19. Let it be unto him as the garment which covereth him, &c.] Let him be ſurrounded on all ſides with the wrath of God; and let it be viſible to all, as a man's garment on him is; ſee Iſa. lxvi. 24. And for a girdle wherewith he is girded continually; let him be in the utmoſt ſtraits and diſtreſs, being encompaſſed about with the curſe and wrath of God; and let that ſtick cloſe unto him as a man's girdle does; and let him not be able to get clear of it, or extricate himſelf out of it, as no man can on whom it is.

℣. 20.

℣. 20. Let this be the reward of mine adverſaries from the Lord, &c.] Who were ſo many Satans, as the word uſed ſignifies; and Judas particularly is called a devil; and of the ſame malevolent and diabolical diſpoſition were the Jews in general, John vi. 70. and viii. 44. and what is before imprecated upon them is the juſt recompence of reward for their hatred to Chriſt and ill uſage of him. And of them that ſpeak evil againſt my ſoul; or life[f]; in order to take it away, as did the falſe witneſſes that roſe up againſt him, and the Jews who charged him with ſedition and blaſphemy.

℣. 21. But do thou for me, O God the Lord, for thy names ſake, &c.] The ſenſe of the petition is, and which is a prayer of Chriſt as man; that the Lord God would take his part, be on his ſide, be preſent with him, work with him, help and aſſiſt him, and that for his own honour and glory, for his truth and faithfulneſs-ſake, who had promiſed him help and aſſiſtance, Pſal. lxxxix. 21, 22, 33, 34. Becauſe thy mercy is good, deliver thou me; or thy kindneſs[g]; meaning the loving-kindneſs of God to Chriſt, which he always bore to him, and was eminently and ſuperlatively good; which he makes uſe of as an argument for his deliverance out of all his troubles, and from death itſelf; ſee Pſal. lxix. 14, 16.

℣. 22. For I am poor and needy, &c.] As he was in human nature, being born of poor parents, brought up in a mean manner, had not where to lay his head, and was miniſtred to by others; tho' he was Lord of all, and immenſely rich in the perfections of his nature, and in his vaſt empire and dominion, and the revenues ariſing from thence; ſee 2 Cor. viii. 9. It may here chiefly reſpect his helpleſs and forlorn eſtate as man, at the time of his ſufferings and death; ſee Pſal. xl. 17. And my heart is wounded within me; with the ſins of his people on him, with a ſenſe of divine wrath, and when under divine deſertions, eſpecially when his ſoul was exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death, Matt. xxvi. 38. ſee Pſal. xl. 12.

℣. 23. I am gone like the ſhadow when it declineth, &c.] When the ſun is ſetting, and the ſhadow is going off; man's life is often compared to a ſhadow, becauſe fleeting, momentary, and ſoon gone, 1 Chron. xxix. 15. Job xiv. 2. Pſal. cii. 11. and death is expreſſed by going the way of all fleſh; and by going to the grave, the houſe for all living, a man's long home, Joſh. xxiii. 14. Job xxx. 23. and ſo is the death of Chriſt, Luke xxii. 22. it may be rendered, I am made to go[h], denoting the violent death of Chriſt, who was cut off out of the land of the living, and whoſe life was taken away from the earth, Iſa. liii. 8. I am toſſed up and down as the locuſt; or ſhaken out[i], by the wind, as the locuſt is by the eaſt-wind, and carried from place to place, Exod. x. 13. or when a ſwarm of them by a ſtrong wind are crouded together and thrown upon one another; or like the graſhopper, which leaps from hedge to hedge, and has no certain abode: and ſuch was the caſe of Chriſt here on earth; and eſpecially it may have reſpect not only to his being ſometimes in Judea and ſometimes in Galilee, ſometimes in the temple and ſometimes in the mount of Olives; but to his being toſſed about after his apprehenſion, when he was led to Annas, and then to Caiaphas, then to Pilate, then to Herod, then delivered to the ſoldiers, and by them led to Calvary, and crucified.

℣. 24. My knees are weak through faſting, &c.] Either voluntary or forced, through want of food or refreſhment; this was verified in Chriſt, when he kneeled and prayed, and his ſweat was as it were great drops of blood falling to the ground; ſee Pſal. lxix. 10. And my fleſh faileth of fatneſs; or for want of oil[k]; the radical moiſture of his fleſh being dried up like a potſherd, Pſal. xxii. 15.

℣. 25. I became alſo a reproach unto them, &c.] Or they reproached him; not only in life, traducing his converſation, blaſpheming his miracles, calling him a Samaritan, ſaying he had a devil, and charging him with ſedition; but at the time of his death they reviled him, and treated him in the moſt opprobrious manner. When they looked upon me, they ſhaked their heads; which was verified in the Jews as they paſſed by the croſs of Chriſt, whither they came to ſtare upon him and ſcoff at him, Matt. xxvii. 39.

℣. 26. Help me, O Lord my God, &c.] Jehovah the Father is here addreſſed, who is the God of Chriſt, as Chriſt is man; who formed him, ſupported him, and glorified him; and whom Chriſt loved, believed in, obeyed and prayed unto; nor did he pray to a God that could not hear, but to one that was able to ſave him from death: as a divine perſon he needed no help, being the mighty God, the moſt mighty, the almighty; but as man he did, being encompaſſed about with infirmities; and as mediator help was promiſed him, he expected it, and he had it, Pſalm lxxxix. 21. Iſa. l. 7, 8. and xlix. 8. O ſave me according to thy mercy; or kindneſs; as before in ℣. 21. from ſufferings, and out of them; from death and the grave, as he was; or his people by him, who are ſaved not by works of righteouſneſs, but according to the mercy of God, Tit. iii. 5.

℣. 27. That they may know that this is thy hand, &c.] Which inflicted vengeance, and executed judgments on Judas and the Jews, as before imprecated; ſo the Targum, "that they may know "that this is thy ſtroke;" or which was concerned in all the ſorrows and ſufferings of the Meſſiah, which could never have come upon him had it not been the will of God; it was his hand and council that determined it, or men could never have effected it; ſee Acts iv. 28. John xix. 11. or which wrought deliverance and ſalvation as before prayed for; ſee Pſal. cxviii. 21—23. That thou, Lord, haſt done it; one or other, or all the above things; the finger of God was to be ſeen in them; particularly in the ſufferings of Chriſt, and in his exaltation; ſee Acts ii. 23. and v. 31.

℣. 28. Let them curſe, but bleſs thou, &c.] Let them curſe me, as Shimei did David, the type of Chriſt; let them curſe themſelves, as they did; or my people: or let them be curſed, as the Syriac verſion; curſed in life and at death, and to all eternity: but bleſs thou me, the Meſſiah; as he did, when he raiſed him from the dead, ſet him at his right hand, and gave him a name above every one, and made him moſt bleſſed for evermore; and bleſs my people with all ſpiritual bleſſings of grace, and with eternal glory and happineſs. Or be thou bleſſed; let honour, bleſſing and praiſe be continually aſcribed to thee; if God does but bleſs, it is no matter if wicked wicked men curſe, ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it; ſee 2 Sam. xvi. 11, 12. When they ariſe, let them be aſhamed; be ſuffered to do thoſe things which may bring ſhame and diſgrace upon them; or let them be diſappointed and ſo confounded, as the Jews were; who though they ſo far gained their point as to bring Chriſt to the duſt of death and the grave, yet to their great confuſion he roſe again from the dead; or let them be aſhamed at the laſt day, as they will be when Chriſt ſhall come in the clouds of heaven and be their judge, who will then be glad to ſhelter themſelves in rocks and caves. This is imprecated to be done when they ſhall ariſe; riſe up againſt Chriſt to take away his life; riſe up againſt his diſciples to perſecute them, againſt his goſpel to contradict and blaſpheme it, and againſt his cauſe and intereſt to cruſh it; or againſt the Romans, to ſhake off their yoke, when they were brought to great ſhame and confuſion; or when they ſhall ariſe at the reſurrection of the dead, which will be to ſhame and everlaſting contempt, Dan. xii. 2. But let thy ſervant rejoice; the Meſſiah, who appeared in the form of a ſervant; came not as a temporal lord and prince, to be miniſtred unto, but as a ſervant, to miniſter to others; and who is a ſervant of God's chooſing, calling and ſending, and whom he faithfully ſerved; and who, as prayed for, did rejoice in the ſtrength of the Lord, given him as man; and in the ſalvation wrought for and by him, Pſal. xxi. 1. in the work of the Lord proſpering in his hand; in his victory over ſin, Satan, the world, and death; in the preſence of God he was made glad with, and in the glory promiſed him, which he had with his Father before the world was, Pſal. xvi. 11. and xxi. 6.

℣. 29. Let mine adverſaries be clothed with ſhame, &c.] This is only explanative of what is ſaid before. And let them cover themſelves with their own confuſion, as with a mantle: the Arabic verſion is, as with a breaſt-plate. Some underſtand it as a petition of Chriſt, that they might be brought to repentance for their ſins, and ſo to ſhame for them; which is an inſtance of his wondrous grace and goodneſs; and it is certain, he prayed for the forgiveneſs of his enemies when on the croſs, Luke xxiii. 34.

℣. 30. I will greatly praiſe the Lord with my mouth, &c.] Vocally, and in the higheſt ſtrains. Yea, I will praiſe him among the multitude; of converted perſons, both Jews and Gentiles, and by them: or, among the mighty[l]; or great ones; the great congregation, as in Pſal. xxii. 25. among the innumerable and mighty angels in heaven; or, as the Targum, "among the wiſe men;" his own diſciples, made wiſe unto ſalvation, and to win ſouls; being filled with the gifts of wiſdom and knowledge; among and with whom Chriſt ſung an hymn of praiſe after the celebration of the ſupper, Matt. xxvi. 30.

℣. 31. For he ſhall ſtand at the right hand of the poor, &c.] Of the Meſſiah, as in ℣. 22. at whoſe right hand the Lord was, to guide and direct, help and aſſiſt, protect and defend, Pſal. xvi. 8. or of his poor people, who are poor in every ſenſe; but the Lord is on their ſide, and is a preſent help in time of trouble, Pſal. xlvi. 1, 5. To ſave him from thoſe that condemn his ſoul; the Meſſiah; from his judges, the high prieſt and Jewiſh ſanhedrim, and Pilate the Roman governor, who condemned him to death; but he committed his ſpirit, or ſoul, to God, who received it, and raiſed his body from the dead; and would not ſuffer it to ſee corruption, as a teſtimony of his innocence: or the ſoul of the poor ſaints, which the Lord ſaves from the condemnation of ſin, Satan, the law, and their own conſciences, Rom. viii. 1, 33, 34.

PSALM CX.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm was written by David, as the title ſhews, and which is confirmed by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Matt. xxii. 43. and by the apoſtle Peter, Acts ii. 34. and was not written by any one of the ſingers concerning him, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi; nor by Melchizedek, nor by Eliezer the ſervant of Abraham, concerning him, as Jarchi and others: for the former could not call Abraham his lord, ſince he was greater than he, Heb. vii. 7. and though the latter might, yet he could not aſſign his maſter a place at the right hand of God; nor ſay he was a prieſt after the order of Melchizedek: and as it was written by David, it could not be concerning himſelf, as the Targum, but ſome other; not of Hezekiah, to whom ſome of the Jews applied it, as Tertullian[m] affirms; but of the Meſſiah, as is clear from the quotation by Chriſt, Matt. xxii. 43, 44. and from the references to it by the apoſtle, Acts ii. 34. 1 Cor. xv. 25. Heb. i. 13. And that this was the general ſenſe of the ancient Jewiſh church, is manifeſt from the ſilence of the phariſees, when a paſſage out of it was objected to them by our Lord concerning the Meſſiah; and is the ſenſe that ſome of the ancient Jews give of it; ſays R. Joden[n], "God will make the King Meſſiah ſit "at his right hand, &c." and the ſame is ſaid by others[o]; and it is likewiſe owned by ſome of the more modern[p] ones; and we Chriſtians can have no doubt about it. The pſalm is only applicable to Chriſt, and cannot be accommodated to any other; no not to David as a type, as ſome pſalms concerning him may.

℣. 1. The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, &c.] The Targum is, "the Lord ſaid in his Word." Galatinus[q] ſays, the true Targum of Jonathan has it, "the Lord ſaid to his Word;" and produces an authority for it. Theſe are the words of Jehovah the Father, to his Son the Meſſiah; the Adon, or Lord, ſpoken of in Iſa. vi. 1. Mal. iii. 1. the one Lord Jeſus, and only potentate; the Lord of all, the Lord of David, and of every believer; not by right of creation only, as of all mankind; but by redemption, having bought them; and by right of marriage, having eſpouſed them; and by their own conſent, they owning him to be their Lord. The words ſaid to him by Jehovah, as follow, were ſaid in his mind, in his eternal purpoſe and decree; to which he, lying in his boſom, was privy, when he fore-ordained him to be the Redeemer; and in the council and covenant of peace, when he promiſed him this glory as the reward of his ſufferings; and in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, which ſpeak as of the ſufferings of Chriſt, ſo of the glory that ſhould follow; and when the fact was done, when after his death, reſurrection, aſcenſion and entrance into heaven, he was placed, as follows: Sit thou at my right hand; of power and majeſty; expreſſive of the honour done to Chriſt, and the glory put on him in the human nature, ſuch as angels nor any creature ever had, Heb. i. 13. it being always accounted honourable to ſit at the right hand of great perſonages, 1 Kings ii. 19. Pſal. xlv. 9. Matt. xx. 21. and alſo of rule, and power and authority; being upon the ſame throne with his Father, exerciſing the ſame government over angels and men; ſitting is explained by reigning in 1 Cor. xv. 25. It alſo denotes his having done his work, and to ſatisfaction; and therefore is ſet down, being entred into his reſt, and having ceaſed from his work and labour, enjoying the preſence of his divine Father; in which is fulneſs of joy, and at whoſe right hand are pleaſures for evermore: and it alſo ſignifies the continuance of regal honour and power; he ſits and continues a King as well as a Prieſt for ever. Until I make thine enemies thy footſtool; Chriſt has his enemies; all the enemies of his people are his; ſome are overcome already by him, as ſin, Satan, and the world; and the Jews, his enemies, who would not have him to reign over them, have been deſtroyed: but as yet all things are not put under his feet which will be; as Antichriſt, and the kings of the earth that are with him, who will be overcome by him; the beaſt and falſe prophet will be taken and caſt into the lake of fire; where alſo the old ſerpent, the devil, after he has been bound and looſed, will be caſt likewiſe; and when the laſt enemy, death, ſhall be deſtroyed: till that time comes, Chriſt reigns and will reign, and afterwards too, even to all eternity. The alluſion is to the cuſtom of conquerors treading upon the necks of the conquered; ſee Joſh. x. 24.

℣. 2. The Lord ſhall ſend the rod of thy ſtrength out of Zion, &c.] His royal and powerful ſceptre, called the ſceptre of righteouſneſs, Pſal. xlv. 6. and is no other than the goſpel, the power of God unto ſalvation; and which is mighty through him, for the reducing ſouls to the obedience of Chriſt; when it comes with power, and works effectually. This was firſt preached in Zion, or Jeruſalem, and went out from thence into all parts of the world; the firſt miniſters of it had their commiſſion there, and were ſent from thence to publiſh it all over the world; ſee Iſa. ii. 3. Luke xxiv. 47. Acts i. 4. and viii. 4. by means of which the kingdom of Chriſt was ſet up and ſpread in the world; with this rod and ſceptre in his hand, he went forth with his miniſters, conquering and to conquer, Rev. vi. 2. The Jews [r] own this rod to be a rod in the hand of the Meſſiah, which they ſeem to underſtand literally; and have a fabulous notion of its being the ſame that Jacob, Judah, Moſes, Aaron, David, and ſo every king of Judah, had, down to the deſtruction of the temple: the Targum in the king's Bible is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall ſend, &c." the eſſential Word. Rule thou in the midſt of thine enemies; or, thou ſhalt rule, as the Targum and Arabic verſion; in the hearts of thoſe, who, in their unregenerate ſtate, are enemies: but the arrows of his word being ſharp in them, they are brought to ſubmit to him; the everlaſting doors are cauſed to open; he enters in, takes poſſeſſion of their hearts, and rules there. Or this may be underſtood of his church in the world, which is his kingdom, and lies ſurrounded with enemies on all hands; but in ſpite of them, and all their oppoſition, he will ſupport his kingdom and intereſt.

℣. 3. Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power, &c.] Or, in the day of thine army [s]. When thou muſtereſt thy forces, ſendeſt forth thy generals, the apoſtles and miniſters of the word, in the firſt times of the goſpel; when Chriſt went forth working with them, and their miniſtry was attended with ſigns, and miracles, and gifts of the holy Ghoſt; and which was a day of great power indeed, when wonderful things were wrought; the god of this world was caſt out, the heathen oracles ceaſed, their idols were aboliſhed, and their temples deſolate; and Chriſtianity prevailed every where. Or this may reſpect the whole goſpel-diſpenſation, the day of ſalvation, which now is and will be as long as the world is; and the doctrine of it is daily the power and wiſdom of God to them that are ſaved. Or rather this ſignifies the ſet time of love and life to every particular ſoul at converſion; which is a day for light, and a day of power; when the exceeding greatneſs of the power of God is put forth in the regeneration of them: and the people that were given to Chriſt by his Father, in the covenant of grace, and who, whilſt in a ſtate of nature are rebellious and unwilling, are made willing to be ſaved by Chriſt, and him only; to ſerve him in every religious duty and ordinance; to part with their ſins and ſinful companions, and with their own righteouſneſs; to ſuffer the loſs of all things for him; to deny themſelves, and take up the croſs and follow him: and when they become free-will-offerings to him, as the word [t] ſignifies; not only willingly offer up their ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe, but themſelves, ſouls and bodies, to him; as well as enter voluntiers [u] into his ſervice, and chearfully fight his battles, under him, the Captain of their ſalvation; being aſſured of victory, and certain of the crown of life and glory, when they have fought the good fight, and finiſhed their courſe. The alluſion ſeems to be to an army of voluntiers, ſuch as deſcribed by Cicero [w], who willingly offered themſelves through their ardour for liberty. In the beauties of holineſs, from the womb of the morning: this does not deſign the place where theſe willing ſubjects of Chriſt ſhould appear; either in Zion, beautiful for ſituation; or in Jeruſalem, the holy city, compact together; or in the temple, the ſanctuary, in which ſtrength and beauty are ſaid to be; or in the church, the perfection of beauty: but the habit or dreſs in which they ſhould appear, even in the beautiful garment of Chriſt's righteouſneſs and holineſs; the robe of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation; the beſt robe, the wedding garment; gold of Ophir, raiment of needle-work; and which is upon all them that believe: as alſo the ſeveral beautiful graces of the Spirit; the beauty of internal holineſs, by which ſaints are all-glorious within; and holineſs is the beauty and glory of God himſelf, of angels and glorified ſaints. This, tho' imperfect now, is the new man put on as a garment; ment; and is true holineſs, and very ornamental. The phraſe, from the womb of the morning, either ſtands in connection with the beauties of holineſs; and the ſenſe is, that as ſoon as the morning of the goſpel-diſpenſation dawns, theſe people ſhould be born again, be illuminated, and appear holy and righteous: or, from the womb, from the morning [x], ſhall they be in the beauties of holineſs; that is, as ſoon as they are born again, and as ſoon as the morning of ſpiritual light and grace breaks in upon them, and they are made light in the Lord, they ſhall be clad with theſe beautiful garments of holineſs and righteouſneſs; ſo, from the womb, ſignifies literally as ſoon as men are born; ſee Pſal. lviii. 3. Iſa. xlviii. 8. Hoſ. ix. 11. or elſe with the latter clauſe, Thou haſt the dew of thy youth; and ſo are rendered, more than the womb of the morning; i. e. than the dew that is from the womb of the morning, is to thee the dew of thy youth: that is, more than the dew of the morning are thy converts; the morning is the parent of the dew, Job xxxviii. 28. but the former ſenſe is beſt; for this laſt clauſe is a member or propoſition of itſelf, thou haſt the dew of thy youth; which expreſſes the open property Chriſt has in his people, when made willing; and when they appear in the beauty of holineſs, as ſoon as they are born of the Spirit, and the true light of grace ſhines in them; then thoſe who were ſecretly his, even whilſt unwilling, manifeſtly appear to belong unto him: ſo young lambs juſt yeaned, are in Homer [y], called ερσαι, dews; and it is remarkable, that the Hebrew words for dew and a lamb, are near in ſound. Young converts are Chriſt's lambs; they are Chriſt's youth, and the dew of it; they are regenerated by the grace of God, comparable to dew, of which they are begotten, to a lively hope of heaven; and which diſtilling upon them, makes them fruitful in good works: and who for their numbers, and which I take to be the thing chiefly deſigned by this figure, are like to the drops of the dew; which in great profuſion is ſpread over trees, herbs and plants, where it hangs in drops innumerable: and ſuch a multitude of converts is here promiſed to Chriſt, and which he had in the firſt times of the goſpel, both in Judea, when three thouſand perſons were converted under one ſermon; and eſpecially in the Gentile world, where the ſavour of his knowledge was diffuſed in every place; and as will be in the latter day, when a nation ſhall be born at once, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles be brought in. The ſenſe given of theſe words, as formed upon the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, reſpecting the generation of Chriſt's human or divine nature, is without any foundation in the original text.

℣. 4. The Lord hath ſworn, and will not repent, &c.] What he ſwore about, and did not repent of, was the prieſthood of Chriſt, as follows; and which ſhews the importance of it, ſince when Jehovah ſwears, as it is by himſelf, becauſe he can ſwear by no greater; ſo it is about matters of great moment only that are ſworn to by the Lord, as this of the prieſthood of Chriſt was; which was concerned in things pertaining to God and his glory, as well as in making reconciliation for the ſins of his people: and it ſhews the truth, and was for the confirmation of it; ſince doubts might ariſe whether the Aaronical prieſthood was changed, ſeeing it was given to Phinehas for an everlaſting prieſthood; and ſince ſo great a perſon as the Son of God is ſaid to be a Prieſt; and ſince in the human nature he was of the tribe of Judah, of which tribe nothing was ſaid concerning the prieſthood: and this oath was not ſo much for Chriſt's ſake, to eſtabliſh the prieſthood with him, and aſſure him of it, as for the ſake of his people; who, by two immutable things, the word and oath of God, might have ſtrong conſolation from it; and it clearly ſhews the validity of his prieſthood; that he was called of God to this office, and inveſted with it, and conſecrated in it with an oath; and which is expreſſive of the ſingularity of it, and of the dignity and preference of the prieſthood of Chriſt to that of Aaron's, Heb. vii. 20, 21, 28. What follows was ſaid, and this oath was made, in the council of peace, when Chriſt was called to this office, and he accepted of it, Pſal. xl. 6, 7, 8. and of this the Lord never repented; as he never does of any of his acts of grace, Numb. xxiii. 19. Rom. xi. 29. Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchizedek; or, according to the word of Melchizedek [z]; that is, according to what is ſaid of him; there being an agreement between the things ſaid of one and of the other; ſo the Syriac verſion, according to the likeneſs of Melchizedek, ſee Heb. vii. 15. of him no mention is made elſewhere, but in Gen. xiv. 18. and in the epiſtle to the Hebrews. Various are the opinions of men concerning him: ſome think he was not a man, but an angel that appeared to Abraham: others, a divine power, ſuperior to Chriſt; who were called Melchizedecians: and others, that he was the holy Ghoſt; and others, the Son of God himſelf, in an human form. On the other hand, ſome take him to be a mere man. The general notion of the Jews is, that he was Shem, the ſon of Noah; others, that he was a Canaanitiſh king, of the poſterity of Ham: but others do not think it proper or lawful to inquire who he was, or from whom he deſcended; this being purpoſely hidden from men, that he might be more clearly a type of Chriſt. That there is a likeneſs between them is certain; the ſignification of his name, a title of office, King of righteouſneſs, and King of peace, agrees with Chriſt the Lord, our righteouſneſs and our peace: his being without father, mother, deſcent, beginning of days, and end of life, agree with the divinity, humanity and eternity of Chriſt; and who is likewiſe King and Prieſt, as he was; and who bleſſes his people, as he did Abraham; and refreſhes them with bread and wine, as he did Abraham's ſoldiers; ſee the note on Heb. vii. 2, 3. Now Chriſt is a Prieſt like him; whoſe office is to offer ſacrifice, which he has done, even himſelf, for the atonement of the ſins of his people; to make interceſſion for them, which he ever lives to do; to introduce their perſons to his Father, and preſent their petitions to him; and to call for every bleſſing for them, and anſwer all charges againſt them: in which office he continues for ever; there never will be any change in his prieſthood, as there has been in Aaron's; nor will he ever have any ſucceſſor; his prieſthood is unchangeable, or does not paſs from one to another, Heb. vii. 24. the efficacy of his blood and ſacrifice always continues, and interceſſion is ever made by him, and the glory of his mediation is ever given him. The apoſtle produces this paſſage in proof of the change of the Aaronical prieſthood, and ſo of the law, Heb. vii. 11—19. and about the time Chriſt appeared as the high prieſt, the legal prieſthood ſenſibly declined, and which the Jews themſelves own; for they ſay, "after the death of "Iſhmael Ben Phabi, the ſplendor of the prieſt-

℣. 5. The Lord at thy right hand, &c.] Theſe words are either directed to Chriſt, at whoſe right hand the Lord was to help and aſſiſt him, Pſal. xvi. 8. or to the church, conſiſting of the Lord's willing people, at whoſe right hand he is to ſave them; is ready to help them, and is a preſent help to them in time of need, Pſal. cix. 31. or rather, to Jehovah the Father, at whoſe right hand the Adonai, or Lord, even David's Lord, and every believer's Lord is, as in ℣. 1. and who is ſpoken of in all the following clauſes; and to whom the things mentioned are aſcribed, and ſo what immediately follows: Shall ſtrike through kings in the day of his wrath; not only ſtrike at them, and ſtrike them; but ſtrike them through, utterly deſtroy them. This is to be underſtood of the kings and princes, that ſtood up and ſet themſelves againſt him, Pſal. ii. 2. which is interpreted of Herod and Pontius Pilate, Acts iv. 26, 27. who both died ſhameful deaths; as did another Herod, that ſet himſelf againſt the apoſtles and church of Chriſt, Acts xii. 1, 2, 23. and alſo of heathens, kings and emperors, who perſecuted the Chriſtians; as Diocletian, Maximilian, and others; who are repreſented as fleeing to rocks and mountains, to hide them from the Lamb, the great day of his wrath being come, Rev. vi. 15, 16, 17. and alſo of the antichriſtian kings, that ſhall be gathered together to he battle of the Lord God Almighty, and ſhall be vercome and ſlain by Chriſt, Rev. xvi. 14, 16. nd xvii. 14. and xix. 20, 21. which will be a time o wrath, when the vials of God's wrath ſhall be poured out upon the antichriſtian kings and ſtates; ſee Rev. xvi. 1, 19. and xi. 18. And may alſo reach the laſt nd general judgment; when kings, as well as oters, ſhall ſtand before him, and receive their awfu doom from him; and ſhall periſh when his rath is kindled againſt them, Pſal. ii. 11, 12.

℣. 6. Hſhall judge among the heathen, &c.] Either rule aong the Gentiles, making them thro' his goſpel bedient by word and deed, and ſo reigning in the hearts by his Spirit and grace; and by making any converts among them, enlarge his dominio from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends f the earth: or inflict judgments on the heathen that is, the Papiſts, as they are called. Theſe e the Gentiles to whom the outward court is giv; the nations that will be angry when the time his wrath, and to judge the dead is come; and om Chriſt will break in pieces with his iron rod; d are the heathen that ſhall periſh out of his land when he is King over all the earth, Rev. xi. 2, 1 and xix. 15. Pſal. x. 16. He ſhall fill the pla with the dead bodies: the Targum adds, "of "ungodly that are ſlain;" namely, at the battle of mageddon; when the fowls of the air ſhall be cal to eat the fleſh of kings, captains, and mighty n; of horſes and their riders; of all men, bond an ree, great and ſmall, Rev. xix. 17, 18. He ſhavound the heads over many countries; that is, ki over many countries, as the Targum explains it: is to be read in the ſingular number, he ſhall wd the head over a large country [c]; him who is thead over a large country; meaning either Satahe god of this world, the wicked one, under wh the world lies; and who has deceived the inhabitants of the earth, and rules them at his pleaſure; him Chriſt has wounded and bruiſed, even his head; deſtroyed him and all his power, policy, ſchemes and works, agreeable to the firſt hint concerning him, Gen. iii. 15. ſee Heb. ii. 14. 1 John iii. 8. or elſe Antichriſt, who is head over a large country, or many countries; the whore that ſits on many waters, which are people, nations and tongues, and reigns over the kings of the earth; who has ſeven heads and ten horns; one of whoſe heads has been wounded already, of which it has been curing again; but ere long this beaſt will receive ſuch a wound from Chriſt, as that he will never recover of it; when he ſhall conſume him with the breath of his mouth, and the brightneſs of his coming; ſee Rev. xvii. 2, 15, 18. and xiii. 1, 3. 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. Muſculus renders it, the head of the country of Rabbah; and refers it to David's conqueſt of the king of the Ammonites, whoſe head-city was Rabbah, 1 Chron. xx. 1, 2.

℣. 7. He ſhall drink of the brook in the way, &c.] This ſome underſtand of the ſufferings of Chriſt, compared to a brook, a flow of waters, becauſe of the abundance of them, as in Pſal. lxix. 1, 2. his partaking of which is ſometimes expreſſed by drinking, Matt. xx. 21. John xviii. 11. and this was in the way of working out the ſalvation of his people, and in his own way to glory, Luke xxiv. 26. If this is the ſenſe, there may be ſome alluſion to the black brook Kidron; over which David, the type of Chriſt, paſſed when in diſtreſs; and over which Chriſt himſelf went into the garden, where his ſorrows began, 2 Sam. xv. 23. John xviii. 1. but ſeeing this clauſe ſtands ſurrounded with others, which only ſpeak of his victories, triumph and exaltation, it ſeems to require a ſenſe agreeable to them; wherefore thoſe interpreters ſeem nearer to the truth of the text, who explain it of Chriſt's victory over all enemies, ſin, Satan, the world, and death; and illuſtrate it by the paſſage in Numb. xxiii. 24. he ſhall drink of the blood of the ſlain; with which compare Iſa. lxiii. 1, 2, 3. Others think the alluſion is to the eagerneſs of a general purſuing a routed army and puſhing on his conqueſt; who, though almoſt choaked with thirſt, yet will not ſtop to refreſh himſelf; but meeting with a brook or rivulet of water by the way, takes a draught of it, and haſtens his purſuit of the enemy: and ſo this is expreſſive of the eagerneſs of Chriſt, to finiſh the great work of man's ſalvation, and the conqueſt of all his and their enemies; ſee Luke ii. 49. and xii. 50. John xviii. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. But I think the clauſe is rather expreſſive of the ſolace, joy and comfort, which Chriſt, as man, has in the preſence of God, and at his right hand, having finiſhed the work of our ſalvation; then he drank to his refreſhment of the river of divine pleaſure, when God ſhewed him the path of life, and raiſed him from the dead, and gave him glory, and introduced him into his preſence; where are fulneſs of joy, and pleaſures for evermore, Pſal. xvi. 11. Therefore ſhall he lift up the head; as he did at his reſurrection; he bowed it when he died, he lifted it up when he roſe again, and ſo when he aſcended on high to his God and Father; when he took his place at his right hand; where his head is lifted up above his enemies, and where he is exalted above angels, principalities and powers, and where he muſt reign till all enemies are put under his feet. Or, ſo ſhall he lift up his head, as Noldius [d] renders it; not that his ſufferings, which he underſtands by drinking out of the brook, were the cauſe of his exaltation, but the conſequent of it: theſe two, Chriſt's humiliation and exaltation, though they are ſometimes joined together, yet not as cauſe and effect, but as the antecedent and conſequent; Chriſt having finiſhed, what according to the divine order was to be finiſhed, glory followed by the ſame order: and ſo the words thus taken reſpect not the cauſe, but the conſecution of things, according to that writer.

PSALM CXI.

THIS pſalm, though without a name, is thought to be penned by David; it is compoſed in an artificial manner, in an alphabetical order, each clauſe or ſentence beginning with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet in courſe, till the whole is finiſhed; this perhaps was done to recommend the pſalm, to make it more obſerved, and to help the memory; the general deſign of it is to excite to praiſe the Lord, from the conſideration of his great and wonderful works.

℣. 1. Praiſe ye the Lord, &c.] Or hallelujah; this is the title of the pſalm, and is expreſſive of the ſubject-matter of it; and ſo it ſtands in the Targum, Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions; as it ſhould, as appears from the pſalm being alphabetical; for the firſt letter of this word is the fifth and not the firſt of the alphabet; it is wanting in the Syriac verſion, which gives the title in this manner, "without a name, concerning the "glorious virtues of the works of God; but it "exhorts us to give thanks to Chriſt; and it is ſaid "in the perſon of the apoſtles." I will praiſe the Lord with my whole heart; the pſalmiſt excites to praiſe God by his own example; the object of his praiſe is Jehovah, the ſelf-exiſtent Being, the Being of beings, the author of his being, and in whom all men live and move, and have their being; the God of their mercies, temporal and ſpiritual, and therefore ſhould praiſe him, even Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit; eſpecially Jehovah the Meſſiah may be here intended, whoſe work of redemption is particularly attended to: the manner in which he determines to perform this ſervice is, with his whole heart; which ought to be engaged in every religious exerciſe, even the whole of it, all the powers and faculties of the ſoul, without being divided between other objects, and diſtracted or drawn off from the Lord by them; the phraſe is not expreſſive of perfection, which is not to be expected in any duty, but of ſincerity and cordial affection. The place where follows, In the aſſembly of the upright, and in the congregation; which may ſignify one and the ſame; even the place where upright perſons aſſemble and gather together for divine worſhip, the tabernacle in David's time, and the temple afterwards; and may point at any place of worſhip in goſpel-times, and the people that meet there; who being for the moſt part upright perſons, or in a judgment of charity ſo accounted, though every individual among them may not be ſuch, are thus called; and that becauſe they have the uprightneſs, righteouſneſs and holineſs of Chriſt imputed to them; and have right ſpirits renewed in them, and ſo are upright in heart; and in conſequence of this, walk uprightly according to the rules of the goſpel. It may be rendered, as it is by the Targum, "in the ſecret[e] of the upright, and "the congregation;" becauſe here the ſecret of the Lord is made known to his people; the myſteries of his grace are revealed, and his ordinances, which are his counſel, are adminiſtered: or it may deſign ſome particular friends and acquaintance of the pſalmiſt's, who privately met and took ſweet counſel together, and communicated their ſecrets to one another, as the other word congregation may intend the public aſſembly of the people; and then the ſenſe is, that he would ſincerely praiſe the Lord both in private and public, and that becauſe of his works; as follows.

℣. 2. The works of the Lord are great, &c.] His works of creation are great, being made out of nothing, are the effects of great power, and the produce of great wiſdom, and which greatly diſplay the glory of their Maker; the works of providence are great, which are daily wrought, eſpecially ſuch as concern the church and people of God, for whom he does great things, whereof they have reaſon to be glad and praiſe his name; the miracles of Chriſt he wrought here on earth were ſurprizingly great ſome of them ſuch as had not been known fro the creation of the world; and yet greater thing were ſhewn him, and done by him, particularly t work of redemption, a work which angels and m n were unequal to, a work which none but the grat God and our Saviour could effect, and is truly called the great ſalvation; the work of grace upon the heart is a great work, and requires the exceeding greatneſs of the divine power, and whh is exerted in the beginning, carrying on, and fiſhing that work; and for all which the Lord is t be praiſed: and the rather ſince they are ſuch as a, Sought out of all them that have pleaſure therein; ſought out becauſe of all the pleaſures of them, or hat are in them[f], which comes to much the ſame nſe: there is a pleaſure in the contemplation of tl works of nature and providence; to behold the wer, wiſdom, and goodneſs of God in them, a his care over all his creatures; and particularl how he makes all things to work together for th good of his people; and eſpecially it is delightfu to obſerve the works of grace, how the glory all the divine perfections is diſplayed in them angels themſelves take pleaſure in looking int hem: now theſe are ſought and found out by th who delight in them; the works of creation ar o be ſought and found in the book of nature, th orks of providence in the book of experience, a the works of grace in the book of God; and in d all of them are recorded there, which are ſearch with pleaſure by thoſe that are inquiſitive after th.

℣. 3. His work is honourable and gloriou c.] Or honour and glory[g] itſelf; there is nothin ean and trifling done by him; nothing unw y of him in nature, providence, and grace; eve ork of his ſerves to diſplay his glory, and ſet the greatneſs of his majeſty; the heavens and t arth are full of his glory; and he does all things and iſely wiſely in the government of the world; and whatever he does in a way of grace is for the glory of it, and tends to make his people honourable and glorious, as well as manifeſts his own glory, and makes for the honour of his own name. And his righteouſneſs endureth for ever; his juſtice and holineſs, which appear in all his ways and works; for there is no unrighteouſneſs in any thing done by him, juſt and true are all his ways; there is a conſtant tenor of righteouſneſs in them all; his faithfulneſs in fulfilling every word of promiſe, in making his words good by his works, is to be ſeen in all generations; and true evangelical righteouſneſs, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is ſo conſiderable a branch of the work of redemption and ſalvation, is an everlaſting one; it can never be aboliſhed, it will anſwer for the ſaints in a time to come.

℣. 4. He hath made his wonderful works to be remembered, &c.] All his works are marvellous ones; his works of creation, that they ſhould riſe out of nothing at a word of command; his works of providence, which have ſuch a depth of wiſdom and knowledge in them, are unſearchable and paſt finding out; and his works of redemption and grace, and theſe are ſo wrought by him, and ſuch methods taken to continue the memory of them, that they cannot well be forgotten: all things in nature are as they were from the beginning; the ſun, moon, and ſtars keep their courſe and ſtation; cold and heat, ſummer and winter, ſeed-time and harveſt, are as they always were; remarkable providences have been carefully recorded, and memorials of them handed down to poſterity. The deliverance of Iſrael out of Egypt was annually remembered in the paſſover; the feeding of them with manna in the wilderneſs, was cauſed to be remembered by a pot of manna preſerved in the tabernacle and temple; and the great work of our redemption by Chriſt is brought to remembrance in the ordinance of the Lord's ſupper, appointed for that purpoſe. The Lord is gracious and full of compaſſion; ſo he was in eternity, and is in time; this appears in all his works, and eſpecially in our ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt; ſee Pſal. lxxxvi. 5, 15.

℣. 5. He hath given meat to them that fear him, &c.] Or a prey[h], alluding to the ſpoil of the Egyptians; or to the manna; corporal food, daily bread, which they that fear him ſhall not want, Pſalm xxxiv. 9. ſpiritual meat, ſuch that endures for ever; the fleſh of Chriſt, which is meat indeed; the word and ordinances, in which are milk for babes, and meat for ſtrong men; ſavoury meat does God give his people, ſuch as their ſouls love, and the world knows nothing of; all is given, and freely given, and in plenty. He will ever be mindful of his covenant; made with Abraham, and that at Sinai; and eſpecially which he made with his people in Chriſt before the world was; and which is the ground and foundation of all his works of grace and redemption, and the reaſon why he gives food unto them; he never forgets that, his promiſes in it, nor the bleſſings of it, nor the people for whom they are made and provided, nor his love unto them; he is a covenant-keeping God.

℣. 6. He hath ſhewed his people the power of his works, &c.] Or his works of power, his mighty works, in which his great power was ſhewn; as to the people of Iſrael in Egypt, at the Red-ſea, in the wilderneſs, and in bringing them to, and ſettling them in the land of Canaan; theſe he ſhewed to them in fact, they ſaw them with their eyes; and he ſhewed or declared them to them in prophecy, before they came to paſs, as Kimchi obſerves, that it might not be ſaid they came by chance. So he hath ſhewed his works of power to his people in goſpel-times, as the miracles of Chriſt, his reſurrection from the dead, redemption by him, and the work of grace on the hearts of men in all ages. That he may give them the heritage of the heathen; the Lord did the above works of his power for the people of Iſrael that he might put them into the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, inherited by heathens; that it might become their inheritance, and they might enjoy their houſes, vineyards and fields; and he wrought powerfully through the miniſtration of the goſpel, by his Spirit and grace, upon the hearts of men in the Gentile world; that the chriſtian church might poſſeſs the dominions of it, as it did in the times of Conſtantine and others, and as it will more largely in the latter day; ſee Pſalm ii. 8. Rev. ii. 26.

℣. 7. The works of his hands are verity and judgment, &c.] His works of providence are juſt and true, particularly thoſe which reſpected the driving the Canaanites out of their land, and ſettling the Iſraelites in it; theſe were done according to the truth of the divine promiſes and prophecies, and ſo were verity or truth; and for the ſins of the heathen, and by him who has a right to diſpoſe of the earth and the fulneſs of it to whom he pleaſes, and ſo are judgment or righteous; and this holds good of his works of grace upon the heart, which is the work of his hands, and is truth in the inward parts; and is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; and of all his acts of grace in election, redemption, &c. which are according to the truth of the divine nature and its perfections, and in which there is no unrighteouſneſs. Some interpret this of the two tables of ſtone, which were the work, writing and engraving of God, and on which were inſcribed the judgments of the Lord; and are true and righteous altogether. Aben Ezra underſtands it of the law implanted in the hearts of men. All his commandments are ſure; firm, and to be believed and complied with, either to deſtroy the nations, or to poſſeſs their land; or rather the commands of the moral law, which are firm and ſure, one jot or tittle of which ſhall never paſs away; all have been fulfilled by Chriſt, and remain with him a rule of walk and converſation; or the word which the Lord has commanded to a thouſand generations, Pſalm cv. 8. the covenant which is ordered in all things and ſure; the promiſes of which are yea and amen in Chriſt; and the bleſſings of it, the ſure mercies of David; and even the doctrines of the goſpel are the commandments and teſtimony of the Lord, which are ſure, Pſal. xix. 8. and to be believed, being the word of truth, the goſpel of our ſalvation, and coming from God who cannot lie.

℣. 8. They ſtand faſt for ever and ever, &c.] Not only the covenant and its promiſes do, but both law and goſpel, the commandments of the one and the doctrines of the other; the law is an eternal law, as to the matter of it, and is not made void by faith, but eſtabliſhed; and the goſpel is an everlaſting goſpel, which lives and abides for ever, being eſtabliſhed upon the word of God, which cannot be broken; and is continued in the church, the pillar and ground of truth, from whence it can never be removed. And are done in truth and uprightneſs; either made by the Lord according to the truth of things, the moral perfections of his nature and will, and the rectitude of it; or obſerved by men that truly fear the Lord, with great truth and ſincerity.

℣. 9. He ſent redemption unto his people, &c.] Or one to redeem them, who effected it; Moſes to redeem Iſrael out of Egypt, and Chriſt to redeem his people from ſin, Satan, and the law, and who has done it; and having obtained eternal redemption, he ſent his miniſters to publiſh it in the world, and his Spirit to apply it, and to ſhew his people their intereſt in it; and make it over to them, and the bleſſings of it, that they may enjoy it, and all the comforts and advantages ariſing from it; temporal redemption, as typical of the ſpiritual and eternal one, is here meant. He hath commanded his covenant for ever; which cannot be the covenant of circumciſion, or that at Sinai, neither of which were for ever; but the covenant of grace made with Chriſt, and which ſtands faſt with him for ever; it is everlaſting, ſure, and can never be removed; its bleſſings and promiſes are for ever; and it is ſo made and framed, and ſo kept and obſerved, as that it ſhall always continue, which is meant by its being commanded; as well as it may denote the decree and reſolution of God never to break and alter it; ſee Pſalm lxxxix. 3, 28, 34. Holy and reverend is his name; the name of God is holy; it is his nature, and appears in all his works; and in which he is glorious, and ſo is reverend; he is to be feared and reverenced by all his creatures, and among his ſaints, as he is by the angels in heaven.

℣. 10. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom, &c.] The fear of the Lord, whoſe name is reverend, is not a fear of his judgments here or hereafter, but of his goodneſs and grace; it is a reverential affection for him, a fiducial fear of him, a fear of offending ſo good a Being as he is; and it includes all religious worſhip of him, inward and outward, private and public; and at this true wiſdom begins; a man begins to be wiſe when he fears the Lord, and not till then; this is his higheſt wiſdom, and this is, as it may be rendered, the chief of wiſdom[i], the principal part of it; ſee Prov. ix. 10. A good underſtanding have all they that do his commandments; or that do them[k]; the fear of the Lord and wiſdom; that exerciſe them, that do as they oblige and direct to; ſo R. Moſes in Aben Ezra connects the words; ſuch have a good underſtanding of the Lord, know him as the object of their fear and reverence, and of their duty to him, and of their own intereſt, it being their wiſdom to fear him; ſince by attending to their duty, to the word and ordinances of God, ſuch arrive to a greater degree of knowledge and underſtanding of divine things. Some render it good ſucceſs[l] or proſperity, as Kimchi; ſuch uſually have proſperity in ſoul and body, in things temporal and ſpiritual; ſee Joſhua i. 8. His praiſe endureth for ever; or its praiſe[m]; the praiſe of the fear of the Lord, of divine wiſdom, and of a good underſtanding; juſt as of circumciſion in the heart, Rom. ii. 29. or the praiſe of him that does the above things, that does the commandments of God, or acts under the fear of God, and as a wiſe man, 1 Cor. iv. 5. or rather the praiſe of God, which ſhall be given him by angels and men now and for evermore, as it ought to be; and to ſtir up to which is the deſign of the pſalm throughout; and which men are encouraged to from the works and word of God, from his name, nature, and covenant, and from his bleſſings and acts of grace and goodneſs.

PSALM CXII.

THIS pſalm alſo very probably was written by David, and is compoſed, as the former, in an alphabetical order. The inſcription of it in the Syriac verſion is, "When David in it commanded Solomon his ſon, ſaying, Keep the commandments of the Lord, and worſhip him: likewiſe the calling of the Gentiles, and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt." The ſubject-matter of the pſalm are the character, conduct, uſefulneſs, and happineſs of a good man.

℣. 1. Praiſe ye the Lord, &c.] Or, hallelujah. This is properly the title of the pſalm: Aben Ezra ſays, it is a word of the pſalmiſt; it ſhews that all that a good man is, has, or does, is from the Lord; and therefore his name is to be praiſed: and he is not only to be praiſed for his perfections and works, but for this among others; that there are any good men on earth, that fear and ſerve him, and are uſeful in their day and generation. Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord; not men, but the Lord; not his wrath, nor his judgments here or hereafter, but his goodneſs; not with a ſervile, but with a godly fear. This every man does not; there are but few that truly fear the Lord, only ſuch who have the grace of God; and theſe are happy men: they have an intereſt in the heart of God, in his pity, love and delight; great diſcoveries are made unto them; the ſecret of the Lord is with them; he ſhews them his covenant; and the Sun of righteouſneſs ariſes upon them: they are guarded and protected by the Lord; his eye of providence, as well as love, is upon them, and his angels encamp about them: they are ſupplied with all needful good things, temporal and ſpiritual; and have much goodneſs laid up for them hereafter. This pſalm begins with what the preceding ends, the fear of the Lord; and is a further illuſtration and enlargement of it; ſee there. That delighteth greatly in his commandments; in the righteouſneſs, purity and holineſs of them; in keeping and doing them: they are not grievous, but pleaſant; a good man delights in them, after the inward man; he obſerves them from a principle of love, and finds peace and pleaſure in them; he loves them above gold, yea, above fine gold; and eſteems them concerning all things to be right, Pſal. cxix. 97, 127, 128, 165.

℣. 2. His ſeed ſhall be mighty upon earth, &c.] The Targum is, "mighty in the law;" as Apollos is ſaid to be mighty in the ſcriptures, Acts xviii. 24. This muſt be underſtood of ſuch of them as fear the Lord alſo, and love him, and delight in his commandments, according to Exod. xx. 6. and not in a literal ſenſe, for not many mighty are called; but in a ſpiritual ſenſe, of their being ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, and in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus. Some underſtand this of the ſpiritual ſeed of Chriſt; and make him to be the man that feared the Lord, and greatly delighted in his commandments, as it is certain he did; he was heard in that he feared; and it was his meat and drink to do the will of him that ſent him. He has a ſpiritual ſeed; and theſe are mighty in the ſenſe before given; and as they will be in the latter day, when the feeble among them ſhall be as David, and the houſe of David as God, as the angel of the Lord; when the greatneſs of the kingdom under the whole heaven ſhall be given to the ſaints, and being kings and prieſts, they ſhall reign with Chriſt on earth. Aben Ezra thinks the note of ſimilitude as is wanting, and ſupplies it thus, his ſeed ſhall be as a mighty man on earth; be known, as he is in his generation. The generation of the upright ſhall be bleſſed; the ſeed of them as before, who are the upright in heart and converſation: or the age in which upright men live, is happy on their account; or a ſucceſſion of upright perſons: or rather a company of them dwelling together, at the ſame time, and in the ſame place; the ſame with the generation of them that ſeek the Lord, Pſal. xxiv. 6. theſe are bleſſed with ſpiritual and eternal bleſſings.

℣. 3. Wealth and riches ſhall be in his houſe, &c.] In his family; if not poſſeſſed by him, yet by his poſterity: though rather this ſignifies ſpiritual riches, the riches of grace, the unſearchable riches of Chriſt, durable riches and righteouſneſs; ſeeing it is connected with an everlaſting righteouſneſs, as in the next clauſe. And his righteouſneſs endureth for ever; he is not hurt by his temporal riches, as others are, the prodigal, the covetous, and formal profeſſor; he continues the good and righteous man he was, notwithſtanding his riches. Some underſtand this of his liberality with his riches, as alms-deeds are ſometimes called righteouſneſs; ſee ℣. 9. Matt. vi. 1. though it rather intends either inherent righteouſneſs, the new man which is created in righteouſneſs, the inward principle of grace which always continues; or the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him, which is an everlaſting one.

℣. 4. Unto the upright there ariſeth light in the darkneſs, &c.] Upright ones are ſometimes in the darkneſs of affliction, under divine deſertions, without ſpiritual joy, and in an uncomfortable condition; when on a ſudden light ariſes to them, like break of day or the morning-light: they have deliverance from affliction, and enjoy proſperity; the light of God's countenance is lifted up on them; the Sun of righteouſneſs ariſes upon them with healing in his wings; and ſpiritual joy and comfort are communicated unto them. It may denote the comforts the people of God have amidſt their afflictions and troubles, even whilſt they are in them; and the light they enjoy, whilſt darkneſs is round about others, like the children of Iſrael in Egypt: or the ſuddenneſs of deliverance from adverſity, temporal or ſpiritual; weeping endures for a night, joy comes in the morning, and at evening-time it is light, Pſal. xxx. 5. Zech. xiv. 7. He is gracious, and full of compaſſion, and righteous; that is, the Lord is ſo. Thus the Arabic verſion, "the Lord "God is merciful and bountiful;" and the Ethiopic verſion, "merciful and compaſſionate is the "Lord, and righteous is our King." And becauſe God is the God of all grace, and is able to make it abound to his people, and is compaſſionate to them in diſtreſs, and is juſt and faithful to his promiſes; therefore he cauſes light to ariſe to them in darkneſs; and which, on ſuch account, they may believe and expect; ſee Mic. vii. 8, 9. Some underſtand this of the upright man and of his character; that he is gracious, kind and bountiful; that he is full of compaſſion, tender-hearted, and ſhews mercy to diſtreſſed objects; and is righteous, through Chriſt, and lives ſoberly and righteouſly. This ſenſe agrees both with what goes before and follows after.

℣. 5. A good man ſheweth favour, and lendeth, &c.] Without uſury, hoping for nothing again: he pities thoſe that labour under difficulties, for want of a little money; and he generouſly lends it till they are able to pay him again; which oftentimes is of as much ſervice as if it was given; ſee Pſal. xxxvii. 21, 26. Luke vi. 34, 35. A good man is not only a man that has the good work of grace in him, and is ready to every good work; but one that is munificent, bountiful and liberal; in which ſenſe the word is uſed in Rom. v. 7. and ſo in Latin writers [n]. He will guide his affairs with diſcretion; his civil and domeſtic affairs: he will act the part of a good œconomiſt; ſo that he may be able to ſupport his family with credit and reputation, and have ſomething to give to the relief of thoſe in want. Some reſtrain this to his acts of charity. He lends to ſome, and gives to others: he takes care that they to whom he gives are proper objects of charity; he gives to perſons ſeaſonably, and in proportion to his own ability and their wants. It may be rendered, he ſhall guide his words with judgment [o]; take care of what he ſays, and before whom; and that it be at a proper time and place; and eſpecially when ſpeaking of ſpiritual and religious things.

℣. 6. Surely he ſhall not be moved for ever, &c.] Out of the heart of God, and from his love and affections; out of the covenant of grace, and from an intereſt in it; out of the hands of Chriſt, or off of him the foundation; out of the houſe and family of God; out of a ſtate of grace and righteouſneſs, into condemnation: and though he may be diſtreſſed by afflictions, yet not deſtroyed; and though he may be ſo ſhaken, as to fall from ſome degree of ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith, and into ſin, yet not ſo as to periſh everlaſtingly: the ſaint's perſeverance is a ſure and certain truth, and to be depended upon. The righteous ſhall be in everlaſting remembrance; with good men, and eſpecially ſuch whoſe names are recorded in ſcripture: and even others are remembered after death; and for a long time after, their pious characters, ſayings, actions, ſufferings, works and writings; and with God, who remembers his love to them, his covenant with them, his promiſes to them; has a book of remembrance for their thoughts, words, and actions; which will be remembered and ſpoken of at the laſt day, when forgotten by them; ſee Prov. x. 9. Mal. iii. 16. Heb. vi. 10. Matt. xxv. 35, &c.

℣. 7. He ſhall not be afraid of evil tidings, &c.] Either reſpecting things temporal; the death of friends, loſs of ſubſtance, public calamities, wars and rumours of wars, commotions, confuſions, convulſions and revolutions, in ſtates, kingdoms, and nations, Pſal. xlvi. 1, 2, 3, 4. or things ſpiritual; ſuch as are brought to him by Satan; that he is an hypocrite, and the root of the matter is not in him; for he knows him to be a liar, and the father of lies; or by his own unbelieving heart: or, what will befal the churches of Chriſt, and the intereſt of religion, in the latter day; as that the outward court ſhall be given to the Gentiles; that the witneſſes ſhall be ſlain, and an hour of temptation ſhall come upon all the earth; and ſuch a time of tribulation, as has not yet been; for he knows that the ſaints will be kept in it, and carried through it, and glorious times will follow. Or, he ſhall not be afraid of an evil hearing [p]; of an ill report raiſed of himſelf; for he knows he muſt go through good report and bad report; and eſpecially when it is a falſe one, and for the ſake of truth and righteouſneſs, it gives him no uneaſineſs: nor is he afraid of hearing the report of the law, which in ſome ſenſe may be called an evil hearing or report, in oppoſition to the hearing of faith, or the good report of the goſpel; he is not afraid of it, when it curſes thoſe that are under it; ſeeing he is redeemed by Chriſt from the curſe of it; and therefore is not afraid of its menaces and threatnings, its curſe and condemnation: nor is a good man afraid of or terrified at the tidings of death; nor will he be diſmayed when the laſt trumpet ſounds, and the dead are raiſed; when the heavens ſhall melt away with a great noiſe; when all ſhall be ſummoned to the judgment-ſeat, and the wicked will hear, Go ye curſed; he will be under no fears of hearing ſuch a ſentence. His heart is fixed; on the love of God, and is rooted and grounded in it; and is firmly perſuaded of his intereſt in it, and that nothing can ſeparate him from it: it is fixed on Chriſt the foundation; his faith is fixed and ſettled in him, and ſo are his affections; and nothing can ſeparate from his love to him, Rom. viii. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39. Or, his heart is prepared [q]; to meet the Lord in the way of his judgments: he expects tidings of evil things, and that he ſhall receive evil things, as well as good, at the hands of the Lord; and therefore is not afraid of them, or ſurpriſed at them when they come; as well as his heart is prepared by the Lord to ſerve him, and is ready to every good work. Truſting in the Lord; in his covenant-God and Father, who will never leave him nor forſake him; in his grace, which is ſufficient for him in the worſt of times; and who will ſupply all his wants: in his ſtrength, to enable him to do his duty; to bear up under trials and exerciſes, and to do and ſuffer his will and pleaſure; and in his power, to protect and preſerve him, and keep him unto ſalvation; and in his faithfulneſs, to perform his promiſes, truſting in him for things temporal, ſpiritual and eternal. The Targum is, "truſting in the word of the Lord;" in Chriſt the eſſential Word; looking to him, as the author and finiſher of faith; leaning upon him, laying the whole ſtreſs of his ſalvation on him; truſting in his perſon for acceptance, in his righteouſneſs for juſtification, in his blood for pardon and cleanſing, in his ſacrifice for atonement, in his fulneſs for ſupply, and in his ſtrength and power for aſſiſtance and protection; all which give him peace, and ſecure him from fear of evil tidings; ſee Iſa. xxvi. 3, 4.

℣. 8. His heart is eſtabliſhed, &c.] With the doctrine of grace; which is food unto it, and by which it is ſtrengthened and nouriſhed; it is eſtabliſhed in the faith of Chriſt, both in the grace of faith, and in the doctrine of faith, even in all the doctrines of the goſpel; ſo that he is not as a child, toſſed to and fro with every wind; his heart is eſtabliſhed in the exerciſe of grace, and he is ſtedfaſt and immoveable in the diſcharge of duty. This being the caſe, He ſhall not be afraid, until he ſee his deſire upon his enemies; until he looks them in the face boldly and confidently; or until he ſees them all ſlain and deſtroyed, as the Iſraelites ſaw the Egyptians on the ſea-ſhore. We ſupply his deſire; it might be put vengeance, as in Pſal. lviii. 10. the puniſhment of God on wicked men, who are the enemies of the upright; and which they ſhall ſee with pleaſure, becauſe of the glory of divine juſtice conſpicuous therein; ſee Rev. xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2. and even before this is brought about, whilſt their enemies are oppreſſing them, inſulting them, and triumphing over them; they ſhall not be afraid, as knowing the time is coming when the ſcene will be changed, and they ſhall triumph in their turn.

℣. 9. He hath diſperſed, &c.] His money, as the Targum; ſcattered it here and there, as the ſower ſcatters his ſeed; does not throw it all in one place, but ſome here and ſome there, and all with profuſion and plenty. This denotes the bounty and liberality of the upright; and his wiſdom and diſcretion in diſtributing his charity, and the numerous objects of it; ſee Prov. xi. 14. 2 Cor. ix. 6, 9, 10. He hath given to the poor; that ſtand in need of his charity, freely, chearfully and bountifully. His righteouſneſs endureth for ever; his liberality continues, he is not weary of well-doing; he gives a portion to ſeven and to eight, and to as many and as often, as there is a call and need for it; ſee the note on ℣. 3. His horn ſhall be exalted with honour; the reproach caſt upon him ſhall be wiped off; he ſhall grow more proſperous, and become more honourable among men here on earth; and in the reſurrection-morning ſhall have the dominion over the wicked, and ſhall appear with Chriſt in glory, and be with him to all eternity.

℣. 10. The wicked ſhall ſee it, &c.] The glory and happineſs of the upright man: ſo when the witneſſes ſhall aſcend to heaven, a phraſe expreſſive of a more glorious ſtate of the church, their enemies ſhall behold them, Rev. xi. 12. And be grieved; at their happineſs, and grudge it: the Targum is, "and ſhall be angry at him;" the upright man. He ſhall gnaſh with his teeth, and melt away; like ſnow-water [r]; or as a ſnail melteth, or as wax before the fire, Pſal. lviii. 7, 8. and lxviii. 2. or ſhall pine away with grief and envy at the happineſs and proſperity of the righteous; the wicked will weep and gnaſh their teeth, when they ſhall ſee them in the kingdom of heaven, and they themſelves ſhut out, Luke xiii. 28. The deſire of the wicked ſhall periſh; they ſhall not have their deſire, neither of good things for themſelves here and hereafter, nor of evil things for the righteous.

PSALM CXIII.

WITH this pſalm begins the great Hallel, which ends with the 118th; and was uſed to be ſung at the Jewiſh feſtivals, particularly at the feaſt of tabernacles and of the paſſover; and is thought by ſome to be the hymn ſung by Chriſt and his apoſtles, after the celebration of the Lord's ſupper; in which there are many things pertinent to that occaſion, as well as to the above feaſts. This pſalm is a ſong of praiſe for redemption by Chriſt, to be ſung in goſpel-times, when the name of the Lord ſhould be known among all nations, from the riſing to the ſetting ſun. It is thought by ſome to be an abridgment of the ſong of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 1—10. there is an agreement.

℣. 1. Praiſe ye the Lord, &c.] Or, hallelujah. This is the title of the pſalm, as in the two preceding, and directs to the principal matter of it. Praiſe, O ye ſervants of the Lord; meaning not the angels, nor all men, nor the prieſts and Levites only; but all the ſaints, who are a holy prieſthood, to offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices to God; who are ſervants, not of ſin, nor of Satan, nor of men, but of God and Chriſt; and who ſerve the Lord willingly and chearfully, with much pleaſure and delight, in righteouſneſs and holineſs, with reverence and godly fear, and without truſting to and depending on their ſervice for ſalvation: and one principal branch of their ſervice is praiſe, eſpecially under the goſpel-diſpenſation; in which all legal ſacrifices are aboliſhed, and the ſacrifice of praiſe is continued; and which is pleaſant and delightful work, and yet there is a backwardneſs to it; and therefore there is need of ſuch an exhortation to excite unto it, and to repeat it, as follows: Praiſe the name of the Lord; not any particular name, as Jehovah; but him himſelf, and the perfections of his nature; his holineſs, juſtice, truth, faithfulneſs, power, goodneſs, grace and mercy. The repetition of the exhortation denotes either the abundance of praiſe to be given to the Lord, or the conſtancy and continuance of it; which ought to be done at all times, every day, ſince his mercies are new every morning. Some have thought the threefold repetition reſpects the Trinity of perſons, who are each to be praiſed, as in Numb. vi. 24, 25, 26. Pſal. xcvi. 1. but this is doubtful, and perhaps not ſufficient to build ſuch a doctrine on; and eſpecially ſince the firſt of theſe exhortations is the title of the pſalm: however this is a certain truth, that Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit, are to be praiſed.

℣. 2. Bleſſed be the name of the Lord, &c.] Some prefix the word ſaying, as directing to the matter and manner of praiſing the Lord, and to expreſs themſelves thus; let the name of the Lord be bleſſed; honoured, glorified, ſpoken well of. From this time forth and for evermore; from the beginning of time, or as ſoon as time began, the Lord's name was to be praiſed, and was praiſed by the holy angels, who were preſent at laying the foundation of the earth, Job xxxviii. 4—7. and all the works of the Lord, in their way, have praiſed him ever ſince. Here it may reſpect the time of penning this pſalm, or the time when the perſons called upon commenced the ſervants of the Lord, the time of their converſion; a time of love, life, light and deliverance, and therefore a time to begin to praiſe the Lord: or the whole time of the goſpel-diſpenſation, to which this pſalm refers; the accepted time, and day of ſalvation, and of the Gentiles glorifying God for his mercy; in which the Lord is to be and is praiſed, as he will be to all eternity, by angels and glorified ſaints.

℣. 3. From the riſing of the ſun unto the going down of the ſame, &c.] Meaning not from morning to night; for it deſigns not time but place, even all the ſpace from eaſt to weſt, or that lies between the riſing and ſetting ſun; even all nations, and the inhabitants of them; and who ought to praiſe the Lord for the riſing ſun, and the benefit and advantages of it; and yet many of them have worſhipped the ſun, and ſerved the creature more than and beſides the Creator. All within this compaſs are the creatures of God, and the care of his providence, and therefore are bound to praiſe him; and yet he has had this tribute due unto him but from a few. Here it reſpects goſpel-times, when the goſpel ſhould be ſent into all the world; and many ſhould be called from the eaſt and weſt, from the north and ſouth, and fear the Lord and worſhip him, and offer a pure offering of praiſe unto him; and his name be great among the Gentiles, from the riſing of the ſun to the going down of the ſame, Mal. i. 11. For within this wide ſpace, The Lord's name is to be praiſed; it ought to be, though it is not; and ere long it will be, when all nations ſhall come and worſhip before him, Rev. xv. 3, 4.

℣. 4. The Lord is high above all nations, &c.] He is the moſt High in all the earth; he is higher than the higheſt; he is King of kings, and Lord of lords: all nations are made by him, and are under his government and dominion, he is the governor among the nations; they are in compariſon of him as the drop of a bucket, as the ſmall duſt of the balance; as nothing, yea leſs than nothing, and vanity. Here it ſeems to reſpect the time when the Lord ſhall be more viſibly King over all the earth, and the kingdoms of this world ſhall be the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Chriſt, Zech. xiv. 9. Rev. xi. 15. And his glory above the heavens; it is above what the heavens do or can declare; they declare ſomething of it, but not all. Chriſt, who is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, is made higher than the heavens, and has aſcended far above them; and is above the angels in them, both as to nature, name, office and place, Heb. i. 4—14. and vii. 26.

℣. 5. Who is like unto the Lord our God, &c.] Among the gods of the nations, as Kimchi; or among the angels of heaven, or among any of the mighty monarchs on earth; there is none like him for the perfections of his nature, for his wiſdom, power, truth and faithfulneſs; for his holineſs, juſtice, goodneſs, grace and mercy; who is eternal, unchangeable, omnipotent, omniſcient, and omnipreſent; nor for the works of his hands, his works of creation, providence, and grace; none ever did the like: and what makes this reflection the more delightful to truly good men is, that this God is their God; and all this is true of our Immanuel, God with us; who is God over all, and the only Saviour and Redeemer; and there is none in heaven and earth like him, or to be deſired beſides him. Who dwelleth on high? in the high and holy place, in the higheſt heaven, which is his throne; or who exalteth himſelf to dwell[s]; ſo the Targum, "he "exalteth his habitation to dwell," ſuitable to the dignity and the greatneſs of his majeſty; as he is high and above all, ſo he has fixed his habitation in the higheſt heavens; as he is ſelf-exiſtent he is ſelf-exalted, and none can exalt him as himſelf; he is exalted above all bleſſing and praiſe; and if it is an exaltation of him to dwell in the higheſt heavens, what an exaltation will it be of the ſaints to dwell with him there, in thoſe manſions in his houſe which Chriſt is gone to prepare for them! This clauſe may be applied to Chriſt, who, both previous to his humiliation, and after it, dwelt in the higheſt heavens with his Father, in his boſom, from whence he came down on earth, and whither he is gone again, and is highly exalted there.

℣. 6. Who humbleth himſelf to behold the things that are in heaven, and in the earth!] The perſons in the higheſt heavens, the angels whom he upholds in their beings and admits into his preſence; who always behold his face, and he beholds them, delights in their perſons, and accepts their ſervices; which, though pure and perfect, it is a condeſcenſion in him to do, ſince they are but creature-ſervices, and chargeable with folly and weakneſs; and who themſelves are as nothing in compariſon of him, and veil their faces before him, Job iv. 18. alſo glorified ſaints are continually in his view, and favoured with intimate communion with him: and he humbles himſelf to look lower than this, and behold the things in the ſtarry heavens, the ſun, and moon, and ſtars; whom he preſerves in their being, directs their courſes, and continues their influence; brings out their hoſt by number, calls them by their names, and becauſe of his power not one fails: he looks lower ſtill, and beholds the things in the airy heavens; there is not a meteor or cloud that flies, or a wind that blows, but he obſerves, guides, and directs it; nor a bird in the air but his eye is on it; he feeds the fowls of the air, and not ſo much as a ſparrow falls to the ground without his knowledge and will: and he alſo humbles himſelf to behold perſons and things on earth, even every beaſt of the foreſt, the cattle on a thouſand hills, all the fowls of the mountains, and the wild beaſts of the field; and their eyes are on him, and he gives them their food in due ſeaſon; he looks down from heaven and beholds all the children of men, and is the Saviour of them in a providential way; in an eſpecial manner his eye, both of providence and grace, is on his own people, whom he beholds in Chriſt as fair and comely, and rejoices over them to do them good; and he has reſpect to their ſervices for his ſake, and condeſcends to dwell on earth with them. This may alſo be applied to Chriſt, who humbled himſelf to look upon the angels in heaven, and take them under his care and protection, be the head of them, and confirm them in that eſtate in which they were created; and who from all eternity vouchſafed to look with delight upon the ſons of men, rejoicing in the habitable parts of the earth, where he knew they would dwell; and in the fulneſs of time he humbled himſelf to come down on earth in human nature and dwell among men, and become very man in that nature; made himſelf of no reputation, and humbled himſelf ſo as to become obedient to death, the death of the croſs, and be made ſin and a curſe for his people. This was an humiliation indeed!

℣. 7. He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, &c.] Perſons of mean extraction and in low life are ſometimes raiſed by him to great honour and dignity, as Saul, David, and others; and is true of many who are ſpiritually poor and needy, as all men are, but all are not ſenſible of it; ſome are, and theſe are called poor in ſpirit, and are pronounced bleſſed, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven; they are raiſed out of a low and mean eſtate, out of the duſt of ſin, and ſelf-abhorrence for it, in which they lie when convinced of it. And lifteth the needy out of the dunghill; which denotes a mean condition; ſo one born in a mean place, and brought up in a mean manner, is ſometimes repreſented as taken out of a dunghill[t]: and alſo it is expreſſive of a filthy one; men by ſin are not only brought into a low eſtate, but into a lothſome one, and are juſtly abominable in the ſight of God, and yet he lifts them out of it: the phraſes of raiſing up and lifting out ſuppoſe them to be fallen, as men are in Adam, fallen from a ſtate of honour and glory, in which he was created, into a ſtate of ſin and miſery, and out of which they cannot deliver themſelves; it is Chriſt's work, and his only, to raiſe up the tribes of Jacob, and to help or lift up his ſervant Iſrael, Iſa. xlix. 6. Luke i. 54. ſee 1 Sam. ii. 8.

℣. 8. That he may ſet him with princes, &c.] As all the ſaints are by birth, being the ſons of God, the King of kings; born of him, and not of the will of man; and are of a princely ſpirit, have a free ſpirit, and offer themſelves and ſervices willingly to the Lord; have the Spirit of adoption, in oppoſition to a ſpirit of bondage; and as princes, have power with God and prevail; and are alſo heirs of God, heirs of ſalvation, heirs of a kingdom, as princes be; now ſuch as are raiſed by Chriſt and his grace from a low eſtate and condition, are ſet among thoſe princes here; they are brought to Zion, and have a place and a name in the houſe of God, better than that of ſons and daughters; and become fellow-citizens with the ſaints; and they are ſet among princes hereafter in the kingdom of heaven. Even with the princes of his people; the more eminent among the people of God, ſuch as Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, with whom they ſhall ſit down in the kingdom of heaven; and with the prophets of the Old Teſtament, and the apoſtles of the New; and even with all the ſaints, who are made kings and prieſts unto God; ſee Pſal. xlv. 16.

℣. 9. He maketh the barren woman to keep houſe, &c.] Or to dwell in the houſe, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and other verſions; or rather to cauſe the houſe to be inhabited; to fill the houſe with inhabitants, to build up the houſe, as the barren woman, when made fruitful, does, as Rachel and Leah built up the houſe of Iſrael, Ruth iv. 11. This may be applied to the church of God, as it is to the congregation of Iſrael by the Targum, "who makes the congregation of Iſrael, which is "like to a barren woman, that ſitteth ſorrowful, "to dwell with the men of her houſe, full of mul"titudes." Jarchi interprets it of Zion, who was as a barren woman; ſee Iſa. liv. 1. Gal. iv. 27. It may be illuſtrated by the caſe of the primitive and apoſtolic church, which at firſt had but very few converts, but afterwards, both in Judea and in the Gentile world, had large numbers; as the church in the latter day will alſo have, when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is brought in, and the nation of the Jews born at once. And to be a joyful mother of children; as the barren woman is when ſhe becomes the mother of children; and indeed every woman rejoices when a man is born into the world, John xvi. 21. and ſo does the church of Chriſt and people of God, when ſouls are born again among them; this cauſes great joy among the ſaints; ſee Pſalm lxxxvii. 4—7. Acts xv. 3. Iſa. xlix. 18—21. and lx. 4, 5. Praiſe ye the Lord; not only for the church's fruitfulneſs, but for all the great and good things the Lord has vouchſafed to do for his people, mentioned in this pſalm.

PSALM CXIV.

THE title of this pſalm in the Arabic verſion is hallelujah, as in ſome preceding ones; it is part of the great hallell ſung at the paſſover, and with great propriety; ſince the ſubject-matter of it is the departure of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, typical of our ſpiritual redemption by Chriſt; and of the effectual vocation of God's elect out of a ſtate of nature into a ſtate of grace; and particularly of the converſion of the Gentiles, and the bringing of them from paganiſm to chriſtianity: the inſcription of the Syriac verſion is, "a pſalm "without a name, out of the ancient writing, con- "cerning Moſes, who ſung praiſe at the ſea; but "unto us the calling of the goſpel, by which we "become a new people; ſpiritual to God who is "incarnate, to Jeſus Chriſt, who redeemed us by "his blood from the curſe of the ſcripture (the "law) and hath cleanſed us from ſin by his Spi- "rit."

℣. 1. When Iſrael went out of Egypt, &c.] The people of Iſrael in a body, publicly, openly, and not by ſtealth; freely and willingly, not forced and drove out; though urged by the Egyptians to go, through the hand of God upon them; and ſo went out with the mighty hand and ſtretched out arm of the Lord, and with great riches, and in health, not one feeble or ſick among them. The houſe of Jacob from a people of ſtrange language; or barbarous; as every language was reckoned by the Jews but their own; the Egyptian language they did not underſtand; ſee Pſalm lxxxi. 5. Gen. xlii. 23. no doubt many of them learned it during their long ſtay there, but in general they retained their own language. This was an emblem of the Lord's people in effectual vocation, coming out of bondage into liberty, out of darkneſs into light, out of ſuperſtition and idolatry and profaneneſs, to the ſervice of the true God in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; and from a people of a ſtrange language to thoſe that ſpeak the language of Canaan, a pure language, in which they can underſtand one another when they converſe together, either about experience or doctrine; and the manner of their coming out is much the ſame, by ſtrength of hand, by the power of divine grace, yet willingly and chearfully, with great riches, the riches of grace, and a title to the riches of glory, and with much ſpiritual ſtrength; for though weak in themſelves, yet are ſtrong in Chriſt.

℣. 2. Judah was his ſanctuary, &c.] Meaning not the tribe of Judah only, though that in many things had the preeminence; the kingdom belonging to it, the chief ruler being out of it, eſpecially the Meſſiah; its ſtandard was pitched and moved firſt; it offered firſt to the ſervice of the Lord; and the Jews have a tradition mentioned by Jarchi and Kimchi, that this tribe, with its prince at the head of it, went into the Red-ſea firſt; the others fearing, but afterwards followed, encouraged by their example: but rather all the tribes are meant, the whole body of the people; for this is not to be underſtood of the tabernacle or temple in the tribe of Judah, ſometimes called a ſanctuary; for neither of theſe were in being when Iſrael came out of Egypt; but it may be rendered, Judah was his holineſs[u], or was holineſs to the Lord, the Lord's holy people; ſee Jer. ii. 2, 3. not all internally holy; for there were many that came out of Egypt that were unholy, rebellious, and diſobedient, and whoſe carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs; but externally, when brought out of Egypt they were ſeparated from all other people, and in this ſenſe ſanctified, and became a holy and ſpecial people, choſen by the Lord to be ſo; with whom he made a covenant, and to whom he gave holy laws and righteous ſtatutes: and in this they were typical of thoſe who are effectually called by grace with an holy calling, and unto holineſs; have principles of grace and holineſs wrought in them, and have holineſs to the Lord written upon them; they have the ſanctification of the Spirit, and Chriſt is made ſanctification to them; and they are the Lord's ſanctuary in which he dwells. And Iſrael his dominion; for though all the world is his kingdom, and his government; yet the people of Iſrael were in a very particular and remarkable manner his dominion; from the time of their coming out of Egypt to their having a king, their government was properly a theocracy; God was their king, and by him they were immediately ruled and governed, and had a body of laws given them from him, and were under his immediate care and protection, Exod. xix. 5. 1 Sam. viii. 7. and xii. 12. In this they were typical of the ſaints called by grace, who are then tranſlated from the power of Satan into the kingdom of Chriſt; whom they acknowledge to be their Lord and King, and whoſe laws, commands, and ordinances they willingly obſerve; the people of God are often repreſented as a kingdom, and Chriſt as king of ſaints; the Targum is, "the congregation of the houſe of Ju- "dah was united to his holineſs, and Iſrael to his "power."

℣. 3. The ſea ſaw it, and fled, &c.] When the Word of the Lord appeared at it, as the Targum in the king's Bible; the Red-ſea, to which the Iſraelites came when they went out of Egypt; this ſaw that Judah was the Lord's holy and peculiar people, and that Iſrael were the ſubjects of his kingdom; it ſaw the preſence of the Lord among them; it ſaw him in the glory of his perfections, and felt his power; ſee Pſal. lxxvii. 16. at which its waters fled and parted, and ſtood up as a wall to make way for Iſrael to paſs through as on dry land, Exod. xiv. 21, 29. This was typical of the nations of the Gentile world, comparable to the ſea, Dan. vii. 2, 3. who ſaw the work of God going on among them under the miniſtry of the goſpel in the firſt times of it, whereby multitudes were turned from idols to ſerve the living God; this they ſaw and trembled at, and they and their kings fled for fear; ſee Iſa. xli. 5. Rev. vi. 15, 16, 17. and of the ſtop put to the ocean of ſin in a man's heart, and to the torrent of wickedneſs that breaks out from thence, by powerful and efficacious grace, much more abounding where ſin has abounded. Jordan was driven back; this was done not at the time of the departure of the Iſraelites from Egypt, but juſt before their entrance into the land of Canaan, and in order to it; and being an event ſimilar to the former is here mentioned, and done by the power and preſence of God; for as ſoon as the feet of the prieſts who bore the ark of the Lord, the ſymbol of the divine preſence, were dipped in the brim of the waters, the waters below were cut off from thoſe above, and ſtood up on an heap, and all the Iſraelites paſſed through on dry ground, Joſh. iii. 13—17. this was an emblem of death, through which the ſaints paſs to glory, which is aboliſhed by Chriſt, its ſting and curſe taken away; which when the ſaints come to, they find it like Jordan driven back, and have an eaſy and abundant paſſage through it; and when on the brink of it, and even in the midſt of it, ſing, O death where is thy ſting? O grave, where is thy victory? 1 Cor. xv. 55.

[u] לקדשו ſanctificatio ejus, Pagninus, Vatablus; ſanctitas ejus, Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 4. The mountains ſkipped like rams, &c.] The mountains of Sinai and Horeb quaked and moved at the preſence of the Lord, when he deſcended thereon to give the law; theſe ſaw his glory and trembled, Exod. xix. 18. Pſal. lxviii. 8. Hab. iii. 6, 10. And ye little hills, like lambs; very beautifully are the larger mountains of Sinai and Horeb compared to rams, and the motion of them to their ſkipping; and the little hills adjacent to them to lambs: theſe may repreſent the greater and leſſer governors in the Roman empire at the time when ſuch large converſions were made in it as before obſerved; and which ſkipped, and trembled, and fled, and were moved out of their places, at the downfal of paganiſm and progreſs of chriſtianity, Rev. vi. 14. and alſo may be an emblem of the difficulties which lie like mountains and hills in the way of a ſinner's converſion and effectual calling, which yet give way to and are ſurmounted by the efficacious grace of God; all mountains become a plain before him, and when he works none can let.

℣. 5. What ailed thee, O thou ſea, that thou fleddeſt? &c.] What was the matter with thee? what appeared to thee? what didſt thou ſee? what didſt thou feel, which cauſed thee to flee in ſuch haſte? Thou Jordan, that thou waſt driven back? what is the meaning that thou didſt not continue to flow as uſual? what was it that ſtopped thy flowing tide? that cut off thy waters? that drove them back as faſt or faſter than they came?

℣. 6. Ye mountains, that ye ſkipped like rams, &c.] Not for joy but fear; what cauſed theſe trembling motions? theſe violent agitations, and quakings, and movings to and fro like the ſkipping of rams? And ye little hills, like lambs? what was it that diſturbed you, and put you into a panic, that you ſkipped like frighted lambs? Theſe queſtions are put, by a beautiful and poetical figure, to inanimate creatures; the Red-ſea, the river of Jordan, the mountains of Sinai and Horeb, and the hills about them; to which an anſwer is returned in the next verſe.

℣. 7. Tremble thou earth at the preſence of the Lord, &c.] Or, the earth has trembled at the preſence of the Lord; ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it; the imperative is ſometimes put for the preterit or paſt tenſe, ſee Pſal. xxii. 9. likewiſe the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions thus render it, the earth is moved at the preſence of the Lord; and then the ſenſe is by a proſopopœia. Is it to be wondered at, that we, the ſea, the river of Jordan, the mountains and hills have fled, or have been driven back, or have ſkipped like rams and lambs; when the whole earth, of which we are a part, has trembled at the preſence of God? who, when he does but look, the earth trembles; and when he touches the hills, they ſmoke, Pſal. civ. 32. and lxviii. 8. It is at the ſame preſence of God we have been thus moved, the power of which we have felt, even At the preſence of the God of Jacob; who brought Jacob out of Egypt, led him through the ſea, and gave him the law on Sinai. This is not to be underſtood of the general and common preſence of God, which is every where, and with all his creatures; for this is not attended with ſuch wonderful phœnomena as here mentioned, either in the literal or myſtic ſenſe; but of the majeſtic, powerful and gracious preſence of God; ſuch as he ſometimes cauſes to attend his miniſters, his word, his churches, his martyrs and confeſſors; and ſo as to ſtrike an awe upon, and terror into, their greateſt enemies, as well as to convert his own people.

℣. 8. Which turned the rock into a ſtanding water, &c.] Both at Rephidim and at Kadeſh; which being ſmitten, ſtreams of water flowed out like rivers, as if the rock itſelf was changed into water; and which became a conſtant and continual ſupply for the Iſraelites, for it is ſaid to follow them; ſee Exod. xvii. 6. Numb. xx. 11. Pſal. lxxviii. 15, 16. and cv. 41. 1 Cor. x. 4. The flint into a fountain of waters; referring to the ſame thing, the rocks were flinty ones. This was a type of Chriſt the rock; who has an abiding fulneſs of grace in him; is the fountain of it, from whence it flows in great abundance for the ſupply of his peoples wants, while paſſing through this wilderneſs to Canaan's land.

PSALM CXV.

THIS pſalm is by the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, joined to the former, and makes one pſalm with it: and Kimchi ſays, that in ſome books the pſalm does not begin here; but in the beſt and correct copies of the Hebrew, and in the Targum, it ſtands a diſtinct pſalm; and the different ſubject-matter or argument ſhews it to be ſo. It is aſcribed to various perſons; by ſome to Moſes and the Iſraelites, when purſued by Pharaoh: by others to the three companions of Daniel, caſt into the fiery furnace: by others, to Mordecai and Eſther, when Haman diſtreſſed the Jews: by others, to the heroes at the times of Antiochus and the Maccabees; ſo Theodoret: by ſome to Jehoſhaphat, when a numerous army came againſt him; and by others to David, which is more probable; though on what occaſion is not eaſy to ſay: ſome have thought it was written by him, when inſulted by the Jebuſites, 2 Sam. v. 6. The occaſion of it ſeems to be ſome diſtreſs the church of God was in from the heathens; and the deſign of it is to encourage truſt and confidence in the Lord; and to excite the ſaints to give him the glory of all their mercies, and to expoſe the vanity of idols.

ỳ. 1. Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, &c.] There is no glory due to men, no not to the beſt of men, nor to be given them on any account whatever; neither on account of things natural, civil and temporal, nor on account of things ſpiritual and eternal; but all to be given to the Lord: for, as for their beings and the preſervation of them, with all the mercies of life, food, raiment, &c. they are not of themſelves, but of the Lord; and ſo are the ſalvation of their ſouls, their election and redemption, their regeneration, converſion and ſanctification, their juſtification and pardon; whatſoever good thing is in them, or done by them: nor have they any thing for the ſake of righteouſneſs done by them; nor do they deſire to take the glory of paſt favours to themſelves; nor requeſt deliverance from preſent evils for their own merits, which they diſclaim; nor for their own ſakes, or that they may be great and glorious; but for the Lord's ſake, for his name's-ſake, that he may be glorified; which is the principal ſenſe of the paſſage. So the Targum, "not for our ſakes, O Lord, "not for our merit, but to thy name give glory." Good men deſire to glorify God themſelves, by aſcribing to him the perfections of his nature, and celebrating them; by giving thanks to him for mercies, ſpiritual and temporal; by exerciſing faith upon him, as a promiſing God; and by living to his glory: and they are very deſirous that all others would give him the glory due unto his name; and that he would glorify himſelf, and get himſelf a glorious and an everlaſting name. And indeed the words are addreſſed to him, and not to others; and particularly that he would glorify, or take the glory of the following perfections: For thy mercy, and for thy truth's ſake; ſo very manifeſt in the ſalvation of his people, and in all their deliverances, and therefore ought to have the glory of them. His mercy, or his grace [w], as it may be rendered, is diſplayed in the ſalvation of his people by Chriſt, in their regeneration, juſtification, pardon, and eternal life: and ſo is his truth, or faithfulneſs in all his promiſes; and particularly in the miſſion of his Son as a Saviour, ſo long promiſed and expected; and who is truth himſelf, the truth of all promiſes and prophecies; and by whom the truth of the goſpel came, the Word, which God has magnified above every name.

ỳ. 2. Wherefore ſhould the heathen ſay, &c.] The nations about Iſrael, the nations of the world; the Gentiles in any age; the Papiſts in ours, ſometimes called the heathen, Pſal. x. 16. Rev. xi. 2, 18. The church expoſtulates with the Lord, why thoſe ſhould be ſuffered to ſay, in a reproachful, inſulting manner, and by way of triumph, Where is now their God? that they have boaſted of would help them; in whom they have put their truſt and confidence; why does not he help them, as he has promiſed, and they expect? Thus the church ſuggeſts, that if the Lord did not appear for them, his own glory lay at ſtake. Such language is generally uſed by their enemies, when the people of God were in any diſtreſs; ſee Pſal. xlii. 10. and lxxix. 10. Joel ii. 17. Mic. vii. 9, 10.

ỳ. 3. But our God is in the heavens, &c.] His habitation is in the heavens, as the Targum; the Septuagint and Arabic verſions add, and in earth: he is in both, and fills both with his preſence; and cannot be contained in either. He is the maker and poſſeſſor of heaven and earth; the one is his throne, and the other is his footſtool: he dwells in the higheſt heaven, and overlooks all perſons and things on earth, and overrules all; he is higher than the higheſt, and his kingdom ruleth over all. He hath done whatſoever he pleaſed; in creation, in providence, and in grace: he hath made what creatures he pleaſed, and for his pleaſure; and he does according to his will, and after the counſel of it, in heaven and in earth; and is gracious to whom he will be gracious; ſaves and calls men, not according to their works, but according to his own purpoſe and will; whoſe counſel ſhall ſtand, and he will do all his pleaſure; he is the moſt high God, and a ſovereign being; all that he wills are poſſible to him, and eaſily done by him, and which heathens themſelves own [x].

ỳ. 4. Their idols are ſilver and gold, &c.] The idols of the Gentiles; ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions. The gods they ſerve and worſhip, are not in the heavens; but the matter of which they are made is dug out of the earth: and this is the greateſt excellency and value that there is in them; and ſuch as are made of theſe are of the greateſt worth, and yet only for the matter of them, otherwiſe uſeleſs and inanimate ſtatues; ſuch are the idols of the Papiſts, Rev. ix. 20. The work of mens hands; the matter of them is gold and ſilver, which they owe to the earth as their original; the form of them they owe to men, and therefore cannot be God, Hoſea viii. 6. If it is idolatry to worſhip what God has made, the ſun, moon, and ſtars; it muſt be groſs idolatry, and great ſtupidity, to worſhip what man has made: if it is ſinful to worſhip the creature beſides the Creator, or more than him; it muſt be ſtill more ſo to worſhip the creature of a creature.

ỳ. 5. They have mouths, but they ſpeak not, &c.] Theſe idols are carved with mouths, but they can make no uſe of them; if any cry to them for help, they cannot anſwer them, nor ſave them from their troubles. Baal's prieſts cried to their idol, but there was no voice heard, nor anſwer returned; they are rightly called dumb idols, Hab. ii. 18. ſee Iſa. xlvi. 7. Jer. x. 5. 1 Kings xviii. 26, 29. but our God in the heavens, when his people cry to him, he anſwers them, and ſends them relief; and tells them his grace is ſufficient for them, and ſo they find it to be. Eyes have they, but they ſee not; they are made with eyes in their heads, but cannot ſee with them; they cannot ſee their worſhippers, nor what they bring to them; neither their perſons, nor their wants, Dan. v. 23. but our God and Father in heaven, he ſees in ſecret, the perſons and hearts of his people; their deſires are before him, and their groanings are not hid from him; his eyes are on the righteous, and are never withdrawn from them.

ỳ. 6. They have ears, but they hear not, &c.] The makers of them have taken care to place a pair of ears to their heads, but could not convey the faculty of hearing to them; ſo that though their votaries may cry from morning to noon, as Baal's worſhippers did, ſaying, O Baal, hear us; and even to night, and one day and night after another, nothing is heard, 1 Kings xviii. 26, 27. Indeed the image of Jupiter at Crete, was made without ears; becauſe it was thought unbecoming that he, who was prince and lord of all, ſhould give ear to any [y]: but the God of heaven and earth is a God hearing prayer; his ear is not heavy, that it cannot hear; his ears are always open to the cries of his people. Noſes have they, but they ſmell not; the incenſe that is ſet before them, nor the ſacrifices offered to them, Deut. iv. 28. but our God ſmelled a ſweet ſavour in legal ſacrifices, offered up in the faith of the Meſſiah; and eſpecially he ſmells a ſweet ſavour in the ſacrifice of his Son, and in the prayers of his ſaints, which are ſweet odours; and particularly as they come to him perfumed with the incenſe of Chriſt's mediation, Gen. viii. 21. Eph. v. 2. Rev. v. 8. and viii. 3, 4.

[y] Plutarch. de Iſid. & Oſir. prope finem.

℣. 7. They have hands, but they handle not, &c.] So as to feel any thing that is put into their hands; they cannot make uſe of their hands to ſtretch them out, and receive any thing from their worſhippers; nor can they give any thing to them: but our God receives and accepts the ſacrifices of his people, their prayers and their praiſes; and opens his hand, and liberally ſupplies their wants, both in providence and grace. Feet have they, but they walk not; cannot ſtir from the place where they are, to the aſſiſtance of thoſe that call unto them, Iſa. xlvi. 7. but our God walks upon the wings of the wind, and is a preſent help in times of trouble; a God at hand and afar off, and makes haſte to the relief of his people in diſtreſs. Neither ſpeak they through their throat; or make a mournful voice as a dove, as the word is uſed in Iſa. xxxviii. 14. or chirp as a bird, or chatter as a crane; or warble out any note through the throat, as birds do; and much leſs form any articulate ſound, or utter any proper word, that may be underſtood.

℣. 8. They that make them, are like unto them, &c.] As ſtupid as the matter of which they are made; as ſottiſh and as ſenſeleſs as the idols themſelves, ſee Iſa. xliv. 9—20. Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it as a petition, let them that make them be like unto them; and ſo the Targum, the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions: they liked not to retain God in their knowledge, let them be given up to a reprobate mind, to a mind void of all ſenſe and judgment; and which indeed is their caſe, Rom. i. 28. So is every one that truſteth in them; more eſpecially they that worſhip them: for an artificer may make them for gain, and have no faith in them; but a worſhipper places confidence in them. Or this clauſe may be explanative of the former, and be rendered, even every one, &c. for to make ſometimes ſignifies to ſerve and worſhip, Exod. xxxii. 35.

℣. 9. O Iſrael, truſt thou in the Lord, &c.] Or, the houſe of Iſrael hath truſted in the Lord; ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions: the Targum is, "Iſrael truſteth in the "Word of the Lord;" in diſtinction from the heathens that truſt in their idols. But it is better rendered as an imperative, truſt thou; it being an exhortation to Iſrael to truſt in the Lord, in oppoſition to idols; and may be underſtood of Iſrael, literally taken, who were God's choſen, covenant-people, to whom he had made a revelation of himſelf, and of his will; and therefore ſhould truſt in him and in no other: and of ſpiritual Iſrael, or all the elect of God, and redeemed of the Lamb; every Iſraelite indeed; every wreſtling Jacob, and prevailing Iſrael; every praying ſoul; every ſenſible ſinner, Jew or Gentile. It becomes them to truſt in the Lord, not in the creature; not in their own ſtrength, wiſdom, riches, righteouſneſs, or fleſhly privileges; but in the Lord, as the God of nature, providence and grace; as a promiſing and covenant-keeping God, who is to be truſted with all, and for every thing temporal and ſpiritual, and at all times. He is their help and their ſhield; the help and ſhield of every true Iſraelite; of every one that truſts in the Lord: or, "your help and your "ſhield, O ye Iſraelites; ſo Ben Balaam in Aben Ezra reads the words: which are a reaſon or argument, encouraging truſt in the Lord, ſince he is the help of his people; they are helpleſs in themſelves, and vain is the help of man, for there is none in him; there is no help but in the Lord, and he is a preſent, ſeaſonable and ſufficient help: Jehovah the Father has promiſed them help, and he is both able and faithful to make it good; he has laid help upon his Son for them; and has ſet up a throne of grace, where they may come for grace to help them in time of need: Chriſt has helped them out of the miſerable eſtate they were fallen into by ſin; he helps them on in their way to heaven, by his power and grace, and at laſt brings them thither: the Spirit of God helps them to the things of Chriſt; to many exceeding great and precious promiſes; and out of many difficulties, ſnares and temptations; and he helps them in prayer under all their infirmities, and makes interceſſion for them, according to the will of God; and therefore they ſhould truſt in the Lord, Father, Son and Spirit: and who is alſo their ſhield, to protect and defend them from all dangers, evils and enemies; what a ſhield is to the body, to ſecure it from hurt, that to the people of God are the love and favour of God, his power and might, his truth and faithfulneſs; as likewiſe Chriſt, his blood, righteouſneſs and ſalvation; and the Spirit, and his grace; ſee Pſal. v. 12. and xviii. 35. and xci. 4. Epheſ. vi. 16. Iſa. lix. 19.

℣. 10. O houſe of Aaron, truſt in the Lord, &c.] The family of the tribe of Levi, that was ſeparated from the reſt, to miniſter in the prieſt's office, to offer gifts and ſacrifices for the people, and to bleſs them; and therefore ought to truſt in the Lord, and ſet a good example to others: as miniſters of the word ſhould, who are intruſted with much by the Lord, and ſhould truſt in him for much; for every ſupply of gifts and grace; and the rather, as they are to be examples of faith to the people: and as all the ſaints under the goſpel-diſpenſation, are prieſts unto God, they ſhould put their truſt and confidence in the Lord; ſince their ſacrifices cannot be acceptable and well-pleaſing to God, without faith in him. He is their help and their ſhield; the Lord is the help and ſhield of every one of Aaron's family; of the prieſts under the law, and of miniſters under the goſpel; and of all thoſe who are kings and prieſts unto God; and therefore they ſhould truſt in him. This is repeated for the certainty of it, and for the particular application of it to Aaron's houſe.

℣. 11. Ye that fear the Lord, truſt in the Lord, &c.] Which is ſaid not to diſtinguiſh true ſaints from hypocrites, in Iſrael or in Aaron's houſe; rather to deſcribe ſuch who belonged to neither: but, as Aben Ezra interprets it, who feared the Lord, of every people and nation; or proſelytes, as Jarchi explains it: the diſtinction between the people of the Jews, and the proſelytes among them, under the character of thoſe that feared the Lord, may be obſerved in Acts xiii. 26. It takes in all true worſhippers of the Lord; and who are exhorted to truſt in him, for faith and fear are conſiſtent; and where there is the one, there is the other; where there is the true fear of God, not a ſlaviſh nor an hypocritical fear, but a holy reverence and a godly fear, there will be faith and confidence in him. Job was a man that feared the Lord, and yet truſted in him; theſe characters meet in the ſame perſons, ſee Pſal. xxxi. 19. He is their help and their ſhield; the help and ſhield of all thoſe that fear the Lord, their protector and defender, and therefore ſhould truſt in him. The word ezer, tranſlated help, in this and the two preceding verſes, is applied to God, and often in this book of Pſalms, as a title and epithet belonging to him; and it may be obſerved that Æſar, in the Etruſcan language, ſignifies God[z].

℣. 12. The Lord hath been mindful of us, &c.] The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord hath remembered us for good." And is another reaſon why his people ſhould truſt in him: he has been mindful of his covenant with them, and promiſes to them, and has kept them; he remembered them in their low eſtate, and ſent redemption to them; goodneſs and mercy have followed them all their days. Paſt experiences of divine favour ſhould encourage truſt in the Lord, as well as promiſes of future bleſſings, as follow: He will bleſs us; with all kind of bleſſings, temporal and ſpiritual; with bleſſings indeed, ſolid and ſubſtantial: it is certain, and may be depended upon; he has promiſed it, and ſwore to it, that in bleſſing he will bleſs. Kimchi interprets it as a wiſh, let him bleſs: the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, render it in the paſt tenſe, he hath bleſſed; but the Targum as we: and as it follows, He will bleſs the houſe of Iſrael; with whom he has made his new covenant; the houſhold of faith, the family named of Chriſt, the whole Iſrael of God. He will bleſs the houſe of Aaron; his prieſts, his miniſters, all that offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices to him; he will bleſs them with an increaſe of gifts and grace, and with his preſence and Spirit, and therefore they ſhould truſt in him.

℣. 13. He will bleſs them that fear the Lord, &c.] They ſhall want no good thing now, and have much goodneſs laid up for them to be enjoyed hereafter; the Sun of righteouſneſs riſes upon them, and a book of remembrance is written on their account; the Lord delights in them, his eye is upon them; and they are bleſſed with more grace now, and will be bleſſed with glory hereafter. Both ſmall and great; young and old, rich and poor, high and low, leſſer or greater believers; be they children, young men, or fathers; ſee Rev. xi. 18.

℣. 14. The Lord ſhall increaſe you more and more, &c.] The Word of the Lord, as the Targum, ſhall do it; in a temporal ſenſe, with a numerous poſterity, with riches, wealth and honour; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, with an addition of ſpiritual bleſſings; with renewed inſtances of divine favour; with an increaſe of the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, as faith, hope, love, joy, patience, humility, and other graces; and with more knowledge of God and Chriſt, and of divine and ſpiritual things. You and your children; not only they that feared the Lord of the preſent generation, but thoſe that ſhould ſucceed them; and be as they were, a ſeed to ſerve the Lord, and who ſhould be accounted to him for a generation.

℣. 15. You are bleſſed of the Lord, &c.] The Arabic verſion reads it, we are bleſſed; with temporal and with ſpiritual bleſſings; being the beloved of the Lord, choſen of him; whoſe ſins are pardoned, whoſe perſons are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; who are put among the children of God, and are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt; regenerated by his Spirit, favoured with communion with God, and wrought up to ſome degree of conformity to Chriſt, and ſhall ever be with him. Which made heaven and earth; and ſo able to bleſs with all kind of bleſſings, both heavenly and earthly; and from whom all help and aſſiſtance may be hoped for, and who may be truſted and confided in: and this, it may be, is obſerved to diſtinguiſh him from the idols of the Gentiles, who made not the heavens and the earth; and who are not able to bleſs, nor give the leaſt relief to any of their votaries.

℣. 16. The heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's, &c.] Not only the viſible heavens, the airy and ſtarry regions, which are within our ſight; but the heaven of heavens, the third heaven, into which the apoſtle Paul was caught, and heard and ſaw things not to be uttered; and which is, as the Targum expreſſes it, "for the majeſty of the glory of the Lord:" he is the maker, owner, proprietor and poſſeſſor of them all: but the third heaven is more eſpecially the ſeat of his majeſty; where he has prepared the throne of his glory, where he keeps court; where his miniſters, his angels, wait upon him, obſerve his orders, and execute his will; and which he has prepared for his ſaints to dwell with him in to all eternity. But the earth hath he given to the children of men; to Adam and his poſterity, to dwell in it, to till it, and enjoy the fruits of it; yet ſo as not to leave it intirely to the care of men, and have no concern in it, and the affairs of it, as ſome licentious perſons would from hence conclude; as if God had took the heavens to himſelf, and only minded the perſons and things in that, and never concerned himſelf about the earth, and perſons and things there; having diſpoſed of it to the children of men, and left it to their conduct: for though he has given it to them for their uſe, yet he has ſtill a claim upon it, and can and does diſpoſe of it, and order all things in it according to his pleaſure; and men, from the higheſt to the loweſt, are accountable to him, being but ſtewards, and at moſt but deputies and viceroys under him: beſides the words may be rendered, and the earth which he hath given to the children of men[a]; that is his alſo, as well as the heavens. This the Lord gives to the children of men as their portion; and ſad is the caſe of ſuch, when this is their all; but to his own children he gives heaven, the kingdom of heaven, eternal glory and happineſs. Maimonides[b] gives the ſenſe of the whole paſſage thus; "God only perfectly knows the truth, nature, ſubſtance, form, motion and cauſes of the heavens: and to man he has given, that he may underſtand what are under the heavens; becauſe they are the world, and as it were his houſe, in which he dwells, and of which he is a part."

℣. 17. The dead praiſe not the Lord, &c.] Not the dead in ſin; ſuch as the makers of idols, and thoſe that truſt in them, who are like unto them; men muſt be made ſpiritually alive, ere they can ſhew forth the praiſes of God: nor the dead corporally. The ſouls of departed ſaints can and do praiſe the Lord: theſe die not with their bodies, nor ſleep in the grave; they go immediately to God and Chriſt, and are employed in the ſervice of God continually; particularly in praiſing him, as do the angels with whom they join; they ſing the ſong of Moſes and of the Lamb, of providence and grace; eſpecially the ſong of redeeming love, with which they always praiſe the Lord: but they cannot praiſe him with their bodily organs until the reſurrection, which by death are rendered uſeleſs; they can praiſe him no more among men on earth, as they have before done; there is no work of this kind in the grave. Neither any that go down in ſilence; the grave, ſo called, becauſe every thing is mute and ſilent there[c]; the inſtruments of ſpeech are no more uſed on any account; no noiſe and clamour there from wicked men; there the wicked ceaſe from troubling; and no ſongs of praiſe from good men, all ſtill and quiet there. So the Targum, "not any that go down to the houſe of "the grave of the earth;" or the earthly grave. And therefore ſave us, O Lord, ſuffer not the enemy to deſtroy us; for ſhould he, we ſhall no more be capable of praiſing thee, as we have done and deſire to do; for no ſuch ſervice is to be done in the grave, ſee Pſal. vi. 4, 5. and xxx. 9. and lxxxviii. 10—12.

℣. 18. But we will bleſs the Lord; from this time forth and for evermore, &c.] The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions render it, we who are alive; both in a corporal and in a ſpiritual ſenſe; who, as long as we live, and while we have a being, will bleſs the Lord; being made ſpiritually alive, quickned by the Spirit and grace of God, and ſo capable of aſcribing bleſſing, praiſe, and glory to him, for all the great and good things he has done; and eſpecially when in lively frames, or in the lively exerciſe of grace: and that from this time; under a ſenſe of preſent favours, and outward mercies being renewed every day; yea, throughout the whole of life, and ſo to all eternity in the world above; ſee Iſaiah xxxviii. 19. Praiſe the Lord; let others do the ſame as we; let us join together in this work, now and hereafter.

PSALM CXVI.

THEODORET applies this pſalm to the diſtreſſes of the Jews in the times of the Maccabees under Antiochus Epiphanes; and R. Obadiah interprets ſome paſſages in it of the Grecians of thoſe times; but it rather ſeems to have been written by David on account of ſome troubles of his, out of which he was delivered; and refers either to the times of Saul, and the perſecutions he endured from him, particularly when he was beſet round about by him and his men in the wilderneſs of Maon, 1 Sam. xxiii. 26. to which he may have reſpect ℣. 3. The inſcription of the pſalm in the Syriac verſion is, "the progreſs of the new people "returning to the chriſtian worſhip, as a child to "underſtanding; and as to the letter, it was ſaid "when Saul ſtaid at the door of the cave where "David lay hid with his men;" ſee 1 Sam. xxiv. 4. But ſince mention is made of Jeruſalem, ℣. 19. where the pſalmiſt would praiſe the Lord for his deliverance, which as yet was not in his hands nor in the hands of the Iſraelites, but of the Jebuſites; ſome have thought it was written on account of the conſpiracy of Abſalom againſt him, and who hearing that Abithophel was among the conſpirators ſaid the words related in ℣. 11. it is very probable it was compoſed after the death of Saul, and when he was ſettled in the kingdom, as Jarchi obſerves, and was delivered out of the hands of all his enemies; and very likely much about the ſame time as the eighteenth pſalm was, which begins in the ſame manner, and has ſome expreſſions in it like to what are in this. David was a type of Chriſt, and ſome apply this pſalm to him.

℣. 1. I love the Lord, &c.] As the Meſſiah, David's antitype, did; of which he gave the fulleſt proof by his obedience to his will; and as David, the man after God's own heart, did, and as every good man does; and the Lord is to be loved for the perfections of his nature, and eſpecially as they are diſplayed in Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; and for his works of creation, providence and grace, and particularly for his great love ſhewn in redemption, regeneration, and other bleſſings of grace, as well as for what follows. Becauſe he hath heard my voice and my ſupplication; in the original text the words lie thus, I love, becauſe the Lord hath heard, or will hear; and ſo read the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, Syriac and Arabic verſions, and ſo the Targum; and may be rendered, I love that the Lord ſhould hear me, ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions; nothing is more deſirable and grateful to good men than that the Lord ſhould hear them; but Kimchi and others tranſpoſe the words as we do, which gives a reaſon why he loved the Lord; becauſe he heard his prayers, which were vocal, put up in a time of diſtreſs, in a humble and ſubmiſſive manner, under the influence of the Spirit of grace and ſupplication, in the name of Chriſt, for his righteouſneſs-ſake, and through his mediation; and ſuch ſupplications are heard and anſwered by the Lord, ſooner or later; and which engages the love of his people to him; ſee Pſal. xxxiv. 1—6. It may be applied to Chriſt, who offered up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears, and was always heard; and for which he thanked his Father and loved him, Heb. v. 7. John xi. 41, 42.

℣. 2. Becauſe he hath inclined his ear unto me, &c.] Not as hard of hearing, for his ear is not heavy that it cannot hear; he is quick of hearing, and his ears are always open to the righteous; it rather denotes his readineſs to hear; he hearkens and hears, he liſtens to what his people ſay, and hears them at once, and underſtands them, though ever ſo broken and confuſed; when their prayers are but like the chatterings of a crane or ſwallow, or only expreſſed in ſighs and groans, and even without a voice; when nothing is articulately pronounced: moreover this ſhews condeſcenſion in him; he bows his ear as a father to a child, he ſtoops as being above them, and inclines his ear to them. Therefore will I call upon him as long as I live; or in my days[d]; in days of adverſity and affliction, for help and relief; in days of proſperity, with thankfulneſs for favours received; every day I live, and ſeveral times a day: prayer ſhould be conſtantly uſed; men ſhould pray without ceaſing always, and not faint; prayer is the firſt and laſt action of a ſpiritual life; it is the firſt thing a regenerate man does, behold, he prays; as ſoon as he is born again he prays, and continues praying all his days; and generally goes out of the world praying, as Stephen did, Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit; and it is the Lord's hearing prayer that encourages his people to keep on praying, and which makes the work delightful to them. Chriſt was often at this work in life, and died praying, Luke vi. 12. and xxiii. 46.

[c] Silet rex ipſa ſilentûm, Virgil. Migranteſque domos animarum intraſſe ſilentum, Propert. l. 3. eleg. 12. v 33.

[d] בימי in diebus meis, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, &c.

℣. 3. The ſorrows of death compaſſed me, &c] Chriſt, of whom David was a type, was a man of ſorrows all his days; and in the garden he was περιλυπος, ſurrounded with ſorrow; exceeding ſorrowful even unto death, in a view of the ſins of his people imputed to him, and under a ſenſe of wrath for them, he was about to bear; and his agonies in the article of death were very grievous, he died the painful and accurſed death of the croſs. This was true of David, when Saul and his men compaſſed him on every ſide, threatning to cut him off in a moment; when he deſpaired of life, and had the ſentence of death in himſelf, and ſaw no way to eſcape; and ſuch a caſe is that of the people of God, or they may be ſaid to be compaſſed about with the ſorrows of death, when through a ſlaviſh fear of it they are all their lifetime ſubject to bondage; and eſpecially when under dreadful apprehenſions of eternal death. And the pains of hell gat hold upon me; or found me[e]; overtook him, and ſeized upon him; meaning either the horrors of a guilty conſcience under a ſenſe of ſin, without a view of pardon; which is as it were a hell in the conſcience, and like the pains and torments of it: or the pains of the grave[f]; not that there are any pains felt there, the body being deſtitute of life and ſenſeleſs; but ſuch ſorrows or troubles are meant which threaten to bring down to the grave, which was the caſe of Jacob on the loſs of his children, Gen. xxxvii. 35. and xlii. 38. This applied to Chriſt may deſign the wrath of God and curſe of the law, which he endured in the room and ſtead of his people, as their ſurety; and which were equivalent to the pains of the damned in hell; or it may refer to his being laid in the grave, in a ſtrait and narrow place, as the word[g] ſignifies; where he lay bound in grave-clothes, till he was looſed from the pains and cords of death, it being not poſſible he ſhould be held by them, Acts ii. 24. ſee the notes on Pſal. xviii. 4, 5. I found trouble and ſorrow; without ſeeking for them; they ſeized and took hold of him, on David, and his antitype, when in the above circumſtances; and often do the ſaints find trouble and ſorrow from a body of ſin and death, from the temptations of Satan, divine deſertions, and afflictive providences. Aben Ezra refers the one to the body, the other to the ſoul.

℣. 4. Then called I upon the name of the Lord, &c.] Upon the Lord himſelf in prayer for ſpeedy deliverance; or in the name of the Lord[h], in the name of the Meſſiah, the only mediator between God and man; ſaying, as follows, and which word may be ſupplied, O Lord, I beſeech thee, deliver my ſoul; from theſe ſorrows and pains, from theſe afflictions and diſtreſſes, from death and the grave, and from wrath, and a ſenſe of it, and fears about it.

℣. 5. Gracious is the Lord, &c.] So the pſalmiſt found him, calling upon him; ſo he is in Chriſt, the author and giver of all grace, to help in time of need. And righteous; faithful to his promiſes, juſt in every diſpenſation of his providence, even in afflictive ones; righteous in puniſhing the enemies of his people, and in ſaving, juſtifying, and pardoning them for Chriſt's ſake. Yea, our God is merciful; compaſſionate, tender hearted, full of bowels of pity, as a father to his child; and ſympathizes with his people under all their afflictions, and ſaves them out of them; ſee Pſalm lxxxvi. 5, 15.

℣. 6. The Lord preſerveth the ſimple; &c.] Such as have but a ſmall degree of underſtanding, either in things natural or ſpiritual, in compariſon of others; babes, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it; ſo in the Talmud[i]; ſee Matt. xi. 25. Such who are ſenſible of their lack of wiſdom, and what they have they do not lean unto or truſt in, but being ſenſible of their weakneſs commit themſelves to the Lord; they are ſincere and upright, harmleſs and inoffenſive, artleſs and incautious, and ſo eaſily impoſed upon by deſigning men; but the Lord preſerves them, as from ſin, from a total and final falling away by it, ſo from groſs errors and hereſies; he preſerves them from the ſnares and pollutions of the world, and from the temptations of Satan, ſo as not to be overcome with them; he preſerves them by his Spirit, power and grace, ſafe to his kingdom and glory. I was brought low, and he helped me; the pſalmiſt returns to his own caſe, and gives an inſtance of the divine goodneſs in himſelf; he had been brought low by affliction of body, by diſtreſs of enemies, through want of the neceſſaries and conveniencies of life; he had been brought low as to ſpiritual things, through the weakneſs of grace, the prevalence of corruption, the temptations of Satan, and the hidings of God's face; but the Lord helped him to bear up under all this, he put underneath his everlaſting arms, and upheld him with the right hand of his righteouſneſs; he helped him out of his low eſtate, and delivered him out of all his troubles, when none elſe could; when things were at the greateſt extremity, and he in the utmoſt diſtreſs, juſt ready to go down into ſilence and dwell there, Pſal. xciv. 17. The Targum is, "he looked upon me to redeem me."

℣. 7. Return unto thy reſt, O my ſoul, &c.] To a quiet and tranquil ſtate after much diſtreſs[k]; a ſoliloquy, an addreſs to his own ſoul to return to God his reſting place, as Kimchi; or to Chriſt, whoſe reſt is glorious, and which lies in a ceſſation from a man's own works; not from doing them, but from depending on them, or from labouring for life by them; in a deliverance from the bondage of the law, its curſe and condemnation, and from the dominion and tyranny of ſin, and from the diſtreſſing guilt of it on the conſcience; in ſpiritual peace and joy, ariſing from the application of the blood of Chriſt, and from a view of his righteouſneſs and juſtification by it, and of his ſacrifice, and of the expiation of ſin by that; which is enjoyed in the ways and ordinances of Chriſt, and oftentimes amidſt afflictions and tribulations: this is ſometimes broke in upon and interrupted, through the prevalence of ſin, the temptations of Satan, and divine deſertions; but may be returned to again, as Noah's dove returned to the ark when it could find reſt no where elſe; as the believer can find none but in Chriſt, and therefore after he has wandered from him he returns to him again, encouraged by the following reaſon. For the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee; in times paſt, even in an eternity paſt, having loved him with an everlaſting love, choſen him in Chriſt, made a covenant with him in him, bleſſed him with all ſpiritual bleſſings in him, and made unto him exceeding great and precious promiſes; provided a Redeemer and Saviour for him, whom he had made known unto him, having enlightened, quickened, and converted him; and had laid up good things for him to come, and had done many great things for him already; all which might ſerve to encourage his faith and hope in him. The Targum is, "be-"cauſe the Word of the Lord hath rendered good "unto me."

[k] Remigrat animus nunc denuo mihi, Plauti Epidicus, act. 4. ſc. 1. v. 42.

℣. 8. For thou haſt delivered my ſoul from death, &c.] From a corporal death, when his life was in danger, ſurrounded by Saul's army, in the hand of the Philiſtines at Gath, and when his ſon rebelled againſt him; and from a ſpiritual death in regeneration, which is a paſſing from death to life; and from an eternal death, the juſt wages of ſin: and not only ſo, but even mine eyes from tears; they were ſometimes full of, and ſhed in great plenty; he watered his couch with them; and eſpecially when abſent from the worſhip of the Lord, and without his preſence, which his enemies ſometimes reproached him with; and particularly when he fled before his rebellious ſon, and at the death of him; but God dried up all his tears; ſee Pſal. vi. 6. and xlii. 3. 2 Sam. xv. 30. and xviii. 33. Many are the occaſions of the ſaints weeping as they paſs through the valley of Baca, but God will wipe away all tears from their eyes. And my feet from falling; through a puſh[l], by an enemy, ſo as to fall; the people of God are liable to falling, both into ſin and into calamity; it is the Lord only that keeps them; and which they may expect from their intereſt in his love, covenant and promiſes, and from their being in the hands of Chriſt; ſee Pſal. lvi. 13.

℣. 9. I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living.] As in the ſight of the omniſcient God, according to his word and will, and in ſuch manner as to pleaſe him. So Enoch's walking with God, is by the apoſtle explained of pleaſing him; compare Gen. v. 22. with Heb. xi. 5. and ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it, I will pleaſe the Lord; or as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, that I may pleaſe the Lord; be grateful to him; or walk gratefully and acceptably before him, ſenſible of the obligations I am under to him: and this, in the ſtrength of grace, he determined to do in the land of the living; in this world, where men live, and as long as he lived in it: or in the church of God, among the living in Jeruſalem, with whom he reſolved to walk in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord. The land of Canaan is thought by Jarchi and Kimchi to be meant; and this being a type of heaven, the meaning may be, that he ſhould walk and dwell where living and glorified ſaints are to all eternity; and ſo it is an expreſſion of his faith of future glory and happineſs, agreeable to what follows.

℣. 10. I believed, therefore have I ſpoken, &c.] Here the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions begin a new pſalm, but without any foundation in the original; nor is it countenanced by the Targum; and is manifeſtly againſt the connexion with the preceding verſes. David expreſſes his faith in relation to what goes before, though the particulars of it are not mentioned, but are left to be ſupplied from thence: he not only believed there was a God, but that this God was gracious and merciful, and that he was his God; who had made a covenant with him, ordered in all things, and ſure: he believed the promiſes of it; and particularly the grand promiſe of it reſpecting Chriſt, and ſalvation by him: he believed the Lord would deliver him out of all his troubles; that he ſhould walk before him, and ſee his goodneſs in the land of the living; he believed a future ſtate of happineſs he ſhould hereafter enjoy. The apoſtle Paul quotes this paſſage, and applies it to himſelf and other goſpel-miniſters; declaring their faith in the reſurrection of the dead, and an eternal weight of glory they were looking for, 2 Cor. iv. 13, 14. and therefore ſpake ſo freely about theſe things. Faith gives boldneſs and freedom of ſpeech to men; which believers uſe with God in prayer, in the believing views of him, as their God in Chriſt; and of Chriſt, his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice: it gives miniſters boldneſs and freedom to ſpeak out plainly, conſtantly and boldly, the goſpel of Chriſt; it gives the ſame to private Chriſtians, to ſpeak freely one to another of their gracious experiences, and to declare publicly to the churches of Chriſt what God has done for their ſouls. I was greatly afflicted; when he believed and ſpake, and yet nevertheleſs did; he might be afflicted, reproached, and perſecuted for his faith, and his ſpeaking of it; particularly as it reſpected his coming to the crown and kingdom of Iſrael. And it is no unuſual thing for ſaints to be perſecuted for their faith, and profeſſion of it; and yet none of theſe things move them from it; their faith remains, and is much more precious than gold that periſheth; and they hold faſt the profeſſion of it. Many and great afflictions are the common lot of believers.

℣. 11. I ſaid in my haſte, All men are liars.] The ſin of lying is common to man; there is a natural proneneſs and propenſity to it: men go aſtray from the womb, ſpeaking lies; yet ſuch who have received the grace of God, put it off with the reſt of the deeds of the old man, and are children that will not lie. Wherefore, though the greater part of mankind might deſerve this character, yet all and every individual of them did not. However degenerate the age was in which David lived, and the faithful among men were few; yet there were ſome to whom this imputation did not belong; and therefore, on cool reflection, he owned it was ſaid in haſte; not with thought and deliberation, but raſhly and precipitately, unadviſedly, in a paſſion, and under a temptation, and when off of his guard; and which he acknowledged and repented of. The Targum is, "I ſaid in my flight;" when he made haſte and fled from Saul, whom he might call a liar and diſſembler, pretending reſpect to him when he had none; and alſo his courtiers; nay even Samuel himſelf, who had anointed him, and aſſured him he ſhould be king; and yet now he thought he had deceived him, and he ſhould periſh by the hand of Saul, and never come to the kingdom, 1 Sam. xxvii. 1. or when he fled from his ſon Abſalom, whom he might call a liar, who had deceived him with the pretence of a vow; and alſo Ahithophel and others, who proved treacherous and unfaithful to him. Some take the words in a quite different ſenſe, as an inſtance of his great faith; that when he was ſo greatly afflicted, and obliged to fly, yet declared that every man that ſhould ſay he ſhould not come to the kingdom was a liar; ſo Kimchi: and others think his meaning is, that every man is a liar in compariſon of God, who is true and faithful to his promiſes, and not a man that he ſhould lie. Men of both high and low degree, are a lie and vanity, and not to be truſted and depended upon; but a man may ſafely put confidence in the Lord; to this agrees Rom. iii. 4. where the apoſtle ſeems to have ſome reſpect to this paſſage.

℣. 12. What ſhall I render unto the Lord? &c.] He conſiders the Lord only as the author and giver of his mercies, and has nothing to ſay of his own merits, nor of other perſons, who might be inſtruments of good to him; but is for giving all the glory to God: not as though he could render any thing proportionable or equivalent to what he had received, but as having a grateful ſenſe of mercies, and willing to expreſs it; though at a loſs, in a great meaſure, in what manner to do it, and therefore puts this queſtion to himſelf and others: For all his benefits towards me; or, all his benefits are upon me[m]. This being a clauſe of itſelf; and ſhews what moved him to put the queſtion he did; a ſenſe of divine favours was impreſſed upon him, a load of benefits lay on him, and he wanted to eaſe himſelf in expreſſions of gratitude. Theſe benefits were the bleſſings of nature and providence; his being, and the preſervation of it, food, raiment, &c. and the bleſſings of grace; ſpiritual bleſſings, all things pertaining to life and godlineſs, ſanctification, adoption, pardon, juſtification and eternal life. Theſe may well be called benefits, ſince they ſpring intirely from the free grace of God; and they were many, more than could be counted and reckoned up, and ſet in order before the Lord; and yet he was deſirous that none of them might be forgotten, but that praiſe might be rendered to the Lord for them all.

℣. 13. I will take the cup of ſalvation, &c.] Or ſalvations[n]: not the euchariſtic cup, or the cup in the Lord's ſupper, which the apoſtle calls the cup of bleſſing, 1 Cor. x. 16. though ſome ſo think, and that the pſalmiſt perſonates the ſaints under the goſpel-diſpenſation; nor the cup of afflictions or martyrdom for the ſake of Chriſt; being willing, under a ſenſe of mercies received, to bear or ſuffer any thing for his ſake, he ſhould call him to; as knowing it would be a token to him of ſalvation, and work for his good: but rather an offering of praiſe for temporal ſalvation, and for ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation; in alluſion to a maſter of a family, who, at the cloſe of a feaſt or meal, uſed to take up a cup in his hands, and give thanks; ſee Matt. xxvi. 27. And call upon the name of the Lord; invocation of the name of the Lord, takes in all worſhip and ſervice of him, public and private, external and internal; and particularly prayer, which is calling upon the Lord in the name of Chriſt, with faith and fervency, in ſincerity and truth: and the ſenſe of the pſalmiſt is, that he would not only give thanks for the mercies he had received, but continue to pray to God for more; and this was all the return he was capable of making.

℣. 14. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now, in the preſence of all his people.] Make good the reſolutions and determinations he made in the ſtrength of divine grace, in the time of his troubles; that ſhould the Lord deliver him out of them, he would give him all the glory, and offer thankſgiving and praiſe to him; and now being delivered, this he declares he would do, in a public way, before all the people of God, aſſembled in the houſe of the Lord, as witneſſes of it; ſee Pſal. lxvi. 13, 14.

℣. 15. Precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his ſaints.] The Lord has his ſaints or ſanctified ones, who are ſanctified or ſet apart by God the Father from all eternity; who are ſanctified in Chriſt, their head and repreſentative; who are ſanctified by his blood, ſhed for the expiation of their ſins; who are ſanctified by his Spirit and grace, are called with an holy calling, and have principles of holineſs wrought in them, and live holy lives and converſations. The word[o] uſed alſo ſignifies one that has received kindneſs and favour, and ſhews it: ſaints are ſuch, who have received ſpiritual bleſſings from the Lord, to whom he has been kind and bountiful; and theſe are merciful and beneficent to others. Now theſe die as well as others, though holy and righteous, and though Chriſt has died for them; he has indeed delivered them from death as a puniſhment, he has aboliſhed it in this ſenſe; and has freed them from the curſe and ſting of it, but not from that itſelf; becauſe it is for their good, and it is precious in the ſight of the Lord. Saints are precious to him, living and dying; there is ſomething in their death, or that attends it, that is delightful to him, and of high eſteem with him; as when they are in the full exerciſe of grace at ſuch a ſeaſon; when they die in faith, and have hope in their death; and their love is drawn out unto him, and they long to be with him: beſides, they die in the Lord, and ſleep in Jeſus, in union with him; with whom he is well pleaſed, and all in him; and they die unto him, according to his will, and are reſigned unto it; and ſo glorify him in death, as well as in life. It is the time of their ingathering to him; at death he comes into his garden, and gathers his flowers, and ſmells a ſweet ſavour in them; their very duſt is precious to him, which he takes care of and raiſes up at the laſt day. The commonly received ſenſe of the words is, that the ſaints are ſo dear to the Lord; their lives are ſo much ſet by with him, and their blood ſo precious to him, that he will not eaſily ſuffer their lives to be taken away, or their blood to be ſpilled; and whenever it is, he will ſooner or later ſeverely revenge it; ſee 1 Sam. xxvi. 21, 24. Pſal. lxxii. 14. And to this ſenſe is the Targum, "precious before the Lord is death ſent to (or inflicted on) his ſaints;" that is, by men. The words will bear to be rendered, precious in the ſight of the Lord is that death, or death itſelf, for his ſaints: that very remarkable and obſervable death, even the death of his Son, which was not only for the good of his ſaints, for their redemption, ſalvation, juſtification, pardon, and eternal life; but in their room and ſtead; and which was very acceptable unto God, of high eſteem with him, of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to him: not that he took pleaſure in it, ſimply conſidered; for he that hath no pleaſure in the death of him that dieth, even of a ſinner, could have none in the death of his Son; but as hereby his juſtice was ſatisfied, his law fulfilled, the ſalvation of his people procured, and his covenant, counſels, purpoſes and decrees, accompliſhed. המותה has a double ה in it; one at the beginning, and the other at the end of the word; which is very emphatical, and ſo may point at ſomething very remarkable; and what more ſo than the death of Chriſt? and ל is ſometimes uſed for ſubſtitution, and ſignifies for, inſtead, or in the room of another; ſee Exod. iv. 16. and v. 12. Numb. x. 31. and xiv. 34. Prov. xxi. 18.

℣. 16. O Lord, truly I am thy ſervant, I am thy ſervant, &c.] Not merely by creation, and as obliged by providential favours; but by the grace of God, which made him a willing one: and he was ſo, not nominally only, but in reality; not as thoſe who ſay, Lord, Lord, but do not the will of God; whereas he ſerved the Lord chearfully and willingly, in righteouſneſs and true holineſs: and this he repeats for the confirmation of it, and to ſhew his heartineſs in the Lord's ſervice, and his zealous attachment to him; and which he mentions, not as though he thought his ſervice meritorious of any thing at the hand of God; but that his being in this character was an obligation upon him to ſerve the Lord, and him only, and might expect his protection in it. And the ſon of thy handmaid; his mother was alſo a ſervant of the Lord; and had trained him up in his infancy in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; ſo that he was inured to it betimes, and could not eaſily depart from it. Thou haſt looſed my bonds; the bonds of affliction and death in which he was held; theſe were looſed, being delivered from them, ℣. 3, 8. and the bonds of ſin, and Satan, and the law, in whoſe ſervice he had been, which was no other than a bondage; but now was freed from the ſervitude and dominion of ſin, from the captivity of Satan, and the bondage of the law; and therefore though a ſervant, yet the Lord's free man.

℣. 17. I will offer to thee the ſacrifice of thanksgiving, &c.] For deliverance from afflictions and death; for looſing his bonds, in every ſenſe; for all mercies, temporal and ſpiritual; ſee Rom. vi. 17. Such ſacrifices are according to the will of God; are well pleaſing to him when offered up through Chriſt, and in faith, and are a glorifying of him. Theſe are more acceptable than all ceremonial ſacrifices; and therefore the pſalmiſt determined to offer this, and not them. And will call upon the name of the Lord; ſee the note on ℣. 13.

℣. 18. I will pay my vows unto the Lord, &c.] See the note on ℣. 14. And the Targum here, as there, paraphraſes the latter clauſe, now in the preſence of all his people, thus; "I will then declare "his ſigns (or wonders) to all his people;" the marvellous things he had done for him.

℣. 19. In the courts of the Lord's houſe, &c.] This is added by way of explanation of the former verſe, what he meant by the preſence of all his people: the aſſembly of the ſaints met together in the houſe of the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle, in the courts of it, where the people got together to worſhip God. In the midſt of thee, O Jeruſalem; the Lord's houſe or tabernacle; for as yet the temple was not built, and the courts of it were in the midſt of the city of Jeruſalem. And this ſhews, as ſome interpreters have obſerved, that this pſalm muſt have been written after David came to the kingdom, and had got this city into his hands, whither he brought the ark of the Lord. The whole ſignifies that he would praiſe the Lord publicly, as well as privately; and he concludes the pſalm thus, Praiſe ye the Lord; calling upon the Lord's people, in his houſe and courts, to join with him in this work of praiſe.

PSALM CXVII.

THE inſcription of this pſalm in the Syriac verſion is, "It is ſaid concerning thoſe of "the houſe (or the companions) of Ananias, when "they came out of the furnace; likewiſe it foretels the calling of the Gentiles by the declaration "of the goſpel." Which laſt is right; for the apoſtle has quoted it, to prove the Gentiles ſhould glorify God for his mercy, Rom. xv. 9, 11. Aben Ezra thinks it concerns only the nations ſubdued by David; but he quotes R. Moſeh, as of opinion, that all nations are comprehended: and Kimchi affirms, that the pſalm belongs to the times of the Meſſiah; and ſuppoſes there is a myſtery in its conſiſting of two verſes only; and that it intimates, that in thoſe times there will be two people that will ſerve the Lord; Iſrael, with the law; and the Gentiles, with the ſeven precepts of Noah. It certainly refers to goſpel-times, and to the converſion of the Gentiles; and when Jews and Gentiles ſhould make one people, and be partakers of the ſame privileges and bleſſings; receive the ſame doctrines, ſubmit to the ſame ordinances, and be under the ſame law, to Chriſt their King.

℣. 1. O praiſe the Lord, all ye nations, &c.] The Lord having choſen, and Chriſt having redeemed ſome out of every kindred, tongue, people and nation; and the goſpel being ſent and preached to all nations, and ſome of each being called and converted by the Spirit of God; they are excited to praiſe the Lord, Jehovah, Father, Son and Spirit, for their ſeveral acts of divine grace and kindneſs towards them, in chooſing, redeeming and ſanctifying them; and in favouring them with the goſpel and the ordinances of it, and with his gracious preſence in them; and in ſupplying them with his grace, and giving them a right unto and meetneſs for eternal glory; for all which praiſe ſhould be given to the Lord. Praiſe him, all ye people; ye people of God in the ſeveral nations of the world; not the Jews only, but the Gentiles alſo: the ſame thing is repeated in different words, for the greater certainty and confirmation of it; that this ſhould be the work and exerciſe of the Gentiles in goſpel-times, and expreſſes eagerneſs and vehemence to ſtir them up to it. A different word is here uſed for praiſe than in the former clauſe; and which is more frequently uſed in the Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic languages; and ſignifies the celebration of the praiſes of God with a high voice.

℣. 2. For his merciful kindneſs is great towards us, &c.] Not us Iſraelites only, of whom David was, but Gentiles alſo; or otherwiſe there would be no force in the reaſon why all people and nations ſhould praiſe the Lord: but it reſpects the time when theſe ſhould become one people, partaking of the ſame grace, bleſſings, promiſes and privileges; in which the grace, mercy and lovingkindneſs of God greatly appeared; it prevailed over us[p], as it may be rendered: the word is uſed of the prevailing of the waters of the flood over the earth, Gen. vii. 18. and ſo may denote the exuberancy of the grace of God, of the abounding and ſuperabounding of it. There is an abundance of it in the heart of God, in his covenant, and in his Son; and which is diſplayed in redemption by him; in the forgiveneſs of ſin; and in the converſion of ſinners, and their everlaſting ſalvation: particularly there has been an inundation or deluge of it in the Gentile world, where it has flowed and overflowed; where ſin abounded, grace has much more abounded; and therefore the Lord is to be praiſed. And another reaſon follows, And the truth of the Lord endureth for ever; the faithfulneſs of God to his promiſes, not only made to the Jewiſh fathers concerning the Meſſiah, and redemption by him; but to the Gentiles, and concerning the bleſſing of all nations in the promiſed ſeed: and the faithfulneſs and truth of God, with reſpect to any of his promiſes, never fails; nor will his word of truth the goſpel; nor Jeſus Chriſt, who is the truth, and the truth of God, the truth of types, promiſes and prophecies; ſee Pſal. xliii. 3. for he is the ſame to-day, yeſterday, and for ever. Praiſe ye the Lord; for his ſuperabounding grace, and eternal truth; even all the people of God, of all nations, Jews and Gentiles.

PSALM CXVIII.

KIMCHI ſays, their Rabbins are divided about this pſalm. Some underſtand it of David; others of the Meſſiah: but, with us Chriſtians, there ought to be no doubt of its belonging to the Meſſiah; ſince our Lord has quoted a paſſage out of it, and applied it to himſelf, ℣. 22, 23. ſee Matt. xxi. 42. and ſo has the apoſtle Peter, Acts iv. 11. Nor did the Jews of thoſe times object thereunto, which doubtleſs they would have done, had the pſalm reſpected any other but the Meſſiah; yea, the common people that attended Chriſt when he entered into Jeruſalem, and the children in the temple, took their hoſannah from hence, ℣. 25, 26. ſee Matt. xxi. 9, 15. It is generally thought to be written by David, after he was eſtabliſhed in the kingdom, and had brought the ark of the Lord into the city. It concludes the great hallel, or hymn ſung at the Jewiſh feſtivals; particularly at the feaſts of tabernacles, and the paſſover.

℣. 1. O give thanks unto the Lord, &c.] For all his mercies temporal and ſpiritual; as all ſhould, who are partakers of them: this ſhould be done always, and for all things, in the name of Chriſt; it is but reaſonable ſervice. For he is good; in himſelf, and to others; is eſſentially and diffuſively good; the fountain of all goodneſs, and the author of all good things. Becauſe his mercy endureth for ever; in his own heart, and in his covenant; his grace and loving-kindneſs diſplayed in Chriſt; the bleſſings and promiſes of it, which are the ſure mercies of David: theſe always remain, notwithſtanding the unworthineſs of his people; and though he hides his face ſometimes from them, and chaſtiſes them; ſee Pſal. cvi. 1. and cvii. 1. the goodneſs and mercy of God were ſeen in ſetting David on the throne; and abundantly more in giving Chriſt to be the Saviour of his people; for both which thanks ſhould be given, and the kindneſs acknowledged, by the perſons mentioned in the following verſes.

℣. 2. Let Iſrael now ſay, that his mercy endureth for ever.] Let ſuch who have had an experience of it, acknowledge and declare it to others; not only believe in it with their hearts, and privately give thanks for it, but with the mouth make confeſſion of it to the glory of divine grace; not only literal Iſrael, whom the Lord brought out of Egypt, led and fed in the wilderneſs, and ſettled in the land of Canaan; and to whom the law and the ſervices of God, the covenants and promiſes, word and ordinances belonged; and who now were ſo happy under the government of ſuch a king as David; but alſo the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, the whole Iſrael of God, Jews and Gentiles, under the goſpel-diſpenſation; the Iſrael whom God has choſen, Chriſt has redeemed, and the Spirit effectually calls and ſanctifies; ſuch who are Iſraelites indeed, who have been encouraged to hope in the Lord, and in his mercy, and are made partakers of it; theſe ſhould ſpeak of the grace and mercy of God, and the continuance of it for the encouragement of others.

℣. 3. Let the houſe of Aaron now ſay, that his mercy endureth for ever.] The prieſts and Levites that bleſſed the people, and taught them the knowledge of divine things; but not theſe literally, at leaſt not only theſe, ſince the prieſthood of Aaron is changed, and the law of it abrogated, and all believers are now prieſts unto God, and offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices to him; and particularly the ſacrifice of praiſe for his grace and mercy, the perpetuity of which they ſhould publiſh and proclaim all abroad.

℣. 4. Let them now that fear the Lord ſay, that his mercy endureth for ever.] Not the proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion only, but all that feared the Lord among all people, as Aben Ezra obſerves; ſuch as fear the Lord and his goodneſs, and have had an experience of his grace and mercy, which has cauſed them to fear him; and to whom the mercy of God is great, and on whom it is from everlaſting to everlaſting; and therefore ſhould ſpeak well of it, and ſet their ſeal to it, that it abides for ever; ſee Pſal. ciii. 11, 17.

℣. 5. I called upon the Lord in diſtreſs, &c.] Or out of that ſtrait[q]; when David was encompaſſed by Saul and his men, or when at the court of Achiſh, or when his own people talked of ſtoning him. As this may reſpect the Meſſiah, it may deſign his diſtreſſes in the garden, when ſurrounded with ſorrow, and being in an agony prayed the more earneſtly, and his ſweat was as it were great drops of blood; and may be applied to his members, as it often is their caſe to be in diſtreſs, ſtraits and difficulties through outward afflictions and preſſures, inward corruptions, temptations and deſertions, and through the low exerciſe of grace; when they are as it were impriſoned, and ſo ſtraitned they cannot come forth in the free exerciſe of it; at all which ſeaſons prayer is neceſſary; and nothing is more proper than to call upon the Lord, which is both duty and privilege, and often attended with ſucceſs, as follows. The Lord anſwered me, and ſet me in a large place; as he did David, when he delivered him from all his troubles, placed him on the throne of Iſrael, and gave him reſt from all his enemies round about; ſee Pſal. xxxi. 8. And ſo he did the Meſſiah, when he raiſed him from the dead, received him to heaven, where he ſits at the right of God in human nature: this is a large place indeed, large enough for the innumerable company of angels, and for all the ſaints, for whom everlaſting habitations and manſions of bliſs are preparing by him; and which is the glorious liberty of the children of God; ſee Pſal. xviii. 19. and theſe alſo upon calling on the Lord in diſtreſs are heard and anſwered, and brought into large places, where they walk at liberty; ſo at firſt converſion, when diſtreſſed about their ſouls and cry for help, they are anſwered and brought out of the pit, and have their feet ſet upon a rock and their goings eſtabliſhed; and when at other times their grace is drawn forth into exerciſe, their ſouls are enlarged in duty, are favoured with large views of the love of God, with an increaſe of ſpiritual light, knowledge, peace and joy; and are delivered from their troubles, and out of the hands of their enemies. Or it may be rendered, the Lord anſwered me largely[r]; as he did Solomon, when he gave him more than he aſked for; and as he does his people, when he gives them a ſufficiency, and an abundance of his grace, and even not only above their deſerts, but above their thoughts and expectations; ſee Eph. iii. 20.

℣. 6. The Lord is on my ſide, &c.] Or for me[s]; he was on the ſide of David, hence all his proſperity and victories, the wonderful things done by him, his exaltation to the throne, and the eſtabliſhment of it; and ſo he was on the ſide of Chriſt, he was near unto him, at his right hand, to guide, direct, and aſſiſt him as man; and he is likewiſe on the ſide of his people, to fight their battles for them, to ſupport them under all their afflictions, to ſupply all their wants, to deliver them from all evil, to carry on the work of grace in their ſouls, and to bring them to glory. The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord is for my help." I will not fear. What can man do unto me? David did not; he was not afraid of ten thouſands of men, no not of a whole army that encamped againſt him, God being for him, the ſtrength of his life, and his ſalvation, Pſal. iii. 6. and xxvii. 1, 2, 3. nor did the Meſſiah; he was not afraid of Herod when he was told he would kill him; nor of the high prieſts, ſcribes and phariſees, though he knew he ſhould fall into their hands, and they would deliver him to the Gentiles, to be ſcourged and crucified; nor of Judas and his band of men, who came to take him; nor of Pilate his judge, who had no power againſt him but what was given him. Nor have the ſaints any reaſon to fear what man can do unto them, when grace is in exerciſe; for what is man to God, who is but fleſh, and that fleſh graſs? Nor can he do any thing without a divine permiſſion; is often fruſtrated in his attempt; and what he is ſuffered to do, is overruled for good; and the utmoſt he can do is to kill the body; he cannot deſtroy the ſoul, or hinder the happineſs of it; ſee Pſal. lvi. 4, 9, 11.

℣. 7. The Lord taketh my part with them that help me, &c.] With the four hundred men that were with David, and ſtood by him in his troubles, 1 Sam. xxii. 2. ſee Pſal. liv. 4. and with thoſe who miniſtred unto Chriſt as man, Luke viii. 3. Or, the Lord is for me, with or among my helpers[t]; he is the principal helper, he is one for all; he is in the room and ſtead of other helpers; having him, there is no need of any other: the Lord is the only helper of his people, vain is the help of man; he helps them out of all their troubles and difficulties, in the exerciſe of every grace, and in the diſcharge of every duty; he helps them to all their mercies temporal and ſpiritual, to grace here, and glory hereafter. The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord is "to help me." Therefore ſhall I ſee my deſire upon them that hate me; ſee vengeance on them, as the Targum; which was deſired by David, by the Meſſiah, and by the ſaints; not for the ſake of that itſelf, but for the glory of divine juſtice. David ſaw this, Pſal. liv. 7. ſo will the Meſſiah, when all his enemies, that will not have him to reign over them, will be ſlain before him; and ſo will the people of God, when Antichriſt is deſtroyed.

℣. 8. It is better to truſt in the Lord, &c.] This, with what follows in the next verſe, is the concluſion from the above premiſes and experience; it is good to truſt in the Lord; ſuch enjoy peace, are in ſafety, ſhall not want any good thing, nor ever be aſhamed and confounded: the Targum is, "it "is better to truſt in the Word of the Lord." Than to put confidence in man; it is not good to put confidence in man at all; it is truſting to a broken ſtaff, to a mere ſhadow, which can yield no ſupport or relief: it is beſt to truſt in the Lord; he is able to help, as well as willing; he is faithful to his word, and unchangeable in his promiſes; whereas man, though he may have a will to help, oftentimes has it not in his power; and when it is in his power, and has promiſed it, he diſappoints, being changeable or unfaithful. Wherefore truſt not in man, but in the Lord; yea, curſed is the man that truſts in man; ſee Jer. xvii. 5.

℣. 9. It is better to truſt in the Lord, &c.] The Targum is, "in the Word of the Lord." This is repeated for the ſake of what follows: Than to put confidence in princes; who have greater ability to help, and whoſe honour ſhould engage them to keep their word; and yet it is better to truſt in the Lord than in them; ſee Pſal. cxlvi. 3. Two different words being uſed in this and the preceding verſe for truſt and confidence, Jarchi has obſerved, that the one ſignifies a leſſer, the other a ſtronger confidence; as if the ſenſe was this, It is better lightly to truſt in the Lord, than to put the ſtrongeſt confidence in men and princes. But the obſervation is ſcarcely ſolid enough.

℣. 10. All nations compaſſed me about, &c.] Not all the nations of the world, but all the neighbouring nations about Judea; as the Philiſtines, Moabites, Ammonites, Amalekites, and Syrians; and theſe not all at one time, but ſometimes one, and ſometimes another, whom David fought with and ſubdued: and theſe applied to Chriſt, deſign Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Iſrael; who were gathered together againſt him, to do what God had determined ſhould be done, Acts iv. 27, 28. ſee Pſal. xxii. 12, 16. And this is ſometimes the caſe of the church and people of God: at the firſt ſetting up of the intereſt of Chriſt, the whole world was againſt it; and in ſuch circumſtances was the church of Chriſt, when the whole world wondered after the beaſt, the Romiſh Antichriſt; as it will be, when the kings of the earth and of the whole world will be gathered to the battle at Armageddon; and alſo when the Gog and Magog-army ſhall compaſs the camp of the ſaints and the beloved city; ſee Rev. xiii. 3. and xvi. 14. and xx. 8, 9. and ſo Jarchi interprets this of Gog and Magog. Yea, it is applicable to particular believers, who are attacked by Satan, the god of this world; and who are hated and perſecuted by the men of it in general; and who are beſet on all hands, at times, with the temptations of the devil, and the corruptions of their own hearts, and the ſnares of the world; that it is as if all nations compaſſed them about. But in the name of the Lord will I deſtroy them; that is, calling upon the name of the Lord; as Aſa, Jehoſhaphat, and others did, beſides David: or truſting in the name of the Lord; and ſo the Targum, "in the name of the Word of "the Lord I truſted, therefore will I cut them off." Or, going forth in the name and ſtrength of the Lord, as David did againſt Goliath; and ſo againſt all nations that gathered together againſt him, whoſe armies he vanquiſhed and deſtroyed, and made the nations tributary to him. Thus our Lord Jeſus Chriſt his antitype, as Mediator, ſtood in the ſtrength and in the majeſty of the name of the Lord, calling upon him to glorify him; and truſting in his help and power, he attacked all his and our enemies, and obtained an intire victory over them, to the utter demolition of them; ſin, Satan, the world, death and hell. The word[u] uſed has the ſignification of conciſion or circumciſion; and may have a peculiar regard to the Jews, who boaſted of their circumciſion, and were the implacable enemies of Chriſt; and who were deſtroyed by him, when wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt.

℣. 11. They compaſſed me about, yea, they compaſſed me about, &c.] Which is repeated not only for the confirmation of it, but to denote the frequency and fury of their attacks, and their obſtinate perſiſting therein. But in the name of the Lord I will deſtroy them; which alſo is repeated to ſhew the ſtrength of his faith, and the continuance of it, notwithſtanding his numerous enemies, and their violent efforts againſt him.

℣. 12. They compaſſed me about like bees, &c.] In great numbers[w]; as a ſwarm of bees, which, being irritated and provoked, will fly upon perſons in a body, and with great fury; to which the Amorites and the Aſſyrian army were compared, Deut. i. 44. Iſa. vii. 18. They will attack horſes and kill them, as Ariſtotle[x] ſays; and places beſieged have been delivered, by throwing out hives of bees among the beſiegers[y]: and yet as they are feeble creatures, ſo by ſtriking they loſe their ſting; and either die very quickly, or however become uſeleſs. All which denotes the numbers of the enemies of David and of Chriſt, and of his church and people, and the wrath and fury of them againſt them, as well as their fruitleſs and unſucceſsful attempts upon them; for though they rage, what they contrive and endeavour to put in execution are vain things, and in the iſſue end in their own ruin and deſtruction. They are quenched as the fire of thorns; which make a blaze, a noiſe for a while; but are ſoon conſumed, and leave only a few aſhes behind. Wicked men are often compared to thorns, they being like them, unfruitful in themſelves, unprofitable to others, hurtful to the ſaints, and whoſe end is to be burnt; and whoſe deſtruction is certain and ſudden, and eaſily effected as the burning of thorns; ſee Pſal. lviii. 9. Eccleſ. vii. 6. The Targum renders it, "they burned as fire among "thorns;" which is eaſily kindled and ſoon quenched: and ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions; as if it was expreſſive of their wrath and fury, which was ſoon over; which agrees with what follows: For; or but, or verily[z], in the name of the Lord I will deſtroy them; ſee the notes on ℣. 10, 11.

℣. 13. Thou haſt thruſt ſore at me, that I might fall, &c.] Or puſhing, thou haſt puſhed me[a], that I might fall: an apoſtrophe to ſome particular enemy, as Saul was to David; who thruſt ſore at him to take away his life, by caſting a javelin at him; ſpeaking to his ſervants to kill him; ſending meſſengers to watch his houſe and ſlay him, and by purſuing him from place to place. And ſuch an one was Judas to Chriſt, who lifted up his heel againſt him, and betrayed him into the hands of his enemies; or the devil in him, and by him; and who thruſt ſore at Chriſt by others; by Herod in his infancy, who ſought to take away his life; and by the ſcribes and phariſees, who attempted it in different ways, and at laſt got him nailed to the croſs; as well as Satan thruſt ſore at him, by his temptations in the wilderneſs, and when in his agonies in the garden, and when on the croſs: and ſo the ſame enemy thruſts ſore at the members of Chriſt, to cauſe them to fall from him, and the ſtedfaſtneſs of their faith in him to fail; that they may fall into temptation, and by it into ſin, and that finally and totally, and into hell itſelf, could he obtain it. But the Lord helped me; helped David, ſo that he periſhed not by the hand of Saul, he ſometimes feared he ſhould; helped Chriſt, as man and Mediator, in the day of ſalvation, and raiſed him from the dead, and gave him glory: and he helps his people againſt all their enemies; holds them with his right hand; helps them to fight againſt them; maintains his own work of grace in them, and keeps them from a total and final falling away, by his power unto ſalvation. The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord helped "me."

℣. 14. The Lord is my ſtrength and ſong, &c.] It being in the name of the Lord the enemies of the pſalmiſt were deſtroyed; and having obtained help of him when ſore thruſt at, he gives him all the glory, and aſcribes nothing to himſelf. It was the Lord that ſtrengthned him, helped him, and gave him the victory. The Lord is the author and giver of ſtrength, natural and ſpiritual; he is the ſtrength of the hearts and lives of his people, and of their ſalvation; and therefore is their ſong, the matter of it: they ſing of his nature and perfections, of his works of providence and grace, of his righteouſneſs and ſalvation, as follows: And is become my ſalvation; the author of temporal, ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation; which the pſalmiſt ſaw his intereſt in, and was aſſured of, and therefore ſung praiſe on that account; ſee Exod. xv. 2. Iſa. xii. 2.

℣. 15. The voice of rejoicing and ſalvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous, &c.] In all the dwellings of good men, throughout the land of Iſrael, was heard nothing but the voice of joy, on account of David's acceſſion to the throne; the deliverance of him from a perſecuting Saul, and of them from his mal-adminiſtration; and the victories David obtained over all his enemies: for, when the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice, Prov. xxix. 2. And ſtill much more occaſion is there of joy in the dwelling-places of the ſaints, though but cottages, and in the churches of God, the tabernacles of the moſt High, on account of the ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation Chriſt is the author of; which joy is inwardly felt in the heart, and outwardly expreſſed by one ſaint to another; and in vocal prayer to God, and in ſinging his praiſes; which may be done in the houſes of the ſaints, as well as in the houſe of God. What this voice, or the righteous with their voice, expreſſed in their ſeveral dwelling-houſes, is as follows; for the word ſaying may be ſupplied, and the words connected thus: Saying, The right hand of the Lord doth valiantly; or acts powerfully[b]; in helping and aſſiſting David, in protecting and defending him, in raiſing him to the throne, and in giving him reſt from all his enemies; and ſo in ſupporting the Meſſiah, his antitype, as man and Mediator, in his work and under his ſufferings; in raiſing him from the dead, and exalting him at his right hand; and which was done with his right hand, Acts ii. 33. and v. 31. Jarchi refers this joy here expreſſed to future times, the times of the Meſſiah: and in an ancient[c] writing of the Jews, the right hand of the Lord, three times mentioned in this and the following verſe, is interpreted of the Meſſiah, the ſon of David.

℣. 16. The right hand of the Lord is exalted, &c.] Lifted up, very eminent and conſpicuous, eaſily to be obſerved in the inſtances before given, and become great and glorious in power; ſee Exod. xv. 6. The power of God is ſuperior to all enemies; and is beyond conception and expreſſion; and is able to do for his people above all they are able to aſk or think. The right hand of the Lord doth valiantly; or acts powerfully. This is repeated for the confirmation of it, and to ſhew how much the righteous were affected with it, and how deſirous they were of glorifying of it; the right hand of the Lord, being three times mentioned, may have reſpect to the three divine Perſons in the Godhead; whoſe right hand or power is the ſame: and as the right hand of the Father has done powerfully in the inſtances given; ſo the right hand of the Son has worked mightily in vanquiſhing all enemies, ſin, Satan, death, and the world; in obtaining the ſalvation of his people, and in raiſing himſelf from the dead: and ſo the right hand of the holy Spirit has wrought powerfully on Chriſt, on whom he reſted as the Spirit of might, and through whom Chriſt offered himſelf to God, and by whom he was raiſed from the dead; and alſo in the converſion of ſinners, and in helping, aſſiſting, ſtrengthening and protecting the ſaints.

℣. 17. I ſhall not die, but live, &c.] Not that he ſhould never die, David knew he ſhould; but that his preſent afflictions would not iſſue in death; or he ſhould not die by the hands of his enemies, he ſometimes feared he ſhould; but now believed he ſhould live, as he did to a good old age: he knew he ſhould live ſpiritually and eternally, and not die a ſecond death; and ſo may all true believers and members of Chriſt ſay. Yea, theſe words may be conſidered as the words of Chriſt; who, though he came into the world to die, and did die for the ſins of his people; yet he knew he ſhould not die before his time, nor ſhould he continue long under the power of death; but ſhould live again, and live for evermore, and not die; death ſhould have no more dominion over him; ſee Pſal. xvi. 10. Rom. vi. 9. And declare the works of the Lord; the wonderful appearances of God in a providential way, and all his marvellous works of grace; as David did, and as all the people of God more or leſs do; and which is the end of their living; not to eat and drink, and gratify their carnal ſenſes, but to glorify God, by declaring what he has done for themſelves and others. So the Meſſiah declared the name of God, his nature, perfections, mind and will, word and works, among his brethren in the great congregation, Pſal. xxii. 22.

℣. 18. The Lord hath chaſtned me ſore, &c.] Or, in chaſtning hath chaſtned me[d]. David was exerciſed with many afflictions; and though theſe were ſore ones to the fleſh, yet they were only the chaſtnings of a Father, and were all in love and for his good; as are all the afflictions of God's people; for whom he loves, he chaſtens. Indeed the chaſtiſement of the Meſſiah was a proper puniſhment for ſin, and ſo a ſore one indeed; he being the ſurety of his people, on whom the chaſtiſement of their peace was laid; that is, the puniſhment of their ſin, Iſa. liii. 5. But he hath not given me over unto death; as yet, or to the power of it, ſo as to continue under it. This is to be underſtood in the ſenſe as before; ſee the note on ℣. 17.

℣. 19. Open to me the gates of righteouſneſs, &c.] The doors of the ſanctuary or tabernacle, ſo called, becauſe none but righteous perſons might enter in at them, or who were clean in a ceremonial ſenſe; and becauſe ſacrifices of righteouſneſs were here offered. The words are addreſſed to the porters, or Levites, that kept the doors of the tabernacle, to open them. The Targum is, "open to me the gates "of the city of righteouſneſs;" Jeruſalem ſo called, Iſa. i. 26. the gates of which were opened to David, when he took it from the Jebuſites. An emblem of the church or city of God, the gates of which are opened to the righteous to enter into now; and of the new Jeruſalem, and of the heavenly glory, into which the ſaints will have an abundant entrance hereafter; ſee Iſa. xxvi. 1, 2. Rev. xxii. 14. Moreover, theſe may be the words of the Meſſiah, requiring the gates of heaven to be opened to him by his blood, he having obtained redemption for his people; ſee Pſal. xxiv. 7, 8, 9, 10. I will go in to them, and I will praiſe the Lord; at the gates of the tabernacle David entered, and praiſed the Lord for his deliverance and ſalvation, and for the many favours and honours beſtowed on him; and in the church of God do the ſaints praiſe him, as they will do in heaven to all eternity; and where Chriſt, as man, is praiſing his divine Father, Pſal. xxii. 22, 25.

℣. 20. This gate of the Lord, into which the righteous ſhall enter.] This ſeems to be ſpoken by ſome other perſon or perſons, diſtinct from David and the Meſſiah; pointing at ſome particular and principal gate, upon hearing the above word: by which is meant, not the gate of the houſe of the ſanctuary of the Lord, as the Targum; but the Meſſiah himſelf, afterwards ſpoken of as the ſtone rejected by the builders, and made the head of the corner; who is the way of acceſs to God; the door into the church or ſheepfold; the ſtrait gate that leads to eternal life; by which none but righteous perſons enter into heaven: even ſuch who are made righteous, through the imputation of his righteouſneſs to them; ſee John x. 1, 9. and xiv. 4. Matt. vii. 14.

℣. 21. I will praiſe thee, for thou haſt heard me, &c.] Here the pſalmiſt reaſſumes his part in this ſong, and determines to praiſe the Lord for hearing him when in diſtreſs, and when he was encompaſſed with his enemies, and for delivering him out of their hands. And art become my ſalvation; the author of it, and therefore deſerving of praiſe; and who is no other than the Meſſiah-Jeſus, who is deſcribed in the next verſe.

℣. 22. The ſtone which the builders refuſed, &c.] This is not Zorobabel, according to the ſenſe of ſome Jews, as Theodoret ſuggeſts; nor the people of Iſrael, as Jarchi and Kimchi; nor David, as the Targum, which paraphraſes the words, "the child "the builders deſpiſed, was among the ſons of "Jeſſe, and deſerved to be appointed a king and "a governor." He doubtleſs was a type of Chriſt, and there was ſome ſhadow of what is here ſaid in him: he was refuſed by all the tribes but Judah; Iſhboſheth, the ſon of Saul, was ſet upon the throne, though afterwards all Iſrael and Judah united in making David king, 2 Sam. ii. 8, 9, 10. and v. 3. But the Meſſiah is intended, as ſome ancient Jewiſh writers [e] own, and Jarchi himſelf elſewhere [f] confeſſes; and which is certain from the quotation and application of this paſſage to Chriſt, in Matt. xxi. 42. Acts iv. 11, 12. who is compared to a ſtone for his ſtrength and duration; and becauſe of his uſefulneſs in the ſpiritual building of the church, as a foundation and corner-ſtone; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 42. Him the Jewiſh builders refuſed; their political ones, their rulers, that believed not on him; the princes of this world, that roſe up againſt him and crucified him; even thoſe who were the ſupport of their civil ſtate, and the maintainers of it: but more eſpecially their eccleſiaſtical builders, the chief prieſts, ſcribes and phariſees, who built the people, or directed them to build on their carnal privileges, the traditions of the elders, and their own legal righteouſneſs. Theſe refuſed to receive Jeſus as the Meſſiah, and to believe in him; they refuſed to own and honour him as King of Zion; they refuſed his doctrines and ordinances; they refuſed to hear him preach, or ſuffer others to hear him; they refuſed to make uſe of him in the ſpiritual building, either to preach him themſelves, or allow others to do it; they rejected him with contempt; they ſet him at nought, and preferred a thief and a robber to him. Is become the headſtone of the corner; Chriſt is the corner-ſtone, that unites elect angels and elect men together, Jews and Gentiles, Old and New-Teſtament ſaints, ſaints above and below, ſaints in all ages and places; and he is the head-ſtone or chief corner-ſtone for ſtrength and beauty, and the head of the corner; or of perſons moſt eminent, who are ſometimes called the corner, Judg. xx. 2. Zech. x. 4. Chriſt is exalted above all; he is the head of principalities and powers, the angels; he is made higher than the kings of the earth; and is the head of the body, the church, an head both of eminence and influence.

℣. 23. This is the Lord's doing, &c.] This ſtone is from the Lord, Gen. xlix. 24. it is of his chooſing, appointing and laying: the rejection of it by the builders, is through his permiſſion and will; they did no other things than what his hand and counſel determined ſhould be done, Acts ii. 23. and iv. 27, 28. and the exaltation of it, or the making it the head of the corner, was of him; he highly exalted him at his right hand, above every name, creature, and thing. It is marvellous in our eyes; the ſtone itſelf is wonderful to look at, for its beauty, ſtrength and uſefulneſs; the wiſdom, love, care and power of God, in laying it, are aſtoniſhing; the diſtinguiſhing grace of God in ſelecting ſome ſtones out of the common quarry, making them lively ſtones, and building them on this foundation-ſtone, is exceeding marvellous: and ſo are both the rejection and exaltation of it; that ſo precious a ſtone ſhould be refuſed, and when treated with ſo much neglect and contempt ſhould be exalted. The Targum is, "from the Lord was this, ſaid the builders; "this is marvellous in our ſight, ſaid the ſons of "Jeſſe."

℣. 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made, &c.] Famous and remarkable for the above events. Meaning either the day of Chriſt's entrance into Jeruſalem, in order to be delivered up to the Jews, and ſuffer and die in the room of his people; to which the following words agree: or the day of his reſurrection [g] from the dead; when God gave him glory, and was matter of joy to thoſe for whoſe juſtification he roſe; or the Lord's day, kept in commemoration of it: or rather the whole goſpel-diſpenſation, made a bright day by the Sun of righteouſneſs; and which is the now preſent day of ſalvation. We will rejoice and be glad in it; becauſe of the bleſſings of grace, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation, which came through the humiliation and exaltation of Chriſt, and are publiſhed in the everlaſting goſpel. The Targum is, "this day the Lord hath made, ſaid the builders; "let us rejoice and be glad in it, ſaid the ſons of "Jeſſe."

℣. 25. Save now, I beſeech thee, O Lord, &c.] Or, we beſeech thee; for they are the words of the people, wiſhing all health and happineſs to their King; and it is as if they had ſaid, Vivat Rex, Let the king live, or God ſave the king: and no doubt theſe words were uſed by the people, when all the tribes united and made David king over all Iſrael, and when he became the head of the corner; which was attended with the ſhouts and acclamations of the people, expreſſing themſelves after this manner. And certain it is, that theſe words were uſed by the followers of Chriſt, and applied to him, when he made his public entry into Jeruſalem, crying, hoſanna to the ſon of David. The word hoſanna is the ſame with ſave now; and is compounded of the two words in the text thus tranſlated, Matt. xxi. 9. O Lord, I beſeech thee, ſend now proſperity; to our King: give him ſucceſs in all his undertakings, and victory over all his enemies; may the pleaſure of the Lord proſper in his hands; may his goſpel run and be glorified, and be ſpread all over the world, and multitudes bow to the ſceptre of his kingdom; may his kingdom be enlarged, and his dominion be from ſea to ſea; and may this ſpiritual building riſe, and be brought to perfection, of which he is the foundation and chief corner-ſtone. The alluſion may be to the ſhouts uſually made at the laying of the foundation or corner-ſtone of any conſiderable edifice, and at the bringing in the head-ſtone of it; ſee Ezra iii. 11. Zech. iv. 7.

℣. 26. Bleſſed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord, &c.] Theſe words were uſed by the multitude that followed Chriſt, as he went into Jeruſalem, in order to eat his laſt paſſover, and ſuffer and die for his people, and are applied to him; as alſo by his diſciples, who expreſſed them thus, Bleſſed be the King that cometh, &c. Luke xix. 38. the King Meſſiah, who came from heaven to earth, from his Father into this world, to ſave the chief of ſinners; who now came to Jeruſalem on that errand, and into the temple, as the proprietor of it; where he ſhewed his power, and exerciſed his authority: he came not in his own name, but in his Father's name; and not to do his own will, but his; nor did he ſeek his own glory, but his Father's: he came as his ſervant to do his work; he came with a commiſſion from him, by his order, and to obey his commands, which he did; he came with his full conſent and will, and, as man and Mediator, was helped and aſſiſted by him; and as ſuch he is pronounced bleſſed: all bleſſing, happineſs and honour, are wiſhed for him, and aſcribed unto him, as his juſt due; being Lord and King, Saviour and Redeemer of his people. We have bleſſed you out of the houſe of the Lord: theſe are the words of the prieſts, one part of whoſe office it was to bleſs the people, Numb. vi. 23—27. but theſe were not the chief prieſts of the Jews in Chriſt's time; for they were diſpleaſed with the multitude, and with the children in the temple, for crying hoſanna to the ſon of David, and wiſhing well to him, Matt. xxi. 15, 16. But the diſciples of Chriſt, or miniſters of the goſpel, who bleſſed the people that bleſſed their Lord and Maſter; or wiſhed well to them, and prayed for them that wiſhed well to him. The ſenſe is, either we who are of the houſe of the Lord bleſs you; we who ſtand there, and ſerve him, are rulers of the houſhold of God, and ſtewards of the myſteries of grace: or we bleſs you, and pray for your welfare, who are of the houſhold of faith; who are fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God: or we bleſs you with proviſions out of the houſe of God; with the goodneſs and fatneſs of his houſe, the word and ordinances, by adminiſtring them to you: or we pray that the Lord would bleſs you out of Zion, or out of the higheſt heavens, where he is; even with all ſpiritual bleſſings, in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus; ſee Pſal. cxxxiv. 1, 2, 3. The Targum of this and the preceding verſe is, "We beſeech thee, O Lord, ſave now, ſaid the builders; We beſeech thee, O Lord, ſend now proſperity, ſaid Jeſſe and his wife. Bleſſed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord, ſaid the builders; Let us bleſs you out of the houſe of the ſanctuary of the Lord, ſaid David."

[f] Comment. in Mic v. 2.

[g] So Suidas in voce αυτη; which he obſerves fell on March 25.

℣. 27. God is the Lord, which hath ſhewed us light, &c.] Theſe are the words of the people, acknowledging divine favours; particularly that the Lord had cauſed his face to ſhine upon them, as the prieſts wiſhed for, Numb. vi. 25. The Lord might be ſaid to ſhew them light, by ſending the Meſſiah to them, who came a light into the world; by making a goſpel-day, for which they expreſſed their gladneſs, ℣. 24. by cauſing the light of his glorious goſpel to ſhine into their hearts; by making them who were darkneſs light, the darkneſs of ignorance and unbelief to paſs away, and the true light to ſhine; by lifting up the light of his countenance upon them, and giving them hopes of the light of glory and happineſs, and making them meet to be partakers of the inheritance with the ſaints in light; for all which they are thankful, and call for ſacrifices. Bind the ſacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar; that is, the lamb, as the Targum and Aben Ezra. Take a lamb for ſacrifice, and bind it with cords; and being bound, lead it to the altar; there ſlay it, and then pour the blood upon the horns of it; which were the uſual rites in ſacrifice. Or bring a large number of ſacrifices bound, as many as will fill the court, even up to the horns of the altar, upon this joyful occaſion: for the ſacrifice was not bound to the horns of the altar; but it denotes here ſuch a number of ſacrifices as would fill the court, and reach thither; ſo Guſſetius[h] interprets it very rightly. But we are not to think of ſlain beaſts, but of holy and living ſacrifices, even the perſons of God's people; their bodies and ſouls, and their ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving; ſince this refers to goſpel-times; whoſe hearts in ſuch ſervice are to be united to fear the Lord, and fixed truſting in him; and are to be drawn to it with the cords of love, which are more than all whole burnt-offerings; and which ſacrifices are to be brought to the altar, Chriſt; which is moſt holy, and ſanctifies gifts and perſons, and renders them acceptable to God; and which is to be compaſſed about with ſongs of deliverance and ſalvation, by perſons from every quarter, the four corners of the earth. Luther renders it, "adorn the feaſt with leaves;" and others, "bind on the feaſt-day branches," of trees, as was uſual on the feaſt of tabernacles; ſee Lev. xxiii. 40. and it was uſual with the heathens, to ſtrew their altars with green herbs and flowers[i], particularly vervain, put for all other ſweet herbs[k]: hence Ovid[l] calls them herboſas aras; which the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions ſeem to countenance.

℣. 28. Thou art my God, and I will praiſe thee, &c.] Theſe are the words of David, aſſerting his intereſt in God as his covenant-God; and which is the great bleſſing of the covenant, and the greateſt happineſs of men, and will always continue; and for which there is abundant reaſon for praiſe: it is an inſtance of diſtinguiſhing grace, an evidence of everlaſting love, and the foundation of all comfort and happineſs here and hereafter. Thou art my God, I will exalt thee; in my heart, and with my lips; and call upon others to join with me in it, as in the following verſe. The Targum is, "thou art my God, and I will confeſs before thee; thou art my God, and I will praiſe thee, ſaid David: Samuel replied and ſaid, Praiſe, O ye congregation of Iſrael;" who are addreſſed in the next words.

℣. 29. O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, &c.] And thus the pſalm ends as it began; there having been given many inſtances of the divine goodneſs, in hearing and delivering the pſalmiſt when in diſtreſs; ſaving him from his enemies, when compaſſed about with them; ſparing his life, when in great danger; and eſpecially in making the ſtone rejected by the builders, the head of the corner. For his mercy endureth for ever; the above inſtances are proofs of it; and ſtill it continues, and will for evermore. Here ends the great hallel, or hymn, ſung at the paſſover and other feſtivals.

PSALM CXIX.

THIS pſalm is generally thought to be written by David, but when, uncertain; very probably towards the decline of life; and, as ſome think, for the ſake of his ſon Solomon. It ſeems to be a collection of obſervations on the word of God, and its precepts, the uſefulneſs and excellency of it, he had made in the courſe of his life; interſperſed with various petitions for the grace of God, to enable him to obſerve it. The pſalm is a very extraordinary one; partly on account of the unuſual length of it, it being more than double the length of the longeſt pſalm in the whole book; and partly on account of its curious compoſition. It conſiſts of twenty two parts, according to the number of the letters in the Hebrew alphabet; the names of which letters ſtand between each part; and every part conſiſts of eight verſes, all of which begin with the ſame letter: thus for inſtance, the firſt eight verſes begin with the letter א Aleph, and the ſecond eight verſes begin with the letter ב Beth, and ſo on throughout; hence the Maſorah calls this pſalm the Great Alphabet. This the pſalmiſt did, perhaps to excite attention to what he ſaid, and alſo to help the memory. And it is obſervable, that there are very few verſes in the whole, not more than one or two, but what has ſomething in it concerning the word of God, and its precepts and ordinances; there are nine or ten different words uſed relative to it, which ſignify much one and the ſame thing; as laws, ſtatutes, judgments, teſtimonies, &c. Luther [m] obſerves, that neither Cicero, nor Virgil, nor Demoſthenes, are to be compared with David for eloquence, as we ſee in the 119th Pſalm, where he divideth one ſenſe and meaning into twenty two ſorts. And it may alſo be remarked, that there is nothing in it concerning the tabernacle-worſhip, or the rites and ceremonies of the legal diſpenſation; ſo that it ſeems to be calculated for, and is ſuited to, the word of God, and the ordinances of it, as we now have them in their full perfection: and the deſign of the whole is to ſhew the fervent affection the pſalmiſt had for the word of God, and to ſtir up the ſame in others.

א ALEPH, The firſt part.

℣. 1. Bleſſed are the undefiled in the way, &c.] Who are in the right way to heaven and happineſs, which is Jeſus Chriſt; the ſtrait gate, and narrow way to eternal life; the only true way of life and ſalvation, in which way believers walk by faith. All out of this way are altogether become filthy; but all in this way are clean, even every whit: they are without ſpot and blemiſh, blameleſs and unreprovable, and without fault, before the throne of God and in his ſight; being waſhed from their ſins in the blood of the Lamb, and clothed with his righteouſneſs; and even perfect and complete in him, as the Targum renders the word. Theſe are alſo found in the way of their duty, and walk in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, blameleſs before men, and are ſincere and upright in the ſight of God; and are upon all accounts happy perſons: Who walk in the law of the Lord; within the boundaries and limits of it, according to its direction, as it is a rule of walk and converſation in the hands of Chriſt the Lawgiver; and who continue to walk in it, as in a pleaſant path, with great delight; and chearfully obey its precepts, as influenced by the love of God, and aſſiſted by the Spirit and grace of Chriſt. The word law, or doctrine, as it ſignifies, may deſign every revelation of the divine will; and even the doctrine of Chriſt, which believers ſhould abide in, and not tranſgreſs; and ſhould walk uprightly according to the truth of it, and as becomes it, and as they are enabled to do.

℣. 2. Bleſſed are they that keep his teſtimonies, &c.] The whole word of God; the ſcriptures of truth, are his teſtimonies: they teſtify of the mind of God, and of his love and grace in the method of ſalvation by Chriſt; they teſtify of Chriſt, his perſon, offices and grace; of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glory that ſhould follow; and of all the happineſs that comes to the people of God thereby. The law is called a teſtimony, which being put into the ark, that had the name of the ark of the teſtimony. This is a teſtimony of the perfections of God, his holineſs, juſtice and goodneſs, diſplayed in it; and of his good and perfect will, what ſhould, or ſhould not be done. The goſpel is the teſtimony of Chriſt, of what he is, has done and ſuffered for his people, and of the bleſſings of grace by him; the ordinances of it, baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper, teſtify of the love of God, and grace of Chriſt; and all theſe good men keep: they keep the ſcriptures as a ſacred depoſitum; they hold faſt the faithful word of the goſpel, that no man take it from them; and are deſirous of obſerving both the law of God, as in the hands of Chriſt; and the ordinances of the goſpel, as delivered by him, from a principle of love to him; and ſuch are happy perſons in life, at death, and to all eternity. And that ſeek him with the whole heart; that is, that ſeek the Lord by prayer and ſupplication, with a true heart, and in ſincerity; that ſeek to know more of him, and that in good earneſt; that ſeek for communion and fellowſhip with him, with the Spirit within them, with all their heart and ſoul; that ſeek Chriſt, and God in Chriſt, his kingdom, and his righteouſneſs, and that in the firſt place, early, earneſtly and diligently. The Targum is, "they ſeek his doctrine with the whole heart."

℣. 3. They alſo do no iniquity, &c.] Not that they are free from indwelling ſin, nor from the acts of ſin, nor that what they do are not ſins; but they do not make a trade of ſinning, it is not the courſe of their lives; nor do they do iniquity with that eaſe and pleaſure, without reluctance and remorſe, as others do: or rather as new creatures, as born again, they do not and cannot commit ſin; for the new man is pure, ſpiritual and holy; and nothing can come out of that, or be done by it, which is the contrary. This is a diſtinct I from the old man, or corrupt nature, to which all the actions of ſin are to be aſcribed; ſee 1 John iii. 9. Rom. vii. 17, 20. They walk in his ways; in the ways of God and Chriſt, into which they are guided and directed, and where they are kept, and in which they find both pleaſure and profit. Here end the deſcriptive characters of good and happy men.

℣. 4. Thou haſt commanded us to keep thy precepts diligently.] Here, and in the following verſes, the pſalmiſt expreſſes his great regard to the precepts, commandments, ſtatutes and judgments of God; and that as ſuch, becauſe they were commanded by him; were not the precepts of men, but the commands of God; who had a right to command, as Creator, Preſerver, Redeemer and King; and whoſe commands are not to be reckoned as indifferent things, that are at the option and choice of a creature, to be done or let alone at his pleaſure; but are what God has enjoined, and are binding upon men; and which love ſhould and does conſtrain the ſaints to have a regard unto, and to keep them diligently or vehemently; with all a man's might and ſtrength, as the word is uſed in Deut. vi. 5. Theſe are not at any time to be diſpenſed with, but to be kept always conſtantly and ſteadily.

℣. 5. O that my ways were directed to keep thy ſtatutes!] The pſalmiſt, ſenſible of his own inability, as every good man is, to keep the commands of God, prays for grace, direction, and aſſiſtance in it; that the ways of his mind, his thoughts, affections and inclinations, might be directed to an obſervance of the divine precepts; knowing he could not command his thoughts, raiſe his affections, diſpoſe his mind, and incline his heart thereunto; and finding a backwardneſs to religious exerciſes and ſpiritual duties, and that the ways and actions of his life might be guided to the ſame; being ſenſible he could not take one ſtep aright without God and Chriſt; that the way of man is not in himſelf, and that it is not in man that walketh to direct his ſteps; that a good man's ſteps are ordered by the Lord, and he directs his paths: beſides the direction of the word, there is need of the Spirit and grace of God, to cauſe a perſon to walk in his ſtatutes, and to keep his judgments, and do them; ſee Jer. x. 23. Pſal. xxxvii. 23. Prov. iii. 6. Ezek. xxxvi. 27.

[m] Menſal. Colloqu. c. 32. p. 365.

℣. 6. Then ſhall I not be aſhamed, &c.] Of hope in God, of a profeſſion of faith in him, and of a converſation agreeable to it before men; nor of appearing before God in his houſe, worſhipping him there; nor at the throne of his grace, nor at the day of judgment, and before Chriſt at his coming. When I have reſpect unto all thy commandments; or look[n] at them conſtantly, as the rule of walk and converſation; and to copy after, as a ſcholar looks at his copy to write after; and affectionately eſteem all his precepts concerning all things to be right, and none of his commandments grievous; and practically, not in the theory only; but obſerving them in order to practiſe them, and diligently attending to them, and ſtedfaſtly continuing in them; impartially regarding them, one as another; and eſpecially as beholding them fulfilled perfectly in Chriſt, who is the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believes.

℣. 7. I will praiſe thee with uprightneſs of heart, &c.] In the moſt ſincere manner, in the moſt affectionate way, with the whole heart; ſenſible of great favours received, and great obligations laid under; ſee Pſal. ix. 1. When I ſhall have learned thy righteous judgments; or, the judgments of thy righteouſneſs[o]: of the righteouſneſs of God, declared in his righteous law; which is founded upon, and is according to, the ſtricteſt rules of juſtice and equity; and ſo are all the precepts of it: and of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, revealed in the goſpel; by which God appears to be juſt, whilſt he is the juſtifier of him that believes in Jeſus. Now the precepts of the one, and the doctrines of the other, are to be learned, and learned of God, in his word and by his Spirit. The pſalmiſt had been learning them, but was deſirous of learning more of them, not being a complete proficient in them; and of learning them, not merely in the theory, but in the practice and experience of them; which, when he had attained unto, as he hoped he ſhould, it would be matter of the moſt ſincere praiſe and thankfulneſs.

℣. 8. I will keep thy ſtatutes, &c.] This is a reſolution taken up in the ſtrength of divine grace, to anſwer the end of learning the judgments of God; which he did, not merely to have a notional knowledge of them, but to put them in practice; and not that he thought he could perfectly keep them, but was deſirous of obſerving them in the beſt manner he could, as aſſiſted by the grace of God; from love to God, in the faith and name of Chriſt, and with a view to the glory of God; without dependence upon them for life and ſalvation. O forſake me not utterly; totally and finally, or not at all; otherwiſe as if he ſhould ſay, I ſhall never be able to keep thy ſtatutes; ſo ſenſible was he of the neceſſity of the divine preſence and grace, to aſſiſt him in the obſervance of them; or, for ever, as Ben Balaam interprets it, and ſo the Ethiopic verſion; R. Moſes reads the words, O forſake me not, in a parentheſis, and joins the reſt thus, I will keep thy ſtatutes vehemently; or with all my ſtrength and might; and ſo Kimchi reads them: but ſuch a trajection is very forced, and contrary to the accents.

ב Beth, The ſecond part.

℣. 9 Wherewith ſhall a young man cleanſe his way? &c.] Some think David means himſelf, and that he was a young man when he wrote this pſalm; and which they think is confirmed by ℣. 100. but neither of them ſeem concluſive; rather any young man is meant, and who is particularly mentioned, becauſe young men are liable to ſins and ſnares, to carnal luſts and ſenſual pleaſures, which are of a defiling nature. Some are of opinion, that a young man, or babe in Chriſt, is intended, that needs direction in his way, and inſtruction about the manner of cleanſing it. But the former ſenſe ſeems beſt, and expreſſes the concern of the pſalmiſt for the education and right information of youth; which is a matter of great moment and advantage to families, neighbourhoods and commonwealths. The queſtion ſuppoſes the young man to be impure, as every man is by birth, being conceived in ſin, and ſhapen in iniquity; is a tranſgreſſor from the womb, and his heart, ways and actions, evil from his youth: and the difficulty is, how he ſhall be cleanſed; how one ſo impure in his nature, heart, and ways, can be juſt with God, or become undefiled in the way, as in ℣. 1. to which ſome reference may be had: or how he can have his heart made pure, or a clean one be created in him; or how his way, life and converſation, may be corrected, reformed and amended. The anſwer is, By taking heed thereto according to thy word; that is, to his way and courſe of life, and ſteering it according to the direction of the word of God. But I think the words may be better rendered and ſupplied thus, by obſerving what is according to thy word[p]; which ſhews how a ſinner is to be cleanſed from his ſins by the blood of Chriſt, and juſtified by his righteouſneſs, and be clean through his word; and alſo how and by whom the work of ſanctification is wrought in the heart, even by the Spirit of God, by means of the word; and what is the rule of a man's walk and converſation: he will find the word of God to be profitable, to inform in the doctrines of juſtification and pardon; to acquaint him with the nature of regeneration and ſanctification; and for the correction and amendment of his life and manners, and for his inſtruction in every branch of righteouſneſs, 2 Tim. iii. 16.

℣. 10. With my whole heart have I ſought thee, &c.] Not himſelf, his own honour and applauſe, as formal worſhippers and ſelf-righteous perſons do; but the Lord and his glory, his face, his preſence, and communion with him; his grace, and freſh ſupplies of it, to help in time of need; his doctrine, as the Targum; and to know more of it, and of him, and of his mind and will; and this he did in the moſt ſincere manner, with all his heart and ſoul. The character of the good man, in ℣. 2. the pſalmiſt applies to himſelf; ſee Iſa. xxvi. 9. and uſes it as an argument to obtain the following requeſt: O let me not wander from thy commandments; the way of them. Good men are apt to go aſtray, as David, ℣. 176. their hearts, their affections, and their feet, wander from the way of their duty: there are many things which lead them aſide, and cauſe them to turn to the right hand or the left, at leaſt ſolicit them to do ſo; as a corrupt nature, an evil heart, a body of ſin and death, the ſnares of the world, and the temptations of Satan; and, what is worſt of all, when God leaves them to themſelves, withdraws the influences of his grace, and brings them into ſuch circumſtances as expoſe them to going aſtray, which the pſalmiſt here deprecates; ſuffer me not to wander, but uphold my goings in thy ways; preſerve me by thy grace, and keep me by thy power; hold me by thy right hand, and guide and direct me. Or, cauſe me not to wander [q], &c. a like petition to thoſe in Pſal. cxli. 3. Matt. vi. 13. Iſa. lxiii. 17. with which laſt Kimchi compares theſe words.

℣. 11. Thy word have I hid in mine heart, &c.] Not only heard and read it, but received it into his affections; mixed it with faith, laid it up in his mind and memory for future uſe; preſerved it in his heart as a choice treaſure, where it might dwell richly, and be of ſervice to him on many occaſions; and particularly be of the following uſe: That I might not ſin againſt thee; the word of God is a moſt powerful antidote againſt ſin, when it has a place in the heart; not only the precepts of it forbid ſin, but the promiſes of it influence and engage to purity of heart and life, and to the perfecting of holineſs in the fear of the Lord; and all the doctrines of grace in it effectually teach the ſaints to deny all ſin and worldly luſts, and to live a holy life and converſation; ſee 2 Cor. vii. 1. Titus ii. 11, 12.

℣. 12. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, &c.] In himſelf, in his nature, perſons and perfections; the fountain of all happineſs to angels and men, in time and to eternity; to whom all bleſſing, honour and glory, are to be given. The pſalmiſt takes this method of praiſing and aſcribing bleſſing to God, for what he had received from him; particularly for teaching him what he had learned, ℣. 7. in hopes of ſucceeding in his following requeſt: Teach me thy ſtatutes; the knowledge of the beſt is imperfect. Good men deſire to know more of God, of his mind and will, even of his revealed will; and that they may have grace and ſtrength to act in conformity to it; for it is not the bare theory of things they deſire to be taught, but the practice of them; and though miniſters, and the miniſtry of the word, and adminiſtration of ordinances, may be and are means of teaching; yet there is none teaches like the Lord, Father, Son and Spirit. The Targum and Syriac verſions render it, teach me thy decrees.

℣. 13. With my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth.] Not the judgments of his hand, what he executes on an ungodly world; nor the intricate diſpenſations of his providence; thoſe judgments of his now unſearchable, though ere long will be manifeſt; theſe the pſalmiſt could not declare: but the revelation of the will of God, what his mouth has uttered, doctrines and precepts of righteouſneſs and truth; theſe, though David had them in his heart, he did not conceal them from men; but out of the abundant experience he had of them in his heart, his lips ſpake of them, of their nature and excellency, and uſefulneſs unto others: and whereas he deſired to be inſtructed more and more in them, it was in order to teach them, and declare them to others; even all of them, in the moſt ſincere and impartial manner; ſee Acts xx. 27.

℣. 14. I have rejoiced in the way of thy teſtimonies, &c.] The way which the ſcriptures, that teſtify of God and Chriſt, direct unto; and the principal way is Chriſt himſelf, the only way of life and ſalvation; in which believers walk and go on rejoicing; rejoicing in his perſon, offices, grace, righteouſneſs and ſalvation: the leſſer ways the ſcriptures point unto, are the ways of duty and paths of ordinances; in which truly gracious ſouls find a great deal of peace, pleaſure and delight. As much as in all riches; or, as above all riches [r]: the joy that believers have in the ways of God, is ſuperior to that which any natural or worldly man has in his ſubſtance of every ſort, or be it ever ſo great; yea, they find ſuch riches in the ways of God, as are vaſtly preferable to the riches of this world; they find Chriſt, the pearl of great price, and his unſearchable riches, the riches of grace, and the riches of glory; and even the word of God itſelf, thoſe teſtimonies of his, are more deſirable than thouſands of gold and ſilver, and give a greater pleaſure than the increaſe of corn and wine.

℣. 15. I will meditate in thy precepts, &c.] In his own mind; revolve them in his thoughts; conſider well the nature, excellency, uſefulneſs, and importance of them, and the obligations he lay under to obſerve them. The Targum is, "I will ſpeak "of thy precepts;" in converſation to others, and recommend them to them; ſo the Arabic verſion: and have reſpect unto thy ways; or look [s] unto them; take heed unto them, and walk in them, and not wander from them; make them the rule of walk and converſation; as travellers look well to their ways, that they do not miſs them, and go into wrong ways; they obſerve the directions that have been given them, and keep unto them; and ſo good men advert to the ways of the Lord, which the ſcriptures point out unto them; ſee Jer. vi. 16.

℣. 16. I will delight myſelf in thy ſtatutes, &c.] In looking over them; in meditating on them; in obeying them, and walking according to them; as every good man does delight in the law of the Lord, after the inward man, Rom. vii. 22. ſee ℣. 24, 92, 97. I will not forget thy word; he took all proper methods to fix it in his memory; he laid it up in his mind; he meditated upon it in his heart, and he talked of it with his lips, ℣. 11, 13, 15.

ג Gimel, The third part.

℣. 17. Deal bountifully with thy ſervant, &c.] Which character is mentioned, not by way of plea or argument for favour, but as expreſſive of modeſty, ſenſe of duty, and obligation to it. He pleads not his ſervices by way of merit; but prays that God would deal bountifully with him, in a way of grace and mercy: or render good unto him, as the Targum; beſtow it on him as a free gift. The Lord deals bountifully with men, when he gives himſelf unto them as their portion and inheritance; his Son, and all things along with him; his Spirit, and the graces of it; and every daily, needful ſupply of grace. That I may live, and keep thy word; life natural is the bounty of God; he grants life and favour, he grants life as a favour, and all the mercies and bleſſings of it; and through the gracious dealings of God with his people, they live ſpiritually and live comfortably; in his favour is life; the life of faith is encouraged and invigorated in them by it; and eternal life is the free gift and bounty of God through Chriſt, by whom they have both a right unto it and meetneſs for it: and the deſire of good men to live in this world, is not to indulge themſelves in carnal luſts and pleaſures; not to live to themſelves; nor to the luſts of the fleſh, nor to the will of men; but to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly; to live by faith in Chriſt, and in hope of eternal life through him; and whilſt they live, to keep the word of God, and not forget it, as Aben Ezra interprets it; to lay it up for their own uſe, and preſerve it for others, and obſerve its inſtructions, cautions and directions.

℣. 18. Open thou mine eyes, &c.] The eyes of my heart or underſtanding, as Kimchi; or, reveal mine eyes[t]; take off the veil from them: there is a veil of darkneſs and ignorance on the hearts of all men, with reſpect to divine and ſpiritual things; their underſtandings are darkened, yea darkneſs itſelf. This veil muſt be removed; the ſcales muſt drop from their eyes; their eyes muſt be opened and enlightened, ere they can diſcern ſpiritual things contained in the word of God; and even good men need to have the eyes of their underſtandings more and more enlightened into theſe things, as the pſalmiſt here petitions, and the apoſtle prays for his Epheſians, Eph. i. 17, 18. That I may behold wondrous things out of thy law; the law ſtrictly taken, which had great and excellent things in it; and was wonderful for the compendiouſneſs of it; for the juſtice, holineſs and equity of its precepts; eſpecially for its ſpirituality, and above all for Chriſt, being the end of it; the two laſt more particularly could only be diſcerned by a ſpiritual man: or rather the five books of Moſes, the almoſt only ſcriptures extant in David's time, in which there were many wonderful things concerning Chriſt; ſome delivered by way of promiſe and prophecy of him, under the characters of the ſeed of the woman, the ſeed of Abraham, the Shiloh, and the great prophet; and many others in dark figures, types and ſhadows, which required a ſpiritual ſight to look into; of which the rock and manna, the brazen ſerpent, paſſover, &c. are inſtances: but rather, as the word law ſignifies doctrine, the doctrine of the goſpel may be meant; which contains myſteries in it, reſpecting the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, the perſon of Chriſt, his incarnation, ſufferings and death; the bleſſings of grace through him; the doctrines of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, eternal life, and the reſurrection of the dead; with many others.

℣. 19. I am a ſtranger in the earth, &c.] As all his fathers were, and all the ſaints are; not to divine and ſpiritual things; to God, and communion with him; to Chriſt, and the knowledge of him; to the Spirit, and his operations in their hearts; to their own hearts, and the plague of them; to the goſpel, and its truths; nor to the people of God, and fellowſhip with them: but to the world, among whom they are, not being known, valued, and reſpected by them; and they alſo behaving as ſtrangers to the world, having no fellowſhip with them in their ſinful works; as alſo not being natives here, but belonging to another city and country, an heavenly one; ſee 1 Chron. xxix. 15. Hide not thy commandments from me; the doctrines of the goſpel, the word which God has commanded to a thouſand generations; which is pure, and enlightens the eyes, and ſo needful to ſtrangers in their pilgrimage, Pſal. xix. 8, and cv. 8. which God ſometimes hides from the wiſe and prudent, and which the pſalmiſt here deprecates with reſpect to himſelf, Matt. xi. 25, 26. Or the precepts of the word may be meant, which are a light to the feet, and a lamp to the paths, a good direction to travellers and ſtrangers in the way: David being ſuch a one, prayed that theſe might not be hid from him, but be ſhewed unto him; that he might know his way, and not go out of it; but walk as a child of light, wiſely and circumſpectly.

℣. 20. My ſoul breaketh for the longing, &c.] His heart was juſt ready to break, and his ſoul fainted; he was ready to die, through a vehement deſire of enjoying the object longed for, after mentioned; hope deferred makes the heart ſick, Prov. xiii. 12. the phraſe is expreſſive of the greatneſs, vehemence and eagerneſs of his mind after the thing he deſired, which follows: That it hath unto thy judgments at all times; not the judgments of God on wicked men, though theſe are deſirable for the glorifying of his juſtice; nor his dark diſpenſations of providence, though good men cannot but deſire and long for the time when theſe judgments ſhall be made manifeſt: but rather, the righteous laws and precepts of God are deſigned, which he deſired to have a more perfect knowledge of, and yield a more conſtant obedience unto; or, beſt of all, the doctrines of grace and righteouſneſs, that ſhould be more clearly revealed in the times of the Meſſiah; who was to ſet judgment in the earth, his goſpel; and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and glorify the juſtice of God; than which nothing was more earneſtly and importunately wiſhed and longed for by Old-Teſtament-ſaints; ſee ℣. 81. and Pſal. xiv. 7.

℣. 21. Thou haſt rebuked the proud, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of the fallen angels, who, in proud wrath, left their habitations, becauſe they would not be ſubject to the Son of God in human nature; wherefore he ſcattered them in the imaginations of their hearts, and caſt down theſe mighty ones into hell, where they are reſerved in chains of darkneſs to the judgment of the great day. Others, of the ſcribes and phariſees in Chriſt's time, this pſalm being ſuited, as is thought, to goſpel-times; who were proud of their own righteouſneſs, and deſpiſed others leſs holy than themſelves; and ſubmitted not to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, whom he often rebuked, and at laſt puniſhed. Rather all proud, atheiſtical perſons, profane and wicked men, are meant; who, Pharaoh-like, ſay, Who is the Lord that we ſhould obey him? who reckon their tongues to be their own, and employ them both againſt God and men, and regard neither: theſe God reſiſts, ſets himſelf againſt, and ſooner or later ſeverely puniſhes; for in the things they deal proudly, he is above them, Exod. xviii. 11. that are curſed; according to the law of God, being tranſgreſſors of it, and will hear the awful ſentence, Go, ye curſed. The Targum, Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, join this with the next clauſe: Curſed are they which do err from thy commandments; ments; from the way of them, not obſerving them; from the end of them, Chriſt, not looking to him for righteouſneſs.

℣. 22. Remove from me reproach and contempt, &c.] Or, roll it from me [u]. It lay as a load, as a heavy burden upon him, which preſſed him ſore; and he therefore deſired eaſe from it, being probably in a low frame of ſoul; otherwiſe ſaints do, and ſhould rejoice when reproached for Chriſt's ſake; and eſteem it, with Moſes, more than all the treaſures in Egypt, being what is common to them with their Lord. For I have kept thy teſtimonies; which was the reaſon why he was reproached and deſpiſed; for having a regard to the word of God, and embracing and profeſſing the doctrines of it. Thus the word of the Lord was made a reproach to Jeremiah, or he was reproached for delivering it; as many good men have been vilified, and have ſuffered for the teſtimony of Jeſus, Jer. xx. 8. Rev. i. 9. and for walking according to the directions of it; wicked men thinking it ſtrange they do not run into the ſame exceſs of riot with them, and therefore ſpeak evil of them, 1 Pet. iv. 3, 4.

℣. 23. Princes alſo did ſit and ſpeak againſt me, &c.] The princes in the court of Saul, who ſuggeſted to him, that David ſought his hurt; the princes of his own court, Abſalom, his own ſon, a prince of the blood, and Abithophel, a counſellor of ſtate: or the princes of the Gentiles, as Jarchi; ſo the princes of the Philiſtines ſpake againſt him in a very diſdainful manner, make this fellow return to his place again, 1 Sam. xxix. 4. Such as theſe might ſpeak againſt him, as they ſat and rode in their chariots; when at their tables, converſing together; or at their council-boards, forming ſchemes againſt him: the phraſe denotes their conſtant practice, as Kimchi obſerves; ſee Pſal. l. 20. herein David was a type of Chriſt, whom the princes of this world conſpired againſt, and whoſe life they took away, Pſal. ii. 2. 1 Cor. ii. 8. But thy ſervant did meditate in thy ſtatutes; what the princes did or ſaid againſt him, did not divert his mind, or take off his thoughts from the word of God, and the ordinances of it; he thought of them, he ſpoke and diſcourſed of them; he declared them, as the word [w] ſometimes ſignifies, and ſo the Targum takes it here; he was not afraid nor aſhamed to profeſs his regard unto them: as Daniel, when he knew that the preſidents and princes had obtained a royal decree, and the writing was ſigned; yet went into his chamber, as at other times, and kneeled down and prayed to God, Dan. vi. 10.

℣. 24. Thy teſtimonies alſo are my delight, &c.] Or delights [x]; exceeding delightful to me. The whole of ſcripture is ſo to a good man; he delights in the law of God, after the inward man; the goſpel is a joyful ſound to him; the doctrines of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation by Chriſt, are very pleaſant; the promiſes of it give more joy than the finding of a great ſpoil; and the precepts and ordinances of it are not grievous, but ways of pleaſantneſs and peace. And my counſellors; or, the men of my counſel [y]; though David took counſel with men about affairs of ſtate; yet concerning ſpiritual ones, or what related to his ſoul, and the concerns of that; not they, but the ſcriptures, were the men of his counſel. The goſpel is the whole counſel of God relating to ſalvation; in it Chriſt, the wonderful Counſellor, gives advice to ſaints and ſinners: the whole word of God may be profitably conſulted on every occaſion, and in every circumſtance in which a child of God may be; all ſcripture being divinely inſpired, is profitable for doctrine, for correction, and inſtruction in righteouſneſs, 2 Tim. iii. 16.

ד Daleth, The fourth part.

℣. 25. My ſoul cleaveth unto the duſt, &c.] Either to the duſt of death, having the ſentence of it; being almoſt in deſpair of life, upon the brink of the grave ſeemingly, and free among the dead: or in a very low eſtate of mind, in great dejection and humiliation, rolling himſelf in the duſt, and putting his mouth in it; if there might be any hope of deliverance; but, deſpairing of it, unleſs the Lord appeared; or finding a proneneſs in him to the corruption of nature, the body of ſin and death, which was very powerful and prevalent, inſnaring and captivating; and particularly to worldly things, comparable to duſt, for their lightneſs, emptineſs and unprofitableneſs; which often have an undue influence on good men, and to which their affections are too much glued; and which greatly affect the exerciſe of grace and religious duties, and bring a deadneſs upon the ſoul, and make the following petition neceſſary: Quicken thou me according to thy word; ſuch who are quickened together with Chriſt, and who are quickened by his Spirit and grace, when they were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, have often need to be quickened again, and to have the work of grace revived in them; which is done when grace is drawn forth into lively exerciſe, and which is neceſſary to the performance of duty; and this is done both by means of the word of God, which, as it is uſed for the quickening dead ſinners, ſo for the reviving of drooping ſaints; ſee ℣. 50. And according to his word of promiſe, who has promiſed never to leave his people, nor forſake the work of his hand, but perform it until the day of Chriſt: Jarchi and Kimchi think reference is had to the promiſe in 2 Sam. xii. 13. and Aben Ezra to Deut. xxxii. 39.

℣. 26. I have declared my ways, &c.] That is, to the Lord; either the ways he had choſe and deſired to walk in, and not wander from, and therefore intreated help and aſſiſtance, guidance and direction in them; or his ſinful ways and actions, which he acknowledged and confeſſed, lamented and bewailed, and intreated the forgiveneſs of; or all his counſels and cares, his affairs and buſineſs, in which he was concerned, and which he declared and committed to the Lord, to be directed and aſſiſted in; or all his wants and neceſſities, which he ſpread before him at the throne of grace; which he did not as though the Lord was ignorant of theſe things, but partly as knowing it was the will of God that he ſhould be inquired of by his people, to do the things for them they want; and partly to eaſe his own mind, and encourage his faith and hope in the Lord. And thou heardeſt me; and directed him in the way he ſhould go, and what he ſhould do; forgave him his ſins, and ſupplied his wants. Teach me thy ſtatutes; which he deſired to learn and obey, in gratitude for being heard and anſwered by him; ſee the note on ℣. 12.

℣. 27. Make me to underſtand the way of thy precepts, &c.] The meaning of them, to have a more comprehenſive, clear, and diſtinct knowledge of them; and to be led into the way they direct unto, and walk therein. So ſhall I talk of thy wondrous works; the works of creation, providence, redemption and grace; with more knowledge and underſtanding, with more ſpirit and chearfulneſs, with more readineſs and liberty, more to his own ſatisfaction, and for the good of others: or, meditate on thy wondrous works[z]; being in the ways of God, and freed from the diſtractions of the world and buſineſs of it.

℣. 28. My ſoul melteth for heavineſs, &c.] Like wax before the ſun or fire; or flows like water; drops[a], as the word ſignifies, and diſſolves into tears, through grief and ſorrow for ſins committed; or by reaſon of Satan's temptations, or divine deſertions, or grievous troubles and afflictions; which cauſe heavineſs, lie heavy, and preſs hard. Strengthen thou me according unto thy word; to oppoſe corruptions, withſtand temptations, bear up under trials and afflictions, and do the will of God. And the word of God is a means of ſtrengthening his people to do theſe things; it is the ſpiritual bread which ſtrengthens man's heart, and in the ſtrength of which, like Elijah, he walks many days, and goes from ſtrength to ſtrength: and there are many gracious words of promiſe, which may be pleaded with God to this purpoſe; that he will help, ſtrengthen, and uphold his people; that he will renew their ſtrength, and that as their day is their ſtrength ſhall be.

℣. 29. Remove from me the way of lying, &c.] Not the ſin of lying to men, and a courſe of it, which David was not addicted to; but a falſe way, or way of falſhood[b]; as it may be rendered, and ſo the Targum; and is the ſame with what he expreſſes his abhorrence of, ℣. 128. and is oppoſed to the way of truth in the next verſe; and deſigns all falſe doctrine and falſe worſhip, all errors and hereſies, ſuperſtition and idolatry; which he deſired to be at the utmoſt diſtance from, and thoſe from him, as having a diſlike and abhorrence of them; and as knowing how prejudicial they would be to him, and how contrary to the glory of God. And grant me thy law graciouſly; not the fiery law, which works wrath, curſes and condemns; the voice of words, which they that heard intreated they might hear no more; and which to have is no act of grace and favour, unleſs as fulfilled in Chriſt, and as it is a rule of walk and converſation in his hands: but rather doctrine, as the word ſignifies; the doctrine of the goſpel, the law or doctrine of faith; which to have and underſtand is a gift of grace; it is the goſpel of the grace of God, the grace of God itſelf, and inſtructs in it, and ſhews that ſalvation is purely by it.

℣. 30. I have choſen the way of truth, &c.] Chriſt, who is the way and the truth, the true way to God and to eternal happineſs; and to chooſe him is to chooſe the good part, which ſhall never be taken away; and which choice is made, not by the free will of man as left to itſelf, but under the influence, and by the direction of the Spirit and grace of God; whereby a ſoul ſees a preferableneſs in Chriſt to every thing elſe, and which determines the choice of him: or, the way of faith, as the Targum; the doctrine of faith, particularly the doctrine of juſtification by faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; alſo the ſeveral truths of the goſpel, a way in which believers walk with pleaſure and by choice; as being preferable to, and more deſirable by them, than thouſands of gold and ſilver. Thy judgments have I laid before me; to be looked at continually, as being exceeding amiable and lovely, and having a ſtrong affection for them; and as a copy to write after, and a rule to walk by.

℣. 31. I have ſtuck unto thy teſtimonies, &c.] The word of God, the ſcriptures of truth, and the doctrines contained in them. Theſe he cloſely adhered to, was glued unto them as it were; having firmly believed them, he ſtedfaſtly profeſſed them; nor could he be moved from them by any temptations whatever, notwithſtanding the reproach caſt upon them and him for their ſake, or the oppoſition made unto them. O Lord, put me not to ſhame; or let me not be aſhamed of the choice I have made, of the teſtimonies I adhere unto, of my hope and confidence in the Lord and his word; or ſuffer me not to do any thing, any ſinful action, that may expoſe me to ſhame and contempt.

℣. 32. I will run the way of thy commandments, &c.] Not only walk but run in it; which is expreſſive of great affection to the commands of God, of great readineſs and chearfulneſs, of great haſte and ſwiftneſs in the way of them, and of great delight and pleaſure therein. When thou ſhalt enlarge my heart; with the knowledge of God, his word, ways, worſhip and ordinances; with his love more fully made known, and with an increaſe of love to him; with the fear of him, and a flow of ſpiritual joy and peace; and when delivered from ſtraits and difficulties, from weights and preſſures, and every thing that may hinder walking or running; and being in circumſtances which may lead and encourage to the one as to the other; ſee 1 Kings iv. 29. 2 Cor. vi. 11. and v. 14. Iſa. lx. 5. Pſal. iv. 1. and xviii. 36. Heb. xii. 1, 2.

ה He, The fifth part.

℣. 33. Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy ſtatutes, &c.] Which they point unto, and direct to walk in; not only the ſtatutes and ordinances themſelves, the theory of them, but the practice of them. This is taught in the word, and by the miniſters of it; but none ſo effectually teach as the Lord himſelf, Iſa. ii. 3. Matt. xxii. 16. and xxviii. 20. And I ſhall keep it unto the end; keep the way unto the end of it: or rather, to the end of life, all my days, and never depart out of it, or turn to the right hand or the left; but walk on in it as long as I live: or, I ſhall obſerve it, even the end[c]; the end of the way of thy ſtatutes or commandments. Now the end of the commandment is charity or love, which is the fulfilling of it; though that is perfectly fulfilled by none but by Chriſt, the end of the law for righteouſneſs, 1 Tim. i. 5. Rom. x. 4. The word for end ſignifies a reward; ſo Aben Ezra interprets it, and refers to Pſal. xix. 11. but Kimchi denies the law is to be kept for the ſake of reward; which is right: rather the ſenſe is, I will keep it by way of retribution, or in gratitude for teaching the way. The Targum is, "and I will keep unto perfection;" which cannot be done by ſinful man.

℣. 34. Give me underſtanding, and I ſhall keep thy law, &c.] A ſpiritual underſtanding; an underſtanding ſtanding of the law, the perfection, purity, holineſs and ſpirituality of it; an underſtanding of the goſpel, and of Chriſt, and the things of Chriſt; from whom grace and ſtrength are to be had for the due obſervance of the law, as in his hands; which underſtanding muſt be given, and is a gift of pure, free, rich grace, to ſuch who have it; though they cannot keep the law perfectly, as no mere man can, yet will keep it ſpiritually, from a principle of love and gratitude, and with a view to the glory of God and Chriſt, 1 John v. 20. Yea, I ſhall obſerve it with my whole heart; not only externally, and to be ſeen of men, and get applauſe from them; but doing the will of God from the heart, and with a good will and heartily, as to the Lord, and not to men; with a ſincere affection for him, and with a ſingle eye to his glory, Eph. vi. 6, 7. 1 Tim. i. 5.

℣. 35. Make me to go in the path of thy commandments, &c.] Lead, guide, direct me in the path, and uſe me to it; work in me both to will and to do; give both ability and a willing mind to walk therein; by granting freſh ſupplies of grace, and more ſpiritual ſtrength; by drawing with the cords of love, and by putting in him the good Spirit of grace, to cauſe to walk in the ſtatutes of the Lord, and keep his judgments, and do them, Ezek. xxxvi. 27. For therein do I delight; in the law of God, after the inward man; in the commandments of Chriſt, which are not grievous; in wiſdom's ways and paths, which are pleaſantneſs and peace.

℣. 36. Incline my heart unto thy teſtimonies, &c.] To read the word of God, to hear it opened and explained, to obſerve and keep the things contained in it; to which there is a diſinclination in men naturally: but the Lord, who faſhions the hearts of men, and has them in his hands, can bend and incline them by his efficacious grace to regard theſe his teſtimonies; which, as Aben Ezra obſerves, are more precious than all ſubſtance, and ſo are oppoſed to what follows: And not to covetouſneſs; not to mammon or money, as the Targum; the love of it, which is the root of all evil, and very pernicious and hurtful; in hearing the word, it choaks it and makes it unfruitful, 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10. Matt. xiii. 22. Not that God inclines the heart to evil, as he does to good; but he may ſuffer the heart to be inclined; and may leave a man to the natural inclinations of his heart, and to the temptations of Satan, and the ſnares of the world, which may have great influence upon him; and this is what is here deprecated; ſee Pſal. cxli. 4. Matt. vi. 13.

℣. 37. Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity, &c.] As the things of this world, the riches, honours and pleaſures of it, which are all vanity and vexation of ſpirit; and yet theſe catch the eye, and allure the heart: and all falſe doctrines, gilded over with the ſpecious pretence of truth; and all falſe worſhip and ſuperſtition, ſet off with pomp and pageantry, with which the eyes of the body, or the eyes of the mind are taken, and by which the heart is inſnared; and therefore it is deſirable to have the eyes turned away from ſuch objects unto better. And quicken thou me in thy way; ſo as to walk and even run in the path of truth, in the way of true religion and godlineſs; and inſtead of looking upon vanity, preſs towards the mark for the prize; keep Chriſt in view, whilſt running the race; and look to things unſeen, and not to things that are ſeen; and ſet the affections on things above, and ſerve the Lord fervently; all which is done, when God quickens the hearts of his people, and the graces of his Spirit in them.

℣. 38. Stabliſh thy word unto thy ſervant, &c.] Either God's word of promiſe, which never fails, is firm and ſtable in Chriſt; and the ſenſe is, that God would aſſure him of the fulfilment of it, and give him a ſtrong faith and firm belief of it; for otherwiſe the word of the Lord cannot be ſurer, or more ſtable than it is: or elſe the word of his grace; and then the ſenſe is, that he might be eſtabliſhed in it, and the truths of it, and be eſtabliſhed by it; for the word is a means of eſtabliſhment, and a good thing it is to have the heart eſtabliſhed with grace, with the doctrine of grace, Heb. xiii. 9. Who is devoted to thy fear; who ſerved the Lord with reverence and godly fear; who feared the Lord and his goodneſs; that grace being a reigning one in his heart, and ever before his eyes. Or, which is unto thy fear[d]; that is, which word is unto thy fear; which leads unto it, and has a tendency to promote and increaſe it; and ſo is a commendation of the word of God from this effect of it.

℣. 39. Turn away my reproach which I fear, &c.] Either for the ſake of religion, which was diſagreeable to him; and he might be afraid it would be too heavy for him to bear, and be a temptation to him to forſake the good ways of God: or rather, by reaſon of ſin, which brings a reproach on good men; and cauſes the enemy to ſpeak reproachfully, and is therefore dreaded by them who deſire to be kept from ſin, for that reaſon as well as others; ſee Pſal. xxxix. 8. Jarchi and Kimchi think that David has ſome reference to his ſins, in the caſe of Uriah and Bathſheba; leſt they ſhould be a perpetual reproach on his name and family, which he greatly feared. For thy judgments are good; the laws of God, and puniſhment of ſin according to them; the ſcriptures, and the doctrines contained in them; the ways of God, and true religion; which are evil ſpoken of, through the ſins of the profeſſors of them.

℣. 40. Behold, I have longed after thy precepts, &c.] After a greater degree of knowledge of them, and an opportunity of hearing them explained and enforced, and of yielding obedience to them; ſee ℣. 7, 20, 27, 30. Quicken me in thy righteouſneſs; in the way of righteouſneſs, according to the word of righteouſneſs, the goſpel; and with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt revealed in it; and which is unto life, and quickens and comforts the heart, and from whence abundance of peace and joy flows.

ו VAU, The ſixth part.

℣. 41. Let thy mercies come alſo unto me, O Lord, &c.] Meaning not his providential mercies, but his ſpecial mercies and favours; his mercies of old, which were upon his heart and thoughts from everlaſting; the ſure mercies of David, or the bleſſings of the everlaſting covenant; the ſpiritual bleſſings, wherewith the ſaints are bleſſed in Chriſt; the grace that was given to them in him, before the world was: theſe are deſired by the pſalmiſt to be remembered, ſhewn, communicated and applied unto him, and as it were that they might come into his heart and ſoul; which is done when the love of God is ſhed abroad there, when full flows of it come in, and all grace is made to abound, and every want is ſupplied. Even thy ſalvation according to thy word; not temporal, but ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation; which God has appointed his people to, ſecured for them in covenant, promiſed them in Chriſt, whom he ſent to work it out, and which is in him; and which in effectual vocation comes to the ſoul, being brought near and applied to a ſenſible ſinner by the Spirit of God. Here a freſh view of intereſt in it, a freſh viſit with it, and a reſtoration of the joys of it, are deſired; and which ſalvation flows from the abundant mercy, and free favour of God in Chriſt; and is according to his word of promiſe, ſpoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, from the beginning of the world; and may here reſpect the particular word of promiſe made to David, that God would put away his ſin, and ſave him, and that he ſhould not die, 2 Sam. xii. 13. or his word of promiſe in general, to all that ſeek and call upon the Lord, that they ſhall find grace and mercy, and be ſaved everlaſtingly.

[d] אשר ליראתך quod ad timorem tuum, Pagninus, Montanus; quod ad timorem tui facit, Muſculus; & ducit, Schmidt; quod datum eſt ad timorem tui, Michaelis.

℣. 42. So ſhall I have wherewith to anſwer him that reproacheth me, &c.] Saying there is no help and ſalvation for him in God; aſking where is his God, in whom he truſted? and where is the promiſe of ſalvation, on which he depended? To which an eaſy and ready anſwer might be given, when the mercies and ſalvation of God came unto him, and he clearly appeared to be intereſted in them; ſee Pſal. iii. 2. and xlii. 10. For I truſt in thy word; in Chriſt the eſſential Word, the object of truſt and confidence; or in the written word, it being divinely inſpired and dictated by the Spirit of God, and ſo to be depended on as true and faithful; or rather, God's word of promiſe concerning mercy, grace and ſalvation, which God that has made, is faithful and able to perform, as may be believed.

℣. 43. And take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth, &c.] The ſcriptures, which are by divine inſpiration, come from the God of truth; contain nothing but truth in them, and are called the ſcriptures of truth, Dan. x. 21. Or the goſpel, which is often ſo called, Eph. i. 13. James i. 18. This comes from God, who cannot lie, and is a declaration of his mind and will concerning the ſalvation of men; in which Chriſt, who is the truth, is concerned, being the author, preacher and ſubſtance of it; into which the Spirit of truth leads men, and makes it uſeful and effectual; which has many eminent and important truths in it, and nothing but truth; and ſtands oppoſed to the law, which is typical and ſhadowy, and to every thing that is a falſhood and a lie. This the pſalmiſt deſires might not be taken out of his mouth, but kept in it as a ſweet morſel there, rolled under his tongue; be eaten and fed upon by him, and be the rejoicing of his heart. Or his ſenſe is, that he might not be left under a temptation to conceal, drop or deny the word of truth, or be aſhamed to own and confeſs it before men; but at all times, and upon all occaſions, publicly declare it, and his faith in it: at leaſt he deſires that it might not utterly ceaſe from him, or be wholly neglected by him, and he intirely apoſtatize. Some join the word rendered utterly, and which ſignifies exceedingly, with the word of truth, thus; Take not out of my mouth the word of truth, which is exceedingly ſo; that is, exceedingly true, to the higheſt degree[e]. For I have hoped in thy judgments; or, have waited for thy judgments[f]: either the judgments of God upon ſinners, eſpecially on apoſtates, which he knew would be very ſore and ſevere, their laſt eſtate being worſe than the firſt; or rather, the laſt judgment, when thoſe that confeſs Chriſt and his truths, ſhall be confeſſed by him; and thoſe that deny him and his goſpel, will be denied by him: though it may be beſt of all to underſtand it of the word of God, and the doctrines of it, which the pſalmiſt had an exceeding great regard unto, hoped, waited, and even longed for; ſee ℣. 20.

℣. 44. So ſhall I keep thy law continually, &c.] Which denotes not the perfection of keeping the law, but the conſtancy of it: the pſalmiſt was perſuaded, that ſo long as he had the word of truth in his mouth, and the judgments of God in his view, he ſhould be diligent and conſtant in the diſcharge of his duty, which theſe directed and encouraged him unto. For ever and ever; in this life and that to come; when the law of God will be kept, and his will done perfectly by the ſaints, as it now is by the angels in heaven: or this may be connected with the law of God; which law is for ever and ever, being of eternal duration and obligation. The whole may be underſtood of the law of faith, or doctrine of the goſpel, and be rendered, So ſhall I obſerve thy doctrine continually; contained in the word of truth; which doctrine is for ever and ever, it is the everlaſting goſpel.

℣. 45. And I will walk at liberty, &c.] Not in a licentious way, but in goſpel-liberty, under the influence of the free Spirit; where is liberty, in the exerciſe of grace and diſcharge of duty. Or, I will walk at large[g]; or, in a broad way, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſupply it: not in the broad road that leads to deſtruction, but in the law of God, which is exceeding broad, ℣. 96. as the Targum, "in the "breadth of the law." So a man walks, when he walks in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord: and who alſo may be ſaid to walk at large, when delivered out of ſtraits and difficulties; when he is brought into a large place, and his ſteps are enlarged under him; and having his heart enlarged with the love of God and fear of him, and with ſpiritual joy, and having every grace in exerciſe; he not only walks in, but runs the way of God's commandments; ſee ℣. 32. and the note on Pſal. cxviii. 5. For I ſeek thy precepts; out of love and affection to them to know more of them, the mind and will of God in them, and to practiſe them.

℣. 46. I will ſpeak of thy teſtimonies alſo before kings, &c.] As very likely he did before Saul and his courtiers, before the king of Achiſh and the princes of the Philiſtines, when as yet he was not a king himſelf; and when he was come to the throne, ſuch kings as came to viſit him, inſtead of talking with them about affairs of ſtate, he ſpoke of the ſcriptures, and of the excellent things they bear witneſs of; and ſuch a practice he determined to purſue and continue in. And will not be aſhamed; of the teſtimonies of God, and of the truths contained in them; and of ſpeaking of them and for them; or of being reproached and vilified on that account. So the apoſtle Paul was a choſen veſſel to bear the name of Chriſt before kings; nor was he aſhamed to ſpeak of him and of his goſpel, before Nero the Roman emperor, Agrippa king of the Jews, and before Felix and Feſtus, Roman governors; nor aſhamed of the reproaches and afflictions he endured on that account.

℣. 48. My hands alſo will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved, &c.] Shewing by ſuch a geſture his great eſteem of them, and affection for them; ſtretching out his hands, and embracing them with both arms as it were: and this being a praying geſture, 2 Tim. ii. 8. may ſignify his earneſt deſire and requeſt, that he might have grace and ſpiritual ſtrength to enable him to obſerve them; and it being uſed in ſwearing, Gen. xiv. 22. may expreſs his firm reſolution in the ſtrength of divine grace to keep them: and the phraſe, ſignifying a doing or an attempt to do any thing, Gen. xli. 44. may denote his practical obſervance of the commands, his putting his hand to do them with all his might. And I will meditate in thy ſtatutes; and thereby get a better underſtanding of them, and be in a better diſpoſition and capacity to keep them.

ז Zain, The ſeventh part.

℣. 49. Remember the word unto thy ſervant, &c.] The word of promiſe made unto him, concerning eſtabliſhing his houſe and kingdom for ever; which he deſires God would ſhew himſelf mindful of in fulfilling it, and renew and confirm his faith in it, and give him ſome freſh aſſurance of the performance of it, 2 Sam. vii. 16—29. Not that God ever forgets his promiſe, or is unmindful of his word; but ſo it ſeems, when he delays the accompliſhment of it; and when unbelief prevails and doubts ariſe, and faith is not in lively exerciſe; and he has not ſo clear a view of the promiſe, and comfortable aſſurance of its being performed. Upon which thou haſt cauſed me to hope; which when firſt made, he received in faith, and hoped and waited for the accompliſhment of. A word of promiſe is a good ground of hope, let it be on what account it will; whether it relates to intereſt in God, as a covenant-God and Father; or to pardon of ſin; or to ſalvation by Chriſt; or to freſh ſupplies of grace and ſtrength from him; or to eternal life through him: and the hope which is exerciſed on the promiſe, is not of a man's ſelf; it is the gift of God, a good hope through grace; which the Lord by his Spirit and power produces, and cauſes to abound in, or to exerciſe in a comfortable manner.

℣. 50. This is my comfort in my affliction, &c.] David had his afflictions, and ſo has every good man; none are without; it is the will and pleaſure of God that ſo it ſhould be; and many are their afflictions, inward and outward: the word of God is often their comfort under them, the written word, heard or read; and eſpecially a word of promiſe, powerfully applied: this is putting underneath everlaſting arms, and making their bed in ſickneſs. This either reſpects what goes before, concerning the word of promiſe hoped in, or what follows: For thy word hath quickened me; not only had been the means of quickening him when dead in ſin, as it often is the means of quickening dead ſinners, being the ſavour of life unto life; but of reviving his drooping ſpirits, when in affliction and diſtreſs; and of quickening the graces of the Spirit of God in him, and him to the exerciſe of them, when they ſeemed ready to die; and to the fervent and diligent diſcharge of duty, when liſtleſs and backward to it.

℣. 51. The proud have had me greatly in deriſion, &c.] Profane ſinners, proud and haughty ſcorners, that make a jeſt of religion, and ſcoff at every thing ſerious and good: theſe derided the pſalmiſt for his piety and religion, his principles and practices; in which he was a type of Chriſt, who was both the ſong of the drunkards, and was derided by the proud and haughty ſcribes and phariſees; as all ſelf-righteous perſons are, they who truſt in themſelves, and deſpiſe others, Pſal. lxix. 11, 12. Luke xvi. 14. and xviii. 9. Yet have I not declined from thy law; from walking according to it, as a rule of life and converſation; from profeſſing and maintaining the doctrine of the word, the truths of the goſpel, he had knowledge and experience of; and from going on in the ways of God and true religion, he was directed in; and this teſtimony the Lord himſelf gave of him, 1 Kings xiv. 8. and xv. 5. ſee Pſal. xliv. 19.

℣. 52. I remembered thy judgments of old, O Lord, &c.] Either the judgments of God executed on wicked men; as the bringing a flood on the world of the ungodly; the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah; the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt in the Red-ſea; the cutting off of the Canaanites, and diſpoſſeſſing them of their land: or the providential diſpenſations of God towards his own people; who ſometimes chaſtizes and corrects them, and brings them very low, and then raiſes them up again, as in the caſe of Job. Theſe things the pſalmiſt called to remembrance, and revolved them in his mind, which gave him pleaſure and comfort: And have comforted myſelf; with ſuch thoughts as theſe, that that God, who had caſt down the mighty from their ſeats, and had ſcattered the proud in the imaginations of their hearts, and deſtroyed them, could eaſily rebuke the proud that had him in deriſion; and he that had ſhewn himſelf ſo good and gracious to his people, when brought low, could raiſe him out of his afflictions and diſtreſſes.

℣. 53. Horror hath taken hold upon me, &c.] Trembling, ſorrow and diſtreſs, to a great degree, like a ſtorm, or a bluſtering, ſcorching, burning wind, as the word [h] ſignifies, which is very terrible. Becauſe of the wicked that forſake thy law; not only tranſgreſs the law of the Lord, as every man does more or leſs; but wilfully and obſtinately deſpiſe it, and caſt it behind their backs, and live in a continued courſe of diſobedience to it; or who apoſtatize from the doctrine of the word of God; wilfully deny the truth, after they have had a ſpeculative knowledge of it, whoſe puniſhment is very grievous, Heb. x. 26—29. and now partly on account of the daring impiety of wicked men, who ſtretch out their hands againſt God, and ſtrengthen themſelves againſt the Almighty, and run upon him, even on the thick boſſes of his bucklers; becauſe of the ſhocking nature of their ſins, the ſad examples thereby ſet to others, the detriment they are of to themſelves, and diſhonour they bring to God; and partly, becauſe of the dreadful puniſhment that ſhall be inflicted on them here, and eſpecially hereafter, when a horrible tempeſt of wrath will come upon them. Hence ſuch trembling ſeized the pſalmiſt; and often ſo it is, that good men tremble more for the wicked than they do for themſelves; ſee ℣. 120.

℣. 54. Thy ſtatutes have been my ſongs in the houſe of my pilgrimage.] Meaning either his unſettled ſtate, fleeing from place to place before Saul; or literally, his houſe of cedar, his court and palace, which he conſidered no other than as an inn, he had put into upon his travels homeward; or rather, the earthly houſe of his tabernacle, in which, as long as he continued, he was but a pilgrim and ſtranger: or, beſt of all, the whole courſe of his life; which Jacob calls the days of the years of his pilgrimage, Gen. xlvii. 9. ſo Hipparchus the Pythagorean[i] calls this life a ſort of a pilgrimage; and Plato alſo. This world is not the ſaints houſe and home; this is not their reſt and reſidence; they confeſs themſelves pilgrims and ſtrangers here; and that they belong to another city, and a better country, an heavenly one, which they are ſeeking and travelling to, Heb. xi. 13—16. And as travellers ſing ſongs to themſelves as they paſs on, which makes the way the more eaſy and pleaſant to them, ſo the pſalmiſt had his ſongs which he ſung in his pilgrimage-ſtate; and theſe were the ſtatutes, or word of the Lord, and the things in it, which were as delightful to him, as the ſongs of travellers to them. Or the ſongs he made and ſung, were compoſed out of the word of God; and which may ſerve to recommend the pſalms, hymns and ſpiritual ſongs made by him, the ſweet pſalmiſt of Iſrael, to the goſpel-churches to be ſung by them, Eph. v. 19.

℣. 55. I have remembered thy name, O Lord, in the night, &c.] In the night of diſtreſs and affliction, as Jarchi; or rather literally, in the night-ſeaſon, when on his bed and awake: whilſt others were aſleep, he revolved in his mind the greatneſs of the divine being, the perfections of his nature; his wonderful works of creation, providence and grace; his word and ordinances, by which he was made known unto the ſons of men; and theſe he called to mind and meditated upon in the night-watches, to encourage his faith and hope in the Lord, and draw out his love and affection to him. And have kept thy law; though imperfectly, yet ſpitually, ſincerely, heartily, and from a principle of love and gratitude, and with a view to the glory of God, and without mercenary and ſiniſter ends.

℣. 56. This I had, becauſe I kept thy precepts.] Either the comfort he had from the word, the pleaſure and delight he had in it, being his ſongs in his pilgrimage, ℣. 50, 54. ſee ℣. 165. or this knowledge of the name of God, and the remembrance of it, and his carefulneſs and diligence in it in the night-ſeaſon, were of the Lord, and gifts of his: or rather this he had from the Lord, that he kept the precepts and commands of God in the manner that he did; it was all owing to grace and ſtrength received from him; for ſo the words may be rendered, this was given unto me, that I have kept thy precepts[k].

ח Cheth, The eighth part.

℣. 57. Thou art my portion, O Lord, &c.] Which he choſe and preferred to all others; to the riches, honours and profits of this world: the grant of which was made to him in the covenant of grace; the firſt diſcovery of it was from the Lord himſelf; and the choice and claim were made under the influence of his grace; and a great act of faith it is to aſſert this, and a wonderful bleſſing to enjoy it. This is a large portion indeed, immenſe and inconceivable, ſoul-ſatisfying, ſafe, and for ever! ſee Pſal. lxxiii. 26. I have ſaid, that I would keep thy words; keep his commandments, lay up his promiſes, obſerve his doctrines, profeſs and retain them; this he determined within himſelf to do, under a ſenſe of the love of God to him, in being his portion and inheritance. Some render the words in connection with the former, thus, My portion, O Lord, I ſaid, is, or ſhall be, to keep thy words[l]; it is the part and portion of ſome to preach the word, and of others to hear it; and of all to keep or obſerve it, its precepts, promiſes and truths. Aben Ezra gives the ſenſe of them, thus, "This I "ſaid to many, perhaps they will keep thy words;" namely, that the Lord was his portion, which he thought might induce them to an obſervance of them, as he had done.

℣. 58. I intreated thy favour with my whole heart, &c.] Or, thy face[m]; to ſee it, or thy preſence to enjoy it; to have communion with God, and the light of his countenance; than which nothing is more deſirable and delightful to a gracious man: as alſo to be remembered with the ſpecial favour of God, in which is life; to have his love ſhed abroad in the heart; to have large views of intereſt in it, and to be rooted and grounded therein; and this the pſalmiſt intreated, not in an hypocritical manner, but with all ſincerity, heartineſs and affection, having taſted that the Lord was gracious. Or, made thy face ſick[n]; wearied him with ſupplications, gave him no reſt until he obtained his requeſt. Be merciful unto me, according to thy word; have compaſſion on me; ſympathize with me in all my troubles; grant me freſh ſupplies of grace; and particularly ſhew and apply thy pardoning grace and mercy to me, according to thy word of promiſe in the covenant of grace, in which proviſion is made for forgiveneſs of ſins; ſee Pſal. li. 1. Aben Ezra and Kimchi think reference is had to Exod. xxxiii. 19. but rather it is to 2 Sam. xii. 13.

℣. 59. I thought on my ways, &c.] What they were, whether right or wrong; whither they led, what would be the conſequences of walking in them: the Septuagint and Arabic verſions read, thy ways; no doubt the pſalmiſt thought of both; of his own ways, in which he had walked; and of God's ways, which he directed him to walk in: and, conſidering the ſuperior pleaſure and profit of the latter, he preferred them to the former. The Targum is, I thought to mend my ways, or make them good. Hence he took the following ſtep: And turned my feet unto thy teſtimonies; betook himſelf to the word of God, which teſtifies of his will, and directs to thoſe ways he would have his people to walk in; and he ſteered his courſe of life and actions thereby; he turned from his own ways into the ways of God; under the influence of divine grace, he turned being turned.

℣. 60. I made haſte, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.] As ſoon as he was ſenſible of his duty, he immediately complied with it; he conſulted not with fleſh and blood, but at once yielded a chearful obedience to the commands of God. Inſtances of evangelical obedience of this kind we have in the three thouſand converts, in Saul, and in the jailer and his houſe, Acts ii. 41. and ix. 18. and xvi. 33.

℣. 61. The bands of the wicked have robbed me, &c.] Very probably Saul and his miniſters ſeized on his effects, when he fled from him; and the Amalekites plundered him of all his ſubſtance, when they took Ziglag; and Abſalom and the conſpirators with him robbed him, when he was obliged, becauſe of them, to retire from his palace and court, which they entered and took poſſeſſion of. But Aben Ezra rejects this ſenſe of the word, which Jarchi and Kimchi eſpouſe, and we follow, and renders it, took hold of me; and ſo the Targum, "the "company of the wicked were gathered together "againſt me:" they ſurrounded him and put him into fear, great numbers of them encompaſſing him about; ſee Pſal. xviii. 4. But I have not forgotten thy law; this was written in his heart; he kept it in his memory, and retained an affection for it; and could not be deterred from obedience to it by the numbers and violence of wicked men, who hated and perſecuted him for his attachment to it.

℣. 62. At midnight I will riſe to give thanks unto thee, &c.] Not only ſend up an ejaculatory thanksgiving upon his bed, but riſe up from it and ſhake off his ſleep, and in a ſet, ſerious, ſolemn manner, praiſe the Lord. This ſhews a great regard to him, and affection to this work, ſince it is with difficulty men prevail upon themſelves to riſe at midnight upon any occaſion; at midnight Paul and Silas prayed and ſung praiſes to God, Acts xvi. 25. Becauſe of thy righteous judgments; upon the wicked, as Aben Ezra; the bands and troops of them that encompaſſed him about, and robbed him; but God avenged him of them, and for this he gave thanks, or for ſuch like things. Sometimes the judgments of God have been executed at midnight; as the deſtruction of the firſt-born in Egypt, and of Pharaoh and his hoſt in the Red-ſea, when Iſrael ſang his praiſe, Exod. xii. 29. and xiv. 20, 21. and xv. 1. and for the judgments of God upon Antichriſt, the church will rejoice and give thanks, Rev. xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2. Or rather, by theſe may be meant the word of God, the precepts and ordinances of it, which are all juſt and good; ſuch is the law of God, and ſuch are the ordinances of Chriſt, Pſal. xix. 9. Prov. viii. 20.

℣. 63. I am a companion of all them that fear thee, &c.] Not of the rich and mighty, much leſs of the wicked and ungodly; but of ſuch who had the true fear of God upon their hearts, and before their eyes; who feared the Lord and his goodneſs, and truly ſerved and worſhipped him; even all of theſe, whether poor or rich, of whatſoever condition, or of whatſoever nation, being no reſpecter of perſons. With theſe he was a partner in the bleſſings of the covenant, in the promiſes of it, in the graces of the Spirit, and in a right and meetneſs for the ſame eternal glory and happineſs: he went in company with them to the houſe of God, and joined with them in all acts of religious worſhip; he converſed privately with them about what God had done for the ſouls of him and them; he delighted in their company; he ſympathized with them in their troubles; and was a companion with them in their tribulation, ſorrows and ſufferings, as well as in their joys and comforts. And of them that keep thy precepts; as all ſuch do who truly fear the Lord; for by the fear of the Lord, men depart from evil, and cannot do thoſe things that others do; cannot allow themſelves in a wilful tranſgreſſion of the divine precepts; but influenced by the fear of God, obſerve and keep them.

℣. 64. The earth, O Lord, is full of thy mercy, &c.] Goodneſs or grace [o]; both of the providential mercy and goodneſs of God, which extends to all his creatures; and of his ſpecial grace and goodneſs to his own people, held forth in his word and ordinances; ſee Pſal. xxxiii. 5. Teach me thy ſtatutes; as an inſtance of mercy, grace and goodneſs; ſee ℣. 12, 26.

ט TETH, The ninth part.

℣. 65. Thou haſt dealt well with thy ſervant, &c.] In a providential way, ever ſince he had a being; by the protection and preſervation of him, by following and loading him with benefits, by raiſing him from a low eſtate to the throne of Iſrael, by delivering him from many dangers and enemies, and by giving him reſt from them all; and in a way of ſpecial grace and mercy, by making an everlaſting covenant with him, by bleſſing him with all ſpiritual bleſſings, by giving him an intereſt in ſalvation by Chriſt, and hope of eternal glory. And thus he deals with all his ſervants; he does all things well by them; he deals well with them, even when he afflicts them; he treats them as his Davids, his beloved and choſen ones, and his children. The Syriac verſion renders it as a petition, Do good with thy ſervant; beſtow benefits on him, or deal bountifully with him, as in ℣. 17. O Lord, according unto thy word; thy word of promiſe: providential mercies are according to promiſe, for godlineſs or godly perſons have the promiſe of the things of this life; and ſo are ſpiritual bleſſings, they are laid up in exceeding great and precious promiſes, which are yea and amen in Chriſt; and ſo is eternal glory and happineſs: it is a promiſe which God, that cannot lie, made before the world began; ſo that there is a ſolid foundation laid for faith and hope as to theſe things; and this confirms and commends the faithfulneſs of God to his people.

℣. 66. Teach me good judgment and knowledge, &c.] Or, a good taſte [p]; of the Lord himſelf, how good and gracious he is; of his grace and love, which is better than wine; of his word and the truths of it, which are ſweeter to a ſpiritual taſte than honey or the honey-comb; and of the things of the Spirit of God, which are ſavoury to a ſpiritual man, a diſtinguiſhing taſte of things; for, as the taſte diſcerns perverſe things in food, ſo a man of a ſpiritual taſte diſtinguiſhes good from evil, truth from error; diſcerns things that differ, and approves of thoſe that are moſt excellent, and abides by them. Or, a good ſenſe [q], as it may be rendered; a good ſenſe of the ſcriptures, the true and right ſenſe of them; and to have the mind of God and of Chriſt, and of the Spirit of Chriſt, in the word; and to have diſtinguiſhing light in it, and a well eſtabliſhed judgment in the truths of it, is very deſirable: as is alſo a ſpiritual and experimental knowledge of them, a growing and increaſing one; a knowledge of God in Chriſt, and of his will; a knowledge of Chriſt, his perſon and offices, and the myſteries of his grace; which a truly gracious and humble ſoul deſires to be taught, and is taught of God more or leſs. For I have believed thy commandments; the whole word of God, and all that is ſaid in it; that it is of God, is the word of God, and not the word of man; and therefore he was deſirous of being taught the true meaning of it, and to be experimentally acquainted with it: the word of God is called his commandment, Pſal. xix. 7. Or the precepts of the word; he believed theſe were the commandments of God, and not of men; delivered out by him, and enforced by his authority; and therefore he gave credit to them, and loved them, and deſired better to underſtand and do them: or the promiſes and threatnings annexed to them, which he believed would be punctually fulfilled upon the doers or tranſgreſſors of them; and as for himſelf, he chearfully yielded the obedience of faith unto them.

ỹ. 67. Before I was afflicted, I went aſtray, &c.] From God; from his word, his ways and worſhip; like a loſt ſheep from the ſhepherd, the fold, the flock, and the footſteps of it; ſee ỹ. 176. Not that he wilfully, wickedly, maliciouſly, and through contempt, departed from his God; this he denies, Pſal. xviii. 21. but through the weakneſs of the fleſh, the prevalence of corruption, and force of temptation, and very much through a careleſs, heedleſs and negligent frame of ſpirit, he got out of the right way, and wandered from it, before he was well aware. The word is uſed of erring through ignorance, Lev. v. 18. this was in a time of proſperity, when, tho' he might not, like Jeſhurun, wax fat and kick, and forſake and lightly eſteem the rock of his ſalvation; or fall into temptations and hurtful luſts, and err from the faith, and be pierced with many ſorrows, as an over-love of the world brings men into; yet he might become inattentive to the duties of religion, and be negligent of them, which is a common caſe. But now have I kept thy word; having been afflicted with outward and inward afflictions, afflictions of body and mind; afflictions in perſon, in family and eſtate; afflictions in ſoul, through indwelling ſin, the temptations of Satan, and the hidings of God's face: all this brought him back again to God, to his word, ways and worſhip; he betook himſelf to reading and hearing the word, if he might find any thing to relieve and comfort him under his trials; he obſerved the doctrines of grace in it, and kept the precepts of it, and walked in all the commandments and ordinances of it, being reſtored by afflictions.

ỹ. 68. Thou art good, and doſt good, &c.] Eſſentially, originally and only good, and the fountain of all goodneſs to his creatures; who does good to all men in a providential way, and eſpecially to his own people; to whom he is good in a way of ſpecial grace and mercy, in and through his Son Jeſus Chriſt; and even he is good to them, and does good to them, when he afflicts them; he makes their afflictions work for their good, either temporal, ſpiritual or eternal. Teach me thy ſtatutes; as a freſh inſtance of goodneſs: this had been often deſired, being what lay much on his mind, and was of moment and importance; ſee ỹ. 12, 26, 33, 64.

ỹ. 69. The proud have forged a lie againſt me, &c.] Or, ſewed a lie to him[r]; faſtened a lie upon him, or ſewed and added one lie to another. Either with reſpect to politics, as the proud and haughty courtiers of Saul, who repreſented David to him as a traitor, that had treaſonable deſigns againſt him, to take away his life, and ſeize his crown and kingdom, 1 Sam. xxiv. 9. or with reſpect to religion; ſo ſome proud, ſcornful men, that derided him for his piety, and ſcoffed at his ſeriouſneſs, gave out, that it was all grimace and hypocriſy; raiſed calumnies upon him, and laid things to his charge he knew nothing of; and which were all lies, forged out of their own brains, and artfully and purpoſely put together, to blacken his character, and leſſen his eſteem among men: and it is no unuſual thing for wicked men to ſpeak all manner of evil falſly againſt the people of God. But I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart; obſerve the commands of God ſincerely, heartily and affectionately, and not in ſhow and appearance only; and ſo make it evident, that it was a lie that was forged againſt him; and this is the beſt way of anſwering ſuch liars and defamers; ſee 1 Pet. iii. 16.

ỹ. 70. Their heart is as fat as greaſe, &c.] Or tallow, a lump of it, fat or greaſe congealed. That is, the heart of the above proud perſons, who abounded in riches; were glutted with the things of this world; had more than heart could wiſh, and ſo became proud and haughty: or their hearts were groſs, ſottiſh, ſenſeleſs and ſtupid, as perſons fat at heart are; or as creatures over fat, which have little or no feeling: ſo theſe had no knowledge of the law of God, no ſenſe of their duty, no remorſe of conſcience for ſin; their hearts were hardened, and they paſt feeling, and given up to a reprobate mind; ſee Iſa. vi. 9, 10. The Targum is, "the imagination of their heart is become groſs as fat:" the Septuagint is, curdled like milk; that is, hardened, as Suidas[s] interprets it. But I delight in thy law; after the inward man; as the apoſtle did, Rom. vii. 22. as fulfilled in Chriſt; as in his hands, as King and Lawgiver; as written upon his own heart; and ſo yielding a ready and chearful obedience to it; he delighted in reading the law, in meditating on it, and in obſerving it.

ỹ. 71. It is good for me, that I have been afflicted, &c.] The good and profit of which he had obſerved before, ỹ. 67. ſee the note there. The following end being alſo anſwered thereby, That I might learn thy ſtatutes; to underſtand them, and to keep them. Afflictions are ſometimes as a ſchool to the people of God, in which they learn much both of their duty and of their privileges; and when they are teaching and inſtructive, they are for good; ſee Pſal. xciv. 12.

ỹ. 72. The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thouſands of gold and ſilver.] The word of God, the doctrines contained in it; which, coming out of the mouth of God, and ſpoken by him, carries in it weight and authority, commands reverence and reſpect; and ought to be conſidered, as indeed the word of God, and not of man; and ſo of more value than thouſands of pieces of gold and ſilver; or, as the Targum, than a thouſand talents of gold and ſilver. The truths and doctrines of the word of God are not only comparable to gold and ſilver for their intrinſic worth and value; but are preferable to them, and to be received before them: David had his thouſands of gold and ſilver, but he eſteemed the word of God above them all; and willingly ſuffered afflictions, that he might underſtand it better; ſee ỹ. 127. Pſal. xix. 10. Prov. viii. 10, 11.

י JOD, The tenth part.

ỹ. 73. Thy hands have made me, and faſhioned me, &c.] Not the pſalmiſt himſelf, nor his parents, but the Lord alone: for though parents are fathers of our fleſh, they are but inſtruments in the hand of the Lord; though man is produced by natural generation, yet the formation and faſhioning of men are as much owing to the power and wiſdom of God, which are his hands, as the formation of Adam was. Job owns this, in much the ſame words as the pſalmiſt does, Job x. 8. ſee Pſal. cxxxix. 13—15. God not only gives conception, and forms the embryo in the womb, but faſhions, and gives it its comely and proportionate parts. Or, covered me; the firſt word may reſpect conception, and this the covering of the fœtus with the ſecundine[t]; ſee Pſal. cxxxix. 13. Give me underſtanding, that I may learn thy commandments; ſince he had a proper, comely body, and a reaſonable ſoul; though debaſed by ſin, and brought into a ſtate of ignorance, eſpecially as to ſpiritual things, he deſires he might have a ſpiritual underſtanding given him; of the word of God in general, the truths and doctrines of it, which are not underſtood by the natural man; and of the precepts of it in particular, that he might ſo learn them, as to know the ſenſe and meaning of them, their purity and ſpirituality; and ſo as to do them from a principle of love, in faith, and to the glory of God: for it is not a bare learning them by heart, or committing them to memory, nor a mere theory of them, but the practice of them in faith and love, which is here meant.

[s] In voce Ετυρωθη.

[t] Vid. Hackman. Præcid. Sacr. p. 195.

℣. 74. They that fear thee, will be glad when they ſee me, &c.] In outward proſperity, delivered from all troubles, ſet on the throne of Iſrael, and at reſt from all enemies round about; and in ſpiritual proſperity, being illuminated by the Spirit of God, having a ſpiritual underſtanding of divine things, an obedience of faith to the commands of God, in the lively exerciſe of grace upon him, in comfortable frames of ſoul, and flouriſhing circumſtances. Now they that fear the Lord, that have the grace of fear in their hearts, and are true worſhippers of God, as they delight to meet together, and are glad to ſee one another, ſo they rejoice in each other's proſperity, eſpecially ſpiritual; ſee Pſal. xxxiv. 1—3. Becauſe I have hoped in thy word; in Chriſt, the eſſential Word, the hope of Iſrael; in the written word, which gives encouragement to hope; in the word of promiſe, on which he was cauſed to hope; and in which hope he was confirmed, and not diſappointed, and ſo it made him not aſhamed: and others rejoiced at it, becauſe it was an encouragement to their faith and hope likewiſe.

℣. 75. I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, &c.] His word, the doctrines and precepts of it, they are all conſiſtent with the holineſs and righteouſneſs of God; and ſo are his judgments on wicked men, they are righteous, juſt and true: God is righteous in all his ways, there is no unrighteouſneſs in any diſpenſation of his; and ſuch are his corrections of his own people, and which ſeem to be chiefly intended here; and are ſo called, becauſe they are done in judgment, with moderation and gentleneſs, in wiſdom, and to anſwer the beſt purpoſes; and they are all right, for the good and profit of the people of God, that they may be partakers of his holineſs, and not be condemned with the world: this the pſalmiſt knew by experience, and owned and acknowledged. And that thou in faithfulneſs haſt afflicted me; in faithfulneſs to himſelf, his covenant and promiſe; that upon forſaking his law, and not walking in his ſtatutes, he would viſit ſin with a rod, and tranſgreſſions with ſtripes, though he would not take away his loving-kindneſs; and in faithfulneſs to David, for his ſpiritual and eternal good, in great ſincerity, heartily, cordially, with real affection and love: his rebukes were faithful; the chaſtiſement was not above meaſure or deſert, nor above ſtrength to bear it; ſee Pſal lxxxix. 30—33. Prov. xxvii. 6. Ezra ix. 13. 1 Cor. x. 13.

℣. 76. Let, I pray thee, thy merciful kindneſs be for my comfort, &c.] Shewn in the proviſion and promiſe of a Saviour, in the forgiveneſs of ſins through him; a diſcovery and application of which yields comfort under afflictions. According to thy word unto thy ſervant; a word of promiſe, in which he had aſſured him of his love, grace, mercy and kindneſs; and that he would continue it to him, and comfort him with it: to make ſuch a promiſe, and ſhew ſuch favour, was an inſtance of condeſcending grace to him, who was but his ſervant, and unworthy of his regard.

℣. 77. Let thy tender mercies come unto me, &c.] See the note on ℣. 41. That I may live; not merely corporally; though corporal life is a grant and favour, and the continuance of it; it is owing to the tender mercies of God, that men are not conſumed: but ſpiritually; the firſt principle of ſpiritual life is from the rich mercy and great love of God; his time of love is a time of life. Here it ſeems to deſign the lively exerciſe of grace, which is influenced, animated and quickened by the love of God, as faith, hope and love; or a living comfortably: without the love of God, and a view of it, ſaints look upon themſelves as dead men, forgotten as they are, free among the dead, that are remembered no more; but in the favour of God is life; let but that be ſhewn, let the tender mercies of God come in full flow into the ſoul, and it will be revived and live comfortably; and ſuch alſo ſhall live eternally, as the fruit and effect of the ſame love and favour. For thy law is my delight; or delights [u]; what he exceedingly delighted in, after the inward man, and yet could not live by it, without the mercy, love, and grace of God; ſee ℣. 24, 47, 70.

℣. 78. Let the proud be aſhamed, &c.] The ſame perſons he before ſpeaks of as accurſed, who had him in deriſion, and forged a lie againſt him. Here he prays that they might be aſhamed of their ſcoffs and jeers, of their lies and calumnies, the evils and injuries they had done him; that they might be brought to a ſenſe of them, and repentance for them; when they would be aſhamed of them in the beſt manner: or that they might be diſappointed of their ends, in what they had done, and ſo be confounded and aſhamed, as men are when they cannot gain their point; or be brought to ſhame and confuſion eternally. For they dealt perverſly with me without a cauſe; or, they perverted me with falſhood [w]; that is, they endeavoured to pervert him with lies and falſhood, and lead him out of the right way; or they attempted, by their lies and calumnies, to make him out to be a perverſe and wicked man, and pronounced and condemned him as ſuch, without any foundation or juſt cauſe for it. But I will meditate in thy precepts; he was determined, in the ſtrength of grace, that thoſe ill uſages ſhould not take off his thoughts from religious things, or divert him from his duty to his God: none of theſe things moved him; he ſtill went on in the ways of God, in his worſhip and ſervice, as Daniel did, when in like circumſtances.

℣. 79. Let thoſe that fear thee, turn unto me, &c.] Whoſe companion he was fond of being, ℣. 63. There were ſome good men, it ſeems, that turned from him, took the part of his enemies, and ſided with them againſt him, which was matter of grief to him. Some think this refers to the affair of Bathſheba; when ſome that feared the Lord, that had been familiar with him, did not chooſe to keep company with him, but abſtained from his converſation, having ſo foully ſinned, and brought ſuch diſhonour to God and on his ways. Jarchi and Kimchi both make mention of this. Now this grieved David; and he deſires of all things, that they would turn to him again, and favour him with their company; who were the excellent in the earth, in whom was all his delight. The Targum is, "turn to my doctrine;" to hear it, receive it, profeſs it, and abide by it. And thoſe that have known thy teſtimonies; as ſuch as fear the Lord do: they know them, and have a ſpiritual underſtanding of what they teſtify of; they know them, and love them, and delight in them; they know them, and own, acknowledge, and profeſs them; they know them, and keep, and obſerve them; and an excellent character this is!

℣. 80. Let my heart be ſound in thy ſtatutes, &c.] Or perfect, and ſincere: he deſires that he might have a ſincere regard to the ways and worſhip, ordinances and commands of God; that he might have a cordial affection for them, and obſerve them, not in ſhew and appearance only, but heartily as to the Lord, and in reality and truth, like an Iſraelite indeed, in whom there is no guile. That I be not aſhamed; before men, conſcious of guilt; or before God, at the throne of grace; where a believer ſometimes is aſhamed to come, not having had that regard to the ſtatutes of the Lord he ſhould have had, and that he might not be aſhamed before him at the laſt day; but have confidence, having the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him, and the true grace of God implanted in him; which engaged him to a regard to all his commandments.

כ Caph, The eleventh part.

℣. 81. My ſoul fainteth for thy ſalvation, &c.] Either for temporal ſalvation and deliverance from enemies; which being promiſed, was expected by him from the Lord; but not coming ſo ſoon as looked for, his ſpirits began to ſink and faint: or for ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, for a view of intereſt in it, for the joys and comforts of it, and for the full poſſeſſion of it in heaven; and particularly for the promiſed Meſſiah, the author of it, often called the ſalvation of God, becauſe prepared and appointed by him to be the author of it: of him there was a promiſe, which gave the Old-Teſtament-ſaints reaſon to expect him, and for him they waited; his coming they earneſtly wiſhed for, but being long deferred, were ſometimes out of heart, and ready to faint, which was here David's caſe. But I hope in thy word; the word of promiſe concerning deliverance and ſalvation, eſpecially by the Meſſiah, which ſupported him, and kept him from fainting; that being firm and ſure, for ever ſettled in heaven, and has the oath of God annexed to it, for the confirmation of it; and God is faithful that has promiſed, and is able alſo to perform; ſo that his word lays a ſolid foundation for faith and hope.

℣. 82. Mine eyes fail for thy word, &c.] Either with looking for the Meſſiah, the eſſential Word, that was to be, and afterwards was made fleſh, and dwelt among men; or for the fulfilment of the word of promiſe, on which he was made to hope; but that being deferred, and he believing in hope againſt hope, and looking out continually till it was accompliſhed; his eyes grew weary, and failed him, and he was juſt ready to give up all expectation of it; ſee Pſal. lxxvii. 8. Saying, When wilt thou comfort me? the people of God are ſometimes very diſconſolate and need comforting, through the prevalence of ſin, the power of Satan's temptations, the hidings of God's face, and a variety of afflictions; when they apply to God for comfort, who only can comfort them, and who has his ſet times to do it; but they are apt to think it long, and inquire, as David here, when it will be.

℣. 83. For I am become like a bottle in the ſmoke, &c.] Like a bottle made of the ſkins of beaſts, as was uſual in thoſe times and countries; hence we read of old and new bottles, and of their renting, Judg. ix. 13. Matt. ix. 17. Now ſuch a bottle being hung up in a ſmoaky chimney, would be dried and ſhrivelled up, and be good for nothing; ſo Jarchi's note is, "like a bottle made of ſkin, which is dried in ſmoke;" and the Targum is, "like a bottle that hangs in ſmoke." It denotes the uncomfortable condition the pſalmiſt was in, or at leaſt thought himſelf to be in; as to be in the midſt of ſmoke is very uncomfortable, ſo was he, being in darkneſs, and under the hidings of God's face; black and ſooty, like a bottle in ſmoke, with ſin and afflictions; like an empty bottle, had nothing in him, as he was ready to fear; or was uſeleſs as ſuch a one, and a veſſel in which there was no pleaſure; like a broken one, as he elſewhere ſays, deſpiſed and rejected of men. It may alſo have reſpect unto the form of his body, as well as the frame of his mind; he who before was ruddy, and of a beautiful countenance, now was worn out with cares and old age, was become pale and wrinkled, and like a ſkin-bottle ſhrivelled in ſmoke. Yet do I not forget thy ſtatutes; he ſtill attended to the word, worſhip, ways and ordinances of the Lord; hoping in due time to meet with comfort there, in which he was greatly in the right.

℣. 84. How many are the days of thy ſervant? &c.] If this is to be underſtood of the days of his life, they were very few, as the days of every man be; and if of his days of joy and comfort, peace and proſperity, they were fewer ſtill; but if of days of adverſity and affliction, which ſeems to be the ſenſe, they were many indeed. When wilt thou execute judgment on them that perſecute me? good men have their perſecutors; there is a judgment that will be executed on them, if not here, yet hereafter: it is a righteous thing with God to do it; it is often deferred when the ſaints, through zeal for the glory of God, and the honour of his juſtice, as well as for their own deliverance and comfort, are at times ſomewhat impatient for it, and earneſtly ſolicit it, as the pſalmiſt here; ſee Rev. vi. 9.

℣. 85. The proud have digged pits for me, &c.] Laid ſnares and temptations in his way, to draw him into ſin, and ſo into miſchief; they ſought indeed to take away his life, and formed ſchemes for it. The alluſion is to the digging of pits for the taking of wild beaſts; which ſhews the ill opinion they had of David, and their ill uſage of him; ſee Pſal. vii. 15. and ix. 15. Which are not after thy law; no, contrary to it; which forbids the digging of a pit, and leaving it uncovered, ſo that a neighbour's beaſt might fall into it, Exod. xxi. 33, 34. and if thoſe might not be dug to the injury of beaſts, then much leſs to the injury of men, to the hurt of the ſervants of the Lord, or to the ſhedding of innocent blood, which the law forbids.

℣. 86. All thy commandments are faithful, &c.] Or faithfulneſs[x]: they are made by a faithful God, who is holy, juſt and true; they command faithfulneſs, ſincerity and uprightneſs; and require men to love their neighbours as themſelves, and to do all they do faithfully, cordially and affectionately; they are to be done in truth and faithfulneſs, in charity, out of a pure heart, and faith unfeigned; and therefore to dig pits for men, muſt not be after, but contrary to the law of God. They perſecute me wrongfully; without a cauſe, purely out of ill-will and for religion's ſake; which, as it is an argument with the ſaints to bear perſecution patiently, it is uſed as an argument with the Lord, to ariſe and appear on the behalf of his perſecuted ones, as follows: Help thou me; againſt my perſecutors, and out of their hands: God is able to help his people; he has promiſed to do it; it may be expected from him; and he is a preſent help in time of trouble. This is a ſuitable petition in the mouths of God's people, and ſhould be a prayer of faith.

[x] אמונה fides, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator; veritas & fidelitas, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 87. They had almoſt conſumed me upon earth, &c.] Almoſt deſtroyed his good name, waſted his ſubſtance, took away his crown and kingdom, and even his life; it was within a little of it, his ſoul had almoſt dwelt in ſilence; they had almoſt caſt him down to the ground, and left him there. But all this was only on earth; they could not reach any thing that belonged to him in heaven; not his name, which was written there in the Lamb's book of life; nor his riches and inheritance there, the never-fading crown of glory laid up for him there; or that eternal life, which is hid with Chriſt in God for him. But I forſook not thy precepts; did not decline the ſervice and worſhip of God, nor neglect his word and ordinances; though thus perſecuted, and all theſe things came upon him for the ſake of religion; ſee Pſal. xliv. 17.

℣. 88. Quicken me after thy loving-kindneſs, &c.] According to it, and with it; let me have ſome diſcoveries of it, and of intereſt in it; and that will quicken me, revive and comfort me, under all the reproaches, ill uſage, and perſecutions of men. The love of God, ſhed abroad in the heart, comforts and ſupports under all ſorts of afflictions; it quickens the graces of the Spirit, and brings them forth into lively exerciſe, as faith, hope and love; and to a diligent and fervent diſcharge of every duty: it conſtrains to love the Lord, and live to him, to his glory, in obedience to his will. So ſhall I keep the teſtimony of thy mouth; the word of God, which comes out of his mouth, teſtifies of him, and of his mind and will; and which is to be received and obſerved, as being greater than the teſtimony of men, 1 John v. 9.

ל LAMED, The twelfth part.

℣. 89. For ever, O Lord, thy word is ſettled in heaven.] The Syriac verſion makes two propoſitions of theſe words, rendering them thus, For ever thou art, O Lord; and thy word ſtands, or is firm in heaven; and which agrees with the accents: the firſt of which is expreſſive of the eternity and immutability of God; and the other, of the ſtability of his word: it is true of the eſſential Word of God, who was with God from all eternity; in time came down from heaven indeed to earth, and did his work, and then went to heaven again; where he is and will remain, until the times of the reſtitution of all things. The decrees and purpoſes of God, what he has ſaid in his heart that he will do, theſe are firm and ſure; theſe counſels of old are faithfulneſs and truth; they are mountains of braſs ſettled for ever, and more unalterable than the decrees of the Medes and Perſians. The revealed will of God, his word of command, made known to angels in heaven, is regarded, hearkened to, and done by them: the word of the goſpel, publiſhed in the church, which is ſometimes called heaven, is the everlaſting goſpel, the word of God, which lives and abides for ever; what remains and will remain, maugre all the oppoſition of men and devils. The word of promiſe in the covenant made in heaven, is ſure to all the ſeed; every one of the promiſes is yea and amen in Chriſt, and as ſtable as the heavens, and more ſo; heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, but my words ſhall not paſs away, Matt. xxiv. 35. The firmneſs of God's word is ſeen in the upholding and continuing the heavens by the word of his power, by which they were firſt made; and the certainty of the divine promiſes is illuſtrated by the perpetuity of the ordinances of heaven; ſee Jer. xxxi. 35. and xxxiii. 25, 26.

℣. 90. Thy faithfulneſs is unto all generations, &c.] Or to generation and generation [y]; to his people in every age, fulfilling his word, ſupplying their wants, giving them new mercies every morning and every day; never leaving and forſaking them, according to his promiſe: his faithfulneſs never fails, it endures for ever, and is exceeding great and large indeed; ſee Lam. iii. 23. Pſal. lxxxix. 33. and c. 5. Thou haſt eſtabliſhed the earth, and it abideth; laid the foundation of it ſo firm and ſure, that it cannot be removed; and though one generation has paſſed after another, the earth abides where it was, and will do for ever: and as firm and ſtable, and never failing is the faithfulneſs of God, which this is deſigned to illuſtrate. So ſome ſupply it, As thou haſt eſtabliſhed the earth, &c. [z] ſee Pſal. xxiv. 2. and civ. 5. Eccl. i. 4.

℣. 91. They continue this day according to thine ordinances, &c.] That is, the heavens and the earth do, before-mentioned, juſt as they were from the beginning of the creation. The heavenly bodies have the ſame motion, magnitude, diſtance and influence; the ſun riſes and ſets as it did; the moon keeps her appointed ſeaſons of full and change, of increaſe and decreaſe; the fixed ſtars retain their place, and the planets have their exact revolutions: and on earth things are as they were; ſeed-time and harveſt, cold and heat, ſummer and winter, day and night; thus they are at this day, and will continue, according to the wiſe order and appointment of God. Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it, "they ſtand or continue unto this day, to do the will of God; to execute his judgments and decrees, or obſerve his order and ordinances." For all are thy ſervants; or they, or theſe all [a]; the heavens and earth, and all that is in them, all the works of God; he called them into being, and they roſe up at his command; he calls them to ſervice, and they ſtand up as obedient ones to do his will; he commandeth the ſun, and it riſeth not before its time; and he ſealeth up the ſtars, that they ſhine not when he pleaſes; once he commanded the ſun to ſtand ſtill on Gibeon, and the moon in the valley of Ajalon, and they obeyed him; ſee Iſa. xlviii. 13. Job ix. 7. Joſh. x. 12, 13. Hence it appears, that the hoſts of heaven, the ſun, moon and ſtars, ought not to be ſerved and worſhipped; but the Lord, the maker of them only, ſince they are his ſervants; and that men ought ſurely to ſerve the Lord, if theſe do, and eſpecially ſuch who are his choſen, redeemed and called ones.

℣. 92. Unleſs thy law had been my delights, &c.] Not the law of works, the voice of words, which they that heard intreated they might hear no more; which is terrible, and works wrath in the conſcience; is a curſing and damning law to the tranſgreſſors of it; and ſo not delightful, unleſs as conſidered in the hands of Chriſt, the fulfilling end of it: but the law of faith, the doctrine of faith, or of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, received by faith, which yields peace, joy and comfort, even in tribulation: or the whole doctrine of the goſpel, the law of the Meſſiah, the iſles waited for; the doctrine of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life by Chriſt, which is exceeding delightful to ſenſible ſinners. I ſhould then have periſhed in mine affliction; referring to ſome particular time of affliction he was preſſed with, either through the perſecution of Saul, or the conſpiracy of Abſalom; which was very great and heavy upon him, ſo that he almoſt deſpaired of deliverance from it; and muſt have periſhed, not eternally, but as to his comforts: his heart would have fainted in him, and he would have ſunk under the weight of the affliction, had it not been for the relief he had from the word of God, the doctrines and promiſes of it; he was like one in a ſtorm, toſſed with tempeſts, one wave after another beat upon him, and rolled over him, when he thought himſelf juſt periſhing; and muſt have given all over for loſt, had it not been for the delight and pleaſure he found in reading and meditating on the ſacred writings.

℣. 93. I will never forget thy precepts, &c.] Not the precepts of the moral law, though he carefully obſerved and attended to them, laid them up in his mind, and did not forget to keep them; but the doctrines of the word, of the word which the Lord commanded to a thouſand generations; theſe he endeavoured to remember, and not let them ſlip from him, ſince it follows: For with them thou haſt quickened me; not with the precepts of the moral law, which cannot give life, quicken a dead ſinner, nor comfort a diſtreſſed ſaint; it is the killing letter, and the miniſtration of condemnation and death: but the doctrines of the word, of the goſpel, which are ſpirit and life; the ſavour of life unto life, the means of quickening dead ſinners, and of reviving drooping ſaints; of refreſhing their ſpirits, and chearing their ſouls, when in diſtreſs: and when they are made thus uſeful, they are not eaſily forgotten, they leave impreſſions which do not ſoon wear off; and beſides, ſaints are careful to remember ſuch words and truths, which have been of uſe unto them, ſince they may have occaſion for them again.

℣. 94. I am thine, ſave me, &c.] From all troubles and afflictions; from all enemies, temporal and ſpiritual; from Satan, and his principalities and powers; from ſin, and all the wretched conſequences of it; from hell, wrath and damnation: ſalvation from all which is by Chriſt. And this is a prayer of faith with reſpect to him, founded upon his intereſt and property in him; whoſe he was by choice, by covenant, by gift, by purchaſe, and by grace: and this is a plea for ſalvation; Thou haſt an intereſt in me, I am one of thine, therefore let me not be loſt or periſh. For I have ſought thy precepts; to underſtand them better, and obſerve them more conſtantly; and which ſenſe of intereſt and relation, and of ſalvation, will influence unto.

℣. 95. The wicked have waited for me to deſtroy me, &c.] This is another reaſon why he deſires the Lord would ſave him; becauſe wicked men, ſuch who feared not God, nor regarded men, ſons of Belial; ſuch as Saul's courtiers, and the conſpirators with Abſalom were, had laid wait and were waiting an opportunity, and were hoping and expecting to have one, that they might take away his life; deſtroy him out of the world, as Kimchi; or eternally, as Aben Ezra thinks; by endeavouring to draw him out of the right ways of religion and godlineſs, into the ways of ſin and wickedneſs, and ſo ruin him for ever. But I will conſider thy teſtimonies; the word of God, which teſtified of his power and providence, employed in the protection of his people, and ſo an encouragement to put truſt and confidence in him; and of his mind and will, with reſpect to the way in which he ſhould walk; and ſo making theſe his counſellors, as he did, ℣. 24. and well weighing and conſidering in his mind what they dictated to him, he was preſerved from the attempts of his enemies to deſtroy him, either temporally or ſpiritually.

℣. 96. I have ſeen an end of all perfection, &c.] An end, limit or border to every country, as the Syriac verſion; as there is to every kingdom and ſtate, and to the whole world; but none to the commandment of God: or an end of all created beings, the finiſhed works of God, the moſt perfect in their kind. Many things had already fallen under the obſervation of the pſalmiſt: he had ſeen men of the greateſt ſtrength, and of the moſt conſummate wiſdom, and that had attained to the higheſt degree of power and authority, of wealth and riches, and yet were all come to nothing; he had ſeen ſome of the moſt flouriſhing ſtates and kingdoms brought to deſolation; he had ſeen an intire end of them: he ſaw by the Spirit of God, and by the word of God, and faith in it, that all things would have an end, the heavens and earth, and all that is therein; for ſo it may be rendered, I ſee an end of all perfection[b]; or that the moſt perfect things will have an end, and that the end of them is at hand; ſee 1 Pet. iv. 7. Moreover, he had looked over the wiſdom of this world, and the princes of it, which comes to nought; he had conſidered the ſeveral political ſchemes of government, the wiſeſt digeſt and ſyſtem of laws, made by the wiſeſt lawgivers among men, and found them all to be limited, ſhort and ſhallow, in compariſon of the word of God, as follows: the Targum is, "I have ſeen "an end of all that I have ſtudied in and looked in- "to." But thy commandment is exceeding broad; the word of God is a large field to walk and meditate in; it is ſufficient to inſtruct all men in all ages, both with reſpect to doctrine and duty, and to make every man of God perfect; it has ſuch a height and depth of doctrine and myſteries in it, as can never be fully reached and fathomed, and ſuch a breadth as is not to be meaſured: the fulneſs of the ſcripture can never be exhauſted; the promiſes of it reach to this life, and that which is to come; and the precepts of it are ſo large, that no works of righteouſneſs done by men, are adequate and proportionate to them; no righteouſneſs, but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, is as large and as broad as thoſe commandments; wherefore no perfection of righteouſneſs is to be found in men, only in Chriſt; who is the perfect, fulfilling end of the law for righteouſneſs, to every one that believes, Rom. x. 4.

מ MEM, The thirteenth part.

℣. 97. O how love I thy law! &c.] The whole word of God, the preceptive part of it; the commands of the moral law, which are holy, juſt and good, and to be loved: but they are not loved by carnal men, whoſe minds are enmity to them, and therefore are not and cannot be ſubject to them, but deſpiſe and reject them; but to a good man, on whoſe heart they are written, they are delightful, and loved to admiration: though this is wholly owing to the grace of God; and marvellous it is, that men ſo ſadly depraved by ſin, ſhould love the holy law of God; yet ſo it is, and David could appeal to God for the truth of it. So the ordinances of the goſpel, the commands of Jeſus Chriſt, are not grievous to ſaints, but loved, valued and eſteemed by them: likewiſe the doctrinal part of the word, the truths of the goſpel, which may be more eſpecially meant by the thorah, or doctrine here; which thoſe who have had an experience of, greatly love and juſtly value, becauſe of the intrinſic worth of them, being comparable to gold, ſilver and precious ſtones; and for the profit and benefit of them to their ſouls, they being wholſome words, ſoul-nouriſhing doctrines, and ſo more to them than their neceſſary food; and for the pleaſure they have in them, theſe being ſweeter to them than the honey or honey-comb: particularly the exceeding great and precious promiſes of the word, which are more to be rejoiced at than a great ſpoil; and even the whole goſpel-part of the word, that containing the doctrines of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, ſalvation, and eternal life through Chriſt; yea, the whole ſcripture, which is both profitable and pleaſant to read in, and hear explained. It is my meditation all the day; not only in the night, when at leiſure and free from the incumbrance of buſineſs; but in the day, and whilſt engaged in the affairs of life, yea all the day long; ſee Pſal. i. 2. Or, it is my diſcourſe [c]; what he talked of, as well as what he thought on. Good men cannot forbear ſpeaking of this or the other paſſage of ſcripture, which has been of uſe unto them: and this is a proof of affection for the word; for what men love, perſons or things, they often think of, and frequently talk of; ſee Deut. vi. 6, 7.

[b] ראיתי video, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius.

℣. 98. Thou through thy commandments haſt made me wiſer than mine enemies, &c.] David had his enemies, as every good man has: and theſe are often cunning and crafty ones, at leaſt in wickedneſs; many of them are wiſe and prudent as to natural things, wiſer in worldly things and political matters, than the children of light, and often lay deep ſchemes and take crafty counſel againſt the ſaints; and yet they, by attending to the word and commands of God, and being under his direction and counſel, counterwork the deſigns of their enemies, and overturn their ſchemes and meaſures, which are brought to confuſion; honeſty being in the iſſue the beſt policy. However, the people of God are wiſer than they in the beſt things; in the affair of ſalvation; in things relating to a future ſtate, and their happineſs there; which wiſdom they attain unto through the word of God, which is written for their learning; through the ſcriptures, which are able to make men wiſe to ſalvation: theſe are the means, and no more; for it is God that is the efficient cauſe, or makes the means effectual, to make them wiſe, and wiſer than others; it is owing to his divine teachings, to his Spirit and grace. The words may be rendered, it hath made me wiſer in thy commandments than mine enemies [d]; that is, the law; and ſo is another reaſon why it was ſo greatly loved by him: or, thy commandments, that is, every one of thy commandments, have made me wiſer, &c. [e] Joſeph Kimchi gives this as the ſenſe, "by mine enemies thou haſt made me wiſe [f]; thou "haſt learned me thy commandments, ſo that I "ſee they cannot remove thy law from my mouth." For they are ever with me; that is, the commandments of God, or his law, and the precepts of it; they were his privy-counſellors, with whom on all occaſions he conſulted, and ſo became wiſer than his enemies, and outwitted them: theſe were always near him, in his heart and in his mouth; he was ever thinking and ſpeaking of them, and ſo did not forget the inſtructions they gave him; they were ever before his eyes, as the rule of his conduct.

℣. 99. I have more underſtanding than all my teachers, &c.] Such as had been or would have been his teachers, who were bad ones in religious matters; eſpecially ſuch might be the religious teachers in Saul's time, when David was a young man: as the prieſts, whoſe lips ſhould keep knowledge, and deliver it to the people, were in the times of Malachi; and as the ſcribes and phariſees, who ſat in Moſes's chair, were in Chriſt's time; and as thoſe legal teachers were in the apoſtles times, who would be teachers of the law, not knowing what they ſaid, nor whereof they affirmed; ſuch as theſe David exceeded in ſpiritual underſtanding. Or his good teachers are meant; and though in common it is true, that a diſciple is not above his maſter; yet there are ſometimes inſtances in which ſcholars exceed their teachers in knowledge and learning; and this is no reproach to a maſter to have ſuch ſcholars: no doubt Apollos ſo improved in knowledge, as to excel Aquila and Priſcilla, of whom he learned much; as the apoſtle Paul excelled Ananias; and ſo David excelled his teachers: and which is ſaid by him, not in an oſtentatious way of himſelf, nor in contempt of his teachers; but to commend the word of God, the ſource of his knowledge; and to magnify the grace of God, to whom he attributes all his wiſdom, as in the preceding verſe. Kimchi interprets it, "of them all I have learned "and received inſtruction; and from them I have "underſtood the good way, and they have taught "me." For thy teſtimonies are my meditation; what he learned of his teachers, he compared with the word, the ſcriptures, which teſtify of the mind and will of God; he ſearched into them, he meditated upon them, and conſidered whether what his inſtructors taught him were agreeable to them or no; and by this means he got more underſtanding than they had.

℣. 100. I underſtand more than the ancients, &c.] Than thoſe that had lived in ages before him; having clearer light given him, and larger diſcoveries made unto him, concerning the Meſſiah, his perſon and offices particularly, as it was uſual for the Lord to do; or than aged men in his own time: for though wiſdom, knowledge and underſtanding, may be reaſonably ſuppoſed to be with ancient men; who have had a long experience of things, and have had time and opportunity of making their obſervations, and of laying up a ſtock of knowledge; and this may be expected from them, and they may be applied to for it; yet this is not always the caſe; a younger man, as David was, may be endued with more knowledge and underſtanding than ſuch; ſo Elihu; ſee Job viii. 8—10. and xii. 12. and xxxii. 6, 7, 9. Or, I have got underſtanding by the ancients; ſo Kimchi; though the other ſenſe ſeems preferable. Becauſe I keep thy precepts; keep cloſe to the word; attend to the reading of it, and meditation on it; keep it in mind and memory, and obſerve to do the commands of it; and by that means obtained a good underſtanding, even a better one than the ancients; eſpecially than they that were without it, or did not carefully attend unto it; ſee Pſal. cxi. 10.

[e] So Cocceius, Muis, Gejerus, and the Targum.

[f] Fas eſt & ab hoſte doceri, Ovid.

℣. 101. I have refrained my feet from every evil way, &c.] Of error or immorality, forbidden and condemned by the word of God; every way that is evil in itſelf, or leads to evil, and in which evil men walk; and though there may be many ſnares and temptations to walk in ſuch a way, yet a good man cannot allow himſelf to walk therein, as others do; he has not ſo learned the word of God; he is under the influence of divine grace, and withholds himſelf from it; he abſtains from all appearance of evil, and lays a reſtraint, as upon his mouth and lips, ſo upon his feet, or guards his walk and converſation. This ſhews, that as David had an affection for the word of God, and made great proficiency in knowledge by it; ſo it had an influence on his life and converſation, and his knowledge appeared to be not merely ſpeculative, but practical: his end in laying ſuch a reſtraint upon his feet, was not out of vain-glory, and to gain popular applauſe; nor through fear of loſing his credit among men, nor of the wrath of God; but out of love to God, and to his word, as follows: That I might keep thy word; ſuch was his love to it, and his regard to the honour of it; conſidering whoſe word it was, and with whoſe authority it was clothed, and whoſe glory was concerned therein; that he was careful to walk according to it, and in the way that directed to, and ſhun every other way.

℣. 102. I have not departed from thy judgments, &c.] From the precepts of the word, from the ways, and worſhip and ordinances of God; he had not wickedly and on purpoſe departed from them; whenever he did, it was through inadvertency, the weakneſs of the fleſh, and ſtrength of temptation; nor from the doctrines of the word, which he held faſt, knowing of whom he had learned them, as follows: For thou haſt taught me; the nature, excellency, and uſe of theſe judgments; he had taught him, by his Spirit, experimentally to underſtand the doctrines of the word, and practically to obſerve the precepts of it; and this preſerved him from an apoſtaſy from either of them.

℣. 103. How ſweet are thy words unto my taſte! &c.] Who had a ſpiritual one; and could diſcern perverſe things, and could taſte how good and gracious the Lord is: and ſo his words were ſweet unto him; the doctrines of grace, the truths of the goſpel, were delightful and pleaſant to him; like unadulterated milk, deſirable by him; like good wine, that goes down ſweetly; like good food, that is exceeding palatable; or like honey, and even ſweeter than that, as follows. And that words, may be taſted and eaten, is not only agreeable to ſcripture-language, Jer. xv. 16. but to claſſical writers[g]. Yea, ſweeter than honey to my mouth; not only had they the nouriſhing nature, and the refreſhing virtue of honey, but the ſweetneſs of it; yea, exceeded it in ſweetneſs; ſee Pſal. xix. 10.

℣. 104. Through thy precepts I get underſtanding, &c.] Of the will of God; of his worſhip, the nature and manner of it; of his ordinances, their uſe and importance; and of his doctrines, and the excellency of them. Therefore I hate every falſe way; of worſhip; all ſuperſtition and will-worſhip, the commandments and inventions of men, and every falſe doctrine; all lies in hypocriſy, for no lie is of the truth; every thing that is contrary to the word of God, and is not according to truth and godlineſs. The Targum is, "I hate every lying man."

נ Nun, The fourteenth part.

℣. 105. Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, &c.] The ſame Solomon ſays of the law and commandment, the preceptive part of the word, Prov. vi. 23. and the Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it law here. This ſhews a man what is his duty, both towards God and man; by it is the knowledge of ſin: this informs what righteouſneſs that is God requires of men; by the light of it, a man ſees his own deformity and infirmities, the imperfection of his obedience, and that he needs a better righteouſneſs than his own to juſtify him in the ſight of God; it is a rule of walk and converſation; it directs what to do, and how to walk. The goſpel-part of the word is a great and glorious light; by which men come to have ſome knowledge of God in Chriſt, as a God gracious and merciful; of Chriſt, his perſon, offices and grace; of righteouſneſs, ſalvation, and eternal life by him; and it teaches men to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly. The whole ſcripture is a light, ſhining in a dark place; a lamp or torch, to be carried in the hand of a believer, whilſt he paſſes thro' this dark world; and is in the preſent ſtate of imperfection, in which he ſees things but darkly. This is the ſtandard of faith and practice; by the light of this lamp, the difference between true and falſe doctrine may be diſcerned; error and immorality may be reproved, and made manifeſt; the way of truth and godlineſs, in which a man ſhould walk, is pointed out; and by means of it, he may ſee and ſhun the ſtumbling-blocks in his way, and eſcape falling into pits and ditches; it is a good light to walk and work by. The Targum is, "thy word is as a light that ſhines to my "feet." It follows, And a light unto my path; the ſame thing in other words. Now it ſhould be obſerved, that the word of God is only ſo to a man whoſe eyes are opened and enlightened by the Spirit of God, which is uſually done by means of the word; for a lamp, torch, candle, or any other light, are of no uſe to a blind man.

℣. 106. I have ſworn, and I will perform it, &c.] Or, I have performed it[h]. The pſalmiſt had not only taken up a reſolution in his mind, but he had openly declared with his mouth, and profeſſed in a ſolemn manner, that he would ſerve the Lord; he had ſworn allegiance to him as his King, and through divine grace had hitherto kept it; and hoped he ever ſhould, and determined through grace he ever would; ſee ℣. 48. Iſa. xlv. 23. That I will keep thy righteous judgments; the precepts of the word, the ordinances of the Lord, the doctrines of grace; all which are righteous, and to be kept, obſerved, and held to; though they cannot be perfectly kept, unleſs in Chriſt the ſurety.

℣. 107. I am afflicted very much, &c.] In a temporal ſenſe, in his body, in his family, and by his enemies; in a ſpiritual ſenſe, with the corruptions of his heart, with the temptations of Satan, and with the hidings of God's face; and what with one thing or another, he was preſſed above meaſure, and his ſpirits ſunk under the weight of the affliction, ſo that he was as a dead man; and therefore prays, Quicken me, O Lord, according unto thy word; ſee the note on ℣. 25.

℣. 108. Accept, I beſeech thee, the free-will offerings of my mouth, O Lord, &c.] Not ſacrifices out of his flocks and herds, ſuch as were the voluntary and free-will-offerings brought to the prieſts under the law, though there may be an alluſion to them; nor out of his ſubſtance, ſuch as David and his people willingly offered towards the building of the temple; but theſe are not the free-will-offerings of his hands, but of his mouth; the ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe: prayer is an offering; ſee Pſal. cxli. 2. and it is a free-will-offering, when a man is aſſiſted by the free Spirit of God, and can pour out his ſoul freely to the Lord, in the exerciſe of faith and love. Praiſe is an offering more pleaſing to God, than an ox or bullock that has horns and hoofs, becauſe it glorifies him; and it is a free-will-offering, when it is of a man's own accord, comes from his heart; when he calls upon his ſoul, and all within him, to bleſs the Lord: and as every good man is deſirous of having his ſacrifices accepted with the Lord, ſo they are accepted by him when offered up through Chriſt, 1 Pet. ii. 5. Heb. xiii. 15. Rev. viii. 3, 4. And teach me thy judgments; for though he was wiſer than his enemies, and had more underſtanding than his teachers, or than the ancients; yet needed to be inſtructed more and more, and was deſirous of being taught of God. This petition, or what is ſimilar to it, is often put up.

℣. 109. My ſoul is continually in my hand, &c.] In the utmoſt jeopardy, always expoſed to danger, ever delivered unto death; killed all the day long, or liable to be ſo: this is the ſenſe of the phraſe; ſee Judg. xii. 3. 1 Sam. xix. 5. for what is in a man's hands may eaſily fall, or be taken out of them: ſo the Targum, "my ſoul is in danger upon the back of my hands continually;" the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions read, in thy hands; but wrongly. Yet do I not forget thy law; it was written on his heart, and fixed in his mind; he had a true affection for it, and a hearty deſire to keep it; and no danger could divert him from his duty; as Daniel, though he carried his life in his hand, yet continued to pray to his God as uſual; nor could any thing move the apoſtle Paul from the doctrine of the goſpel, and preaching it.

℣. 110. The wicked have laid a ſnare for me, &c.] To draw him into ſin, and ſo into miſchief; and even to take away his life, as they are ſaid to dig pits for him, ℣. 85. Yet I erred not from thy precepts; not wilfully and wickedly, though through inadvertence and infirmity, as he often did, and and every good man does; and indeed his errors are ſo many, that they cannot be underſtood and numbered. The ſenſe is, he kept on in the way of his duty; did not deſiſt from that, or wickedly depart from his God and his worſhip, to eſcape the ſnares of bad men.

℣. 111. Thy teſtimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever, &c.] The ſcriptures, which teſtify of Chriſt and of his grace, and of the mind and will of God, are a portion of themſelves; and a goodly heritage they are, better than thouſands of gold and ſilver; preferable to all worldly inheritances; as they have been to many, who have forſaken all for Chriſt and his goſpel. Theſe, like an inheritance, have been tranſmitted from father to ſon, from one age of the church to another, in ſucceſſive generations; nor ſhall they depart from her, nor from her ſeed and ſeed's ſeed, from henceforth and for ever; they are an inheritance which will continue for ever, Deut. xxxiii. 4. Iſa. lix. 21. Theſe David choſe and took, as for his counſellors, ſo for his portion and inheritance; and a wiſe and good choice he made; he choſe the good part that ſhould never be taken away; his reaſon for it follows: For they are the rejoicing of my heart; the doctrines in them, the promiſes of them, when read or heard explained, gave him a ſenſible pleaſure; revived his heart, and cheared his ſpirits, ſupported him under all his troubles, and cauſed him to go on his way rejoicing; ſee Jer. xv. 16.

℣. 112. I have inclined mine heart to perform thy ſtatutes alway, &c.] He had prayed to God to incline his heart to them, ℣. 36. and by the grace of God his heart was inclined to obedience to them; and nothing but that can incline the heart, which is naturally averſe unto them: the carnal mind is not ſubject to the law of God, nor can it be, until it is made ſo by the grace of God, Rom. viii. 7. and by this the pſalmiſt had prevailed upon his heart to keep the ſtatutes of the Lord, and do them, and that continually; for a good man is deſirous of being ſtedfaſt and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Even unto the end; the end of life, as long as he lived. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, for a recompence; and the Arabic verſion, for an eternal recompence; but the Ethiopic verſion the reverſe, not for a recompence, or benefit: which latter is the truth, though neither of them a right verſion; for the ſtatutes are to be kept, not for the ſake of a recompence of reward, but from love to God, and in duty to him, without any mercenary views: though the word does ſometimes ſignify a reward, and may be rendered here, for ever there is a reward[i]; as there is in, though not for, keeping the commands; ſee Pſal. xix. 11.

ס SAMECH, The fifteenth part.

℣. 113. I hate vain thoughts, &c.] Or thoughts: evil thoughts are undoubtedly meant, no other can be the object of hatred to a good man; they are ſuch as are contrary to the law of God, and forbidden by it, mentioned in the next clauſe, as the object of love, in oppoſition to theſe; and which are abominable to God, and defiling to men; ſhould be forſaken, need pardon; and if not pardoned, will be brought into judgment, and there expoſed, and men puniſhed for them. There are multitudes of theſe riſe up in the minds of men, not only bad men, but good men; even ſometimes atheiſtical, blaſphemous thoughts, as well as proud, haughty, revengeful, luſtful, impure and worldly ones; which, when obſerved by a good man, give him great concern and uneaſineſs, and raiſe a holy indignation in him againſt them. The word is uſed for the opinions of men; the ambiguous, doubtful, wavering and inconſtant ſentiments of the mind, 1 Kings xviii. 21. and is uſed of branches, or the tops of trees, waved with the wind to and fro: and may be applied to all heterodox opinions, human doctrines, damnable hereſies; ſuch as are inconſiſtent with the perfections of God, derogate from his grace, and from the perſon and offices of Chriſt; and are contrary to the word, and which are therefore rejected and abhorred by good men. The Targum is, "I hate thoſe who think vain thoughts;" and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it of perſons, thinkers, or deviſers of evil things; and to this ſenſe are the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; and which is approved of by Guſſetius[k]; even free-thinkers; ſuch as deviſe things out of their own brains, and regard not the law, doctrine or word of God. But thy law do I love; which forbids and condemns ſuch vain and wicked thoughts, and requires pure and holy ones. Or, thy doctrine; which comes from God, is concerning him, and reveals his mind and will, his grace and love to men; the doctrine of Chriſt, concerning his perſon, office and work; the doctrine of the ſcriptures, which contain the whole goſpel of Chriſt, as well as the law of God; the doctrine according to godlineſs, and which is good, ſound and wholſome, and to be received in the love of it.

℣. 114. Thou art my hiding-place, &c.] From temporal calamities. The perfections of God are chambers of retreat and ſafety to his people, where they may hide themſelves and be ſafe, till ſuch calamities are over, Iſa. xxvi. 20. Pſal. lvii. 1. And from ſpiritual evils; from avenging juſtice, from divine wrath, from the rage of Satan, and the fury of men, Iſa. xxxii. 2. and xxv. 4. and from eternal death, and being hurt by it; the ſpiritual and eternal life of ſaints being hid with Chriſt in God, Col. iii. 3. ſee Pſal. xxxii. 7. And my ſhield; to protect from all dangers, and preſerve from every enemy: ſuch are the love and grace, the power and ſtrength, the truth and faithfulneſs of God; which are the ſaints ſhield and buckler, Pſal. v. 12. and xci. 4. 1 Pet. i. 5. ſuch alſo the perſon, blood, righteouſneſs and ſalvation of Chriſt, who is a ſun and ſhield; the ſhield of faith, or which faith holds up and defends the ſoul againſt the attacks of a powerful enemy, Pſal. lxxxiv. 11. Eph. vi. 16. I hope in thy word; in Chriſt the Word, for acceptance and juſtification, for peace, pardon, and eternal ſalvation; all which are in him: in the word of promiſe, for all ſupplies of grace, ſtrength, light, life and comfort here, and for glory hereafter, contained therein; ſee ℣. 74, 81.

℣. 115. Depart from me, ye evil-doers, &c.] The ſame with the evil-thinkers, ℣. 113. According to Aben Ezra, they that think evil, commonly do it; as they deviſe it, they commit it. This deſcribes ſuch perſons whoſe courſe of life is, and who make it their conſtant buſineſs to do iniquity; ſuch the pſalmiſt deſires to depart his preſence, to keep at a diſtance from him, as being very diſagreeable to him; and who would be a great hindrance to him, in keeping the commandments of God, as follows: theſe ſame words will be ſpoken by David's ſon and antitype, at the great day of account, Matt. vii. 23. For I will keep the commandments of my God; of God who has a right to command, and not of men, eſpecially when oppoſed to the commands of God; of God, who is the covenant-God and Father of his people; and whoſe covenant, grace and favour, in chooſing, redeeming, regenerating and adopting them, lay them under greater obligations ſtill to keep his commandments; and whoſe commandments are not grievous: and though they cannot be perfectly kept by good men, yet they are deſirous of keeping them as well as they can, and determine in the ſtrength of divine grace ſo to do; and which they do out of love to God, and with a view to his glory, without any ſelfiſh or mercenary ends. The Syriac verſion renders it, that I may keep, &c. to which end he deſires to be rid of the company of wicked men; who are both a nuſance to good men, and an hindrance in religious duties.

℣. 116. Uphold me according unto thy word, &c.] In thy ways, that my footſteps ſlip not; in thine arms, and with the right hand of thy righteouſneſs, from fainting and ſinking under difficulties and diſcouragements, in trying circumſtances; and from ſlipping and ſliding out of the way of God; and from a total and final falling away, according to thy word of promiſe, that, as are the days of thy people, their ſtrength ſhall be; and that thou wilt never leave them nor forſake them. The Targum is, "uphold me in thy word;" or by thy word, either eſſential or written. That I may live; meaning not corporally, though none ſo live but whom the Lord upholds in life; but ſpiritually, live by faith on Chriſt the Saviour, live comfortably on the word of promiſe, and live honourably, agreeable to the word of God, in all holy converſation and godlineſs. And let me not be aſhamed of my hope; as men are, when they are diſappointed of having and enjoying what they have been hoping and waiting for; but the grace of hope makes not aſhamed, nor ſhall thoſe who have it ever have any reaſon to be aſhamed of it; ſince it is a good hope through grace; is an anchor of the ſoul, ſure and ſtedfaſt; is upon a good foundation, Chriſt, and by which men are ſaved; and ſo may rejoice, in full hope of the glory of God they ſhall certainly enjoy.

℣. 117. Hold thou me up, and I ſhall be ſafe, &c.] As all are, and none but ſuch, who are in the hands of Chriſt; incloſed in the arms of everlaſting love, upheld with the right hand of Jehovah, ſupported by his promiſes and grace, ſurrounded by his power, ſuſtained by his love, and preſerved in Chriſt Jeſus. And I will have reſpect unto thy ſtatutes continually; for nothing can more ſtrongly engage a conſtant regard unto them, than a ſenſe of divine love, and a view of ſafety and ſecurity in the arms of it; or better enable to keep them, than freſh communications of grace and ſtrength: being upheld, ſaints hold on and out to the end; they go from ſtrength to ſtrength, run and are not weary, walk and faint not; and having a ſupply of the Spirit, walk on in the judgments of the Lord, and keep his ſtatutes, and do them. Or, and I will rejoice[l] in them, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi; or, employ myſelf in them, as Jarchi.

℣. 118. Thou haſt trodden down all them that err from thy ſtatutes, &c.] That wander from the way of the Lord's commandments; that deviate from his precepts, go aſtray conſtantly and wilfully; a people that err in their hearts, and with all their hearts. Theſe the Lord treads down, as mire in the ſtreets, as grapes in a wine-preſs; which ſhews his abhorrence of them, his indignation at them, and how eaſily they are ſubdued under him. For their deceit is falſhood; or, their hypocriſy is a lie[m]: the appearance they make is a falſe one; they appear outwardly righteous, but are inwardly wicked; have a form of godlineſs, but deny the power of it: or all their deceitful doctrines are lies in hypocriſy, though dreſſed up with all the art and cunning they are maſters of; or all their ſubtil ſchemes to corrupt and ſubvert the true doctrines of the word, are in vain and to no purpoſe.

℣. 119. Thou putteſt away all the wicked of the earth like droſs, &c.] Which is of no worth and value, uſeleſs and unprofitable; which is caſt into the fire, and ſeparated from the choice metal. This expreſſes the character and ſtate of wicked men; who are of no account with God, are of no profit and advantage to him; nor to men, but hurtful and pernicious; are caſt into the fire of God's judgments here, and into everlaſting burnings hereafter; and will be ſeparated from the righteous, and have no part and lot with them: theſe ſeem to be hypocrites alſo, who have made a ſhew of being gold and ſilver, when they were nothing but droſs; and being reprobate ſilver, were rejected of God as ſuch. Therefore I love thy teſtimonies; which diſcover ſuch perſons when brought to be tried by them; and which require purity of heart and life, and caution againſt evil ways and evil men, and are a means of preſerving from them.

℣. 120. My fleſh trembleth for fear of thee, &c.] Not for fear of the wrath of God coming down upon himſelf, nor for fear of eternal damnation; but for fear of what was coming upon the wicked, for their ſins and tranſgreſſions. The word [n] uſed ſignifies ſuch a dread and horror, which ſeizes a man to ſuch a degree, that it makes the hair of his fleſh to ſtand up; as Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve; ſee ℣. 53. Job iv. 14, 15. And I am afraid of thy judgments; not of their coming down upon him, but upon the wicked; the thought of which is more awful to good men, than to the wicked themſelves; and eſpecially when under any darkneſs, doubts and fears; leſt, being conſcious to themſelves of their own weakneſs, they ſhould be left to join with the wicked in their ſins, and ſo be partakers of their plagues.

ע Ain, The ſixteenth part.

℣. 121. I have done judgment and juſtice, &c.] As king of Iſrael; which is the character given of him, 2 Sam. viii. 15. and in which he was a type of Chriſt, Jer. xxiii. 5. Iſa. ix. 7. and as a private perſon; which is every one's duty, and every good man eſpecially will be deſirous of performing it: it is not indeed perfectly done by any, and therefore not to be truſted to; nor was it ſo done by David; nor did he place his confidence in it; nor did he ſay this in a boaſting way, but in defence of himſelf and his innocence, againſt thoſe who oppreſſed him with their calumnies, as appears from the next clauſe. The Syriac verſion takes it to be an addreſs to God, and as deſcribing him, O thou that doſt judgment and juſtice! to whom the following petition is directed: Leave me not to mine oppreſſors; David had his oppreſſors, as all good men have, and power was on their ſide; but they could do no more, nor further exerciſe it, than as they were permitted by the Lord; for they had no power but what was given them from above; and he applies to God, and not men, for relief; and deprecates being given up to them, and left in their hands.

℣. 122. Be ſurety for thy ſervant for good, &c.] The pſalmiſt was, in a like caſe with Hezekiah, oppreſſed; and therefore deſires the Lord would undertake for him, appear on his ſide, and defend him, Iſa. xxxviii. 14. and if God himſelf is the ſurety of his people, and engages in their behalf, they need fear no enemy. What David prays to God to be for him, that Chriſt is for all his people, Heb. vii. 22. He drew nigh to God, ſtruck hands with him, gave his word and bond to pay the debts of his people; put himſelf in their lawplace and ſtead, and became reſponſible to law and juſtice for them; engaged to make ſatisfaction for their ſins, to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs for their juſtification, and to preſerve and keep them, and bring them ſafe to eternal glory and happineſs; and this was being a ſurety for them for good. The Syriac verſion is, delight thy ſervant with good things; and to the ſame ſenſe the Targum and Kimchi interpret it: but Jarchi and Aben Ezra take the word to have the ſame meaning we do; and ſo Aquila and Theodotion tranſlate it: the ſenſe Arama gives is, "be ſurety for thy ſervant, that I may be "good." Let not the proud oppreſs me; the oppreſſors of God's people are generally proud; they are ſuch who deal in proud wrath; it is in their pride, and owing to it, they perſecute them, Pſal. x. 2. This has been their character in all ages, and agrees with the man of ſin and his followers, who is king over all the children of pride; but wherein ſuch men deal proudly and oppreſs, God is higher than they, and therefore moſt proper to be applied unto.

℣. 123. Mine eyes fail for thy ſalvation, &c.] For temporal ſalvation or deliverance from oppreſſors; and for ſpiritual ſalvation, for views of an intereſt in it, the joys and comforts of it; and for the Meſſiah, the author of it; whom he was looking wiſhfully for, but not coming ſo ſoon as expected, his eyes were tired and weary, and ready to fail, and his heart to faint; ſee the note on ℣. 81. And for the word of thy righteouſneſs; for the word of promiſe, which the righteouſneſs or faithfulneſs of God was engaged to perform; or for the law of God, the rule of righteouſneſs, and which ſhews what righteouſneſs God requires; and for the bringing in of that righteouſneſs of the Meſſiah, which could anſwer its demands; or for the goſpel, and more clear miniſtration of it, which is called the word of righteouſneſs, Heb. v. 13. in which the righteouſneſs of God is revealed; the righteouſneſs which Chriſt, who is God as well as man, has wrought out; and which his Father has approved of, accepted, and imputes to his people, and juſtifies them with; and which word alſo teaches men to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly.

℣. 124. Deal with thy ſervant according unto thy mercy, &c.] Which is either general and providential, and reaches to all his creatures; and according to which David had been dealt with all his days; and which he deſires a continuance of: or ſpecial; and which is in Chriſt, and communicated through him; and in whom he deals with his people, not according to their merits, but his own mercy; by receiving and accepting them, and admitting them into his preſence, and to partake of his favours, and by pardoning their ſins and ſaving their ſouls; which is not by works of righteouſneſs they have done, but according to his abundant mercy; and by giving them eternal life and happineſs at the great day. And teach me thy ſtatutes; which is often requeſted; and which not only ſhews the need of divine teachings, and the pſalmiſt's earneſt and importunate deſire to have them; but alſo, that the mercy, grace, and kindneſs of God, have an influence on the holy life and converſation of the ſaints, and do not at all encourage licentiouſneſs.

℣. 125. I am thy ſervant, &c.] Not only by creation but by grace; and as he had a work to do, he deſires to know what it was; and as it was proper he ſhould know his Maſter's will, he applies to him for it; uſing this as an argument, that he was his ſervant, devoted to his ſervice, and willing to perform it to the beſt of his knowledge and ability; and therefore prays, Give me underſtanding, that I may know thy teſtimonies; the ſcriptures, which teſtify of the will of God; which are only rightly underſtood by thoſe who have their underſtandings opened and enlightened; or have an underſtanding given them, that they may underſtand them, ſo as to receive and embrace the doctrine, and do the precepts of them: and ſuch an underſtanding is the gift of God, and owing to his powerful and efficacious grace; ſee Luke xxiv. 45. 1 John v. 20.

[n] סמר ορθοτριχει, Symmachus in Druſius; horripilavit, Cajetanus apud Gejerum.

℣. 126. It is time for thee, Lord, to work, &c.] To ſend the Meſſiah, to work righteouſneſs; to fulfil the law, and vindicate the honour of it, broken by men. It was always a notion of the Jews, that the time of the Meſſiah's coming would be when it was a time of great wickedneſs in the earth; and which ſeems to agree with the word of God, and was true in fact; ſee Mal. ii. 17. and iii. 1, 2, 3, 15, 16. and iv. 2. Or to ariſe and have mercy on Zion, for which there is a fixed time: and it ſeems as if it would be when religion greatly declines, and profaneneſs abounds; when love is waxen cold, and there is no faith in the earth; and when the days are like thoſe of Noah and Lot, Luke xvii. 26, 28. and xviii. 8. or to take vengeance on wicked men, by ſending down his judgments on them now, as well as he will puniſh them hereafter; for which a time is appointed, though no man knows of it. The words may be rendered, it is time to work for the Lord[o]; ſo the Septuagint verſion; to which agrees the Targum, "it is time to do the will of the Lord;" and the Syriac and Arabic verſions, it is time to worſhip the Lord. It is proper, in declining times, for good men to beſtir themſelves and be in action, to attempt the revival of religion, to do all that in them lies to ſupport the cauſe of God, and to vindicate his honour and glory. For they have made void thy law; the whole word of God, the ſcriptures; as atheiſts and deiſts, who deny the authority of them; phariſees, who preferred their oral law to the written word, and by the traditions of the elders made it of none effect; papiſts, by their unwritten traditions, and denying the common people the reading of the ſcriptures in their mother-tongue; and all falſe teachers, who wreſt the ſcriptures, and put falſe gloſſes on them, and handle the word of God deceitfully; and all profane ſinners, who bid defiance to the law, and, as much as in them lies, abrogate it, and ſet up a law of their own, and frame miſchief by it: or the law of faith may be meant; the goſpel of Chriſt, and the ſeveral truths of it, which are oppoſed, contradicted and blaſphemed by men of corrupt minds; and particularly the doctrine of juſtification by faith in Chriſt's righteouſneſs; which are made void by the doctrine of works; and even the law itſelf is made void by the ſame: for not thoſe that maintain the doctrine of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, but thoſe that eſtabliſh their own, make void the law; preſenting a righteouſneſs to it, which is not anſwerable to its demands, Rom. iii. 31.

℣. 127. Therefore I love thy commandments, &c.] Becauſe he was the Lord's ſervant, as Aben Ezra; or rather, becauſe the wicked made void the law. His love was the more inflamed and increaſed towards it, by the contempt it was had in by others; he preferred it, Above gold, yea, above fine gold; or gold of Phez, a place where the beſt gold was, as was thought: the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, the topaz; and the Syriac and Arabic verſions, precious ſtones or gems; ſee ℣. 72. and Pſal. xix. 10.

℣. 128. Therefore I eſteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right, &c.] He had an impartial regard to all the commandments of God; and valued one as well as another, and walked according to all of them; making no difference either in his affection or practice between one and another, as being more or leſs neceſſary, juſt and right: he had an equal reſpect to the lighter and weightier matters of the law; and, like Zacharias and Eliſabeth, walked in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameleſs; looking upon them all, with reſpect to every thing commanded or forbidden by them, to be juſt and equitable. And I hate every falſe way; every command, inſtitution and ordinance of men, which are oppoſed to the will of God; every falſe way of worſhip, all ſuperſtition and idolatry; every falſe doctrine, whatſoever is contrary to the teſtimonies and word of God: and indeed where there is a true love of the word, worſhip and ordinances of God, there muſt be an hatred of theſe.

פ Pe, The ſeventeenth part.

℣. 129. Thy teſtimonies are wonderful, &c.] The ſcriptures, which teſtify of God, his mind and will, are wonderful both with reſpect to the author of them, the things contained in them, and the uſe and advantage of them. They give an account of the wonderful works of creation; of their author and matter; of the manner, order and time of their being wrought: they relate many wonderful events of providence, both in a way of mercy and judgment; they declare ſeveral ſurpriſing miracles, wrought by Moſes and others, and exhibit many marvellous things in types and figures: they are full of prophecies of extraordinary things, which have been exactly accompliſhed, and contain many exceeding great and precious promiſes; and abound with doctrines abſtruſe and recondite, hid from the carnal ſenſe and reaſon of men; the myſteries of the goſpel, and of the grace of God, ſuch as reſpect the divine perſons in the Trinity; the perſon and grace of Chriſt; the wonderful love of God and Chriſt towards men; the amazing bleſſings of grace through him, the reſurrection of the dead, and eternal life by him. Therefore doth my ſoul keep them; as a rich treaſure, which he laid up in the cabinet of his heart, and preſerved, as what was moſt rare and valuable: and ſuch are the wonderful things in the word of God; and ſuch is the efficacy of its doctrines, and the influence the truths of it have upon the minds of gracious perſons; that theſe engage them to keep, and obſerve the precepts it enjoins, and that heartily and ſincerely, with their whole ſpirit and ſoul.

℣. 130. The entrance of thy words giveth light, &c.] The beginning of them; the firſt three chapters in Geneſis, what light do they give into the origin of all things; the creation of man, his ſtate of innocence; his fall through the temptations of Satan, and his recovery and ſalvation by Chriſt, the ſeed of the woman! The firſt principles of the oracles of God, the rudiments of religion, the elements of the world, the rites of the ceremonial law, gave great light into goſpel-myſteries. As ſoon as a man enters upon reading the ſcriptures, if he has any degree of underſtanding of the things in them, they immediately throw light into his mind; or, however, as ſoon as ever the word has an entrance into the heart, and through the Spirit, power and grace of God, makes its way and has a place there, that being opened by the Lord for that purpoſe, light ariſes in darkneſs. It may be rendered, the opening of thy words giveth light[p]; and may ſignify either the interpretation and explanation of the word of God by the miniſters of it, which is often of ſingular uſe for enlightening and warming the hearts of men, Luke xxiv. 32. Acts xvii. 3. and to this ſenſe are the Vulgate Latin and Septuagint verſions; the one rendering it, the declaration of thy words, the other, the manifeſtation of them; and ſo the Ethiopic and Arabic verſions; and to this ſenſe is the Targum, "the impreſſion of thy words will "enlighten thoſe that are dark." Or it may intend the word that opens, as well as is opened, ſince it is the means of opening blind eyes; and ſo giving light to men to ſee their loſt ſtate by nature, and the ſuitableneſs of Chriſt as a Saviour, his fulneſs and grace, ability and willingneſs; to behold the wondrous things of the goſpel, the way they ſhould walk in, and the duties of religion they ſhould perform. It giveth underſtanding unto the ſimple; who want underſtanding in the knowledge of divine and ſpiritual things, as all men do; and who are ſenſible of their want of it, ingenuouſly confeſs it, and are meek and humble; and ſo not above inſtruction, as proud and conceited perſons are. Some render it babes[q]; and it may deſign ſuch who are but of weak parts, in compariſon of others, to whom the things of the goſpel are revealed, when they are hid from the wiſe and prudent: Chriſt by his Spirit opens their underſtandings, that they may underſtand the ſcriptures; and by means of them, gives them an underſtanding of himſelf, and of thoſe things which make them wiſe unto ſalvation, and make for their ſpiritual peace and comfort, and their eternal welfare; ſee Pſal. xix. 7. Matt. xi. 25.

℣. 131. I opened my mouth, and panted, &c.] As a perſon out of breath does, through walking or running; he ſtops and pants, and opens his mouth, to draw in air to his relief: or as hungry and thirſty perſons pant for food and drink, and open their mouths to receive it, before it can well be brought to them. So the pſalmiſt panted after God, and communion with him; deſired the ſincere milk of the word; longed for the breaſts of ordinances, and even fainted for the courts of the Lord, Pſal. xlii. 1. and lxxxiv. 2. For I longed for thy commandments; for an opportunity of waiting upon God in the way of his duty; to hear his word, and attend his worſhip.

℣. 132. Look thou upon me, &c.] Not as in himſelf; a ſinful creature will not bear looking upon by the Lord, eſpecially with the ſtrict eye of juſtice; but as in Chriſt, and cloathed with his righteouſneſs; and ſo not merely in a providential way, though that is a favour, but in a way of ſpecial grace and mercy. It may be rendered, turn unto me[r]; as it is in Pſal. xxv. 16. and lxxxvi. 16. the Lord had turned from him, and had hid his face, which had given him trouble; and therefore he deſires he would turn again to him, and ſhew him his face and favour. And be merciful unto me; in forgiving his ſins, and admitting him to communion with him: he pleads mercy, and not merit; and this ſhews it was not any look, but a look of grace and mercy he prays for. As thou uſeſt to do unto thoſe that love thy name; that is, himſelf: ſuch as love the Lord have favours ſhewn them; he ſhews mercy to thouſands of them that love him; he loves them that love him; he manifeſts his love to them, and admits them to great nearneſs to himſelf. David was one of theſe; he loved him in ſincerity, and above all others; and could appeal to him for the truth of it, and deſires no other nor better uſage than ſuch had; and indeed a man need not deſire better, ſince all things work for their good now, and it is not to be conceived what God has prepared for them hereafter.

℣. 133. Order my ſteps in thy word, &c.] Or, by thy word[s], or according to it. Which is the rule of practice and action, as well as of faith; and happy are they who walk according to the directions of it; but it is not in the power of man to order and direct his ſteps: this is done by the Lord; and ſuch who acknowledge him in their ways, and apply to him for direction, are and ſhall be thus favoured by him; ſee Jer. x. 23. Pſal. xxxvii. 23. Prov. iii. 6. And let not any iniquity have dominion over me; not only greater ſins or preſumptuous ones, very groſs iniquities, as in Pſal. xix. 13. but leſſer ones, even the leaſt of them. It is a ſad thing to be enſlaved to any luſt or ſin, be it what it will: ſin reigns over wicked men, even unto death; and it oftentimes has great power over good men, puts them upon doing that which is evil, and hinders them from doing that which is good; it carries them captive, and threatens to have the aſcendant over them, and rule in them, which they deprecate; and ſuch a prayer may be the prayer of faith, ſince it is promiſed, ſin ſhall not have the dominion over you, Rom. vi. 14. Kimchi interprets this of the evil imagination or corruption of nature; R. Moſes underſtands it of a wicked man; and ſo the Syriac verſion.

℣. 134. Deliver me from the oppreſſion of man, &c.] Of any man, of proud and haughty men, as in ℣. 122. the pſalmiſt always deſired rather to fall into the hands of God, than into the hands of wicked men, whoſe tender mercies are cruel. Some render it, from the oppreſſion of Adam, as Jarchi obſerves; and Arama interprets it of the ſin of Adam, and as a prayer, to be delivered or redeemed from it; as the Lord's people are by the blood of Chriſt: Jarchi underſtands it of the evil imagination or corruption of nature, which oppreſſes men; which ſenſe Arama alſo makes mention of. So will I keep thy precepts; being delivered out of the hands of wicked men, and free from their ſnares and temptations; ſee ℣. 115. Luke i. 74, 75.

℣. 135. Make thy face to ſhine upon thy ſervant, &c.] That is, lift up the light of thy countenance on me; favour me with thy gracious preſence, and communion with thyſelf; manifeſt thyſelf unto me, and ſhed abroad thy love in my heart; cauſe the Sun of righteouſneſs to ariſe upon me, and commune with me, from above thy mercy-ſeat; reſtore to me the joys of thy ſalvation, and let me have the comforts of thy good Spirit: this prayer is a part of the bleſſing of the high-prieſt, Numb. vi. 25. And teach me thy ſtatutes; the more communion a man has with God, the more deſirous he is of learning and doing his will. This is a frequent petition; ſee ℣. 124.

℣. 136. Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, &c.] That is, out of them; as the Syriac verſion: or, mine eyes let down rivers of waters[t]; ſee Lam. iii. 48. that is, an abundance of tears, which flowed like a river; an hyperbolical expreſſion, ſetting forth the exceſſiveneſs of grief. The reaſon follows, Becauſe they keep not thy law; the perſons are not mentioned, but muſt be underſtood of wicked men; whoſe open and impudent tranſgreſſion of the law in innumerable inſtances, and in the moſt flagrant manner, gave the pſalmiſt great diſtreſs, as it does all good men; becauſe the law of God is deſpiſed, his authority is trampled on, his name is diſhonoured, and he has not the glory which is due unto him. The gloſs of Arama is, "becauſe Adam "and Eve kept not thy law;" which tranſgreſſion brought ruin on all mankind. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions very wrongly read, becauſe I have not kept thy law; as if his grief was on account of his own ſins: and ſo Kimchi indeed interprets it; and both he and Ben Melech, by they underſtand his eyes, from whence his tears flowed in ſuch abundance; becauſe they were the caterers for ſin, and the cauſe and occaſion of the tranſgreſſions of the law of God by him: and this ſenſe is made mention of by Aben Ezra.

צ TZADE, The eighteenth part.

℣. 137. Righteous art thou, O Lord, &c.] Eſſentially, originally, and of himſelf; naturally, immutably and univerſally, in all his ways and works of nature and grace; in his thoughts, purpoſes, counſels and decrees; in all the diſpenſations of his providence; in redemption, in the juſtification of a ſinner, in the pardon of ſin, and in the gift of eternal life through Chriſt. And upright are thy judgments; they are according to the rules of juſtice and equity; the precepts of the word, the doctrines of the goſpel, as well as the judgments of God inflicted on wicked men, and all the providential dealings of God with his people, and alſo the final judgment.

℣. 138. Thy teſtimonies that thou haſt commanded are righteous, &c.] The ſcriptures are holy, juſt and good; and what is contained in them are according to godlineſs; are for inſtruction in righteouſneſs, and teach men to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly. And very faithful; or true[u]: all the ſayings in them, are true and faithful ſayings; for they are the ſayings of God that cannot lie; the promiſes in them are faithfully performed by him that made them; they are all yea and amen in Chriſt. The words may be rendered, thou haſt commanded righteouſneſs in thy teſtimonies, and truth or faith exceedingly; ſo the Arabic verſion. God in the law requires of men a perfect righteouſneſs, every way agreeable to its demands; and in his goſpel he reveals the complete righteouſneſs of his Son, which he has commanded to be publiſhed in it, to be laid hold on and received by faith as a juſtifying righteouſneſs, as it is to all that believe: this, with every other truth of the goſpel, is made manifeſt by the ſcriptures, according to the commandment of the everlaſting God, Rom. xvi. 25, 26.

℣. 139. My zeal hath conſumed me, &c.] Zeal for God and his glory, for his word, and ordinances and worſhip; which is a fervour of the mind, burning love, and flaming affections for God, ſhewn in a holy indignation againſt ſin and ſinners. This was a zeal according to knowledge, ſincere and hearty, and what continued; and which was ſhewn in embracing and defending the truths of the word, and reſenting every indignity caſt upon them; to ſuch a degree, that it eat up his ſpirit, wore away his fleſh, and almoſt conſumed him; ſee Pſal. lxix. 9. Becauſe mine enemies have forgotten thy words; not merely through an indifference to them, and inattention in hearing them; nor through want of an earneſt heed to keep and retain them; nor through negligence in laying them up, and a careleſſneſs in making uſe of proper means to recollect them; but through an averſion to them, an hatred of them, and a ſpiteful, malicious contempt of them, caſting them away and deſpiſing them; which ſtirred up the ſpirit of the pſalmiſt, and raiſed ſuch an emotion in him, as was almoſt too much for him.

℣. 140. Thy word is very pure, &c.] Or, exceedingly purified[w]: as ſilver tried in a furnace of earth, purified ſeven times, Pſal. xii. 6. free from all droſſy matter; from any mixtures, or the corruptions and doctrines of men; and which tends and leads to purity of heart and life. Therefore thy ſervant loveth it; that which carnal men hate the word of God for, becauſe it forbids and condemns all impurity of fleſh and ſpirit, all impure thoughts, words and actions; that a good man loves it for, and which is an evidence of a ſanctified heart.

℣. 141. I am ſmall and deſpiſed, &c.] Or, I have been[x]. Some verſions render it young[y]; as if it had reſpect to the time of his anointing by Samuel, when he was overlooked and deſpiſed in his father's family, 1 Sam. xvi. 11. and xvii. 8. but the word here uſed is not expreſſive of age, but of ſtate, condition and circumſtances; and the meaning is, that he was little in his own eſteem, and in the eſteem of men, and was deſpiſed; and that on account of religion, in which he was a type of Chriſt, Pſal. xxii. 6. Iſa. liii. 3. and which is the common lot of good men, who are treated by the world as the filth of it, and the offſcouring of all things. Yet do not I forget thy precepts; to obſerve and keep them: the ill treatment of men on account of religion, did not cauſe him to forſake it, or to leave the ways, word and worſhip of God; ſee ℣. 83, 109. and Pſal. xliv. 17.

℣. 142. Thy righteouſneſs is an everlaſting righteouſneſs, &c.] Or, is for ever[z]. The rectitude of his nature, his faithfulneſs in his promiſes, and his kindneſs and beneficence to his people; and particularly the righteouſneſs of God revealed in the goſpel; the righteouſneſs of his Son, which he approves and accepts of, and imputes to him that believes. This is a righteouſneſs that will laſt for ever, will never be aboliſhed; it will anſwer for them that have it in a time to come; it is of uſe throughout the whole of life, at death, in the day of judgment, and to all eternity; ſee Dan. ix. 24. And thy law is the truth; or thy doctrine; or thy word, as the Arabic verſion. The ſcriptures are called the ſcriptures of truth, Dan. x. 21. they come from the God of truth, and all that is contained in them is truth; the legal part of them is truth, and ſo is the goſpel; that is called the word of truth, and truth itſelf: it is concerning Chriſt, who is the truth; and it is directed into and made effectual by the Spirit of truth, and contains in it many excellent truths; and is therefore deſervedly valued and eſteemed by all good men; ſee John xvii. 17.

℣. 143. Trouble and anguiſh have taken hold on me, &c.] Or, found me[a]. Outward troubles and inward diſtreſs; troubles ariſing from his enemies, the men of the world, that hated and perſecuted him; and from a body of ſin and death, from the temptations of Satan, and divine deſertions; ſome from without, and others from within; troubles both of body and mind, which is what all good men are liable to. Yet thy commandments are my delights; ſo far from being grievous, that they were a pleaſure to him; yea, exceedingly delighted him, and cheared and refreſhed his ſpirits amidſt all his troubles.

℣. 144. The righteouſneſs of thy teſtimonies is everlaſting, &c.] Or, for ever [b]. The righteouſneſs which they require, or which they publiſh; the righteouſneſs revealed in the goſpel, which is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; ſee the note on ℣. 142. Give me underſtanding, and I ſhall live; an underſtanding of the teſtimonies of the Lord, of the word of God, the law of God, and goſpel of Chriſt; an underſtanding of divine and ſpiritual things; a clearer and larger underſtanding of them, which is the gift of God; both that itſelf at firſt, and an increaſe of it here prayed for, the end, iſſue and effect of which is life. Such live ſpiritually, and by faith; they live chearfully and comfortably, and for ever, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi repeat from the former clauſe; for this is life eternal to know the only true God and Jeſus Chriſt: or to have a ſpiritual underſtanding of them, and of thoſe things which relate to ſpiritual peace and comfort here, and eternal happineſs hereafter, John xvii. 3.

ק Koph, The nineteenth part.

℣. 145. I cried with my whole heart, &c.] Prayer is often expreſſed by crying; which ſometimes ſignifies mental, and ſometimes vocal prayer; and generally ſuppoſes the perſon praying to be in diſtreſs, either outward or inward. This prayer of the pſalmiſt's was hearty and cordial, not with his mouth and lips only, but with his heart alſo; it did not proceed from feigned lips, but was put up in ſincerity and truth; yea, it was with his whole heart, with all the powers and faculties of his ſoul employed; his affections ſet on God, the deſires of his ſoul after him, and his will ſubmitted to his; it denotes the intenſeneſs, earneſtneſs and fervency of prayer. Hear me, O Lord; the prayer he had put up, and anſwer it. Some perſons pray, and that is enough; they do not concern themſelves whether their prayers are heard or no: but David deſired an anſwer, and looked after that. I will keep thy ſtatutes; not in his own ſtrength, but in the ſtrength of the Lord; and it is to be underſtood not merely as a reſolution what he would do; nor as a promiſe, which he uſes as a plea, argument or motive to be heard; but rather it expreſſes the end of his being heard, or the thing for which he deſires to be heard: for ſo it may be rendered, that I may keep thy ſtatutes; hear me, and give me grace and ſtrength to enable me to obſerve them.

℣. 146. I cried unto thee, Save me, &c.] In his diſtreſs he cried and prayed to the Lord; and this was a principal and leading petition, that he would ſave him out of all his troubles and afflictions, and out of the hands of all his enemies; and with a temporal, ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, which he knew he was able to do, and none elſe. And I ſhall keep thy teſtimonies; ſuch ſalvation will affect my heart, and the ſenſe of it influence and engage me to have the utmoſt regard to the word of God, its truths and doctrines, precepts and ordinances, ſo as carefully to obſerve them.

℣. 147. I prevented the dawning of the morning, and cried, &c.] That is, he awoke and got up, and prayed, before the day broke, the morning looked forth, or the ſun aroſe: he was early as well as earneſt in his ſupplications to God; ſee Pſal. v. 3. and lv. 17. as Chriſt, his antitype, roſe early in the morning, a great while before day, and went out to a ſolitary place, and prayed, Mark i. 35. I hoped in thy word; which is a great encouragement to prayer, the grace of hope itſelf is; though a man can only put his mouth in the duſt, if ſo be there may be hope; and eſpecially when it is grounded on the word of promiſe, that God will hear and anſwer his people, when they call upon him in a time of trouble: and particularly hope in Chriſt, the eſſential Word, is a great encouragement; many encouraging arguments to prayer are taken from the perſon, office, advocacy and mediation of Jeſus Chriſt, Heb. iv. 14, 16. and x. 19—23.

℣. 148. Mine eyes prevent the night-watches, &c.] The Targum is, "the morning and evening-watches." There were three of them; Kimchi interprets it of the ſecond and third: the meaning is, that the pſalmiſt was awake and employed in one religious exerciſe or another, praying, reading or meditating; either before the watches were ſet, or however before the time that ſome of them took place, or at leaſt before they were all over. That I might meditate in thy word; he roſe ſo early, in order to give himſelf up to meditation on the word of God; that he might be better inſtructed in the knowledge of divine things; that he might have ſolace and comfort from thence under his afflictions; and that he might be better furniſhed for the work of prayer; for the more familiar the word of God is to us, the better able we are to ſpeak to God in his own language.

℣. 149. Hear my voice according unto thy loving kindneſs, &c.] Not according to his own merits and deſerts, or works of righteouſneſs done by him, for the ſake of which he did not preſent his ſupplications to God; nor according to his love to him, which often waxed cold, and he in a poor lukewarm frame of ſpirit; but according to the loving kindneſs of God, which is always the ſame, and which is a great encouragement to faith and hope in prayer; that ſince God is gracious and merciful, kind and bountiful, plenteous in mercy, and ready to forgive, on a throne of grace, and full of love, yea love itſelf, invariably the ſame, he will hear, and ſaints ſhall find grace and mercy to help them in time of need. O Lord, quicken me according to thy judgment; either according to his word of promiſe, or according to his manner and wonted method he uſed towards his people; ſee ℣. 25, 132. This is a prayer, not for the firſt work of quickening grace, or the firſt implantation of a principle of ſpiritual life, which the pſalmiſt had had an experience of; but for the reviving of the work and principle in him, that he might be refreſhed and comforted, and be animated and ſtirred up to a lively exerciſe of grace and performance of duty; finding himſelf in dead and lifeleſs frames, and not able to quicken himſelf.

℣. 150. They draw nigh that follow after miſchief, &c.] Or evil [c]; that which is ſinful in itſelf, and injurious to others. Some cannot ſleep unleſs they do miſchief; they are bent upon it, and proceed from evil to evil: they are eager in their purſuit of it, as the huntſman after his ſport, to which the alluſion is; though it is to their ruin, even to their death, Prov. xi. 19. Theſe the pſalmiſt ſays draw nigh; not unto God, unleſs feignedly and with their mouths only; but to him they drew nigh, to David, in an hoſtile way; they purſued after him, in order to take away his life, and they had very near overtaken him, and were juſt ready to ſeize him; his life drew nigh to thoſe deſtroyers, and thoſe deſtroyers drew nigh to that, ſo that he was in great danger; and the more, as theſe were abandoned creatures, that neither feared God, nor regarded man, as follows: They are far from thy law; from the knowledge of it, of its equity and purity; and eſpecially of its ſpirituality, and of its power and influence upon their minds; and ſo far from ſubjection and obedience to it; ſo far from it, that they treat it with the utmoſt contempt, caſt it away from them and deſpiſe it, Rom. viii. 7. Iſa. v. 24.

℣. 151. Thou art near, O Lord, &c.] This was the comfort of the pſalmiſt, that though his enemies drew nigh with a miſchievous deſign upon him, yet his God was alſo near, and nearer than they; he was near as to relation to him, being his God and Father; near as to union, the bond of which is his everlaſting love, which can never be diſſolved; near as to communion, which he admits all his people to at one time or another; ſo that they are ſaid to be a people near unto the Lord, Pſal, cxlviii. 14. and near as to his gracious preſence, and the divine aſſiſtance he affords; he is a preſent help in time of need; he is nigh to all that call on him in truth, and in all things in which they do call upon him for, Pſal. cxlv. 18. Deut. iv. 7. And all thy commandments are truth; not only the precepts of the word of God, but his covenant, and the promiſes of it; the word which he has commanded to a thouſand generations, Pſal. cv. 8. and even the whole word of God, doctrines and duties; ſee John xvii. 17.

℣. 152. Concerning thy teſtimonies, I have known of old, &c.] Or, from thy teſtimonies, I have known of old[d]: by carefully reading the ſcriptures, which teſtify of God, his mind and will, and frequently meditating on them; he had learned a long time ago, even from his youth, what follows, That thou haſt founded them for ever; that the things contained in them are ſure and certain, eſtabliſhed and eternal truths: the moral law and the precepts of it, are eternal and of perpetual obligation; not one jot or tittle of them ſhall ever fail; the goſpel, and the truths of it, are everlaſting, and ſhall ever remain; maugre all the oppoſition, craft and cunning, fury and force of men, to undermine and root them out; ſee ℣. 89.

ר Resh, The twentieth part.

℣. 153. Conſider mine affliction, and deliver me, &c.] Or, look upon mine affliction[e]; as in Pſal. xxv. 18. The Lord ſeems as if he did not, when he does not grant his gracious preſence to his people; or does not ariſe to the help and deliverance of them, ſo ſoon as they deſire and expect: but he always ſees and beholds their afflictions; he cannot do otherwiſe, ſince he is the omniſcient God; and not only ſo, but he is the author, appointer, and orderer of them; yea, he looks upon them with an eye of pity and compaſſion, which is what is here prayed for: he ſympathizes with his people in all their afflictions, ſupports them under them, pays kind viſits to them, ſanctifies his hand, and in his own time delivers them out of all; which none elſe can but himſelf, and he has power to do it, and has promiſed it, and does perform; ſee Pſal. l. 15. and xxxiv. 19. For I do not forget thy law; the precepts of it; to obſerve it as a rule of walk and converſation, as a lamp to the feet, and a light to the path, as a directory of the good and perfect will of God: or, thy doctrine; the doctrine of the word, the precious truths of it, which were his ſupport under afflictions; and when either of them have a place in the heart, and are written there, they cannot eaſily be forgotten. This the pſalmiſt mentions, not as if his not forgetting the law or doctrine of God was meritorious of deliverance from affliction, but as a deſcriptive character of ſuch the Lord does deliver.

℣. 154. Plead my cauſe, and deliver me, &c.] This ſhews that his affliction was chiefly from men, wicked, ungodly and unreaſonable men; ſuch as were Saul and his courtiers, and a whole ungodly nation: his cauſe was a good one, and therefore he puts it into the hand of the Lord, and who otherwiſe would not have undertaken it; and this he did alſo becauſe he could not plead it himſelf, nor any other for him, but the Lord; his enemies that ſtrove with him being ſo many, mighty and crafty; ſee Pſal. xxxv. 1, 23. and xliii. 1. Chriſt is the advocate of his people, their Redeemer, who is mighty, and thoroughly pleads their cauſe againſt the accuſations of Satan, the charges of law and juſtice, and the condemnation of their own hearts; as well as defends their innocence from the calumnies of wicked men, and rights their wrongs, and redreſſes their grievances. Quicken me according to thy word; ſee the note on ℣. 25.

℣. 155. Salvation is far from the wicked, &c.] Chriſt, the author of ſalvation, is far from them: he was far from the unbelieving Jews, even though ſalvation was of them, and he, the Saviour, was among them; and he is far from all unconverted perſons, as to knowledge of him, faith in him, or love to him; and from all thoſe that ſeek for ſalvation elſewhere, let them make ever ſuch pretences to religion: the word of ſalvation is far from them, as Kimchi; the goſpel of ſalvation, which they put away from them, as the Jews did in the times of Chriſt and the apoſtles; an experimental knowledge of ſalvation, a ſenſe of need of it, and an application of it, are far from them; and the enjoyment of it in heaven, which, though nearer the ſaints than when they firſt believed, is far off from the wicked, and whoſe damnation is near: Aben Ezra interprets it, " the days of ſalvation." For they ſeek not thy ſtatutes; either to know them, or keep them: they ſeek not after God, to know him, his mind and will; the language of their hearts and actions is, depart from us, we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways; no, not of life and ſalvation, and therefore it muſt be far from them, Job xxi. 14.

℣. 156. Great are thy tender mercies, O Lord, &c.] Not his providential mercies only, which are many and undeſerved, and conſtantly repeated; but his ſpecial mercies in Chriſt, which flow from the tenderneſs of his heart; and his merciful lovingkindneſs to his people, and which are great or many[f], as to quantity; there being a multitude of them, not to be reckoned up: and for quality, they are wonderful beyond expreſſion and conception; proceed from unmerited love, rich, free ſovereign grace, and laſt for ever. Quicken me according to thy judgments; ſee the note on ℣. 149.

℣. 157. Many are my perſecutors, and mine enemies, &c.] Becauſe they were his enemies, therefore they were his perſecutors; and they became enemies to him or hated him becauſe of his religion, and on that account perſecuted him: and this has always been the lot and caſe of God's people in all ages; and whoſe perſecutors are many, even the whole world, as well as fierce and furious. Yet do I not decline from thy teſtimonies; from reading and hearing the word of God; and from embracing and profeſſing the doctrines contained in it; and from the worſhip of God according to it, for which he was hated and perſecuted: yet none of theſe things moved him from them, which ſhewed that his heart was principled with the grace of God; for otherwiſe, when perſecution ariſes becauſe of the word, carnal profeſſors are offended, and apoſtatize from it; ſee Matt. xiii. 22. Acts xxiv. 23, 24.

℣. 158. I beheld the tranſgreſſors, and was grieved, &c.] Tranſgreſſors of the law of God, profane ſinners; ſuch as among whom he dwelt in Meſhec and Kedar; it grieved him when he beheld their wicked life and converſation; as Lot in Sodom; and Iſaiah and Jeremiah, among perſons of unclean lips, and an aſſembly of treacherous men: and the word here uſed ſignifies treacherous[g] perſons; and may deſign not the profane only, but profeſſors alſo; that dealt treacherouſly with God and men, made a profeſſion of religion, but walked not agreeable to it, which is matter of grief to good men; ſee Phil. iii. 18, 19. as well as the conduct of abandoned ſinners; with whom the pſalmiſt was grieved, not ſo much on his own account, being hated and perſecuted by them, as on their account, becauſe of the ruin they brought upon themſelves; but chiefly becauſe of the diſhonour of God, and their diſregard to his righteous law. Joſeph Kimchi paraphraſes it, "I ſaw them proſper, and was weary of my life;" and refers for the ſenſe of the word to Job x. 1. as does alſo Aben Ezra; but David Kimchi and the Targum interpret it, I ſtrove, or contended with them; that is, with the tranſgreſſors. Becauſe they kept not thy word; did not regard the doctrines, nor obſerve the precepts of it; but deſpiſed, rejected, and caſt them away from them.

℣. 159. Conſider how I love thy precepts, &c.] How ardently and affectionately, how cordially and ſincerely, ℣. 127, 128. and that was the reaſon why he was ſo grieved and diſtreſſed, when wicked men tranſgreſſed and deſpiſed them. Quicken me, O Lord, according to thy loving-kindneſs; ſee the note on ℣. 88.

℣. 160. Thy word is true from the beginning, &c.] Every word of promiſe God made from the beginning of the world, and in any period of time; as to Adam, to Abraham, to the Iſraelites, or to any other perſon or perſons; was true in itſelf, and faithfully performed, not one ever failed; particularly the promiſe concerning the Meſſiah, made to Adam in Eden; and which has been ſpoken of by all the prophets, which have been ſince the world began, Gen. iii. 15. Luke i. 70. Or it may be rendered, as the Targum, "the beginning of thy word is truth[h];" which a man finds to be ſo as ſoon as ever he enters upon the reading of it. Some refer this to the firſt chapter of Geneſis; others to the firſt part of the decalogue, concerning the unity of God and his worſhip; ſo Aben Ezra, and R. Jeſhuah, as cited by him, and Jarchi; the ſame is mentioned by Kimchi as one of the ſenſes, though the firſt he gives is agreeable to our verſion: but there is no need to reſtrain the ſenſe to thoſe particulars, or to the firſt part of the ſcriptures, ſince the whole is truth; and the meaning may be, the ſum of thy word is truth[i]: ſo the word here uſed is ſometimes taken for the ſum of any thing, Numb. xxvi. 2. and xxxi. 26. all that is contained in the word of God is truth; its promiſes, precepts and doctrines, hiſtories, prophecies and proverbs, all the ſayings of it are faithful and true. And every one of thy righteous judgments endureth for ever; every precept of the word, and doctrine of it; ſee ℣. 152. and Pſal. xix. 8, 9.

ש SCHIN, The twenty-firſt part.

℣. 161. Princes have perſecuted me without a cauſe, &c.] Theſe were either the princes of the Philiſtines at the court of Achiſh; or the princes of Iſrael, who joined in the conſpiracy with Abſalom; or the princes in Saul's court, as Kimchi obſerves; who inſinuated that David had evil deſigns againſt the king, drove him from abiding in the Lord's inheritance, and purſued him from place to place, as a partridge on the mountains, 1 Sam. xxix. 4. and xxiv. 9. and xxvi. 19, 20. and all which was without any cauſe or reaſon on his part; and which, as it was an aggravation of the ſin of his perſecutors, ſo it was an alleviation of his affliction: in this he was a type of Chriſt, againſt whom the kings of the earth ſet themſelves, and the rulers took counſel together; Herod, Pontius Pilate, and others, the princes of this world, who crucified the Lord of glory, and hated him without a cauſe; who was holy and harmleſs, and never did any injury to any man's perſon or property, Pſal. ii. 2. and lxix. 4. But my heart ſtandeth in awe of thy word; not in awe of the princes, but of the word of God; he had a greater regard to that than to them: when they in effect ſaid, Go, ſerve other gods; he remembered what the word of God ſays, Thou ſhalt have no other gods before me; and this was a means of preſerving him from ſinning. Kimchi thinks ſome reſpect is had to the word of God by Nathan the prophet, I will raiſe up evil againſt thee out of thine houſe, &c. 2 Sam. xii. 11. and he was afraid, on account of this word, leſt he ſhould fall into the hands of the princes: but it ſeems not to be an excruciating, tormenting fear, that is here meant; but a high regard for, and a holy reverence of the word of God, or a reverential affection for it; ſuch as is conſiſtent with the higheſt joy on account of it, as follows.

℣. 162. I rejoice at thy word, as one that findeth great ſpoil.] At having it, which is a diſtinguiſhing bleſſing; all are not favoured with it; and is an ineſtimable treaſure, a field in which a treaſure lies; which thoſe that find rejoice at, and eſpecially at the underſtanding of it, as Kimchi notes: for ſuch only delight in it who ſpiritually underſtand it, or have an application of it to them; find it, and eat it, and then it is the joy and rejoicing of their hearts. The doctrines of it are matter of great joy, particularly which concern the grace of God, the perſon of Chriſt, and peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation by him; and the ſeveral promiſes of it, which are exceeding great and precious; and when opened and applied in a time of need, occaſion great joy; ſuch as is expreſſed at finding a great ſpoil, when much ſubſtance comes into the hands of the conqueror, as well as victory. The word is a part of the believer's ſpiritual armour, by which he overcomes comes his enemies; as well as it acquaints him with the conqueſt Chriſt has obtained over them, and made him a ſharer in; and directs him to unſearchable riches, to things more valuable than thouſands of gold and ſilver; ſo that he has great reaſon to rejoice at it in ſuch a manner indeed! ſee Iſa. ix. 2, 3, 6.

℣. 163. I hate and abhor lying, &c.] The ſin of lying in common converſation, which owes its riſe to Satan, the father of lies; is common to human nature, though very diſhonourable to it; exceeding unbecoming a profeſſor of religion; and was greatly hated by David, as it ought to be by all good men, Pſal. ci. 7. Or falſhood [k]; falſe doctrine; every thing contrary to the truth of the word of God, with all falſe worſhip, ſuperſtition, and idolatry; and this may the rather be thought to be deſigned, ſince the law or doctrine of God is oppoſed to it in the next clauſe. But thy law do I love; becauſe holy, juſt and true; he being a regenerate man, and having it written on his heart, he loved both the precepts of the law, and the doctrines of the goſpel: or, thy doctrine; the doctrine concerning God, his mind and will, his grace and love; ſee ℣. 97, 113.

℣. 164. Seven times a day do I praiſe thee, &c.] That is, very often in a day; not a day paſſed over his head, but he praiſed the Lord, and often in the day; ſo the phraſe ſeven times is uſed, Pſal. xii. 6. Prov. xxiv. 16. Praiſe is comely for the ſaints, delightful and well-pleaſing to God, being offered up in faith and through Chriſt; and ſhould be frequent, ſince our mercies, temporal and ſpiritual, are daily renewed; and therefore we ſhould always, in every thing, for every thing, and at all ſeaſons, give thanks to God, Eph. v. 20. 1 Theſſ. v. 18. Becauſe of thy righteous judgments; either upon his enemies, the perſecuting princes, as Aben Ezra; ſo ſaints may and ſhould, and will praiſe the Lord, for his righteous judgments on the enemies of his church and people, becauſe not only of their deliverance from them, but becauſe of the honour of his juſtice, and the glory of his name; ſee Rev. xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2. or becauſe of the word of God, the precepts, ordinances and doctrines of it, which are all righteous; for his knowledge of them, and for the benefit and comfort received from them; ſee ℣. 7, 20.

℣. 165. Great peace have they which love thy law, &c.] The Targum adds, "in this world." Great proſperity, eſpecially proſperity of ſoul, inward peace, peace of conſcience, peace in Chriſt and from him, flowing from his blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice, and a view of intereſt therein; which is uſually enjoyed in a way of believing, and frequently had in the ways, worſhip and ordinances of God. Such as love the law of God, his word, precepts and doctrines, have a large ſhare of it; a peace ſo great, that it paſſes the underſtanding of unregenerate men, and cannot be fully expreſſed by the ſaints themſelves; there is none to the wicked, it is peculiar to them that love the Lord, and what belong to him: the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it, which love thy name. And nothing ſhall offend them; the Targum is, "in the world to come." Nothing ſhall diſturb their minds, and break their peace; nothing from without, though ſin, temptations, and deſertions do; not outward afflictions, the reproaches and perſecutions of wicked men, nor the reproof of good men; nor what God does to them in a providential way: though in the world they have tribulation, in Chriſt they have peace, which the world can neither give nor take away. There is no ſtumbling-block unto them [l], as it may be rendered; nothing that ſhall cauſe them to be offended and depart out of the good ways of God, which is the caſe of carnal, formal profeſſors, Matt. xiii. 21. ſuch ſtumble not at the word, as others do, at any of the doctrines of it; and the true light ſhining in them, and the word without being a light unto them, there is no occaſion of ſtumbling in them; they ſee their way, and what lies in it, and ſo avoid that at which they might ſtumble, 1 John ii. 10. Moreover, ſuch do not eaſily either give or take offence; they are poſſeſſed of that charity or love, which is not ſuſpicious or eaſily provoked; and they endeavour to give no offence to any, but live without it, in the midſt of a perverſe generation, 1 Cor. xiii. 5, 7. and x. 30. Phil. ii. 15.

℣. 166. Lord, I have hoped for thy ſalvation, &c.] Either temporal ſalvation and deliverance from enemies and from afflictions, which God had promiſed, and therefore he had reaſon to hope for; or ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, reſolved on in the mind of God, provided in covenant, promiſed to be wrought out by Chriſt, and which ſince has been accompliſhed; and therefore there is a ſufficient foundation to hope for it. And done thy commandments; this was not the cauſe, ground and foundation of his hope; for then it would not have been like an anchor, ſure and ſtedfaſt, but as the hope of the hypocrite, which is as the ſpider's web; but this was the effect of his hope; becauſe he had a good hope of ſalvation, therefore he was ſtudiouſly concerned to do the commandments of God; his hope prompted him to it, and encouraged him in it; ſee 1 John iii. 2, 3. Kimchi's note here is a good one; and done thy commandments, not for hope of reward; but I have done them as thy commandments are with me; and I know that I ſhall have ſalvation, and I have hoped for it.

℣. 167. My ſoul hath kept thy teſtimonies, &c.] The word of God, which he kept cordially and heartily; and in his heart, laid it up there; and with his whole ſoul obſerved the doctrines, and kept the precepts of it. And I love them exceedingly; and ſo kept them from a principle of love, and not with mercenary and ſelfiſh views; and this love was exceeding great, not cold nor lukewarm, but ardent and fervent, love in the ſuperlative degree.

℣. 168. I have kept thy precepts and thy teſtimonies, &c.] Both the preceptive and doctrinal part of the word, he preſerved and obſerved both; this is repeated for the certainty of it, and to ſhew his great affection to them. For all my ways are before thee; this is either an appeal to God for the truth of what he had ſaid, who ſaw and knew all the ways in which he walked, and which he had endeavoured ſhould be conformable to the word of God; or it is a reaſon why he kept the precepts and teſtimonies of the Lord, becauſe he knew his eyes were upon him; the omniſcience of God had an influence over him, and cauſed him to be more attentive to the word, as the rule of his actions; ſee Pſal. cxxxix. 1, 2, 3. Gen. xvii. 1.

℣. 169. Let my cry come near before thee, O Lord, &c.] Not my praiſe, as the Syriac verſion; but my prayer, put up in great diſtreſs, and with great vehemence and importunity; ſee ℣. 145, 146. and when it is deſired, it might come near before the Lord, it does not ſo much ſuppoſe diſtance of place between the petitioner and the petitioned, as earth is from heaven, as Aben Ezra obſerves, as diſtance of ſtate and condition; the petitioner being a creature, and a ſinful creature, and whoſe ſins had ſeparated between God and him: and now the only way of acceſs is by Chriſt; prayer can only paſs to God through him, who is the only Mediator between God and man; by whom perſons and ſervices are brought near unto him with acceptance. The ſum of this requeſt is, that his prayer might not be rejected and ſhut out; but that it might be admitted, might come up before God, and into his ears, and be regarded by him, and accepted with him. Give me underſtanding according to thy word; meaning not natural, but ſpiritual underſtanding; not that he was without any, as natural men are, whoſe underſtandings are darkened; for he had a large ſhare of underſtanding of ſpiritual things; but he wanted more, he deſired to know more of himſelf, of his wants and weakneſſes; to know more of God in Chriſt, and of Chriſt, his perſon, offices, and grace; to know more of the doctrines of the word, and of the duties of religion; and particularly that he might have a better underſtanding of the buſineſs of prayer, and might know both what to pray for, and how to pray as he ought; all which is a gift from God: and he deſires in all to be directed according to the word of God, the means of enlightening the underſtanding, and of increaſing ſpiritual knowledge; or elſe he means the promiſe of God, that he would give him more knowledge and underſtanding; that he might be taught of God, and follow on to know him, and increaſe in every branch of ſpiritual knowledge.

℣. 170. Let my ſupplication come before thee, &c.] The ſame with his cry in the preceding verſe; only expreſſed by another word, ſignifying a petition for grace and favour, in a humble and ſubmiſſive manner; which it is intreated might be received and accepted, as before. Deliver me according to thy word; of promiſe, ſuch as that in Pſal. l. 15. meaning from all troubles and afflictions; out of the hands of all his enemies, and from the power of ſin, Satan, and the world; and from all fears of wrath, ruin and deſtruction. Kimchi obſerves, that this is not to be underſtood of a deliverance of the body from diſtreſs, but of the ſoul from the ſtumbling-block of ſin.

℣. 171. My lips ſhall utter praiſe, &c.] Like water flowing from a fountain, as the word[m] ſignifies. The heart of a good man is like a fountain of water, abounding with good things, and his mouth is a well of life; out of the abundance of grace and good things in his heart, his mouth ſpeaks, John iv. 14. Prov. x. 11. Matt. xii. 34, 35. and particularly his heart is filled with praiſe and thankfulneſs for the many bleſſings of providence and grace enjoyed; his lips ſhew it forth; it comes flowing from him freely and readily, without force and compulſion, largely and plentifully, conſtantly and continually, and with great vehemence and ſtrength, as ſtreams from a fountain. When thou haſt taught me thy ſtatutes; which is what the pſalmiſt often prays for in this pſalm; and ſignifies he ſhould be very thankful to God for, and ſhould ſincerely praiſe him, could he obtain this favour; ſee ℣. 7.

℣. 172. My tongue ſhall ſpeak of thy word, &c.] Of the word of God in general; of the truth of it, which he knew by certain experience; of the purity of it, tending to promote holineſs of heart and life; of the power and efficacy of it, enlightening his mind, and working effectually in him; of the profit of it, to his learning, to his inſtruction, comfort and refreſhment; of the precioùſneſs of it, being of more worth than thouſands of gold and ſilver; and of the pleaſantneſs of it, being ſweeter than the honey or honey-comb, and more to be eſteemed than one's neceſſary food; and of the promiſes of it in particular, of the worth and value of them, of their ſuitableneſs and uſe, and of the faithful fulfilment of them; and of the doctrines of the word, eſpecially thoſe which relate to the grace of God, and ſalvation by the Meſſiah; and alſo of the precepts of the word, as follows: For all thy commandments are righteouſneſs; not only righteous, but righteouſneſs itſelf, being ſtrictly juſt and equitable in the higheſt ſenſe; and not only ſome of them, but all of them; ſee ℣. 128. Aben Ezra's paraphraſe of the words is, "I will teach the children of men "thy word, that they may know that thy com-"mandments are righteouſneſs;" which is not amiſs: and to the ſame ſenſe is Kimchi's note, who obſerves, that the author of the Maſorah interprets it of praiſe; as if he had ſaid, My tongue ſhall praiſe thy word, becauſe all of it is righteouſneſs.

℣. 173. Let thine hand help me, &c.] Let thine hand of power help me againſt mine enemies, and deliver me from them; and let thine hand of providence and grace communicate to me, and ſupply me with, and help me to every thing needful for me, for body and ſoul, for time and eternity, all grace here, and glory hereafter; let thy right hand help me on in my way, hold and uphold me, keep and preſerve me ſafe to heaven and happineſs. For I have choſen thy precepts; not only the good part, which ſhall not be taken away, and the way of truth, ℣. 30. but even the commandments of God, which he preferred to the commandments of men, and choſe rather to obey the one than the other; having a moſt ardent affection for them, an high eſteem of them, and a ſtrong attachment to them; ſee ℣. 127, 128.

℣. 174. I have longed for thy ſalvation, O Lord, &c.] For temporal ſalvation and deliverance from enemies; and for ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation by the Meſſiah; and for the Meſſiah himſelf, the author of it: Kimchi interprets it of the ſalvation of the ſoul in the world to come; ſee ℣. 81. And thy law is my delight; or delights[n]; his exceeding great delight, as being pure and perfect, holy, juſt and good; a tranſcript of the divine nature, a revelation of the divine will; as in the hands of Chriſt, his ſurety and Saviour, who had engaged to fulfil it for him; and as written in his heart; and as delivered from the curſe and condemnation of it, through the ſuretiſhip-engagements of Chriſt.

℣. 175. Let my ſoul live, and it ſhall praiſe thee, &c.] The pſalmiſt deſires the continuance of his natural life, not for his own perſonal advantage, nor for the ſake of his family, nor with any worldly, ſiniſter and ſelfiſh views; but for the glory of God, and for the ſake of praiſing him: or his deſire is, that his ſoul might be lively and comfortable; or that he might be in a lively and chearful frame of ſpirit, and ſo be in fit and proper circumſtances to praiſe the Lord; for it is the living man in both ſenſes, natural and ſpiritual, that is capable of praiſing the Lord, Iſa. xxxviii. 19. And let thy judgments help me; that is, to praiſe him: meaning either judgments on his enemies, as Aben Ezra; which furniſh out matter and occaſion of praiſe and thankſgiving; ſee Rev. xv. 3, 4. and xix. 1, 2. or the word of God, the doctrines and precepts of it; ſee ℣. 164.

℣. 176. I have gone aſtray like a loſt ſheep, &c.] In deſert places, as it is the nature of ſheep to do[n]. A ſheep he was, a ſheep of Chriſt, given him by the Father; known by him, and that knew him; knew his voice, and followed him; a ſheep of his hand, and of his paſture; one of the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, who had been loſt in Adam, though recovered by grace; and had gone aſtray before converſion, but now returned to the Shepherd and Biſhop of ſouls; and ſince converſion had gone aſtray from the Shepherd and fold, from the word and precepts of it, through inadvertence, the prevalence of corruption, the ſnares of the world, and the temptations of Satan; which he both deprecates and owns, ℣. 10, 67. though it may be underſtood, as it is by many interpreters, of his being forced, by the perſecutions of his enemies, to wander from the courts of God, and from place to place. Seek thy ſervant; as a ſhepherd does his ſheep when gone aſtray, which will not return of itſelf unleſs ſought after: thou art my ſhepherd, as if he ſhould ſay, Look me up, reſtore my ſoul; ſuffer me not to wander from thee, and go aſtray from thy word and ordinances: and when he calls himſelf his ſervant, it carries in it an argument for being looked up and ſought out; ſince he was his ſervant, not by nature, but by grace; not by force, but willingly; he was his, and devoted to his ſervice. And another follows: For I do not forget thy commandments; he retained a knowledge of them, an affection for them, and a deſire to obſerve them; though he had gone aſtray from them, either in a criminal way, through the power and prevalence of ſin, or againſt his will, through the force of perſecution.

PSALM CXX.

A ſong of degrees.

THIS pſalm, and the fourteen following, are called ſongs of degrees, or aſcents[o]; for what reaſon it is not eaſy to ſay. Some think it refers to the muſic of them, and that this is the name of the tune to which they were ſet; or the firſt word of a ſong, according to which they were ſung, as Aben Ezra; or that they were ſung with an higher voice, or an aſcending note, as Saadiah Gaon. Others are of opinion, that the title of them reſpects the aſcent of perſons or places, at what time and where they were ſung; either when the Iſraelites went up to Jeruſalem, at the three ſolemn yearly feaſts; or when the Jews came up from Babylon, mention being made in ſome of theſe pſalms, of their being in Babylon, and of their return from their captivity there; and ſo the inſcription of the Syriac verſion is, "the firſt ſong of aſcent; the "people detained in Babylon pray to be delivered." But the common opinion of the Jews, and which is embraced by many Chriſtians[p], and is mentioned by Jarchi, Saadiah Gaon, Kimchi and Ben Melech, is, that theſe are the ſongs ſung by the Levites, on the fifteen ſteps, by which they went up from the court of the women to the court of the Iſraelites, or came down them; and on each ſtep ſung one of theſe pſalms[q]. Though it may be, they are ſo called becauſe of their excellency; a ſong of degrees being an excellent[r] ſong, as an excellent man is called a man of high degree, 1 Chron. xvii. 17. theſe being excellent ones for the matter of them, their manner of compoſure, and the brevity of them. It is generally thought this pſalm was compoſed by David, on account of Doeg the Edomite, becauſe of its likeneſs in ſome things with the 52d Pſalm: and certain it is, that the pſalmiſt had been in ſome great diſtreſs, and at a diſtance from his own country and the houſe of God, and dwelt among wicked men when he wrote it; ſo that it is very probable, it was compoſed during his exile through the perſecution of Saul.

℣. 1. In my diſtreſs I cried unto the Lord, &c.] Being at a diſtance from his own country, or, however, from the houſe of God; perſecuted by men, under the laſh of their tongues; reproached, abuſed and belied by them: in this his caſe and circumſtances, he betook himſelf by prayer to the Lord, and importuned help and deliverance of him, knowing that none could help him as he; ſee Pſal. xviii. 6. And he heard me; anſwered him, and delivered him. The petition he put up follows, which ſhews his caſe, and his particular diſtreſs.

℣. 2. Deliver my ſoul, O Lord, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue.] Not from ſuch lips, and ſuch a tongue of his own, which David abhorred; though every good man deſires to be kept from ſpeaking lies and deceit; nor from the company of thoſe who have ſuch lips and tongues, which he was determined ſhould not dwell with him; but from the malignity of them, from being hurt in his character and reputation by them; God can reſtrain them, and prevent the ill influence of them when he pleaſes, Pſal. xxxi. 20. Iſa. liv. 17. Such were the lips and tongues of Doeg the Edomite, Pſal. lii. 2—4. and of Saul's courtiers, who inſinuated to him that David ſought his hurt, 1 Sam. xxiv. 9. and of the ſcribes and phariſees, that flattered Chriſt to his face, and reproached him to the people; and of Judas, that betrayed him with, Hail, maſter; and of the falſe witneſſes ſuborned againſt him; and of falſe teachers, deceitful workers, that lie in wait to deceive, and, by their good words and fair ſpeeches, do deceive the hearts of the ſimple; and of Antichriſt and his followers, who, as they are given up to believe a lie, ſpeak lies in hypocriſy; and of Satan the father of lies, and who is the old ſerpent, the devil, that deceives the whole world: and to be delivered from the bad effects of ſuch lips and tongues, is very deſirable.

℣. 3. What ſhall be given unto thee? &c.] Or, what what ſhall it give unto thee[s]? That is, what ſhall the deceitful tongue give unto thee, O my ſoul? or to thee, to any one that hears and reads this pſalm? It is capable of giving thee a deal of trouble, of doing thee a deal of miſchief; and of injuring thy character, and hurting thy peace and comfort, if permitted. Or what ſhall be done unto thee, thou falſe tongue? or, what ſhall the falſe tongue add unto thee[t]? it ſhall increaſe thy ſorrows and diſtreſs: or rather, what gain, profit and advantage, ſhall the deceitful tongue get to itſelf by its lies and deceit? none at all; it may do hurt to others, but gets no good to itſelf? ſee Iſa. xxviii. 15, 17. Or, what ſhall he (God) give unto thee[u]? or, what ſhall he add unto thee, thou falſe tongue? ſo Jarchi. What puniſhment will not he inflict upon thee, who hates lying lips? what plagues will not he add unto thee, who knows all the deceit that is in thee, and ſpoken by thee? The anſwer is as follows:

℣. 4. Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper.] Some think theſe words deſcribe lying lips, and a falſe tongue; which are like arrows, ſharp ones, ſent out from a bow drawn with a mighty hand, which come with great force, ſuddenly and ſwiftly, and do much miſchief; ſee Pſal. xi. 2. and lvii. 4. and lxiv. 4. and to coals of juniper, very diſtreſſing and tormenting; the tongue being a fire, ſet on fire of hell, and ſets on fire the courſe of nature; and throws out devouring words, which conſume like fire, James iii. 6. Pſal. lii. 4. But rather the puniſhment of an evil tongue from the Lord is intended, whoſe ſore judgments are often compared to arrows, Deut. xxxii. 23, 42. Ezek. v. 16. Pſal. vii. 13. becauſe they come from above, and bring ſwift and ſudden deſtruction with them; and are very ſharp in the hearts of his enemies; are very ſevere and cutting, and come with power irreſiſtible, being the arrows of the Almighty, Job vi. 4. ſee Jer. l. 9. and theſe may be compared to coals of juniper, which are very vehement and ſtrong, and very laſting and durable. Jerom[w] and Iſidore[x] ſay, they will laſt a whole year; and the Midraſh on the place, reports of two men, who had prepared food with them, and at the end of a year returned and found them unextinct, and warmed their feet at them. Theſe fitly expreſs the lake of fire and brimſtone, the portion of liars; whoſe fire is very ſtrong, and flames devouring, being kindled by the breath of the Lord of hoſts, like a ſtream of brimſtone: and the fire of hell is everlaſting; its burnings are everlaſting burnings; a worm that dieth not, a fire that is not quenched; the ſmoke of the torments of which aſcend for ever and ever, Iſa. xxx. 23. and xxxiii. 14. and lxvi. 24. Rev. xiv. 11. and xxi. 8. The Targum ſpeaks of theſe arrows as lightnings from above, and of the coals of juniper, as kindled in hell below; and they are interpreted of hell in the Talmud[y].

℣. 5. Wo is me, that I ſojourn in Meſech, &c.] Meſhech was a ſon of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. whoſe poſterity are thought by ſome to be the Muſcovites[z] and Scythians, a barbarous ſort of people: Meſech is frequently mentioned with Tubal and his brother, and with Gog and Magog, Ezek. xxxviii. 2, 3. and xxxix. 1. the Targum here calls them Aſiatics. Rather the Cappadocians, according to Joſephus[a]; and Strabo[b] makes mention of a city of theirs, called Mazaca: and the rather, ſince they are mentioned with the Kedarenes, or Arabian Scenites, and were nearer to the land of Judea than the former. That I dwell in the tents of Kedar; Kedar was a ſon of Iſhmael, Gen. xxv. 13. whoſe poſterity were Arabians, as the Targum here renders it; and Suidas[c] ſays, they dwelt not far from Babylon, when he wrote; they lived a paſtoral life, and dwelt in tents: Pliny[d] makes mention of Arabs, called Cedrei; and alſo of Scenite Arabs, from the tents they dwelt in, which they could remove from place to place for the ſake of paſturage. And among theſe David dwelt, when in the wilderneſs of Paran, 1 Sam. xxv. 1. though ſome think David never dwelt among any of thoſe people, but among ſuch who were like unto them for ignorance, idolatry and barbarity. Some render the words, Wo is me, that I ſojourn ſo long, dwelling as in the tents of Kedar[e]; as when he was among the Philiſtines and Moabites; nay, even he may compare his own people to thoſe, many of whom it was as diſagreeable dwelling with as with theſe: and we find Iſaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, ſpeaking of them in their times in like manner, and making the ſame complaints, Iſa. vi. 5. Jer. ix. 2. Ezek. ii. 6. And very grieving and diſtreſſing it is to good men, to have their abode among wicked men; as well as it is infectious and dangerous: to hear their profane and blaſphemous talk; to ſee their wicked and filthy actions, and to obſerve their abominable converſation, is very vexatious, and gives great uneaſineſs, as it did to righteous Lot, 2 Pet. ii. 7, 8. The firſt clauſe is rendered by the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, Wo is me, that my ſojourning is prolonged; to which the next words agree.

℣. 6. My ſoul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace.] The God of peace, againſt whom their carnal minds are enmity itſelf; Chriſt, the Prince of peace, the man, the peace, who has made peace by the blood of his croſs, whom the world hates; the ſons of peace, the quiet in the land, againſt whom the wicked deviſe evil things; the goſpel of peace, which the natural man abhors as fooliſhneſs; the way of peace, pardon, and ſalvation by Chriſt, which carnal men know not, and do not approve of; and the ordinances of the goſpel, which are paths of peace. In ſhort, ſome are of ſuch reſtleſs, quarrelſome and contentious ſpirits, that they hate peace with any; are like the troubled ſea, that cannot reſt; and cannot ſleep, unleſs they do miſchief to their fellow-creatures: it is very uncomfortable living, eſpecially living long with ſuch. The Targum is, "my ſoul hath "long dwelt with Edom, hating peace;" that is, with the Romans or Chriſtians, who are intended; for the Jews underſtand this pſalm of their preſent captivity.

℣. 7. I am for peace, &c.] Am wholly peace; a man of peace, as Aben Ezra; of a peaceable diſpoſition, devoted to peace; love it, ſeek and purſue it, as every good man does, who is called to it, and in whoſe heart it rules: ſuch follow peace with all men, and the things which make for it; and, as much as in them lies, endeavour to live peaceably with all. But when I ſpeak, they are for war; make a motion for peace, and propoſe the terms of it, they declare againſt it, and for war: or when he ſpoke of the things of God, and of his experience of them, of the word of God, and of the truths of it, and of what he believed, Pſal. cxvi. 10. and eſpecially when he gave good counſel and advice to them, and reproved them for their ſins, they could not bear it; but hated him for it, and proclaimed war againſt him; and could not behave peaceably to him in any degree, but became his avowed, ſworn and implacable enemies. The Targum is, "when I prayed;" either prayed to God, that they did not like; or prayed for peace with them, that they would not grant; but became more imbittered againſt him.

PSALM CXXI.

A ſong of degrees.

THE inſcription of the Syriac verſion is, "one "of the ſongs of aſcent out of Babylon." Aben Ezra thinks it was compoſed on account of Iſrael, when in a ſiege and diſtreſs; or, adds he, on account of the children of our captivity; the preſent ſtate of the Jews. Grotius is of opinion, it was written by David, at the time of the battle with Abſalom. Some take it to be a military pſalm, proper for ſoldiers engaged with an enemy: others, that it is ſuitable for travellers when on a journey; and why not for perſons alſo, when they commit themſelves to God in the night-watches, and about to take reſt? And indeed it is ſuitable at all times; when the good man may, with the pſalmiſt, expect divine help, and be ſecure of protection and preſervation.

℣. 1. I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, &c.] Not to the hills and mountains in Judea, looking about to ſee if the inhabitants of them, or any bodies of men, appeared upon them to his help in diſtreſs; rather to the hills of Moriah and Zion, where the ark of God, the ſymbol of his preſence, was, and to whom he looked for aſſiſtance and deliverance: or to heaven, the holy hill of the Lord, and to him that dwelleth there; ſee Pſal. iii. 9. and cxxiii. 1. The lifting up of the eyes is a prayer-geſture, John xi. 41. and xvii. 1. and is expreſſive of boldneſs and confidence in prayer, and of hope and expectation of help and ſalvation, Job xi. 15. Ezek. xviii. 6. when, on the contrary, perſons abaſhed and aſhamed, hopeleſs and helpleſs, cannot look up, or lift up their eyes or face to God, Ezra ix. 6. Pſal. xl. 12. Luke xviii. 13. Some read the words, I will lift up mine eyes upon the hills [f]; ſtanding there and looking up to the heavens, and God in the heavens; who is the moſt High over all the earth, higher than the higheſt, and above all gods. Others render them interrogatively, Shall I lift up mine eyes to the hills [g]? to the idols worſhipped on hills and mountains, and pray unto them, and expect help from them? No, I will not; ſalvation is not to be had from them, Jer. iii. 23. or to the kings of the nations, as R. Obadiah interprets it; and to powerful kingdoms and ſtates, he was in alliance with, comparable to mountains and hills, Pſal. xlvi. 2. Zech. iv. 7? No, I will not; it is better to truſt in the Lord, than to put confidence in princes, Pſal. cxviii. 9. And ſo the following clauſe may be read, From whence ſhall my help come [h]? not from hills and mountains; not from men, for vain is the help of man; not from kings and princes, the great men of the earth, nor from the moſt powerful nations; but from the Lord, as in the next verſe, which may be an anſwer to this.

℣. 2. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth.] Who helps his people out of the hands of all their enemies, and out of all their troubles and afflictions; he helps them in the performance of duty, in the exerciſe of grace, in bearing the croſs, in fighting the Lord's battles, and on in their journey; he helps them to all bleſſings, temporal and ſpiritual; to all needful ſupplies of grace here, and glory hereafter; and this help he gives is quick and preſent, ſuitable and ſeaſonable, is ſufficient, and ſometimes with, and ſometimes without means: and they have great encouragement to expect it from him, ſince he is able to give it, being the maker of heaven and earth; for what is it that he cannot do, who has made both them? And beſides, he has promiſed to help them, and he is faithful that has promiſed; he has laid help on Chriſt for them, and ſet up a throne of grace, where they may hope to find grace and mercy, to help them in time of need; and they have had paſt experiences of his help and ſalvation. Arama connects this with the preceding pſalm, and interprets this help, of help from an evil tongue.

℣. 3. He will not ſuffer thy foot to be moved, &c.] This is either an addreſs of the pſalmiſt to his own ſoul; or to any other good man, his friend and acquaintance, aſſuring of ſtability, and of final perſeverance in grace to glory. The Lord keeps the feet of his ſaints from falling: he will not ſuffer them to be moved out of the ſpiritual eſtate in which they ſtand; nor off of the foundation and rock of ages, on which their feet are ſet, and their goings eſtabliſhed; nor out of the houſe of God, where they are as pillars; nor out of his ways, where he upholds their goings; moved in ſome ſenſe they may be, yet not greatly moved; their feet may be almoſt gone, and their ſteps well nigh ſlipped, and yet ſhall not fall finally and totally, or ſo as to periſh; ſee Pſal. lxii. 2. and lxxiii. 2. and xxxvii. 24. He that keepeth thee, will not ſlumber; neither angels nor men are the keepers of the ſaints, but the Lord himſelf; he is the keeper of every individual ſaint, of every regenerate perſon, of every one of his ſheep, of every member of his church; he keeps them by his power, he preſerves them by his grace, he holds them with his right hand, guides them by his counſel, keeps their feet from falling, and brings them ſafe to glory: and a watchful keeper he is, he does not ſo much as ſlumber; he keeps them night and day, leſt any hurt them, Iſa. xxvii. 3. Guſſetius reads the whole as a prayer, Let him not ſuffer thy foot, &c. let not thy keeper ſlumber [i]; to which the anſwer follows.

℣. 4. Behold, he that keepeth Iſrael, ſhall neither ſlumber nor ſleep.] He that kept Iſrael or Jacob, when aſleep, and appeared to him in a dream, and promiſed to keep him in all places, and did; who found his poſterity in the wilderneſs, and kept them as the apple of his eye: he keeps his ſpiritual Iſrael, whom he has choſen, redeemed, and calls; and he that is in general their keeper, is the keeper of every particular believer, who may promiſe themſelves the utmoſt ſafety under his care; ſince, tho' he may ſometimes ſeem to ſleep, when he withdraws his gracious preſence, defers help, and does not ariſe ſo ſoon to the aſſiſtance of his people, as they wiſh for and expect; yet does not in reality ſleep, nor is any ways negligent of them; no, not ſo much as ſlumber, nor is in the leaſt indifferent about them, and careleſs of them; ſee Gen. xxviii. 15. Deut. xxxii. 10. Pſal. xliv. 23. So Homer [k] repreſents Jupiter, as not held by ſleep, whilſt other gods and men ſlept all night; and hence Milton [l] has the phraſe of the unſleeping eyes of God: but the Phrygians had a notion, that their god ſlept in winter, and was awake in ſummer [m].

℣. 5. The Lord is thy keeper, &c.] This explains more fully who it is that keeps Iſrael and particular believers, and confirms the ſame; not a creature, but the Lord; the Word of the Lord, as the Targum, in a following verſe: Chriſt the Word, and wiſdom of God; who is the keeper of his people by the deſignation of his Father, who has put them into his hands to be kept by him; and by their full will and conſent, who commit the keeping of their ſouls to him; for which he is abundantly qualified, being able as the mighty God; faithful to him that has appointed him; tender and compaſſionate to thoſe under his care, whom he keeps as the apple of his eye; and diligent and conſtant, for he keeps them night and day, leſt any hurt them: he keeps them as they are his flock, made his care and charge; as they are the vineyard of the Lord of hoſts; as they are a city, which, unleſs the Lord keeps, the watchmen watch in vain; as they are his body and members of it, and as they are his jewels and peculiar treaſure: theſe he keeps in the love of God; in his own hands; in the covenant of grace; in an eſtate of grace; and in his own ways, ſafe to his kingdom and glory. The Lord is thy ſhade upon thy right hand; he is at the right hand of his people, to hold their right hand; to teach them to go, lead them into communion with himſelf, and hold them up ſafe; and to ſtrengthen their right hand, aſſiſt them in working, without whom they can do nothing; and to counſel and direct them, and to protect and defend them againſt all their enemies. So a ſhadow ſignifies defence; ſee Numb. xiv. 9. Eccl. vii. 12. and ſuch great perſonages are to others; in which ſenſe Virgil [n] uſes the word ſhadow; and much more true is this of God himſelf. And he is like the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary land; or of a ſpreading tree, which is a protection from heat, and very reviving and refreſhing; ſee Iſa. xxxii. 2. Cant. ii. 3. The alluſion may be to the pillar of cloud by day, which guided and guarded the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and was a ſhadow from the heat, Iſa. iv. 5, 6. and xxv. 4, 5. as Chriſt is from the heat of a fiery law, the flaming ſword of juſtice, the wrath of God, and the fiery darts of Satan.

℣. 6. The ſun ſhall not ſmite thee by day, &c.] With its rays, which it ſhoots forth like darts, and which fly ſwiftly, and pierce and hurt: hence Apollo, the ſame with the ſun, is repreſented with a bow and arrows [o]; ſo the rays of the ſun ſeem to be called in Hab. iii. 11. Nor the moon by night; this clauſe ſhould be ſupplied, as a learned man [p] obſerves, thus, Neither ſhall the moon cool thee by night; for that has no heating virtue in it, and cannot ſmite with heat, as the ſun does: for even, as he obſerves, its rays concentered in a burning glaſs, will not communicate the leaſt degree of ſenſible heat to bodies objected thereunto; yet ſome ſay [q], the moon is not only moiſt, but heats bodies as the ſun. And Iſaac Voſſius [r] obſerves, that there can be no light which, ſeparately conſidered, does not contain ſome heat at leaſt: and Macrobius [s] ſpeaks of the lunar heat; and Plutarch [t] aſcribes heat and inflammation to it, and aſſerts it to be fire. It is ſaid [u], that ſome men of good credit, in a voyage to Guinea, ſtrongly affirmed, that, in the night-ſeaſon, they felt a ſenſible heat to come from the beams of the moon. The Septuagint verſion is, the ſun ſhall not burn thee by day, nor the moon by night. And burning may be aſcribed to the cold froſty air in a moon-light night, as to the north wind, Ecclus. xliii. 20, 21. ſee Gen. xxxi. 40. and our Engliſh poet [w] expreſſes a ſentiment to this effect; yet not what affects the bodies of men, but plants, trees, &c. and this not owing to the moon, but to the air. However, theſe clauſes are not to be underſtood literally; for good men may be ſmitten and hurt by the heat of the one, and the cold of the other, as Jacob and Jonah, Gen. xxxi. 40. Jonah iv. 8. but myſtically, of perſecuting and antichriſtian tyrants, which are ſometimes ſignified by the ſun and moon, as both in Rome, pagan and papal, Rev. vi. 12. and xvi. 8. and of perſecution and tribulation itſelf, Matt. xiii. 6, 21. Cant. i. 6. and is ſometimes applied to the perfect ſtate of the ſaints, either in the new Jeruſalem or ultimate glory, when there will be nothing more of this kind, Rev. vii. 15, 16. And there are ſome periods in the preſent ſtate, when thoſe intirely ceaſe; nor are the ſaints ever really hurt by them, they being always for their good; or however, not ſo as to affect their eternal happineſs. The Targum is, "in the day, "when the ſun rules, the morning-ſpirits ſhall not "ſmite thee; nor the nocturnal ones in the night, "when the moon rules."

℣. 7. The Lord ſhall preſerve thee from all evil, &c.] The Word of the Lord, as the Targum. Not from the evil of affliction, though from that as a penal evil; or as a real one, it being made to work for good: but from the evil of ſin; not from the being or commiſſion of it; but from its dominion and damning power, or from a final and total falling away by it: and from the evil of the world; not from tribulation in it, nor from the reproach or perſecution of it; but from the wickedneſs and luſts that are in it, and from the wicked men of it, their power, rage and fury: and from the evil one, Satan; not from his temptations, but from ſinking under them, and periſhing by them; ſee John xvii. 12, 15. He ſhall preſerve thy ſoul; he preſerves the bodies of his people, oftentimes from diſeaſes and diſaſters, and from death, till the appointed time comes; and then he preſerves their duſt in the grave, and raiſes it up at the laſt day; but more eſpecially their ſouls, the redemption and ſalvation of which he undertook, and has effected; and which are preſerved by him ſafe, to his coming, kingdom and glory.

℣. 8. The Lord ſhall preſerve thy going out, and thy coming in, &c.] In tranſacting all the buſineſs of life, in going in and out about it; in all ways, works and converſation; in journeying and travelling; in all affairs, civil and religious; and not only preſerve, but proſper in all, Pſal. i. 3. the Lord bleſſing him, coming in and going out, Deut. xxviii. 6. and ſuch, with the poet [x], are ſaid to go with a good or proſperous foot. And ſuch perſons, in the Punic language, are called Namphanians, as Auſtin obſerves [y]; who ſays, the word ſignifies a man of a good foot: and the word ſeems to be the contraction of נעם פעמו which ſignifies his good or pleaſant foot [z]; and ſo one that, wherever he comes and goes, things proſper with him, and with thoſe that are in connection with him: ſuch an one was Jacob in the houſe of Laban, whom the Lord bleſſed, as he ſays, ſince my coming, or at my foot, Gen. xxx. 30. ſee the note there; and ſuch a foot Joſeph had wherever he went, Gen. xxxix. 5, 23. Arama interprets it of a man's going out into the air of this world, and of his entrance into the world to come. The Targum is, "the Lord will keep "thy going out to buſineſs, and thy coming in to "ſtudy in the law." From this time forth, and even for evermore; for the Lord not only preſerves his people in life and at death, but in heaven, to all eternity; in the utmoſt ſafety and peace from all moleſtations by men or devils, and from their wrath and malice: not only his purpoſe and decree, but his power and providence, are the vaſt gulph between the one and the other; by means of which the wicked ceaſe from troubling, and the weary are at reſt, Luke xvi. 26. Job iii. 17.

PSALM CXXII.

A ſong of degrees of David.

THIS is the firſt of the ſongs of degrees, that bears the name of David: and Kimchi thinks, they only were written by him which have his name to them; though he, Abendana and others, are of opinion, that this pſalm was compoſed with a view to the captives in Babylon; who are here perſonated, and are repreſented as rejoicing at their going up to Jeruſalem, to the ſolemn feaſts there. The inſcription in the Syriac verſion is, "a pſalm "of David, one of the pſalms of aſcent, when Cyrus commanded the captivity to go up; ſpiri"tually, a promiſe of good things." It ſeems to be deſigned for the uſe of the Iſraelites, and to be ſung by them when they went up to the feaſts, three times a year. Some ſay [a], they ſung this by the way, when they carried the firſt-fruits to Jeruſalem.

℣. 1. I was glad when they ſaid unto me, &c.] Or, I rejoiced in, or becauſe of, thoſe that ſaid unto me [b]; or, in what was ſaid unto me. For it may regard not only the time when he had this pleaſure of mind, but the perſons who gave it, as well as the ground and reaſon of the things ſaid unto him, as follows: Let us go into the houſe of the Lord; the houſe of the ſanctuary, as the Targum; the tabernacle, the place of divine worſhip, typical of the church of God; which is an houſe of his building, beautifying and repairing, and where he dwells: it has all the eſſentiality of an houſe; its materials are lively ſtones; its foundation Chriſt; its pillars miniſters of the word; the beams of it ſtable believers; its windows the ordinances; and the door into it faith in Chriſt, and a profeſſion of it. Now it is both the duty and privilege of believers to go into it; here they find ſpiritual pleaſure, enjoy abundance of peace and comfort, and have their ſpiritual ſtrength renewed, as well as it is to their honour and glory: and it becomes them to ſtir up one another to go thither; ſome are ſlothful and backward; ſome are lukewarm and indifferent; ſome are worldly and carnally minded; and others are conceited of their knowledge, and think themſelves wiſer than their teachers, and therefore need to be excited to their duty; and truly gracious ſouls are glad when they are ſtirred up to it, both on their own account, and on the account of others, and becauſe of the glory of God.

℣. 2. Our feet ſhall ſtand within thy gates, O Jeruſalem.] Which is to be underſtood, not merely literally of the city of Jeruſalem, and of continuance in the poſſeſſion of it, it being lately taken out of the hands of the Jebuſites; but ſpiritually of the church of God, which is often called by this name; the gates of which are the ſame as the gates of Zion, and the gates of wiſdom, the word and ordinances; attendance on which is ſignified by ſtanding; and which alſo denotes continuance therein: and happy are thoſe that are within theſe gates, and have a comfortable aſſurance of their abiding there; and ſtill more happy will they be, who will be admitted within the gates of the new Jeruſalem, which are ſaid to be twelve, and every one of them of one pearl; and through which none ſhall enter into the city but pure and holy perſons, Rev. xxi. 2, 12, 21, 25, 27. and xxii. 14.

℣. 3. Jeruſalem is builded as a city, that is compact together.] In David's time the upper and lower city were joined together, the ſtreets regularly built, the houſes contiguous, not ſtraggling about here and there one [c]. So the church of God, like that, is built in a good ſituation, on a rock and hill, where it is firm and viſible; like a city full of inhabitants, governed by wholſome laws, under proper officers; a free city, which enjoys many privileges and immunities; a well-fortified one, having ſalvation for walls and bulwarks about it; a royal city, the city of the great King, the city of our God, the name of which is Jehovah-ſhammah, the Lord is there: and this is compact together, when its citizens are united in affection to one another; agree in their religious ſentiments; join in ſocial worſhip, and live in ſubjection to one Head and King, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. The Jews often ſpeak, and ſo ſome of their commentators, on this paſſage, of a Jeruſalem above and below, and of the one being made like unto the other: ſo the Targum, "Jeruſalem is built in the firmament as a city, as Jeruſalem on earth;" ſee Gal. iv. 26.

℣. 4. Whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord, &c.] The twelve tribes of Iſrael; the males of them went up three times a year to Jeruſalem, to worſhip, at the feaſts of Paſſover, Pentecoſt and Tabernacles; and was typical of the church of Chriſt, where the worſhip of God is carried on, his word preached, and ordinances adminiſtered; and whither ſaints go and attend, for their own profit and the glory of God; this is the city of our ſolemnities, Iſa. xxxiii. 20. and lvi. 7. Unto the teſtimony of Iſrael; the ark of the teſtimony, a ſymbol of the divine preſence. The law is called a teſtimony, becauſe it teſtified the will of God to be done; this was put into an ark, which had its name from thence, and was typical of Chriſt, the end of the law for righteouſneſs; and over the ark was the divine preſence: hither the tribes came to worſhip God, and to conſult him; "who, the Targum here ſays, teſtifies to Iſrael, that his divine Majeſty dwells among them, when they go to confeſs unto the name of the Lord." The goſpel is called the teſtimony of Chriſt; and it is what teſtifies concerning his perſon, office and grace, unto the Iſrael of God; and who go up to the houſe of God, in order to hear it. To give thanks unto the name of the Lord; for all his mercies and bleſſings, both temporal and ſpiritual; and which ſhould be acknowledged, not only in a private manner, but publickly in the houſe of God; ſee Pſal. c. 4. and cxi. 1.

℣. 5. For there are ſet thrones of judgment, &c.] In Jeruſalem, as the Targum; here were courts of judicature, and thrones for the judges to ſit upon, to execute judgment and juſtice to the people. The thrones of the houſe of David; the Targum is, "thrones in the houſe of the ſanctuary, for the kings of the houſe of David;" who might ſit there, as the Jews ſay, when others might not. In the church of Chriſt, the heavenly Jeruſalem, every ſaint is a king, as well as a prieſt, and all have thrones and ſeats there; have a power of judging, not only leſſer matters pertaining to this life, but ſuch as regard the ſpiritual peace and welfare of the church, and intereſt of Chriſt; having laws and rules given them to go by, in the admiſſion and excluſion of members, and reſpecting their conduct to each other, and to their Lord and head: and in the new Jeruſalem there will be thrones ſet, not only for the twelve apoſtles of Chriſt, and for the martyrs of Jeſus, but for all the ſaints; there will be the thrones of God and of the Lamb, and every overcomer ſhall ſit down on the ſame; this honour will have all the ſaints, Matt. xix. 28. Rev. xx. 4. and xxii. 3. and iii. 21.

℣. 6. Pray for the peace of Jeruſalem, &c.] This is ſaid to the perſons that ſolicited the pſalmiſt to go into the houſe of the Lord; to the truly godly among the tribes, that went thither to worſhip; to his brethren and companions, for whoſe ſake he wiſhed well to Zion; to praying ſouls, who ſhould not be ſingular and ſelfiſh; not only pray for themſelves, but for others; for all ſaints, and for the church of God in general: for Jeruſalem, not merely literally conſidered; though as that was the metropolis of the nation, and many of them the pſalmiſt addreſſes were inhabitants of it, it became them to ſeek and pray for the peace of it, their own peace being concerned in it; ſee Jer. xxix. 7. but for the ſpiritual and heavenly Jeruſalem, the church of God, and for the peace of it; that Chriſt the man, the peace, the peace-maker, who then was not come, might come; that the members of it might enjoy ſpiritual peace in their ſouls, and might have peace one with another, and be at peace with their enemies; and enjoy the abundance of peace and proſperity, which will be in the latter day; and will lie in freedom from perſecution, in a deſtruction of Antichriſt and all the enemies of the church; in the purity of goſpel-truths and ordinances, and the ſpread of them; in numerous converſions of Jews and Gentiles; in the unity of the Lord's people, in ſentiment, worſhip and affection; and in a large increaſe of ſpiritual light and holineſs: all which ſhould be earneſtly prayed for by the well-wiſhers of the cauſe of Chriſt; ſee Iſa. lxii. 6, 7. There may be an alluſion to the name of Jeruſalem, which ſignifies, they ſhall ſee peace; and it ſhould be prayed for, that they might. The argument, enforcing this duty exhorted to, follows; They ſhall proſper that love thee; that love Jeruſalem, the church of God; that love Chriſt, her King; the ſaints, her citizens; her laws and ordinances; and the word of the Lord that goes out of her, and is miniſtered in her: which is ſhewn by an attendance with her on them, and by their prayers for her proſperity and welfare: and ſuch proſper in their outward affairs, as Obed-Edom and his family were bleſſed, for the ſake of the ark he took in and took care of; and in their ſpiritual affairs, their ſouls proſper, as Gaius's did, and as ſuch do, who are favoured with the diſcoveries of the love of God, with an application of pardoning grace and mercy; have a ſpiritual appetite for the word; when their graces are in lively exerciſe, their corruptions are ſubdued, ſpiritual light and zeal for truth are increaſed, inward ſtrength is renewed, communion with God is enjoyed, and they are fruitful in every good work.

℣. 7. Peace be within thy walls, &c.] The word ſay might be ſupplied; for this, with the following, ſeem to be petitions the pſalmiſt puts into the mouths of thoſe he deſires to pray for Jeruſalem's peace; and he directs them to pray in this manner, to take with them ſuch words as theſe, and pray to the Lord. Jeruſalem was a walled city, and ſo is the church of God; God himſelf is a wall of fire around her; ſalvation by Chriſt is as walls and bulwarks to her; the power and providence of God protect her: within theſe walls the people of God have a place and a name; all the inhabitants of Zion in common are included in this petition, and peace is wiſhed for them all; let their condition and circumſtances be what they may, be they high or low, rich or poor, ſtronger or weaker believers, children, young men, or fathers. Some render it, in thine army, as the Targum, and other Jewiſh writers; in the church's militia, all ſaints being ſoldiers and in a warfare-ſtate; and here ſucceſs to their arms, againſt ſin, Satan and the world, is wiſhed for. And proſperity within thy palaces; as there were palaces in Jeruſalem for the king, the nobles, and great men of the land; ſo there are in the church of God, where he is known, for a refuge; even the meaneſt places in it are preferable to the palaces of the greateſt monarchs; ſee Pſal. xlviii. 3. and lxxxiv. 10. And here indeed all the ſaints are kings, and have their palaces; but particularly there are ſome who are ſet in the firſt place in the church, and over others in the Lord; who are their guides and governors, and are in office-relation to the church as paſtors and deacons now, as there were prieſts and Levites before: and the proſperity of theſe is to be prayed for, the good of the whole church being involved therein.

℣. 8. For my brethren and companions ſakes, &c.] Who were regenerated by the Spirit of God; adopted into his family, and children of the ſame father; ſtood in the ſame relation to Chriſt the firſt-born, and members of the ſame church; and ſo brethren: partners in the ſame bleſſings and promiſes of the covenant; partakers of the ſame grace; joined together in religious worſhip; ſhared in the ſame joys and griefs; travellers together to the ſame heavenly country, and intitled to the ſame glory and happineſs. So David, though a king, reckoned his meaneſt ſubjects as ſuch, who were ſpiritual men; and for their ſakes, through the good-will, love, and affection he bore to them, he would ſet praying ſouls an example, and by it enforce his own exhortation, as follows: I will now ſay, Peace be within thee; now and always put up this petition, and not put it off to longer time; that peace and proſperity may always attend the church of God, as well as the city of Jeruſalem, literally conſidered, and the inhabitants of it.

℣. 9. Becauſe of the houſe of the Lord our God, &c.] Not becauſe of his own palace, nor becauſe of his own houſe and family, nor becauſe of his own perſonal intereſt; though all were concerned in the peace of Jeruſalem: but chiefly becauſe of the ſanctuary of the Lord, as the Targum; becauſe of the worſhip and ſervice of God in it; becauſe of his great love and zeal for the houſe and church of the living God, which eat him up, Pſal. lxix. 9. I will ſeek thy good; the good of Jeruſalem, the good of the church of God; do all the good he could to it both with his purſe and prayers, and by ſtirring up others to do the ſame; ſee Pſal. li. 18.

PSALM CXXIII.

A ſong of degrees.

THIS pſalm is not thought to be written by David, but by ſome other perſon in after-times; and at a time, as is clear, when the people of God were much expoſed to the ſcorn and contempt of men. Dr Patrick thinks it was written by ſome pious perſon; perhaps by Iſaiah, in Hezekiah's time, when Rabſhakeh poured out his contempt on God, on the king and the people. Others are of opinion, it was wrote by one of the Babyloniſh captivity, when the Jews were jeered by the Babylonians, and they tauntingly aſked them to ſing one of the ſongs of Zion; and ſcornfully ſaid of Jeruſalem, Is this the city men call the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth? So Aben Ezra ſays, the pſalmiſt ſpeaks of a great man of the generation, which was in captivity or in a ſiege; and Kimchi ſays, that he ſpeaks in the language of the children of the captivity; to which agrees the Syriac inſcription, "it is ſaid in the perſon of Zorobabel, the prince of the captives." Others think it was compoſed in the times of Antiochus, the little horn propheſied of by Daniel, whoſe look was more ſtout than his fellows; who magnified himſelf againſt God and his people, profaned the ſanctuary, and took away the daily ſacrifice: and others are of opinion, it was wrote a little before the coming of Chriſt, in the perſon of thoſe who were waiting for it, and ſpiritual redemption and ſalvation by it; and who were ſcorned and derided by the proud ſcribes and phariſees.

℣. 1. Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, &c.] Not only the eyes of his body, this being a prayer-geſture; ſee Matt. xiv. 19. John xi. 41. and xvii. 1. but the eyes of his mind and underſtanding, opened by the Spirit of God; particularly the eye of faith, by which he looked for and expected help and ſalvation from the Lord. The phraſe is expreſſive of holy confidence in God, and a comfortable hope of receiving good things from him; as, on the contrary, when perſons are aſhamed and confounded with a ſenſe of their ſins, and the aggravations of them, and of their own unworthineſs and vileneſs; and, on account of the ſame, almoſt out of all hope, cannot lift up their eyes to heaven, or their face before God, Ezra ix. 6. Pſal. xl. 12. Luke xviii. 13. O thou that dwelleſt in the heavens; the heaven of heavens, the third heaven, the ſeat of angels and glorified ſaints; and though the Lord is every where, and fills heaven and earth with his preſence, and cannot be contained any where; yet here is the more viſible diſplay of his glory; here he keeps his court; this is his palace, and here his throne is prepared, and on it he ſits[d]; ſo ſome render the word here; as the Judge of the whole earth, and takes a view of all men and their actions; and as the God of nature and providence, governs and orders all things after his own will; and as the God of grace, ſits on a throne of grace, kindly inviting and encouraging his people to come unto him: and therefore the pſalmiſt addreſſes him as ſuch; ſee Eccl. v. 2. Matt. vi. 9. The Targum is, "O thou that "ſitteſt on a throne of glory in heaven!"

℣. 2. Behold, as the eyes of ſervants look unto the hand of their maſters; and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her miſtreſs, &c.] To direct them in their work and buſineſs, to point out unto them what they ſhall do; which is often done by a motion of the hand of the maſter or miſtreſs, or rap of their fingers without ſpeaking[e], which the ſervant obſerves: or to help and aſſiſt them againſt their enemies, and protect them from them; ſervants unarmed, and moleſted in their maſters ſervice, have no other to flee to for protection but them; ſo Aben Ezra: or to receive food and ſuſtenance from them, as ſervants and maidens do, from their maſters and miſtreſſes, in whoſe ſervice they are; ſee Prov. xxxi. 15. ſo Kimchi and Arama;

the latter obſerves, that they have their food in a way of mercy, and not juſtice; contrary to what the apoſtle ſays, Col. iv. 1. or in order to receive their wages from them; ſee Job vii. 2. So our eyes wait upon the Lord our God; look unto him for direction in his ſervice. Saints are ſervants, not of ſin, nor of Satan, nor of men, but of the Lord; and not on the foot of creation only, but of redemption, and are made ſo by the grace of God; and they are willing to work, and are deſirous to know what they ſhould do; they inquire of God, they wait upon him in his word and ordinances, for direction; and being informed, do it with all their might, and follow the Lamb whereſoever he goes or directs them: and they look unto him for ſtrength to aſſiſt them therein, being conſcious of their own weakneſs; they apply to him, and wait upon him for ſtrength, and do all they do in his name and ſtrength; they look unto him for protection from all their enemies, which are many and mighty, and are ſtronger than they; and for food, both temporal and ſpiritual, and for all the neceſſaries and comforts both of a corporal and ſpiritual life; and likewiſe for the recompence of reward, the reward of the inheritance which is of grace, and not of debt. Joſeph Kimchi thinks, that the alluſion is to ſervants, that look to the hand of their maſters that correct and chaſtiſe them, and bear it patiently; and look to the hand that ſmites, till it ſhall have done, and mercy is ſhewn them. And thus the ſaints look to the chaſtiſing hand of God, and humble themſelves under it, and patiently endure it, till the Lord ſhall pleaſe to remove it from them; and this agrees with what follows: Until that he have mercy upon us; God is gracious and merciful; and he has his ſet time to have mercy on his people: and it becomes them to continue praying to him, and waiting on him, until he is pleaſed to ſhew it to them; men ſhould pray always and not faint; they will find mercy in due time, Luke xviii. 1, 7.

℣. 3. Have mercy upon us, O Lord, have mercy upon us, &c.] Merit is not pleaded; for though ſervants, they knew they were unprofitable ones: but mercy is aſked; whether by the awakened ſinner under firſt convictions, or by the backſliding profeſſor, for forgiveneſs of ſins, under a ſenſe of them, or as under the correcting and chaſtiſing hand of God for them: and which is repeated, to ſhew the ſtate of their caſe, which requires mercy, and in haſte; and the eagerneſs of their ſpirit, and the earneſtneſs of their ſuit, their prayer being the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man. For we are exceedingly filled with contempt; by reaſon of meanneſs in outward circumſtances, the common lot of God's people; and therefore are reckoned the filth of the world, and the offſcouring of all things: and on account of their religion, which wicked men make a jeſt of; reckon an engine of ſtate, to keep people in awe of the civil magiſtrate, or a piece of prieſtcraft, to ſerve the lucrative views of a ſet of men; or as mere cant and enthuſiaſm, and a gloomy melancholy buſineſs, which none but fools will give into; and particularly on account of peculiar doctrines embraced, which are branded as novel, irrational and licentious; and ordinances, which intirely depend on the ſovereign will of the inſtitutor of them. For theſe things and the like, contempt was plentifully poured upon them; they had enough of it, and too much, ſo much that they could not bear it; it was become intolerable and loathſome, and the more, as it had been a long time continued on them. So Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret the word, rendered exceedingly, of a long time.

℣. 4. Our ſoul is exceedingly filled with the ſcorning of thoſe that are at eaſe, &c.] That are in eaſy and affluent circumſtances; abound in the things of this world, and have more than heart can wiſh; have no outward trouble, as other men, or as the ſaints have; nor any uneaſineſs of mind, on account of ſin and their eternal ſtate: they have been at eaſe from their youth; Satan, that has the poſſeſſion of them, keeps the goods in peace; and their conſciences are ſeared as with a red-hot iron, and they are paſt feeling; though they are far from having any true, ſolid peace of mind: and ſuch perſons are generally ſcorners of the ſaints, and load them with their gibes and jeers in a moſt inſolent manner; which makes it very irkſome and grievous to bear. And with the contempt of the proud; who are proud of their natural abilities; of their wealth and riches, and of their honours and high places: and ſuch are generally ſcorners, and deal in proud wrath; and, through their pride, perſecute the poor ſaints with their reproaches, and by other ways; ſee Prov. xxi. 24. Pſal. x. 2. Some underſtand by theſe characters, that are at eaſe, or quiet [f], and are proud, or excellent [g], as the phraſes may be rendered, ſuch deſcribed by them as are the objects, and not the authors of ſcorn and contempt; even the ſaints, who are the quiet in the land, and the excellent in the earth; thoſe precious ſons of Zion, who are diſeſteemed by the men of the world, Pſal. xxxv. 20. and xvi. 2. Lam. iv. 1, 2.

PSALM CXXIV.

A ſong of degrees of David.

SOME think this pſalm was written by David, after the conqueſt of the Philiſtines and Ammonites, and other nations that roſe up againſt him and Iſrael, like the proud waves of the ſea, and ſpread themſelves like a flood; and whoſe deſtruction was like the breach of many waters, 2 Sam. v. 18, 20. and x. 19. Others, after his deliverance from the perſecution of Saul, or from the conſpiracy of Abſalom. Theodoret is of opinion, that David wrote this by a prophetic ſpirit, concerning the enemies of the Jews, upon their return to their own land, from the Babyloniſh captivity; who envied them, and roſe up againſt them, but the Lord delivered them. And others apply it to the times of Antiochus, when the Jewiſh church and ſtate were threatened with ruin; but the Lord appeared for them, in raiſing up the Maccabees. Kimchi interprets it of the Jews in captivity; and Arama, of the deliverance of the children of Iſrael at the Red-ſea. It may be applied to any time of diſtreſs the church and people of God have been in, and he has wrought ſalvation for them.

℣. 1. If it had not been the Lord who was on our ſide, &c.] Or, was for us[h]. The Syriac verſion is, that roſe up for us; againſt their enemies, that roſe up againſt them, as in the next verſe: or, was with us, as Kimchi and Ben Melech; to help and aſſiſt, ſupport and ſupply, ſtrengthen and defend: or, was among us, as the Arabic verſion; as their King, Protector and Saviour. This implies that he was on their ſide; was for them, with them, and among them, and took their part againſt their enemies; ſee Pſal. cxviii. 6, 7. which, if he had not done, their caſe would have been miſerable and deplorable; or if any other had took their part, and not he, let them be who they would, angels or men. If God is on the ſide of us, it matters not who is againſt us; but if he is not on our ſide, or againſt us, it ſignifies nothing who is for us; ſee Rom. viii. 31. It ſuggeſts, that the caſe of Iſrael now was ſo very forlorn and diſtreſſed, that none but the Lord himſelf could help them. Jehovah is on the ſide of his people in a ſpiritual ſenſe, or otherwiſe it would be bad for them: God the Father is on their ſide; his love and relation to them engage him to be ſo; hence all thoſe good things that are provided for them, and beſtowed on them; nor will he ſuffer any to do them hurt, they being as dear to him as the apple of his eye; hence he grants them his gracious preſence, ſupports them under all their trials and exerciſes, ſupplies all their wants, and keeps them by his power, and preſerves them from all their enemies; ſo that they have nothing to fear from any quarter: Chriſt is on their ſide; he is the ſurety for them, the Saviour of them; has took their part againſt all their ſpiritual enemies, ſin, Satan, the world and death; has engaged with them, and conquered them; he is the Captain of their ſalvation, their King at the head of them, that protects and defends them here, and is their friend in the court of heaven; their Advocate and interceding High-prieſt there, who pleads their cauſe againſt Satan, and obtains every bleſſing for them: the Spirit of Jehovah is on their ſide, to carry on his own work in them; to aſſiſt them in their prayers and ſupplications; to ſecure them from Satan's temptations; to ſet up a ſtandard for them, when the enemy comes in like a flood upon them; and to comfort them under all their caſtings down; and to work them up for, and bring them ſafe to heaven: but were not this the caſe, what would become of them? Now may Iſrael ſay; this was a public caſe, the pſalmiſt here records, in which all Iſrael were concerned; and whom he calls upon to take notice of it, and directs them what to ſay on this occaſion.

℣. 2. If it had not been the Lord who was on our ſide, &c.] This he repeats both for the confirmation of it, and to excite the attention of the Iſraelites to it; as well as to obſerve that it was not once only, but again and again, many times the Lord appeared to be on their ſide. The Targum renders it, "the Word of the Lord;" the eſſential Word, the Son of God; and ſo in the preceding verſe in the king's Bible. When men roſe up againſt us; wicked men; though no hard epithet is given in the text, however juſt. The enemies of God's people are only called men by them, to ſhew their meekneſs and patience; it is in the ſingular number, when man roſe up; hence Arama interprets it of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and R. Obadiah, of Haman: but it might be better interpreted of the man of ſin, the man of the earth; who, at the head of his antichriſtian party, has roſe up againſt the ſaints, oppreſſed them, and threatened them with utter ruin, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Pſal. x. 18. Rev. xiii. 5, 6. Though it is beſt to underſtand it of a body of men; of men not mean, but mighty; not few, but numerous; and who united as one man againſt the people of God, and roſe up againſt them in an hoſtile manner; being full of enmity to them, and bent upon their ruin.

℣. 3. Then they had ſwallowed us up quick, &c.] Or alive; as the earth ſwallowed up Korah and his company; or as the fiſh ſwallowed up Jonah; or rather, as ravenous beaſts ſwallow their prey; to which the alluſion is. The people of God are comparable to ſheep and lambs, and ſuch like innocent creatures; and the wicked to lions, tygers, wolves, bears, and ſuch like beaſts of prey that devour living creatures. When their wrath was kindled againſt us; which is cruel and outrageous; there is no ſtanding againſt it, nor before it; it is like a fierce flame of fire that burns furiouſly, and there is no ſtopping it; none but God can reſtrain it.

℣. 4. Then the waters had overwhelmed us, &c.] People comparable to waters for their multitude, ſtrength, force and impetuoſity; which bear down all before them, and againſt which there is no ſtanding; which, like the waters of the flood, overflow and deſtroy all they paſs over. Theſe are the floods of ungodly men, which are very deſtructive and terrible; ſee Rev. xvii. 15. Iſa. viii. 7, 8. Pſal. xviii. 4. together with all thoſe reproaches, afflictions and perſecutions, which come along with them; which the preſence of God only can bear up his people under, and carry them through, Cant. viii. 7. Pſal. lxix. 1, 2. Iſa. xliii. 2. The ſtream had gone over our ſoul; and ſo deprived them of life: the whole force of the enemy; which, like a ſtream, flows in with great ſtrength and rapidity, when a breach is made and ſpreads itſelf. Arama interprets it of the ſtream of the Egyptians, and reſtrains it to them, their armies and forces; but it rather deſigns others, and the enemies of God's people in general, which threaten their ruin, even their very ſouls and lives: it may be applied to the ſtream of corruptions, the flood of temptation, and flow of perſecutions, ſuch as the flood the dragon caſt out of his mouth after the woman; which, were it not for divine grace and aſſiſtance, would deſtroy the ſaints, who have no might againſt this great force, 2 Chron. xx. 12. Iſa. lix. 19. Rev. xii. 16.

℣. 5. Then the proud waters had gone over our ſoul.] The wicked, who, through their pride, perſecute the poor ſaints: theſe proud tyrants and perſecutors would prevail over them, to their ruin and deſtruction; who, for their number, force and ſtrength, and eſpecially for their pride and haughtineſs, are like to the ſtrong, boiſterous and ſwelling waves of the ſea, were they not ſtopped and bounded by him, who has ſaid, Thus far ſhall ye go, and no farther, Job xxxviii. 11.

℣. 6. Bleſſed be the Lord, &c.] Here begins the church's thankſgiving for deliverance from all their enemies, their proud perſecutors; and from all afflictions and troubles by them; which they could never have been delivered from, had not the Lord appeared for them; and therefore it is but juſt that he ſhould have all the glory of it, and be bleſſed and praiſed on account thereof. Who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth; the teeth of wicked men are like ſpears and arrows, like ſwords and knives, to devour good men; their paſſions are ſtrong, and their deſires very vehement after their ruin; and if ſuffered, the ſaints would fall an eaſy prey to them: but God will not give them up to them, either to Satan the devouring lion, or to any of his emiſſaries; nay, when they have ſeized them, and got them in their mouths, they ſhall be ſnatched from them, as the lamb out of the mouth of the lion and the bear by David; ſee Pſal. lvii. 4. Prov. xxx. 14. 1 Pet. v. 8. 1 Sam. xvii. 34, 35.

[h] לנו pro nobis, Vatablus.

℣. 7. Our ſoul is eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fowlers, &c.] The people of God are like little birds, being harmleſs and innocent, ſinging forth the praiſes of God for his goodneſs to them; as alſo becauſe weak and unable to reſiſt their foes; and worthleſs in themſelves, like ſparrows, as the word[1] here uſed ſignifies; and are fearful and timorous, and flee at the leaſt apprehenſion of danger, Pſal. cii. 7. and xi. 1. Hoſ. xi. 11. Satan, and wicked men under his influence, are like fowlers who lay ſnares for them, to draw them into ſin, into immorality and error, in order to bring them to ruin and deſtruction; hence we read of the ſnare of the devil and of wicked men, 1 Tim. iii. 7. 2 Tim. ii. 26. Pſal. cxix. 110. and who form plans and lay ſchemes to oppreſs and deſtroy them; but through the wiſdom given them to diſcern theſe devices and ſtratagems, and through the power of divine grace accompanying them, they eſcape what was intended for their hurt, and particularly in the following manner: The ſnare is broken, and we are eſcaped; meaſures concerted by wicked men are broken, their ſchemes are confounded, their devices are diſappointed, ſo that they cannot perform their enterprize; and by this means the ſaints eſcape the evils deſigned againſt them, the afflictions of the world, and the temptations of Satan.

℣. 8. Our help is in the name of the Lord, &c.] This is the concluſion the church draws from the ſcene of providence in her favour; this is the inſtruction ſhe learns from hence, that her help is in the Lord only, and not in any creature; and that it is right to put her truſt and confidence in the Lord for it, and only to expect it from him, whoſe name is himſelf; and is a ſtrong tower to flee unto for ſafety, Prov. xviii. 10. The Targum is, "in "the name of the Word of the Lord;" in the Meſſiah; in whom the name of the Lord is, his nature and perfections; and in whom help is found, being laid upon him, Exod. xxiii. 21. Hoſ. xiii. 9. Pſal. lxxxix. 19. Who made heaven and earth; and therefore muſt be able to help his people, and to do more for them than they are able to aſk or think: for what is it he cannot do, that made the heavens and the earth, and all that is in them? ſee Pſal. cxxi. 1, 2.

PSALM CXXV.

A ſong of degrees.

WHO was the penman of this pſalm, and on what occaſion written, is not certain. It deſcribes the ſafety and ſecurity of the church and people of God; foretels the deliverance of them from the oppreſſions of their enemies; the bleſſings of goodneſs that ſhall be beſtowed upon them, and the vengeance that will be taken on the wicked. According to Aben Ezra, it belongs to the times of the Meſſiah, whom the Jews yet expect; when Iſrael, as they ſuppoſe, will be in ſafe and proſperous circumſtances, and the wicked will be conſumed; as Kimchi on it alſo obſerves: and indeed it may be very well thought to belong to the latter days of the kingdom of our Meſſiah; when the church will be in great ſafety and proſperity, and freed from the perſecution and afflictions of wicked men.

℣. 1. They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Zion, &c.] Who truſt not in themſelves, and in their own hearts; nor in any thing of theirs, their ſtrength or wiſdom, riches or righteouſneſs; nor in any creature whatever, in the mightieſt or beſt of men: but in the Lord; in God, as the God of nature and providence, for all temporal mercies; and in him, as the God of grace, for all ſpiritual and eternal ones; who ſhould be truſted in at all times, whether of affliction, temptation or darkneſs; for which there is abundant reaſon. The Targum is, "the righteous that truſt in the Word "of the Lord;" in Chriſt the eſſential Word, who is truſted in by all that know him, and that know there is ſalvation in him, and in no other: theſe truſt in him for acceptance with God, for a juſtifying righteouſneſs, for remiſſion of ſin, for all ſupplies of grace, and for eternal life; and ſuch are like mount Zion for many things, being beloved and choſen of God, enjoying his preſence, and the bleſſings of his grace; and being the joy of the whole earth, and a perfection of beauty; but here for their firmneſs and ſtability, as follows. Arama obſerves, that mount Zion is made mention of, becauſe here the prophecy was given; to which may be added, the pſalmiſt was upon it, and had it in view, when he compared thoſe that truſt in the Lord unto it. Which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever; either, which mount Zion is immoveable, and continually abides, for which reaſon the church and people of God are compared unto it; or every one of thoſe that truſt in the Lord, like that, can never be removed, but always abide: they can never be removed from the Lord, though they may be removed from his houſe and ordinances, as ſometimes David was; and from his gracious preſence, and ſenſible communion with him, and out of the world by death; yet never from his heart's love, nor out of the covenant of his grace, which is ſure and everlaſting; nor out of his family, into which they are taken; nor from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, nor out of his hands and arms, nor from off his heart; nor from off him, the foundation on which they are laid; nor out of a ſtate of grace, either regeneration or juſtification; but ſuch abide in the love of God, in the covenant of his grace, in the hands of his Son, in the grace wherein they ſtand, and in the houſe of God for evermore.

[1] כצפור ὡς ϛρȣθίον, Sept. ſicut paſſer, V. L.

℣. 2. As the mountains are round about Jeruſalem, &c.] There was mount Zion on the ſide of the north, and the mount of Olives on the eaſt, and other mountains on the other ſides of it; ſo that it was encompaſſed with them, and was naturally as well as artificially fortified. Tacitus[k] deſcribes Jeruſalem as inacceſſible, walls and mountains, rocks and towers ſurrounding it: and the poet Chœribus[l] makes mention of a people that ſpoke the Phœnician language, by whom he plainly means the Jews, οικυν δʼ εν Σολυμοις ορεσι, that inhabited the mountains of Solyma; which are ſpoken of by Homer[m], from whence, according to Tacitus[n], Jeruſalem had its name: yet, as Kimchi obſerves, this did not hinder the enemy from taking it; wherefore the Lord is a greater ſecurity to his people. So the Lord is round about his people, from henceforth even for ever; he encompaſſes them with his favour and loving-kindneſs, as a ſhield; he encircles them in the arms of everlaſting love; he guards them by his providence all around, and keeps a wakeful and watchful eye over them, that nothing hurts them; he keeps them, as in a garriſon, by his almighty power: theſe are the walls that are around them; yea, he himſelf is a wall of fire about them, and the glory in the midſt of them, Zech. ii. 5. and ſo he continues; he never leaves his people, nor forſakes them, but is their God and guide even unto death. The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord is round about his people;" Chriſt, the eſſential Word of God.

℣. 3. For the rod of the wicked ſhall not reſt upon the lot of the righteous, &c] Which, according to Kimchi, is Jeruſalem; but Aben Ezra interprets it of the Iſraelites that inherit the land. And the people of God are no doubt deſigned; the Lord's juſtified and choſen ones, his portion, and the lot of his inheritance; and all that belong unto them, their perſons, families, eſtates and good name: in all which they are ſometimes oppreſſed and afflicted by wicked men; who are a rod of correction in the hand of the Lord, the rod of men with which he chaſtiſes them; but this ſhall not always continue: ſo the word is uſed for a rod of correction, Prov. xxii. 15. It ſometimes ſignifies a ſcepter; an enſign of power and government, Gen. xlix. 10. and here may intend the nations of the world, as Aben Ezra interprets it; or the antichriſtian ſtates, prevailing and ruling over the people of God in a tyrannical manner, which ſhall not always laſt; the reign of Antichriſt will come to an end, and the Lord will deſtroy him with the rod of his mouth. It ſometimes ſignifies a tribe; and the Syriac verſion ſeems ſo to take it here, "the tribe of the "wicked ſhall not reſt in the part of the righteous;" they ſhall no more dwell among them, leſt, being led by their example, they ſhould learn their works, and do as they do; ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi. But rather, with Guſſetius[o], this is to be underſtood of a meaſuring rod; laid not on perſons, but on lands and eſtates; and beſt agrees with the lot, inheritance and eſtate of the righteous; and may ſignify, that though wicked men unjuſtly ſeize upon and retain the farms, poſſeſſions and eſtates of good men, as if they were aſſigned to them by the meaſuring line; yet ſhould not hold them long, or always. Leſt the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity; for the righteous are not perfect in this life: they are not without ſin, nor do they live without the commiſſion of it; and may be under temptation, by long afflictions and oppreſſions, and ſeeing the wicked proſper, to deſert their profeſſion of religion, and forſake the ways of God, and join with the wicked, and commit iniquity as they do; and therefore to prevent this, the Lord will not ſuffer them always to be under affliction and oppreſſion; ſee Pſal. xxxvii. 8. and lxxiii. 2, 3, 13, 14. Iſa. lvii. 16. Hoſ. vii. 9. or them and theirs to be always in the hand of the enemy.

℣. 4. Do good, O Lord, unto thoſe that be good, &c.] That are made ſo by the Spirit and grace of God; for none are naturally good, but evil; only ſuch who are regenerated and made new creatures, who have a good work of grace begun in them; who have the good Spirit of God, and his good graces, and the good word of God in them, and are filled with all goodneſs; and which is known by the good fruits which they bear, or the good works done by them. For theſe the pſalmiſt prays the Lord would do good to them, not only in a providential way, as he does to all; but in a way of ſpecial grace, beſtowing the bleſſings of his goodneſs on them, and cauſing all things to work for their good: and as ſaints ſhould pray for one another, or ſupplication ſhould be made for all ſaints, ſuch a prayer as this may be the prayer of faith; for it is not to be doubted, but God will do good to thoſe he makes good. Aben Ezra ſays, this may be conſidered either as a prayer or a prophecy; it may have reſpect unto the church in the latter day, and to the good things ſpoken of concerning it; which God will accompliſh in due time, and ſhould be prayed for; ſee Pſal. li. 18. And to them that are upright in their hearts; which is a further deſcription of good men, from the integrity and ſincerity of their hearts; who do all they do, before God and men, in the uprightneſs of their ſouls, cordially and ſincerely, from right principles, and with right views.

℣. 5. As for ſuch as turn aſide unto their crooked ways, &c.] The ways of ſin, immorality or error; which are crooked ways, not agreeing with the word of God, the rule of faith and practice. This ſeems to deſign not openly profane ſinners, who have always lived in a courſe of ſin and wickedneſs; but carnal profeſſors, who, through affliction and perſecution becauſe of the word, are offended, and deſert the good ways of God; and turn from the holy commandment, word and ordinances, they have profeſſionally embraced. The Lord ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity; the Targum adds, "to "hell." Theſe hypocrites ſhall be led forth by the Lord with abandoned ſinners, like malefactors to the place of execution; when he ſhall bid them depart from him, and they ſhall go into everlaſting fire; and if there is any place in hell hotter than another, thoſe ſhall have it; ſee Matt. vii. 23. and xxv. 41. and xxiv. 51. But peace ſhall be upon Iſrael; upon every true Iſraelite, upon the whole Iſrael of God; the apoſtle ſeems to have reſpect to this paſſage in Gal. vi. 16. ſuch ſhall have ſpiritual peace in their hearts now, and eternal peace hereafter. The words may be read either as a prayer that it might be, or as a prophecy that it ſhould be; and may have regard unto the latter day, when all the enemies of Chriſt and his church ſhall be deſtroyed, and there ſhall be abundance of peace, ſo long as the moon endures, Pſal. lxxii. 8. Aben Ezra obſerves, that the pſalmiſt prays that God would remove the wicked far off, and then there would be peace in Iſrael; and to the ſame purpoſe Arama and Kimchi interpret it.

PSALM CXXVI.

A ſong of degrees.

THIS pſalm is generally thought to have been written by Ezra, or ſome good man returned from the Babyloniſh captivity, and on account of it: the inſcription in the Syriac verſion of it, beſides obſerving it to be a ſong of degrees or aſcents, and without a name, is, "It is ſaid of "Haggai and Zechariah, who came up out of Babylon with the captives; but ſpiritually; and it "is an expectation of good things to come." It may have reſpect to redemption by the Meſſiah; and the converſion of the Jews in the latter day.

℣. 1. When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, &c.] Or returned the Jews from their captivity in Babylon; who are called Zion, from the city of David, built on mount Zion, which was in Judea, and adjoined to Jeruſalem, the metropolis of the kingdom; and becauſe they were the godly who were concerned for Zion in a ſpiritual ſenſe, or the church of God, and the intereſt of religion, whoſe ſpirits the Lord ſtirred up to come out of Babylon, upon the proclamation by Cyrus, when thoſe that were more worldly and carnal ſtayed behind; as alſo, becauſe the chief mercy in returning the captives, was the rebuilding the temple on mount Zion, and the reſtoration of religious worſhip; which gave the religious captives in Babylon great concern, Pſal. cxxxvii. 1—3. This deliverance of the captives, though it was by Cyrus as an inſtrument, yet it was the Lord's work; which he employed him in, and ſtirred him up to do, and therefore is aſcribed to him. And though this is expreſſed in the paſt tenſe, yet it may be put for the future; and be conſidered as a prophecy of it, and which the following word ſeems to confirm; and eſpecially the prayer, ℣. 4. for the return of the captivity, ſeems to require it ſhould: and may not only literally reſpect the return of the captives in Babylon, but the converſion of the Jews in the latter day, and their deliverance from their preſent captivity; which is expreſſed ſometimes by the Lord's bringing again Zion, and returning the captivity of the Jews, and their being turned to the Lord, Iſa. lii. 8. Jer. xxx. 3, 18. 2 Cor. iii. 16. and may be applied to ſpiritual and eternal redemption by Chriſt, of which the deliverance from Babylon was a type; and is ſometimes expreſſed in the ſame language, Pſal. xiv. 7. Jer. xxxi. 22, 23. and the people redeemed are often ſignified by Zion, and are by nature captives to ſin, Satan, and the law; from whence they are redeemed by Chriſt, whoſe work alone it is, Iſa. i. 27. and lix. 20. We were like them that dream; or ſhall be[p]; that is, like perſons that know not whether they are aſleep or awake; and whether what they ſee and enjoy, is in reality or only a viſion, as Peter's deliverance from priſon was to him, Acts xii. 9. When the proclamation by Cyrus was firſt heard of by the Jews, and they had their liberty upon it, they could hardly tell whether it was a real thing or a viſion, and could ſcarcely believe it for joy; it ſeemed too good news to be true, as the news of Joſeph's being alive was to Jacob, Gen. xlv. 26. and ſo the appearance of Chriſt, his reſurrection, and redemption by him, were to the diſciples, Luke xxiv. 11, 21, 41. The Targum is, "we were like the ſick that are recovered;" which ſenſe the word has in Job xxxix 4. Iſa. xxxviii. 16. and will be the caſe of the Jews, when they are converted; who will be recovered out of the ſick ſtate and condition in which they now are, and have all their diſeaſes healed, and ſins forgiven; yea, their converſion will be as life from the dead, a reſurrection of them from their graves, Rom. xi. 15. Ezek. xxxvii. 11, 12. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, render it, as thoſe that are comforted; and the Syriac verſion, as thoſe that rejoice; each of the ſeaſons mentioned being times of comfort and joy: Joſeph Kimchi interprets it of the paſſing away and forgetfulneſs of affliction and trouble at the time of redemption, like a dream that flies away upon awaking.

℣. 2. Then was our mouth filled with laughter, &c.] Who before mourned, and hung their harps on the willows, and could not ſing the Lord's ſong in a ſtrange land; but now, as their hearts were filled with joy, this was externally and viſibly ſeen in their countenances, and expreſſed with their mouths and by outward geſtures; it was ſo great, they could not contain it, to which reſpect is had, Iſa. xxxv. 10. It may be rendered, then ſhall our mouth be filled with laughter[q]; that is, when we awake, ſays Arama; or rather, when the captivity is returned, either in a literal or in a ſpiritual ſenſe, both being matter of great joy: the Midraſh ſays, this will be in the world to come, and not in this. And our tongue with ſinging; the praiſes of God, and the ſongs of Zion. Then ſaid they among the heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them; it was taken notice of by the Chaldeans, among whom they had been captives, and by all the nations round about: and it was wonderful to them, that Cyrus, an heathen prince, of his own motion and will, ſhould at once, and without any price or reward, let them go, and ſend them into their own country to rebuild their temple; and with them, the veſſels of the Lord's houſe, that had been taken away by the king of Babylon; and order men to help them, with gold and ſilver, and goods and cattle, Ezra i. 1—11. Likewiſe the converſion of the Jews, and the reſtoration of them to their own land in the latter day, will be obſerved by the Gentiles with wonder, and as the work of God, Ezek. xxxvi. 35, 36. and xxxvii. 21, 28.

℣. 3. The Lord hath done great things for us, &c.] Theſe words are generally ſuppoſed to be the words of the Jews, taking up thoſe of the Gentiles, and confirming them; acknowledging that the Lord had done great things for them indeed; which, had they not owned, they would have been exceeding ungrateful; had they been ſilent concerning them, the ſtones would have cried out, and the very heathens condemned them. But I ſee not why they may not be thought to be the words of thoſe among the heathens continued; declaring that the great things done, were not for the Jews only, but for them alſo; as the great redemption by Chriſt, is of perſons out of every tongue, people and nation; for he is the propitiation, not for the Jews only, but for the ſins of the whole world; and having this in view, thus they expreſs themſelves. The work of redemption is a great thing of itſelf; the produce of great wiſdom; the effect of great love; procured at a great price, for great ſinners, by a great Saviour; and is not only a deliverance from ſin, Satan, and the law; but contains many great and glorious bleſſings in it, as juſtification, remiſſion of ſins, adoption and eternal life. Whereof we are glad; that thoſe great things are done without us, finiſhed by the Redeemer himſelf; that they are ſo great and glorious, ſo rich and plenteous, ſo full and free, and ſuitable to us; and done for us ſinners of the Gentiles, ſo unworthy of them, who are by nature children of wrath as others.

℣. 4. Turn again our captivity, O Lord, &c.] This prayer for the return of the captivity, ſhews, that it was not as yet: though ſome think that this is a petition of thoſe that were returned from captivity, for thoſe of their brethren that ſtayed behind; who, enjoying the ſweets of their liberty, pray for their brethren to come and ſhare with them, that ſo the mercy and bleſſing might be completed. This may very well be conſidered as a petition; either for the coming of the Redeemer, and redemption by him from the captivity of ſin, and Satan, and the law; or for the converſion of the Jews in the latter day. Either of which would be, As the ſtreams in the ſouth; as great and wonderful a work as cauſing rivers to be in dry places, and as grateful and acceptable as brooks and ſtreams of water in ſouthern countries: or like ſtreams produced by the ſouth-wind, which brings rain, and melts the ſnow from the hills; which, running into the vallies, cauſe flows of water in great abundance: and ſo may denote the abundance of thoſe that ſhould ſhare in the bleſſings of converſion, redemption and ſalvation; as well as the wonderfulneſs and acceptableneſs of them; ſee Iſa. xli. 18. and xliii. 19. and xxxii. 2. The Targum ſeems to underſtand it of the change made upon them, like that made on the earth by thoſe; paraphraſing the words, "as the land is turned, when ſtreams of water flow out in a time of drought." The alluſion ſeems to be to Judea, lying ſouth of Babylon; and to the ſouthern parts of Judea, which were dry; ſee Joſh. xv. 19.

℣. 5. They that ſow in tears, ſhall reap in joy.] A proverbial expreſſion, encouraging faith in prayer put up for the return of the captivity, whether in a literal or ſpiritual ſenſe. Praying or ſeeking the Lord, is ſowing in righteouſneſs, Hoſ. x. 12. which is often attended with tears and weeping; the iſſue of them is not always ſeen ſoon: theſe, like ſeed, lie buried under the clods, but take effect and will riſe up in due time: ſaints ſhould wait patiently for a return of them, as the huſbandman for the fruits of the earth; in due time they will produce a large crop of bleſſings, a plentiful harveſt, which the praying ſaint will reap with joy; as thoſe that prayed and waited for the redemption in Jeruſalem; and as thoſe that pray for the latter-day-glory, the converſion of the Jews, the fulneſs of the Gentiles, and the deſtruction of Antichriſt; the ſouls under the altar have been ſowing in tears, but ere long they will reap in joy, Rev. vi. 9. and xix. 1, 2. It may be applied to the ſtate and condition of ſaints in common in this life; now is their ſowing-time, and careful they ſhould be that they ſow not to the fleſh, but to the Spirit: and a ſorrowful time it is, on account of inward corruptions, Satan's temptations, divine deſertions, and the imperfection of their ſervices; but ere long they will reap life everlaſting, reap in joy, and be in the fulneſs of it; now they weep, then they ſhall rejoice; now they mourn, then they ſhall be comforted.

℣. 6. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious ſeed, &c.] Which he ſows in tears. This is but a repetition and confirmation of what is before expreſſed in different words; and may be applied, as to a praying ſaint, ſo to a faithful preacher of the word. The word is the precious ſeed which he bears, which he takes out of the granaries of the ſcriptures; and carries from place to place, and ſcatters and ſows, Luke viii. 11. compared to ſeed, becauſe of its meanneſs in the eyes of thoſe that know it not; becauſe of its generative virtue and increaſe, which it has from God, and which, unleſs ſown in the earth, produces no fruit: and it is called precious ſeed, becauſe either bought at a great price, when grain is dear; or becauſe it uſually is the choiceſt wheat that is the ſowing ſeed; and ſo may denote the preciouſneſs and value of the goſpel, diſpenſed by Chriſt's faithful miniſters, which is called a ſowing of ſpiritual things, 1 Cor. ix. 11. which ſhould be done plentifully and conſtantly, and with the ſame ſort of ſeed or doctrine, and which requires art and ſkill; and is often performed weeping or with tears, becauſe of their own inſufficiency, through fear of ſucceſs, and through want of it; and becauſe of the badneſs of the ground, the hardneſs of mens hearts they have to do with. The alluſion ſeems to be to a poor huſbandman, that has got but little ſeed to ſow, and this bought at a dear rate; and which he buries under the clods, and fears it will riſe no more; and weeps as he ſows, becauſe of the badneſs of the weather, or of the ſoil, doubting of ſucceſs. Aben Ezra, by the words rendered precious ſeed; or, as they may be, a draught of ſeed[r]; underſtands the veſſel in which the ſower carries his ſeed, the ſeed-baſket, from whence he draws and takes out the ſeed, and ſcatters it; ſee Amos ix. 13. ſo the Targum, "bearing a tray of ſowing corn." Shall doubtleſs come again with rejoicing, bringing his ſheaves with him; the ſeed he has been to and fro in ſowing, ſprings up under a divine bleſſing; and beyond his expectation and fears, produces a large and plentiful crop; which he reaps, and returns home, not with his arms full of ſheaves only, but with his cart laden with them: ſo a faithful miniſter, ſooner or later, is bleſſed with converts, who will be his joy and crown of rejoicing another day; ſee John iv. 35, 38. 2 Theſſ. ii. 19, 20.

PSALM CXXVII.

A ſong of degrees for Solomon.

THIS pſalm was written for Solomon; that is, for the ſake of Solomon, as Aben Ezra interprets it; or concerning Solomon, as Jarchi: and ſo the Syriac title, "It was ſaid by David concerning Solomon." Perhaps it was compoſed by David, after Nathan had informed him, that not he, but his ſon Solomon, ſhould build a temple for the Lord; and when he had made proviſion of gold and ſilver, and other things for it, and had given the pattern of it to his ſon; and encouraged and animated him to it, aſſuring him, that the Lord would be with him until he had finiſhed it; and prayed that God would give him a perfect heart to do it; for he knew the whole ſucceſs depended upon the Lord, notwithſtanding all the preparations he had made: hence the pſalm begins, Except the Lord build the houſe; ſee 1 Chron. xxviii. 20. and xxix. 19. Theodoret is of opinion, it was written for Zorobabel, and reſpects the building of the ſecond temple by him; who is called Solomon, becauſe he deſcended from him, and reſtored his work; but Zorobabel, though he was of the houſe of David, yet not in the line of Solomon, but of Nathan, Luke iii. 27, 31. The inſcription of the Syriac verſion ſeems to agree with this conjecture; which adds, to what is before obſerved, "and it is alſo ſaid concerning Haggai and Zechariah, who were ſolicitous for the building of the temple." And Arama the Jew ſays, that it is poſſible it may be ſaid of the building of the ſecond temple, and the walls of Jeruſalem. But others think it is a compoſition of Solomon himſelf; who might ſet out upon the building of the temple with this ſong, as he made a prayer at the dedication of it when finiſhed: and the Targum renders it, "a ſong by the hand of Solomon;" and our tranſlators for the moſt part render the particle of, which they here tranſlate for, as of David, in many places. And ſo accordingly it may be rendered here of Solomon[s], or Solomon's, and be one of the thouſand and five ſongs he made; which, beſides that called the ſong of Solomon, is the only one extant: and the doctrine of it agrees with many things in the books of Proverbs and Eccleſiaſtes; that all things depend upon the providence and bleſſing of God, without which all the endeavours of men are in vain. Kimchi thinks the Meſſiah is meant, who is often called Solomon in the book of Canticles, Cant. iii. 7, 11. and viii. 11, 12. and to whom many paſſages in it may be applied.

[r] משך הורע tractionem ſeminis, Montanus, Piſcator, Gejerus.

℣. 1. Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it, &c.] Whether it be underſtood literally of an artificial houſe, as Solomon's own houſe; or the houſe of the Lord, or any other; let a man be ever ſo bent upon building one, or have ever ſo much ſkill in drawing the plan of it; or be ever ſo well provided to go through the expence of it, or have ever ſo many hands employed in it; yet if the Lord does not give ſucceſs, it will all be in vain; the building will fall down, or be conſumed by fire before it is finiſhed; or by one providence or another he will be obliged to deſiſt from it, as in the caſe of the builders of the tower and city of Babel. Or whether it be underſtood of a family, which is built up by an increaſe and multiplication of children; ſo Leah and Rachel built up the houſe of Iſrael, Ruth iv. 11. this depends upon the providence of God; for, as it is after ſaid, children are an heritage of the Lord. Or whether it be underſtood, figuratively and myſtically, of the church of God, the houſe of the living God; the houſe of Chriſt, a ſpiritual one; a goſpel church, whoſe materials are lively ſtones, or true believers. Now there are builders in this houſe, ſome indeed very bad ones; and it is no wonder that they labour in vain, who reject and lay aſide the foundation and corner-ſtone, Chriſt; who deny his deity, deſpiſe his righteouſneſs; or mix grace and works, law and goſpel together, and pluck down with one hand what they build with another: and though there are others that are good ones, and lay the foundation, Chriſt; and build on this foundation precious truths, comparable to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; miniſter the word, and adminiſter the ordinances, truly and faithfully; and in all direct to Chriſt for grace, ſtrength, peace, comfort, and eternal life; ſpeak to edification, and are the means of reviving the graces of God's people, and of eſtabliſhing their ſouls; as well as of the converſion of ſinners, whereby the houſe of God is built up; yet if the Lord does not ſucceed their miniſtrations, all is in vain. For the principal builder is God, Father, Son and Spirit; this is moſtly applied to the ſecond perſon, the Word and wiſdom of God, Prov. ix. 1. Zech. vi. 12, 13. Matt. xvi. 18. but not to the excluſion of the Father, who has laid in Zion a foundation, a precious corner-ſtone, and builds ſouls on it; nor of the Spirit, through whom ſaints are built up an habitation for God, Iſa. xxviii. 16. Eph. ii. 22. The Targum here is, "if the Word of the Lord does not build the city." It follows, Except the Lord keep the city; the city Jeruſalem, as the Targum; who alſo here makes mention of the Word of the Lord; or any other city: God, with the heathens[t], was called πολιευς, the keeper of cities; this title is given to Minerva by Pindar[u], and is one of Jupiter's titles[w]. The watchman waketh but in vain; to preſerve it from riots, robberies, fires, &c. This may be applied to the church of God, the city of the living God, of which ſaints are fellow-citizens: now in this city there are watchmen, ſome indeed that are blind and aſleep, and ſo quite unfit for this office; but there are others who are awake and diligent, and watch in all things; and for the ſouls of men, and the good of the city, the church, to prevent hereſies, errors and immoralities; and yet all their watchfulneſs is in vain, unleſs the Lord keep it, who watches over his people for good, and that none hurt them; he is wakeful, never ſlumbers nor ſleeps, and conſtant night and day; and keeps his people by his power, and as tenderly as the apple of his eye.

℣. 2. It is vain for you to riſe up early, to ſit up late, &c.] A deſcription of an induſtrious and laborious perſon, who takes great pains to get a livelihood, or increaſe his ſubſtance; ſee Pſal. civ. 23. Prov. xxxi. 15, 18. which yet, as in the former inſtances, depends upon the bleſſing of divine providence, Prov. x. 4, 22. Eccl. ix. 11. For after all, it may come to nothing more at laſt than, To eat the bread of ſorrows; that is, to eat bread gotten with much ſorrow and labour; ſuch get bread, and that is all, and not that without the providence of God. For ſo he giveth his beloved ſleep; that is, the Lord: ſuch who are partakers of his grace, that fear and love him; to them, thus diligent and induſtrious, he gives not only bread to eat, but ſleep, which to a labouring man is ſweet; and having food and raiment, he gives them contentment, quietneſs and ſatisfaction of mind, which is the greateſt bleſſing of all. Sleep, even bodily ſleep, was reckoned with the very heathens a divine gift[x]. Some think reſpect is had to Solomon, whoſe name was Jedidiah, and ſignifies the beloved of the Lord, 2 Sam. xii. 24, 25. to whom God gave peace, reſt and ſafety all around; or, as others, the kingdom without labour, when Abſalom and Adonijah toiled for it: Chriſt, who is the beloved of the Lord, the Son of his love, his well-beloved Son, maybe thought of, whoſe reſt is glorious; his ſleep in the grave, where his fleſh reſted from his labours and ſufferings, in hope of the reſurrection of it: and it may be applied to all the Lord's beloved ones; to whom he gives ſpiritual reſt in this world, ſleep in the arms of Jeſus at death, and an everlaſting reſt in the world to come; all which depends not on their endeavours, but on his grace and goodneſs.

℣. 3. Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord, &c.] As all ſucceſs, ſafety, and the bleſſings of life, depend on the providence of God; ſo this very great bleſſing is a gift of his; having children, and thoſe good ones, as the Targum interprets it; for of ſuch only can it be underſtood: ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe, the children of Chriſt, the antitypical Solomon, are the gifts of his heavenly Father to him; his portion and inheritance, and a goodly heritage he eſteems them. And the fruit of the womb is his reward; fruit[y] is the ſame with children in the preceding clauſe; ſee Luke i. 42. a reward he gives to good men, not of debt, but of grace; the Targum, "a reward of good works:" ſo regenerate perſons are a reward to Chriſt, of his ſufferings and death, Iſa. liii. 10, 11.

℣. 4. As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, &c.] Are ſhot out with great ſtrength; come with much force, and do execution, and do not return in vain; with which men defend themſelves, and annoy their enemies; ſee Jer. l. 9. So are children of the youth; not young children, or children in their youth; but ſuch who are born to their parents when they are in their youth; and which are generally healthful and ſtrong, and their parents live to ſee them grown up; and who are uſeful to protect them, and defend their perſons and properties from enemies when grown old and feeble, and unable to defend themſelves: whereas children, born to them in old age, are generally unhealthy and weak; and beſides, their parents rarely live to ſee them brought up, or to be helpful to them. So Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed and offſpring, who are the dew of his youth, are ſtrong, and overcome the evil one; and are ſerviceable in the defence of his cauſe and intereſt.

℣. 5. Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them, &c.] That is, his houſe full of them; called a quiver, referring to arrows before mentioned, this being the caſe in which they are put up: to have many children was always reckoned a great temporal bleſſing and happineſs; ſee Job i. 2. Pſal. cxxviii. 3, 4, 6. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions, render it, that fills his deſire; has as many as he deſires or wiſhes for: the Targum, "who fills his ſchool of them;" ſo Jarchi interprets the children, of the diſciples of the wiſe men. It may be applied to young converts, the children of Chriſt and of the church; which, when numerous, is a bleſſing to him and her; ſee Iſa. xlix. 20, 21. and liii. 10, 11. They ſhall not be aſhamed; the father and his children, as Aben Ezra; parents rather are meant, who are not aſhamed when they have many children: with the Romans[z], thoſe that had wives and children, were preferred in honour to ſenior perſons that had none; and they that had moſt, to thoſe that had feweſt; and ſo with the Perſians; ſee the note on Eſther v. 11. But they ſhall ſpeak with the enemies in the gate; where courts of judicature were kept; and ſo the Targum, "in the gate of the houſe of "judgment." The ſenſe is, that their children ſhould ſtand and plead the cauſe of their parents againſt their adverſaries in courts of judicature; or publickly before the eyes of all, as Aben Ezra: and ſpiritually may deſign ſuch of Chriſt's ſeed; who are ſet for the defence of the goſpel, are valiant for the truth on earth, and earneſtly contend for it; meet the enemy in the gate, publickly oppoſe him, and quit themſelves like men, and are ſtrong.

PSALM CXXVIII.

A ſong of degrees.

THIS pſalm very probably was written by the ſame hand as the former, and ſeems to have ſome connexion with it; as that ſhews that all things depend on the providence and goodneſs of God; and that all bleſſings, particularly children, are the gift of God; this points out the bleſſings, civil and religious, that belong to good men; and, among the reſt, a numerous offſpring. According to the Syriac verſion, "it is ſaid concerning Zorobabel, prince of Judah; and the care of the building: and it intimates in it the calling of the Gentiles." Many things in it may be applied to Chriſt and his church.

℣. 1. Bleſſed is every one that feareth the Lord, &c.] Be he who he will; of whatſoever nation, Jew or Gentile; of whatſoever ſex, age or condition, high or low, rich or poor, Acts x. 35. ſuch a one is bleſſed now, and will be hereafter; ſee the note on Pſal. cxii. 1. That walketh in his ways; which God has preſcribed and directed his people to walk in, his ordinances and commands; which, to walk in, is both pleaſant and profitable: it ſuppoſes life, requires ſtrength and wiſdom; and is expreſſive of progreſſion, or going on and continuance in them: and where the true fear of God is, which includes every grace, and the whole of religious worſhip, there will be a conſcientious regard to the ways of God; ſuch avoid evil, and do good, becauſe of the fear of God, Job i. 1. Neh. v. 15.

℣. 2. For thou ſhalt eat the labour of thine hands, &c.] That is, thou that feareſt the Lord, and walkeſt in his ways. It is an apoſtrophe, or addreſs to ſuch, even to every one of them; inſtancing in one part of the bleſſedneſs that belongs to them, enjoyment of what their hands have laboured for; which may be underſtood both in a literal and ſpiritual ſenſe: man muſt labour, and get his bread with the ſweat of his brow; he that will not work, ſhould not eat, he that does ſhould; and a good man may have a comfortable enjoyment of the good of his labour; than which, as to temporal bleſſings, there is nothing better under the ſun, Eccl. v. 18. and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, good men labour in prayers at the throne of grace, there lifting up holy hands to God, wreſtling with him for a bleſſing, which they enjoy; they labour in attendance on the word and ordinances, for the meat which endures to everlaſting life; and they find the word and eat it, and Chriſt in it, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed; and feed by faith on it, to the joy and comfort of their ſouls. Happy ſhalt thou be, and it ſhall be well with thee; or, to thy ſoul, as the Syriac verſion; happy as to temporal things, and well as to ſpiritual ones: ſuch having an apparent ſpecial intereſt in the love, grace, mercy and delight of God; in his providence, protection and care; in the ſupplies of his grace, and in his proviſions for his people, in time and eternity. It is well with ſuch that fear God, in life and at death, at judgment and for ever: and the Targum is, "thou art bleſſed in this world, and it "ſhall be well with thee in the world to come;" and ſo Arama.

[z] A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 2. c. 15.

℣. 3. Thy wife ſhall be as a fruitful vine by the ſides of thine houſe, &c.] The vine being a weak and tender tree, which needs propping and ſupporting; and often is faſtened to the ſides of an houſe, to which the alluſion here is; whereunto it cleaves, and on which it runs up, and bears very agreeable fruit; it is properly uſed to expreſs the weakneſs and tenderneſs of the female ſex, their fruitfulneſs in bearing children, and their care of domeſtic affairs, being keepers at home; ſee 1 Pet. iii. 7. 1 Tim. v. 14. Tit. ii. 5. Kimchi obſerves, that the vine is the only tree men plant within doors; which, when it is grown up, they bring out at a hole or window of the houſe without, to have the ſun and air; and ſo its root is within the houſe, and the branches without: and he obſerves, that a modeſt woman is within the houſe, and does not go without, and is only ſeen by her huſband; but her children, like the branches of the vine, go out to work. This may be applied to Chriſt and his church; to him the other characters agree: he, as man, is one that feared the Lord; the grace of fear was in him; the ſpirit of fear reſted on him; and he was in the exerciſe of it, and walked in all the ways of the Lord, Iſa. xi. 1—3. Heb. v. 7. he now ſees and enjoys the travail or labour of his ſoul to ſatisfaction, and is made moſt bleſſed for evermore, Iſa. liii. 11. Pſal. xxi. 6. The church is the bride, the Lamb's wife, the ſpouſe of Chriſt; and may be compared to a vine, for her weakneſs in herſelf, her fruitfulneſs in grace and good works, and in bringing forth ſouls to Chriſt, through the miniſtry of the word; all which is pleaſant and grateful to him; ſee Pſal. lxxx. 14. Cant. ii. 15. and vii. 12. Thy children like olive-plants round about thy table; a numerous offspring was always accounted a very great bleſſing; and it muſt be very pleaſant to a parent to ſee his children round about his table, placed in their proper order according to their age, partaking of what it is furniſhed with: Job, in his time of proſperity, had many children; and, next to the preſence of the Almighty with him, he mentions this of his children being about him; ſee Job i. 2. and xxix. 6. This may be applied to the ſpiritual ſeed and offspring of Chriſt, which are like to olive-trees or olive-plants; to which David is compared, Pſal. lii. 8. the two anointed ones in Zech. iv. 11, 14. the two witneſſes in Rev. xi. 4. and all true believers in Chriſt may; becauſe of their excellency, theſe being choice plants; becauſe of their fruitfulneſs and beauty; becauſe of their fatneſs, and having oil in them; and becauſe of their perpetuity, being ever green; ſee Jer. xi. 16. Hoſ. xiv. 6. Now Chriſt has a table, which he has well furniſhed, at which he himſelf ſits, and places theſe his children all around; and whom he welcomes to the entertainment he makes, and takes delight and pleaſure in them, Cant. i. 12. and v. 1. Kimchi obſerves, the olive-trees do not admit of an engrafture from other trees; ſee Rom. xi. 24. and ſo this denotes the legitimacy of thoſe children, being free from all ſuſpicion of being ſpurious, being born of ſuch a wife as before deſcribed; and being green and moiſt all the year long, denotes their continuance in good works.

℣. 4. Behold, that thus ſhall the man be bleſſed that feareth the Lord.] In the manner before deſcribed, and in the inſtances already given, as well as in the following; this is ſaid to raiſe attention, and fix a ſenſe of the bleſſedneſs of ſuch perſons; and who are farther addreſſed, and pronounced happy in the next verſes.

℣. 5. The Lord ſhall bleſs thee out of Zion, &c.] The church of God, where he dwells, out of which he ſhines; even the Word of the Lord; as the Targum in the king's bible; and where he commands his bleſſings of grace to deſcend on his people, even life for evermore, Pſal. cxxxiii. 3. Here he bleſſes them with his word and ordinances, which are the goodneſs and fatneſs of his houſe, and with his preſence in them; ſo that the man that fears God is bleſſed, not only in his perſon, and in his family, but in the houſe of God; ſee Pſal. cxviii. 27. And thou ſhalt ſee the good of Jeruſalem all the days of thy life; the goodneſs of God in Jeruſalem, which is another name for the church of God; the beauty of the Lord in his houſe and ordinances; his power and his glory in the ſanctuary: or ſhould ſee the church of God in proſperous circumſtances all his days; true religion flouriſh, the power of godlineſs in the profeſſors of it; the word and ordinances bleſſed to the edification of ſaints, and many ſinners converted and gathered in. This may be applied to Chriſt, Iſa. liii. 11.

℣. 6. Yea, thou ſhalt ſee thy childrens children, &c.] A numerous race of deſcendents from him, which are the crown and glory of old men, Prov. xvii. 6. this is alſo true of Chriſt's ſpiritual children by his church in ſucceſſive ages, Iſa. lix. 21. And peace upon Iſrael; all kind of proſperity, temporal and ſpiritual; peace, and abundance of it; as will be in the latter day, in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, Pſal. lxxii. 8. It may be conſidered as a wiſh or prayer, with which the pſalm is concluded; let peace be upon Iſrael *, as in Pſal. cxxv. 5. ſee Gal. vi. 16.

PSALM CXXIX.

A ſong of degrees.

THIS pſalm was written in later times, after many of the diſtreſſes of Iſrael; very probably upon the Jews return from the Babyloniſh captivity, by Ezra, or ſome other godly perſon. Aben Ezra * שלום על ישראל pax ſit ſuper Iſraele, Cocceius; ſo Gejerus.

---

Ezra ſays the pſalmiſt ſpeaks in the language of Iſrael in captivity; and the ſame is the ſenſe of Kimchi and Arama. The Syriac inſcription is, "a "pſalm without a name, concerning the diſtreſs of "the people; but as to us, it intimates to us the "victory and triumph of the worſhippers."

℣. 1. Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth, &c.] That is, the enemies of Iſrael, afterwards called plowers. This may be underſtood of literal Iſrael, the poſterity of Jacob; whoſe youth was the beginning of their conſtitution as a nation and church, or the firſt times of it; when they were greatly diſtreſſed by their enemies, and from thenceforward; as in Egypt, where, and in places near it, they were afflicted four hundred years, according to a prophecy given to Abraham their anceſtor, and where their lives were made bitter with hard bondage; and in the times of the Judges, by ſeveral neighbouring nations, which was the time of their youth, or their ſettlement in Canaan; and afterwards in the times of their kings, particularly in the times of Ahaz king of Judah, by the Edomites and Philiſtines, and by Tiglath Pileſer, king of Aſſyria; and in the times of Hoſhea, king of Iſrael, by Salmaneſer, who carried away captive ten tribes; and in the times of Jeconiah and Zedekiah, kings of Judah, by Nebuchadnezzar, who carried captive to Babylon the tribes of Judah and Benjamin. And the pſalmiſt, by a ſpirit of prophecy, might have a farther reſpect to the diſtreſſes of Iſrael in the times of Antiochus and the Maccabees, when the temple was profaned, the altar demoliſhed, and the daily ſacrifice made to ceaſe, and many good men loſt their lives; to which times the apoſtle may be thought to have regard, Heb. xi. 35—38. and alſo to their laſt affliction by the Romans, the greateſt of all; and their preſent captivity, and deliverance from it. May Iſrael now ſay; this now refers to the time of redemption, as Arama obſerves, whether at their return from Babylon, or at their future converſion; then reviewing their former troubles ever ſince they were a people, may ſay as before. This may be applied to myſtical Iſrael, or to the church of God in goſpel-times, which in its infancy, and from its youth upwards, has been afflicted many a time, and by many enemies; firſt by the unbelieving Jews, who killed the Lord Jeſus, and perſecuted his apoſtles and members; then by Rome pagan, under the ten perſecutions of ſo many emperors; and afterwards by Rome papal, the whore of Babylon, who has many a time been drunk with the blood of the ſaints and martyrs of Jeſus. Yea, this may be applied to the Meſſiah, one of whoſe names is Iſrael, Iſa. xlix. 3. who was a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with griefs all his days, even from his youth; he was the Aijeleth-ſhahar, the hind of the morning, Pſal. xxii. title; hunted by Herod in his infancy, Matt. ii. 13. and obliged to be carried into Egypt for ſafety when a child, from whence he was called, Hoſea xi. 1. and ever after was more or leſs afflicted by his enemies, men or devils, in mind or body; and at laſt endured great ſufferings, and death itſelf. It may moreover be applied to every Iſraelite indeed, to every true believer and member of Chriſt; converſion is their time of youth; they are firſt new-born babes, and then young men; as ſoon as regenerated they are afflicted with the temptations of Satan, the reproaches and perſecutions of men; which are many, though no more than neceſſary, and it is the will of God ſhould be, and all for their good.

℣. 2. Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth, &c.] This is repeated for the confirmation of it, to excite attention to it, and to expreſs the vehement affection of the ſpeaker. Yet they have not prevailed againſt me; the Egyptians could not prevail againſt literal Iſrael, the more they were afflicted the more they grew and multiplied; in the times of the Judges, one after another were raiſed up as deliverers of them; neither the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, nor Romans, nor any other have been able to cut them off from being a nation; they continue to this day: the enemies of the church of Chriſt, even the gates of hell have not been able to prevail againſt it, being built upon a rock, ſo as to extirpate and deſtroy it, neither by open and cruel perſecutors, nor by ſecret and fraudulent heretics; nor could the enemies of the Meſſiah prevail againſt him, for though they brought him to the duſt of death they could not hold him in it; and they themſelves, through his death, were conquered by him, as ſin, Satan, the world, and death itſelf; nor can the enemies of the ſaints prevail againſt them, God being on their ſide, Chriſt making them more than conquerors, the Spirit in them being greater than he that is in the world.

℣. 3. The plowers plowed upon my back, &c.] Sinners, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions render it; ſuch that plow iniquity and ſow wickedneſs, Job iv. 8. Hoſea x. 13. which may be underſtood of their carrying Iſrael captive, when they put yokes and bonds upon their necks, as upon oxen when they plow, as Arama interprets it; or it may deſign the deſtruction of their high places, ſignified by the back, ſuch as the temple, the royal palace, and houſes of their nobles burnt with fire; yea, it was predicted that Zion ſhould be plowed as a field, Mic. iii. 12. and the Jews ſay that Turnus Rufus, the Roman general, as they call him, did plow up Jeruſalem. The Syriac verſion is, they whipped their whips or ſcourges; with which many of the Iſraelites were ſcourged in the times of the Maccabees, Heb. xi. 36. And the Meſſiah himſelf, who gave his back to the ſmiters, and was buffeted and ſcourged by them, Iſa. l. 6. Matt. xxvii. 26. and many of his apoſtles and followers, Matt. x. 17. 2 Cor. xi. 23—25. The Targum renders it "upon my body;" and Aben Ezra ſays, the phraſe is expreſſive of contempt and humiliation, and compares with it Iſa. li. 23. They made long their furrows; which ſignify afflictions, and the pain their enemies put them to, and the diſtreſs they gave them; as no affliction is joyous but grievous, but like the rending and tearing up the earth with the plough; and alſo the length and duration of afflictions; ſuch were the afflictions of Iſrael in Egypt and in Babylon, and of the church of God under Rome pagan and papal; but as the longeſt furrows have an end, ſo have the moſt laſting afflictions. The Syriac verſion is, they prolonged their humiliation, or affliction; Kimchi ſays the meaning is, "they would give us no reſt from ſer"vitude and bondage."

℣. 4. The Lord is righteous, &c.] Or gracious and merciful; hence acts of mercy are called righteouſneſs in the Hebrew language; the Lord has compaſſion on his people under their afflictions and delivers them; or is faithful to his promiſes of ſalvation to them, and juſt and righteous to render tribulation to them that trouble them, and take vengeance upon them. He hath cut aſunder the cords of the wicked; alluding to the cords with which the plough is faſtened to the oxen, which being cut they cannot go on plowing; or to the cords of whips, which when cut cannot be uſed to any purpoſe: it deſigns the breaking of the confederacies of wicked men againſt the people of God; the confounding their counſels and ſchemes, and diſappointing their devices; ſo that they cannot perform their enterprizes, or carry their deſigns into execution, or go on with and finiſh their intentions. The Targum renders it, "the chains of the wicked;" ſee Iſa. v. 18.

℣. 5. Let them all be confounded, &c.] Or aſhamed; as all the enemies of God's people will be ſooner or later, either in this world, or however when Chriſt ſhall come in the clouds of heaven; or let them be diſappointed of their views, aims, and ends, when they will be confounded, as diſappointed perſons are. And turned back; from purſuing their deſigns and accompliſhing them; as the Aſſyrian monarch was, who had a hook put into his noſe, and a bridle in his lips, and was turned back by the way he came, Iſa. xxxvii. 29. That hate Zion; the inhabitants of Zion, who are called out of the world, and ſeparated from the men of it, and therefore hated by them; the king of Zion, the Meſſiah, whom they will not have to reign over them; the doctrines of the goſpel, the word that comes out of Zion, to which they are utter enemies; and the laws and ordinances of Zion, the diſcipline of God's houſe, which they cannot bear to be under and ſubmit unto.

℣. 6. Let them be as the graſs upon the houſe-tops, &c.] The tops of the houſes in Judea were flat, and ſo graſs grew upon them, being covered with plaiſter of terrace; though it was but ſmall and weak, and being on high was expoſed to the ſcorching ſun and ſoon withered[b]; and Menochius ſays[c], he ſaw ſuch roofs in the iſland of Corſica, flat, and having earth upon them, ſmoothed and preſſed, on which graſs grew of its own accord; but being burnt up in ſummer-time by the ſun, ſoon withered, as here ſaid. But what Olaus Magnus[d] relates, is ſomewhat extraordinary; that, in the northern Gothic countries, they feed their cattle on the tops of houſes, eſpecially in a time of ſiege: he deſcribes their houſes as built of ſtone, high and large, and covered with rafters of fir and bark of birch; upon which is laid graſs-earth, cut out of the fields four-ſquare, and ſowed with barley or oats, ſo that their roofs look like green meadows; and that what is ſown, and the graſs that grows thereon might not wither before plucked up, they very conſtantly and diligently water it: but in the eaſtern countries, which are hot, and have but little rain, graſs could not retain its verdure long, as follows. Which withereth afore it groweth up; to any height, the uſual height of graſs; or, before it is plucked up, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions; and ſo Jarchi. And this was their uſual way of gathering in their corn; and which continues to this day, as Mr Maundrel[e] affirms, who was an eye-witneſs to it in many places; where they plucked it up by handfuls from the roots, leaving the moſt fruitful fields as naked as if nothing had grown on them; and this they did for the ſake of the ſtraw, which was generally very ſhort, and neceſſary for the ſuſtenance of cattle; to which he thinks there is here a manifeſt alluſion; but not corn, but graſs is here ſpoken of. The Targum is, "before it flouriſheth, an eaſt-wind cometh, blows upon it, and it is withered;" and to the ſame purpoſe the Syriac verſion, "which when the wind comes upon it, it fades and withers." This expreſſes the high and elevated ſtate and condition of wicked men, the pride and haughtineſs of their hearts; yet their weakneſs and frailty, and the danger they are expoſed unto, through the wrath and vengeance of God upon them; when they conſume and wither away like graſs on the houſe-tops, and never come to the happineſs they are hoping and wiſhing for; ſee Iſa. xxxvii. 27.

℣. 7. Wherewith the mower filleth not his hand, &c.] Such graſs never riſes high enough to be mowed, nor is of that account to have ſuch pains taken with it; nor the quantity ſo large, as to fill a mower's hand, and carry it away in his arms. Nor he that bindeth ſheaves, his boſom; when corn is mowed or reaped, the binders come and gather it up in their arms, and bind it in ſheaves, and then bring it into the barn; but nothing of this kind is done with graſs on the houſe-tops. This repreſents the inſignificancy and worthleſſneſs of wicked men; who, when the harveſt comes, the end of the world, will not be gathered in by the reapers, the angels, into Chriſt's garner, into heaven, as the wheat, the righteous will; but, like the tares and chaff, will be caſt into unquenchable fire.

℣. 8. Neither do they which go by ſay, The bleſſing of the Lord be upon you, &c.] As was uſual with paſſengers, when they went by where mowers, and reapers and binders, were at work in the field in harveſt-time; who uſed to wiſh the preſence and bleſſing of God with them, and upon their labours; and who returned the ſalutation, as may be ſeen in Boaz and his reapers, Ruth ii. 4. We bleſs you in the name of the Lord; which is either a continuation of the bleſſing of the paſſengers, or the anſwer of the reapers to them; ſo the Targum, "nor do they anſwer them, We bleſs you, &c." The ſenſe is, that thoſe wicked men would have no bleſſing on them, from God nor men; that no god-ſpeed would be wiſhed them; but that they were like the earth, that is covered with briars and thorns; which is nigh unto curſing, and its end to be burned.

PSALM CXXX.

A ſong of degrees.

THIS pſalm is by ſome thought to have been written by David; either when perſecuted by Saul, and in great diſtreſs, and fearful he ſhould periſh by him; or elſe, when in great diſtreſs of mind becauſe of ſin, after the affair of Bathſheba; and it is reckoned therefore among the penitential pſalms. Though others think it was written by Ezra, or ſome other godly perſon in the captivity; and Aben Ezra and R. Obadiah interpret it, of Iſrael in captivity. The Syriac inſcription is, "one of the pſalms of aſcenſion: it is ſaid concerning Nehemiah the prieſt (or rather the prince or governor, ſince Nehemiah was no prieſt); and it intimates in it the prayer of the martyrs." It may be applied to any perſon in diſtreſs, outward or inward; applying to God for help and deliverance, for pardoning grace and mercy; encouraging himſelf and others to hope for it.

[d] De Ritu Gent. Septent. l. 9. c. 12.

[e] Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem, p. 144. ed. 7.

℣. 1. Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Lord.] Out of deep waters, out of the depths of the ſea; not literally, as Jonah, who really was there, and from thence cried unto the Lord, Jonah ii. 2—6. but figuratively; meaning that he had been in the depths of ſin, or brought into a low eſtate by it, as all men are: they are brought into debt by it, and ſo to a priſon, the priſon of the law, to be under its ſentence of curſe and condemnation; to a ditch, a horrible pit, a pit wherein is no water, and out of which men cannot extricate themſelves; to a dunghil, to the extremeſt poverty and beggary; to a dungeon, a ſtate of thraldom, bondage and captivity; into an hopeleſs and helpleſs condition. The depths the pſalmiſt was now in, were a deep ſenſe of ſin, under which he lay, and which brought him low; as every man is low in his own eyes, when he has a thorough ſenſe of ſin; then he ſees himſelf unworthy of any favour from God, deſerving of his wrath and diſpleaſure; as a polluted, guilty creature, loathſome and abominable; as wretched and undone in himſelf; as the chief of ſinners, more brutiſh than any man, and as a beaſt before the Lord: but then, though the pſalmiſt was in the depths of diſtreſs for ſin, yet not in the depths of deſpair; he cried to God, he hoped in him, and believed there was pardon with him: or he might be in the depths of afflictions; which are ſometimes, becauſe of the greatneſs of them, compared to deep waters; to the deep waters of the ſea, which threaten to overflow and overwhelm, but ſhall not; ſee Pſal. xlii. 7. and lxix. 1, 2. and lxxxviii. 6. Iſa. xliii. 2. and in ſuch circumſtances the pſalmiſt cried to God for help and deliverance; not to man, whoſe help is vain; but to God, who is able to ſave, and is a preſent help in time of need. Theodoret underſtands this of the pſalmiſt's crying to God from the bottom of his heart, in the ſincerity of his ſoul; and ſo his cry is oppoſed to feigned and hypocritical prayers.

℣. 2. Lord, hear my voice, &c.] His prayer, which was vocal: God is a God hearing prayer; ſometimes his people think he does not hear them; but he always does, and in his own time anſwers; for to hear prayer with him is to anſwer it; which he does likewiſe in his own way as well as time; and not always in the way, and at the time, his people would have him. Let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my ſupplications; his prayers put up in a humble, ſuppliant manner, for grace and mercy; not pleading merit and righteouſneſs: theſe he deſires God would hearken to and hear, liſten unto, bow and incline his ears, as he is ſometimes ſaid to do; which is a wonderful inſtance of his condeſcenſion.

℣. 3. If thou, Lord, ſhouldſt mark iniquities, &c.] Or obſerve [f] them. Not but that God does obſerve the ſins of men: he ſees all the evil actions of bad men done in the dark, which cannot hide them from him; and all the iniquities of good men, ſo as to correct and chaſtiſe for them, but not with his eye of vindictive juſtice. Or keep [g] them; ſhould he keep a watchful eye over them, make ſtrict inſpection into them, enter into a critical examination of them, and of all their aggravated circumſtances; ſhould he keep them in mind and memory, retain them in the book of his remembrance; ſhould he lay them up, and keep them ſealed among his ſtores, in order to be brought to light, and brought out as charges another day, and to the condemnation of men; ſhould he ſet them before him in the light of his countenance, and not caſt them behind his back and into the depths of the ſea; ſhould he viſit for them in a way of wrath, or enter into judgment on account of them, with men in their own perſons; demanding ſatisfaction for them at their own hands, without any regard to the ſacrifice and ſatisfaction of his Son; all a man's righteouſneſs, repentance, humiliation and tears, would ſtand him in no ſtead, would not anſwer for him, or atone for his ſins; ſtill his iniquities would remain marked before God; the conſequence of which would be eternal damnation, Jer. ii. 22. O Lord, who ſhall ſtand? Not one; ſince all are ſinners. The Arabic verſion adds, before thee; in his preſence; in the houſe and courts of God, there to miniſter before him; to pray and praiſe, to preach and hear: or at his bar hereafter, with any boldneſs and confidence; ſo as to litigate the point with him in his court of judicature, before angels and men, and ſo as to carry the cauſe; the wicked ſhall not ſtand in judgment, Pſal. i. 5. Or who can ſtand before his vindictive juſtice? or bear his wrath and vengeance? No one can. See Nahum i. 6. Mal. iii. 2. Rev. vi. 17.

℣. 4. But there is forgiveneſs with thee, &c.] And with God only; not with angels, nor any of the ſons of men; and which flows from his grace and mercy, through the blood of his Son. It appears to be with him by his promiſe of it in covenant; by appointing his Son to ſhed his blood for it, and exalting him as a Saviour to give it; by proclaiming it in the goſpel; and by the numerous inſtances of it, both under the Old and under the New-Teſtament. Or, there is a propitiation with thee; as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it: God had found out Chriſt to be the propitiatory ſacrifice for ſin, and the ranſom of his people; and ſet him forth in his purpoſes and decrees for that end; and which was made known by the ſacrifices of the law typical of it; and in the fulneſs of time he ſent him to be the propitiation for it, and he is become ſo; and has made reconciliation for ſin, and reconciled his people to God by the ſufferings of death; and reconciled all the divine perfections, of juſtice and holineſs, grace and mercy together, in the ſalvation of men; and is now an advocate with the Father for them, pleading the propitiatory ſacrifice of himſelf before him. That thou mayſt be feared; were it not for pardon, and the hope of it, men would be deſperate; and having no hope, would reſolve upon taking their ſwing of ſin, and be intirely negligent of the worſhip and ſervice of God: was there no forgiveneſs of ſin, there would be no more fear of God among men than there is among devils, for whom there is no forgiveneſs; there might be dread and trembling, as among them, but no godly fear: yea, if God was ſtrictly to mark iniquity, and not pardon it, there would be none to fear him, all muſt be condemned and cut off by him; but in order to ſecure and preſerve his fear among men, he has taken the ſtep he has, to pardon ſin through the propitiatory ſacrifice of his Son; and a diſcovery, and an application of this grace, teaches men to fear to offend him; influences them to ſerve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear, and engages them to fear him and his goodneſs, and him for his goodneſs-ſake, Titus ii. 11, 12. Heb. xii. 28. Hoſea iii. 5.

℣. 5. I wait for the Lord, &c.] For his gracious preſence and the light of his countenance, being in darkneſs, as well as in the deeps; for his ſalvation and deliverance out of the depths of diſtreſs; for an anſwer of prayer, having cried unto him for application of pardoning grace he had ſome view and hopes of; and for the performance of promiſes the Lord had made to him; and for eternal glory and happineſs: all which are to be patiently and quietly waited for, God having his ſet time to do them; and may be confidently expected, ſince he is gracious and merciful, wiſe and powerful, faithful and immutable. David might alſo be waiting for the coming of Chriſt, as all the Old-Teſtament-ſaints did; through whom all the above things are enjoyed. My ſoul doth wait; which ſhews that this was not mere bodily ſervice, or waiting upon God and for him in an external way; but expreſſes the intenſeneſs of his mind, the earneſt deſires of his heart after God, his affection for him, and the exerciſe of all other graces on him; his whole ſoul, and all the powers of it, were engaged in this work. And in his word do I hope; both in his eſſential Word the Meſſiah, who was the hope of Iſrael, as well as the Saviour of them; the object, ground and foundation of hope, of all bleſſings, of grace and of glory: and in his word of promiſe concerning the coming of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; concerning the pardon of ſin through him, and eternal life by him; as well as in many other ſpecial and particular promiſes made to David, concerning himſelf, his family, and his kingdom. Arama and Kimchi interpret it, of the promiſe of deliverance from captivity made to the Jews.

℣. 6. My ſoul waiteth for the Lord, &c.] This is repeated for the confirmation of it, and to ſhew the vehement and conſtant diſpoſition of his mind towards the Lord; as well as for the ſake of what follows: More than they that watch for the morning: I ſay, more than they that watch for the morning; or, more than the morning-watchers, that watch for or until the morning [h]; than watchmen of cities, or the keepers of the walls, as Aben Ezra; thoſe who are upon the laſt morning-watch, and are looking out for the morning-light; that they may go off from duty, and lie down and ſleep: or than thoſe that ſit up with ſick perſons; who, being ſolitary and melancholy, as well as want ſleep, long for the morning, that they may have ſome refreſhment: or rather, than the prieſts and Levites, that watched in the temple, that waited for the morning, that they might be relieved by others; or elſe, than thoſe of that function, who were very diligent to obſerve the break of day, that they might enter upon their morning-ſacrifices; of which are many inſtances in the Miſnah [i]. So the Targum, "more "than they that obſerve the morning-watches, "which they obſerve to offer up the morning-ſa"crifice:" and Kimchi's paraphraſe is, "who riſe "in the morning-watches to pray." The coming of Chriſt is ſaid to be as the morning; and the light of God's countenance is comparable to the morning-light; the diſcoveries of pardoning grace are through the bright ſhining of the Sun of righteouſneſs, and is the healing that is in his wings; and ſalvation and deliverance from any diſtreſs, is light that breaks forth as the morning: all and each of theſe are more deſirable, and more to be waited for, than the natural light of the morning; ſee 2 Sam. xxiii. 4. Hoſea vi. 3. Pſal. xxx. 4. Mal. iv. 2. Iſa. lviii. 8.

℣. 7. Let Iſrael hope in the Lord, &c.] The pſalmiſt having himſelf hope in the Lord and in his word, through a view of forgiveneſs with him, exhorts and encourages others to do ſo likewiſe, even every Iſraelite indeed; and ſuch may comfortably hope in him for ſalvation, which was deſigned, contrived, promiſed, and now wrought out for ſinners, the chief of ſinners, and to be had freely; and the goſpel-declaration is, that whoſoever believes in Chriſt ſhall be ſaved: as well as for the remiſſion of ſin, which God has promiſed in covenant; proclaimed in Chriſt, whom he has ſent to obtain it, and exalted to give it; and has declared in the goſpel, that whoever believes in him ſhall have it: and alſo for eternal life and happineſs, which is the gift of God through Chriſt; is in the hands of Chriſt, and of which the Spirit of God is the earneſt and pledge. Arguments encouraging hope follow: For with the Lord there is mercy; which is natural and eſſential to him; as diſplayed, is either general, and over all his works, and towards all his creatures; or ſpecial, only ſhewn to whom he will: this flows through Chriſt, and is very large and abundant; and appears in various inſtances, in the covenant, in the miſſion of Chriſt, and redemption by him; in regeneration, the forgiveneſs of ſins, and in ſalvation; as well as it is beſtowed on innumerable objects: and this ſerves much to encourage hope, ſince there is plenty of it, and God is plenteous in it; and it is kept for many, for thouſands, and even the vileſt of ſinners, ſhare in it; God has ſet up a throne of grace and mercy for men to apply to, and he delights in ſhewing mercy, and in thoſe that hope in it: or, there is grace [k] with him; an abundance of it in his heart; a fulneſs of it in his Son; and large aboundings of it through Chriſt, in converſion, pardon, and other things. And with him is plenteous redemption; the purpoſe of it was in him; the ſcheme of it was drawn by him; the covenant of it was made with Chriſt; the promiſe of it was publiſhed, and now the thing itſelf is done, and is with Chriſt, the author of it: and this is plenteous, if we conſider the number of perſons redeemed from among men, being ſuch as no man can number; what of them is redeemed, even all of them, their ſouls and bodies; what they are redeemed from, from all ſin, the law, its curſe and condemnation, from death and hell, from Satan and all enemies; the ſeveral bleſſings included in it, or connected with it, pardon of ſin, juſtification of perſons, adoption, ſanctification and eternal life; the great price paid for it, the blood, the life of Chriſt, yea himſelf; and the large diſplay of love, grace and mercy, wiſdom, power, juſtice and holineſs, made in it. Kimchi interprets this of redemption from Egypt, Babylon, &c.

℣. 8. And he ſhall redeem Iſrael from all his iniquities.] The Lord ſhall do it; in whom Iſrael is encouraged to hope; with whom grace and redemption were; or who was appointed to be the Redeemer. Redemption was then future, when theſe words were ſaid, but certain, by the promiſe of God and agreement of Chriſt; and would be of the whole Iſrael, or elect of God; and that from all their iniquities, original and actual; ſins, ſecret and open, of heart, lip and life: and which is no ſmall encouragement for Iſrael to hope in the Lord, for the ſake of which this is added; as well as for the further illuſtration of the nature of redemption by Chriſt; which is complete, and now obtained, and is an eternal one.

PSALM CXXXI.

A ſong of degrees of David.

THIS pſalm was written by David in his younger days, before he came to the throne; while he was in Saul's court, or perſecuted by him. The occaſion of it, as is generally thought, was a calumny caſt upon him, as if he had ſome ill deſigns againſt Saul; was ambitious of the crown, and aſpiring to the throne, and was plotting and forming meaſures to get the government into his hand; ſee 1 Sam. xxiv. 9, 14. and xxvi. 18, 20. with reſpect to all which he declares himſelf as innocent as a weaned child; and was as far from any ſuch ambitious views, as he was when in ſuch a ſtate; for the truth of which he appealed to God. Kimchi thinks that David, by his example, taught the Jews how to behave in captivity; that as he behaved, ſo ſhould they, in great humility. The Syriac inſcription is, "it is ſaid concerning Jeſus, the ſon "of Joſedech the high-prieſt; and concerning humility." But the pſalm no doubt was written by David of himſelf.

℣. 1. Lord, my heart is not haughty, &c.] The heart of every man is naturally ſo, and every thing in civil life tends to make it more ſo; as riches and honour, birth and blood, wiſdom, knowledge and learning, ſtrength and beauty, eſpecially where there is a ſuperiority of thoſe to others; and in religious life, if perſons have not the true grace of God, their hearts will be haughty; if they have a notion of the purity of human nature, and the goodneſs of their hearts, and are pure in their own eyes, and of the power of their free-will to do this and the other, and of their perfection in good works, and are full of their own righteouſneſs, and have ſome external gifts, and ſome degree of notional knowledge; but if the heart is made truly contrite under a ſenſe of ſin, and is melted with diſcoveries of pardoning love, it will be humble and not haughty: and thoſe have ſuch hearts who have ſeen the naughtineſs of their hearts, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin; their impotency to that which is ſpiritually good; their imperfection in all they do; the excellency and ſuitableneſs of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and that all their ſalvation is of grace, and that grace is entirely free; and the more ſpiritual knowledge and experience they have, the more humble they are: and this was David's caſe, and what he here ſaid was no doubt true, ſince he hated lying; and beſides he ſpeaks this in the preſence of and to God the ſearcher of hearts; though he had been anointed by Samuel, and knew that he was to be ſucceſſor in the kingdom, yet his heart was not elated with it. Nor mine eyes lofty; or lifted up[l]; they were lifted up to God in prayer often, but not above his fellow-creatures; he behaved himſelf humbly as well as wiſely in Saul's court, where he was raiſed to great dignity, which gained him the affections of the court, and of all Iſrael; but there are too many whoſe eyes are lofty, and their eye-lids lifted up, who diſdain to look upon thoſe that are inferior to them, as the rich on the poor, the phariſee on the publican; ſee Prov. xxx. 13. This is the character of antichriſt, that his look is more ſtout than his fellows, and is abominable in the ſight of God, even a proud look as well as a proud heart, Prov. vi. 17. and xvi. 5. But this was not David's caſe; as he could not bear this in others he would not ſuffer it in himſelf, Pſal. ci. 5. Neither do I exerciſe myſelf in great matters; or walk[m] in them; theſe were not the ſubject of his employment and converſation; he did many great things, in killing the lion and the bear that came into his father's flock; in ſlaying Goliath with a ſling and ſtone only; in leading out the armies of Iſrael, and ſlaying his ten thouſands; and he exerciſed himſelf in the great things of the law, which he was careful to obſerve, and ſtudied the great things of the goſpel, which he had the higheſt eſteem of, and deſired to underſtand; but he did not ſeek human greatneſs, or the great things of this world for himſelf; he had no ambitious views, or was deſirous of the kingdom he was anointed to, before the proper time; ſee 1 Sam. xviii. 18, 23. Or in things too high for me; or too wonderful[n]; ſee Job xlii. 3. He contemplated the wonderful make and frame of his body, the texture, ſymmetry, and uſe of its ſeveral parts; he obſerved the wonderful providences of God towards him ever ſince he had a being; and particularly he took notice of the wonderful love of God to him, and remembered and talked of, and declared the wonderful works of grace and redemption; but not things above his capacity, out of his reach, and which are ſecret, or not clearly revealed: and ſuch things we ſhould be content to be ignorant of, or not to have adequate ideas of, or be capable of accounting for; as the being and perfections of God, particularly his immenſity and eternity; the mode of ſubſiſting of the perſons in the godhead; the generation of the Son and proceſſion of the Spirit; the incarnation of Chriſt, and the union of the two natures in him; preſent providences, unſearchable and paſt finding out; and future things, eſpecially the times and ſeaſons of them; ſee Pſal. cxxxix. 6.

℣. 2. Surely I have behaved and quieted myſelf, &c.] Or my ſoul[o]; behaved quietly and peaceably towards all men, even his inferiors, in Saul's court and elſewhere, and had given no tokens of a reſtleſs, turbulent, and ambitious ſpirit; as well as behaved patiently under all his troubles and afflictions, reproaches and calumnies: or if I have not[p], being in the form of an oath or imprecation, as Kimchi and Aben Ezra obſerve; if I have not thus behaved, let it come to me ſo and ſo, or let me be as a weaned child. Noldius renders it by way of interrogation, have I not compoſed and quieted myſelf? &c. The Targum is, "if I have not "put the hand to the mouth, and cauſed my ſoul

“ to be ſilent until it heard the words of the law.” As a child that is weaned of his mother; and for the farther confirmation of it, it is added, My ſoul is even as a weaned child; innocent and harmleſs, had no more ill deſigns againſt Saul than a weaned child; humble, meek and lowly, and had no more aſpiring and ambitious views than ſuch a one; like that, weaned from the world, the riches, honours, pleaſures, and profits of it; as well as from nature, from ſelf, from his own righteouſneſs, and from all dependence on it; and as a child that is weaned from the breaſt wholly depends on its nurſe for ſuſtenance, ſo did he wholly depend upon God, his providence, grace and ſtrength; and as to the kingdom, he had no more covetous deſires after it, than a weaned child has to the breaſt, and was very willing to wait the due time for the enjoyment of it. The Targum, “ as one weaned on the breaſts of its mother, I am ſtrengthened in the law.” This is to be underſtood not of a child whilſt weaning, when it is uſually peeviſh, fretful, and froward, but when weaned, and is quiet and eaſy in its mother's arms without the breaſt.

℣. 3. Let Iſrael hope in the Lord from henceforth and for ever.] What he did himſelf, and found it good for him to do, that he knew was good for others, and therefore exhorts and encourages to it, to hope in the Lord and wait for his ſalvation; and which ſhould be done conſtantly, and to the end of life, or till the thing hoped for is enjoyed; ſee Heb. iii. 6. 1 Pet. i. 13. Perhaps ſome reſpect is here had to the people of Iſrael, eſpecially the friends of David, who were weary of Saul's government, and impatient to have David on the throne; whom he adviſes to wait patiently, and not take any indirect ſteps to bring it about, but leave it with God, and hope and truſt in him; compare with this 1 Sam. xxiv. 7. and xxvi. 8, 9. ſee the note on Pſal. cxxx. 7.

PSALM CXXXII.

A ſong of degrees.

SOME think this pſalm was written by Solomon, ſince ℣. 8, 10. are much the ſame with which he concluded his prayer at the dedication of the temple, 2 Chron. vi. 41, 42. on account of which it is ſuppoſed to be written; though he might borrow theſe words from hence, as he ſometimes did recite the words of his father, Prov. iv. 4, 5. Others are of opinion that it was written by David, either when he brought the ark from Baale or Kirjath-jearim to the houſe of Obed-Edom and from thence to Zion, 2 Sam. vi. or when he had that converſation with Nathan the prophet, in which he expreſſed ſuch a ſtrong deſire to build an houſe for God, 2 Sam. vii. or, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi think, after he had numbered the people, which brought the peſtilence on them; and when he and the elders of Iſrael were in diſtreſs on that account, and he was ordered to build an altar in the threſhing floor of Ornan the Jebuſite; by which it appeared to him that this was the place for the houſe of the Lord God he had been ſo deſirous of building, 1 Chron. xxii. 1. It ſeems by ℣. 6, 7. that more perſons than one were concerned in this pſalm, at leaſt the pſalmiſt perſonates more; and Theodoret takes it to be a prayer of the captives in Babylon, and a prophecy of the Saviour of the world; and this is favoured by the Syriac inſcription which is, “ an anonymous pſalm, when they would build the houſe of the Lord of hoſts; and a prayer of David, and a revelation of Chriſt.” And certain it is that Chriſt is ſpoken of in it, if not principally deſigned.

℣. 1. Lord, remember David, and all his afflictions.] Which prayer might be put up by David on his own account, as Nehemiah does, chap. xiii. 22. and be conſidered as a petition to the Lord that he would remember his mercy and loving-kindneſs to him, and him with the favour he bears to his own people, as he elſewhere prays; that he would remember his covenant with him, and his promiſe to him, on which he had cauſed him to hope; and ſympathize with him, and ſupport him under all his trials and exerciſes, in his kingdom and family. Or if it is conſidered as Solomon's, it may be a requeſt that the Lord would remember the promiſe he had made to David, that his ſon ſhould build an houſe for him, which he deſired he might be enabled to do; that he would remember the covenant of royalty he had made with him, that he ſhould not want a ſon to ſit upon his throne; and particularly that he would remember the promiſe of the Meſſiah that ſhould be of his ſeed. Alſo his afflictions, his toil and labour of mind, his great anxiety about building an houſe for God; the pains he took in finding out a place for it, in drawing the pattern of it, in making preparations for it, and in the charges he gave his ſon concerning it: the Septuagint and other verſions render it his humility[q]; which agrees with the ſubject of the preceding pſalm, and may particularly reſpect what he expreſſed to Nathan when this affair of building the temple was much upon his mind, 2 Sam. vii. 2, 18. Moreover, reſpect in all this may be had by the authors of this pſalm, or thoſe herein perſonated, to the Meſſiah, who is the antitype of David; in his name, which ſignifies beloved; in his birth, parentage, and circumſtances of it; in the comelineſs of his perſon, and in his characters and offices, and who is often called David, Pſal. lxxxix. 3, 20, 35. ſee Jer. xxx. 9. Ezek. xxxvii. 23, 24. Hoſea iii. 5. and ſo is a petition that God would remember the covenant of grace made with him; the promiſe of his coming into the world; his offering and ſacrifice, as typified by the legal ones; and alſo remember them and their offerings for his ſake; ſee Pſal. xx. 3. Likewiſe all his afflictions and ſufferings he was to endure from men and devils, and from the Lord himſelf, both in ſoul and body; and ſo as to accept of them in the room and ſtead of his people, as a ſatisfaction to his juſtice. Or his humility in the aſſumption of human nature, in his carriage and behaviour to all ſorts of men, in his miniſtrations to his diſciples, in ſeeking not his own glory but his Father's, and in his ſufferings and death, which was foretold of him Zech. ix. 9.

℣. 2. How he ſware unto the Lord, and vowed unto the mighty God of Jacob.] Whom Jacob called ſo Gen. xlix. 24. and to whom he vowed a vow, and is the firſt we read of that did make one, and it was concerning the houſe of God, Gen. xxviii. 17, 20, 21. and who had an experience of the might and power of God in protecting and defending him from his brother Eſau: of this oath and vow of David no mention is made elſewhere, but no doubt they were made; ſee Pſal. cxix. 106. of the Meſſiah's ſwearing, though upon another account, to whom this may be applied, ſee Iſa. xlv. 23. Rev. x. 1, 2, 5, 6.

℣. 3. Surely, I will not come into the tabernacle of my houſe, &c.] The new houſe and palace David built for himſelf after he came to the throne, made of Cedar, 2 Sam. v. 11. and vii. 2. not that he ſhould never enter into it till he had found a dwelling for God, but that he ſhould not go into it with pleaſure till that was done; for this and what follows are hyperboles, as Kimchi obſerves, and ſignify, that he ſhould have no peace nor ſatisfaction of mind till this was accompliſhed. It may be applied to our Lord's aſcenſion to heaven, which was not till after he had purchaſed the church with his blood, which is the temple and habitation of God. Nor go up into my bed; or the bed that is made for me[r]; the royal bed, a bed of down, with ſoft pillows, fit for a perſon of ſuch dignity to lie down on. Ainſworth renders it, the pallets of my bed; the phraſe of going up agrees with the cuſtom of the eaſtern countries, who have galleries in their chambers where they are ſet; at one end of each chamber in their houſes there is a little gallery raiſed three, four or five feet above the floor, with a baluſtrade in the front of it, with a few ſteps likewiſe leading up to it; here they place their beds[s]; ſo that when they went to bed they might with great propriety be ſaid to go up to it; but this David could not do with pleaſure, ſo long as there was no place and habitation for God.

℣. 4. I will not give ſleep to mine eyes, or ſlumber to mine eye-lids.] Not that he never would or did take any ſleep until this thing was brought about he had ſo much at heart; but that he could not and would not ſuffer himſelf to ſleep comfortably and quietly becauſe of it. Aben Ezra interprets it of ſleep at noon; the phraſes expreſs his great deſire and ſolicitude to have this affair accompliſhed, and his eager and diligent purſuit of it; ſee Prov. vi. 4. of the eager deſire of Chriſt to ſuffer and die for his people, that they might be brought near to God, and be his dwelling place; ſee Luke xii. 50. and xxii. 15.

℣. 5. Until I find a place for the Lord, &c.] To build an houſe on for the Lord; which it ſeems was unknown till the times of David; for though mention had been made of a place the Lord would chooſe to cauſe his name to dwell in, yet the particular place was not pointed out, Deut. xii. 11, 18, 21. David was very ſolicitous to find it out, and did, 1 Chron. xxii. 1. An habitation for the mighty God of Jacob; ſee the note on ℣. 2. or habitations, or tabernacles[t]; the temple which is meant conſiſting of three parts, the court, the holy place, and the holy of holies; this was typical of the human nature of Chriſt, the temple of his body, the tabernacle of God's pitching, John ii. 19. Heb. viii. 2. and ix. 11. in which the fulneſs of the godhead dwells, the glory of God is ſeen, and through whom he grants his preſence to his people; and alſo of the church of God, the temple of the living God, where he dwells and is worſhipped; and that this might be a fit habitation for God, was the great deſire of the Meſſiah, and not only the end and iſſue of his ſufferings and death, but alſo the deſign of his preparations and interceſſion in heaven, John xiv. 2, 3. and xvii. 23, 24. Rev. xxi. 3.

℣. 6. Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah, &c.] Either of the ark which David and others had heard of, that it formerly was at Shiloh, Joſhua xviii. 1. here called Ephratah, as ſome think; ſo the Ephraimites are called Ephrathites, Judg. xii. 5. and Elkanah of Ramathaim-zophim, of mount Ephraim, is ſaid to be an Ephrathite, 1 Sam. i. 1. but this tribe the Lord choſe not, but the tribe of Judah, for his habitation; and rejected the tabernacle of Shiloh, and removed it from thence, Pſal. lxxviii. 60, 67, 68. We found it in the fields of the wood; at Kirjath-jearim, which ſignifies the city of woods; being built among woods, and ſurrounded with them: here the ark was twenty years, and here David found it; and from hence he brought it to the houſe of Obed-Edom, and from thence to Zion, 1 Sam. vii. 1, 2. 1 Chron. xiii. 5, 6, 13, 14. and xvi. 1. Or elſe the place where the temple was to be built; which was not known till the times of David, who was of Ephratah or Bethlehem: here he was born and brought up; and here he was, as Arama ſuppoſes, when it was revealed to him where the temple ſhould be built. According to R. Moſes, the ſenſe is, We have heard of it by the hand of David, who was of Ephratah: but Aben Ezra thinks the meaning is, that in former times men uſed to ſay, We have heard from the mouths of the prophets, that the choſen place was near to Bethlehem-ephratah; only the preciſe place was not known, whether to the eaſt or weſt, or north or ſouth of Bethlehem. Some think that not any particular city is intended, but a country, even all the neighbourhood of Bethlehem-ephratah; and took in Jeruſalem, where the temple was built, it being but a few miles from the place: ſo Adrichomius[u] ſays, the country round about Ephratah had its name from thence; ſee 1 Kings xi. 26. Now the place found for the building of the temple was the fields of the wood, or the threſhing-floor of Araunah the Jebuſite, and was on mount Moriah; David found by the order he had to build an altar here, and by the acceptance of his ſacrifices, that this was the place for the houſe of God, 1 Chron. xxii. 1. and here Solomon built the temple, 2 Chron. iii. 1. and which was formerly a woody place, as mountains generally are; and this ſeems to have been, when Abraham offered his ſon on it, who then ſpied a ram caught in the thickets, Gen. xxii. 2, 13. The Targum is, "we found it in the field of the foreſt "of Lebanon, the place where the ancient fathers "prayed;" the temple being built of the wood of Lebanon. But all this is to be underſtood of the Lord, the mighty God of Jacob, who was heard of at Ephratah; the ſhekinah, or divine majeſty; ſo Kimchi, Arama, and Ben Melech. And indeed the Meſſiah is meant, the antitype of the ark and temple; of whom the ſaints or believers in him, a chorus of which is here introduced, had heard that he ſhould be born at Ephratah, which is Bethlehem; ſee Gen. xxxv. 19. Ruth iv. 11. 1 Sam. xvii. 12. And if this pſalm was written by the captives in Babylon, they might have heard of this from the prophecy of Micah, chap. v. 2. ſee Matt. ii. 4, 5, 6, 8, 11. the ſhepherds heard from the mouths of the angels, that Chriſt was born there; and we Chriſtians have heard the ſame, and know and believe it, Luke ii. 4—18. And he has been found in the fields of the wood; in a low, mean, abject ſtate, as this phraſe ſignifies, Ezek. xvi. 5. The ſhepherds found him rejected from being in the inn; there being no room for him, and lying in a manger, Luke ii. 7, 16. the angels found him in the wilderneſs, among the wild beaſts of the field, Mark i. 13. nor had he the convenience even of foxes, and birds of the air; had no habitation or place where to lay his head, Matt. viii. 20. And he is to be found in the field of the ſcriptures, where this rich treaſure and pearl of great price lies hid, Matt. xiii. 44. and being preached among the Gentiles, after his incarnation, ſufferings, death, reſurrection and aſcenſion, who are compared to wilderneſſes and deſert places, was found by many of them, Iſa. xxxv. 1. and lxv. 1. and which ſerves to ſet off with a foil his glory; being like the apple-tree among the trees of the wood, Cant. ii. 3.

℣. 7. We will go into his tabernacles, &c.] The tabernacles of him that was heard of at Ephratah; born in Bethlehem, and found in the miniſtry of the word among the Gentiles: enter into his churches, raiſed and formed there, which are the tabernacles or dwelling-places of Chriſt; where he has his reſidence, takes his walks, and dwells; and which are very lovely, amiable and pleaſant, and ſo deſirable by believers to go into; becauſe of the preſence of God in them, the proviſions there made for them, the company there enjoyed; the work there done, prayer, praiſe, preaching, and hearing the word, and adminiſtration of all ordinances. Some render it as a mutual exhortation, Let us go into his tabernacles [*]; ſee Iſa. ii. 2, 3. We will worſhip at his footſtool; any place of worſhip on earth may be called the footſtool of God, with reſpect to heaven his throne, Iſa. lxvi. 1. particularly the ark is ſo called, 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. in which the law was; over which was the mercy-ſeat, and over that the cherubim of glory, and between them the majeſty of God dwelt; ſo that the ark was properly his footſtool: and all this being typical of Chriſt, may direct us to obſerve, that all religious, ſpiritual and evangelic worſhip, is to be performed in his name, and in the faith of him, and by the aſſiſtance of his grace and Spirit; ſee Pſal. xcix. 5.

℣. 8. Ariſe, O Lord, into thy reſt, &c.] Which words, and what follow, were uſed by Solomon at the dedication of the temple; and with which he concluded his prayer, 2 Chron. vi. 41, 42. and ſo may be a requeſt to the Lord, that he would take up his reſidence in the temple built for him, where he would have a firm and ſtable place of reſt; who, from the time of Iſrael's coming out of Egypt, had not dwelt in an houſe; but had walked in a tent or tabernacle from place to place, 2 Sam. vi. 6. and that he would take up his abode in his church, the antitype of the temple, and reſt in his love there, and cauſe his people to reſt alſo; ſee ℣. 13, 14. Thou, and the ark of thy ſtrength; the Targum is, "thou, and the ark in which is thy law." This is ſometimes called the ſtrength of the Lord; becauſe by it he ſhewed his great ſtrength in deſtroying the enemies of his people, the Philiſtines and others; ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 61. and cv. 4. It was a type of Chriſt, who is the power of God, and the mighty God; and as man, made ſtrong by the Lord; and as Mediator, has all ſtrength in him for his people. And ſo the words may be conſidered as a requeſt to him, either to ariſe and enter into his reſt in heaven, having done his work of redemption and ſalvation here on earth, for which he became incarnate; or to grant his preſence with his church, and take up his reſt there, and give them ſpiritual peace and reſt for their ſouls.

℣. 9. Let thy prieſts be cloathed with righteouſneſs, &c.] In 2 Chron. vi. 41. it is, with ſalvation, as in ℣. 16. Either the miniſters of the word; who may be ſaid to be cloathed with righteouſneſs, when they perform their work righteouſly, and faithfully diſpenſe the word, keep back nothing that is profitable, and adminiſter the ordinances according to the rules of Chriſt; and when their lives and converſations are agreeable to the goſpel they preach; ſee Job xxix. 14. or elſe all true believers; who are prieſts as well as kings unto God; and who are cloathed with the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; and with the internal graces of the Spirit, the new man created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; and with converſation-garments, becoming the goſpel, and their profeſſion of it. And let thy ſaints ſhout for joy; the Levites; thy holy ones, as the Targum; ſo Kimchi, Arama, and others; the ſingers in the temple: but rather, the Lord's ſanctified ones, true believers under the goſpel-diſpenſation, are meant; who ſhout for joy, and have reaſon ſo to do, at the incarnation of Chriſt, at his aſcenſion to heaven, at the goſpel preached by his miniſters, and at the robe of righteouſneſs with which they are cloathed. In 2 Chron. vi 41. it is, rejoice in goodneſs; in the goodneſs of the Lord; in the good things beſtowed on them, or promiſed to them.

℣. 10. For thy ſervant David's ſake, &c.] Not for any virtues, or excellencies or merits of David, literally underſtood; rather for the ſake of the covenant and promiſes made with him: but for the ſake of the antitypical David, the Meſſiah, the ſon of David according to the fleſh, and the ſervant of the Lord as Mediator; for whoſe ſake, and in whoſe name, prayers and ſupplications are made and preſented. Turn not away the face of thine anointed; not David; rather Solomon, as the Targum expreſſes it; ſo Jarchi: but any of the Lord's anointed, every Chriſtian, or believer in Chriſt, is an anointed one; and has received the unction from the holy One, the oil of true grace. And the requeſt is, that God would not turn ſuch away from him, and cauſe them to depart from his throne of grace, aſhamed and diſappointed; but hear and anſwer their petitions for his Son's ſake. In 2 Chron. vi. 42. it is added, remember the mercies of David thy ſervant; the kind and good things promiſed to him, and perform them.

℣. 11. The Lord hath ſworn in truth unto David, &c.] By Nathan the prophet; when he aſſured him, that his houſe, kingdom and throne, ſhould be eſtabliſhed for ever, 2 Sam. vii. 5, 12, 16. and though there is no mention made of the oath of God, no doubt there was one; or however his word was his oath, as Kimchi obſerves: beſides, the apoſtle Peter is expreſs for it that there was one, which was added to his word for the confirmation of it; who is ſaid to ſwear by himſelf, becauſe there is no greater; and ſometimes by one or other of his perfections, as by his holineſs elſewhere; ſo here in or by his truth, his faithfulneſs, being the God of truth that cannot lie. Or it may be rendered, the Lord hath ſworn truth unto David;

David[x]; that which is truth: and we may be aſſured, he could not poſſibly aſſert or ſwear any thing elſe; ſee Pſal. lxxxix. 3, 4, 35, 49. He will not turn from it; change his mind, repent of his oath; make it void, or not fulfil it; for he is unchangeable in his perfections, purpoſes and promiſes; whatever he ſays and ſwears to he will certainly perform. Of the fruit of thy body will I ſet upon thy throne; a king upon thy throne, as the Targum: meaning not Solomon; though it is true, that the Lord choſe him above all the ſons of David, to be his ſucceſſor in the kingdom, and did place him upon his throne before his death; but a greater than Solomon is here, even the Meſſiah; as is clear from the teſtimony of the apoſtle Peter, Acts ii. 30. by which it appears, not only that this promiſe and oath relate to the Meſſiah; but that David knew they did, and ſo underſtood them; and which have been fulfilled in Jeſus of Nazareth: who, as he was notoriouſly the fruit of David's body according to the fleſh, or his human nature; or was of his ſeed, being born of the virgin Mary, who lineally deſcended from him; ſo he was ſet upon the throne of David, as it was foretold both by the prophet Iſaiah, and by the angel to the virgin, he ſhould, Iſa. ix. 6, 7. Luke i. 32, 33. not in a literal ſenſe; for though he was no doubt right heir to the throne of David ſo underſtood, yet his kingdom was not of this world; but he was ſet as King over God's holy hill of Zion, the church; and reigned over the houſe of Jacob, the whole Iſrael of God; the myſtical and ſpiritual Iſrael, conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles: his throne, or the ſeat of his kingdom, is the church; his ſceptre the goſpel; his crown the glory true believers in him give him; his laws, by which he rules, are in his word, and written in the hearts of his ſubjects; and his kingdom ſhall continue for ever.

℣. 12. If thy children will keep my covenant and my teſtimony, that I ſhall teach them, &c.] The former part of the promiſe and oath is abſolute, reſpecting the Meſſiah; but this is conditional, and relates to the ſeed of David, both immediate and in ſucceeding generations; propoſing their obſervance of the law of God, as the condition of their enjoying the kingdom after him. By the covenant and teſtimony are meant the ſame thing; the law, which was given to the people of Iſrael in the form of a covenant, and was a teſtimony of the will of God to them: in this the kings of Iſrael were to read continually, and conduct according to it in their perſonal walk and converſation, and by it to rule the people they were ſet over; and which the Lord promiſes to teach them by his prophets, whoſe buſineſs it was not to promulgate new laws, but to explain what were given. Now in caſe this was attended to, and the inſtructions of the prophets obſerved, then thus it would be, Their children alſo ſhall ſit upon thy throne for evermore; but the condition not being fulfilled, this did not take place; Solomon, his immediate ſucceſſor, fell into idolatry in the latter part of his life; and Rehoboam, his ſon, ſlighted the advice of the old men, founded upon the laws of God, and ten tribes revolted from him: ſeveral ſucceeding kings of Judah, of the houſe of David, were very wicked princes; and the race of them ended in Zedekiah, who was carried captive into Babylon. Indeed all this is true of Chriſt and his ſpiritual offſpring; he kept the covenant of grace made with his divine Father; and the law or teſtimony, and fulfilled it in the room and ſtead of his people; and did the whole will and work of his Father, and in all things pleaſed him: and his children alſo lay hold by faith on the covenant and the promiſes of it; and receive, obſerve and retain the teſtimony of the goſpel; and ſhall reign with Chriſt, on the ſame throne with him, for ever and ever.

℣. 13. For the Lord hath choſen Zion, &c.] Not only to build upon it the temple in a literal ſenſe, and for the place of his worſhip; but alſo for the ſeat of his majeſty, and over which he has ſet his Son as King; and all this from the love he bears to Zion, which, in a figurative and ſpiritual ſenſe, is his church; whom he has choſen to privileges, to grace and glory, and for his ſervice and honour; ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 67, 68. He hath deſired it for his habitation; heaven is the habitation of his holineſs and glory; Chriſt is his dwelling-place, in whom all the fulneſs of the Godhead dwells bodily: yet his deſire is to his church and people; his heart is ſet upon them, and upon their ſalvation; his delight is in them, and he takes pleaſure in walking with them, and dwelling among them; they being built up an habitation for God through the Spirit; ſee Pſal. lxviii. 16. 2 Cor. vi. 16. Eph. ii. 22.

℣. 14. This is my reſt for ever, &c.] The reſt of my majeſty, as the Targum; the place of his reſt: and this being for ever ſhews, that not mount Zion literally, nor the temple are meant; but the church and people of God, in whom he reſts in his love, and rejoices over with joy; who are the objects of his delight, and with whom he abides for ever; for this phraſe is expreſſive of pleaſure and delight, and of permanency and perpetuity. Here will I dwell, for I have deſired it; not merely by his omnipreſence, in which ſenſe he dwells every where, both in heaven and in earth; nor only by his omnipotence, by which he upholds all creatures in their being, and ſo is preſent with them all; and they all live and move, and have their being in him: but by his Spirit and grace, reviving and refreſhing the hearts of his people with his gracious preſence; which is enjoyed in his houſe and ordinances, and makes them lovely and delightful; and may be expected there, ſince he has promiſed it, and it is ſo deſirable and agreeable to himſelf to dwell there.

℣. 15. I will abundantly bleſs her proviſion, &c.] The proviſion of Zion, the church of God, the word and ordinances, of which Chriſt is the ſum and ſubſtance; the goſpel is milk for babes, and meat for ſtrong men; the ordinances are a feaſt of fat things; Chriſt's fleſh is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed; the whole proviſion is ſpiritual, ſavoury, ſalutary, ſtrengthening, ſatisfying, and nouriſhing, when the Lord bleſſes it; as he does to thoſe who hunger and thirſt after it, and feed upon it by faith; ſo that their ſouls grow thereby, and they become fat and flouriſhing; grace increaſes in them, and they are fruitful in every good work: and this the Lord promiſes to do abundantly, in a very large way and manner; or certainly, for it is in the original text, in bleſſing I will bleſs[y], that is, will ſurely bleſs, as this phraſe is ſometimes rendered. Arama obſerves that the ſecond bleſſing is becauſe of the greatneſs of it; and ſays, that their Rabbins underſtand it of the fertility of the land of Iſrael in the time to come, when there will be no poor in it; but all is to be underſtood ſpiritually of the church in goſpel-times. I will ſatisfy her poor with bread; Zion has her poor; perſons may be poor and yet belong to Zion, belong to Zion and yet be poor; there are poor in all the churches of Chriſt: our Lord told his diſciples that they had the poor, and might expect to have them always with them; and particular directions are given to take care of Zion's poor under the goſpel diſpenſation, that they may not want bread in a literal ſenſe: though by the poor are chiefly deſigned the Lord's afflicted and diſtreſſed ones; or who in a ſpiritual ſenſe are poor, and ſenſible of their ſpiritual poverty, and ſeek after the true riches; or are poor in ſpirit, to whom the kingdom of heaven belongs: theſe the Lord promiſes to ſatisfy, to fill them to the full with the bread of the goſpel, made of the fineſt of the wheat, of which there is enough and to ſpare in his houſe; and with Chriſt the bread of life, of which thoſe that eat ſhall never die, but live for ever.

℣. 16. I will alſo clothe her prieſts with ſalvation, &c.] With the garments of ſalvation, as the Targum; in anſwer to the petition ℣. 9. but more is promiſed than prayed for, ſalvation including righteouſneſs and all other bleſſings; and may be interpreted as there, either of the miniſters of the goſpel clothed with the doctrine of ſalvation by Chriſt, coming forth full fraught with it, openly publiſhing and proclaiming it; ſalvation being made public and manifeſt by them as a garment, as Aben Ezra obſerves: moreover goſpel-miniſters are inſtruments of ſaving others; the goſpel preached by them being the power of God unto ſalvation, as well as they themſelves are ſaved in the ſame way, 1 Tim. iv. 16. beſides, they are kept by the power of God, and in the hands of Chriſt, who protects them, and as it were covers them with the garment of ſalvation, whilſt they are publiſhing it to the world, to whoſe reproaches and inſults they are expoſed; or elſe this may be interpreted of the people of God in common, who are all kings and prieſts to God, and are all clothed with the garments of ſalvation, Iſa. lxi. 10. Salvation by Chriſt is brought near to them, is applied to them, and put upon them as a garment; it is from Chriſt, and without them, though upon them; it is their clothing and their ornament, as well as their ſecurity from ſin, law, death and hell; ſee Pſal. cxlix. 4. And her ſaints ſhall ſhout aloud for joy; not only ſhout, as is intreated ℣. 9. but ſhout aloud; it ſhall be a jubilee-time with them on account of the goſpel of ſalvation, the joyful ſound ſounded in their ears by the miniſters of it clothed with it; and on account of the ſalvation itſelf, ſo great, ſo ſuitable, ſo free, ſo complete and full, and in which the glory of God is ſo much diſplayed; and on account of the application of it to themſelves, being clothed with it and poſſeſſed of the joys of it. Theſe the Jewiſh writers generally underſtand of the Levites.

℣. 17. There will I make the horn of David to bud, &c.] Which the Targum interprets a glorious king; and both Kimchi and Ben Melech, and alſo Arama underſtand it of the Meſſiah, and very rightly; called the horn of the Lord's Anointed, and the horn of ſalvation, 1 Sam. ii. 10. Luke i. 69. expreſſive of his power and ſtrength, in alluſion to the horns of cattle, with which they puſh their enemies and defend themſelves; ſo horns are interpreted kings, Dan. vii. 24. and is fitly applied to Chriſt, raiſed up of the ſeed of David, the man of God's right hand, made ſtrong for himſelf, who is a mighty King and an able Saviour; as appears by what he has done and ſuffered, by the deliverance and ſalvation of his people, and by the deſtruction of all their enemies: and it is here promiſed that God would make this horn to bud or branch out, in alluſion to another name of the Meſſiah, the branch; and it is the ſame as raiſing up to David a righteous branch, or cauſing the Meſſiah to ſpring forth as a branch out of his roots, for which reaſon he is called the Lord's ſervant, the branch, and the man the branch; ſee Jer. xxiii. 5. Iſa. xi. 1. Zech. iii. 8. and vi. 12. and it ſhould be farther obſerved that the Lord ſays, there will I do it; that is, either at Ephratah, which is Bethlehem, the place where the Meſſiah was to be born, and was born; or elſe at Zion or Jeruſalem, where he appeared and ſhewed himſelf, where he taught his doctrines and wrought many of his miracles, and near to which he ſuffered and died; and this ſhews that the Meſſiah muſt be come, that this horn of David muſt have budded, or the man the branch brought forth, ſince Bethlehem and Jeruſalem are long ago demoliſhed. I have ordained a lamp for mine Anointed; which Jerom underſtands of John the Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt, who was a burning and ſhining light, but was not that light, that famous light that was to come, but was ſent to bear witneſs of it; he being but as a candle, as the word here uſed ſignifies, in compariſon of the ſun of righteouſneſs; but rather it means a ſon and ſucceſſor of David, the Lord's Anointed; in which ſenſe the phraſe is often uſed, 1 Kings xi. 36. and xv. 4. 2 Kings viii. 19. and here the famous and illuſtrious ſon and ſucceſſor of his, the Meſſiah, the light which lightens every man with the light of reaſon; and who is the light of the world of his people, enlightning them with the light of grace, and will be the light of the new Jeruſalem ſtate, and of the ultimate glory; him God has ordained as ſuch, even fore-ordained him before the foundation of the world; this lamp, or light, he prepared in eternity, and it dwelt with him, and therefore was deſired to be ſent out from him, Dan. ii. 22. Pſal. xliii. 3. which places are to be underſtood of the Meſſiah; ſee the notes there.

℣. 18. His enemies will I clothe with ſhame, &c.] With the garments of ſhame, as the Targum; very different from the clothing of Zion's prieſts; all that are incenſed againſt Chriſt as a King and Saviour ſhall ſooner or later be aſhamed; either here, when brought to a ſenſe of their evil, to repentance for it, and faith in him; or hereafter, at the reſurrection, when they will riſe to ſhame and everlaſting contempt, and when they ſhall ſee him come in the clouds of heaven, in power and great glory, to judge the world in righteouſneſs, Iſa. xlv. 24. Dan. xii. 2. But upon himſelf ſhall his crown flouriſh; being crowned with glory and honour, as he now is at the right hand of God; he reigns, and will reign till all his enemies become his footſtool; his throne is for ever and ever, and his kingdom an everlaſting one; and will be very flouriſhing in the latter day, when his ſubjects ſhall be many, and when there ſhall be an abundance of peace and proſperity, and of that no end; the crown of the Meſſiah ſhall flouriſh on him as a king, ſhine out and be very conſpicuous, as Aben Ezra and Jarchi interpret the word uſed; and ſo his crown as a prieſt; the ſame word is uſed of the holy crown of the prieſts put upon the mitre, on which holineſs to the Lord was inſcribed; and the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it my holineſs; and as his own crown is a never-fading one, ſuch a one he will give to his miniſters, and all that love his appearing, 1 Peter v. 4. 2 Tim. iv. 8.

PSALM CXXXIII.

A ſong of degrees of David.

THIS pſalm was penned by David, as ſome think, when all the tribes of Iſrael united and choſe and anointed him king over them, 2 Sam. v. 1—3. but according to others, when the rebellion of his ſon Abſalom was quelled, and all the tribes of Iſrael ſtrove who ſhould firſt bring back the king, and ſhew the greateſt zeal and loyalty to him, 2 Sam. xix. 9, 10, 14. Theodoret ſuppoſes it to be prophetical, and to have reſpect to the union of the tribes after the Babyloniſh captivity, who had been diſunited in the times of Rehoboam, but now were no more two nations and kingdoms, but one; ſee Ezek. xxxvii. 16—22. and others carry it farther ſtill, even to the firſt times of the goſpel, when the chriſtians were of one heart and of one ſoul, Acts iv. 32. it may indeed be applied to any community, civil or religious, that is in peace and unity: and no doubt the deſign of David was to promote peace and harmony among his ſubjects; and love and affection in his family, among his children, brethren one of another, and of Solomon; who was to be his heir and ſucceſſor, and under whoſe government it would be well for them to live peaceably and quietly. Kimchi and Ben Melech refer the pſalm to the times of the Meſſiah, and take it to be a prediction of the peace and concord between the king Meſſiah and the prieſt, of which Zerobabel and Joſhua were types; ſee Zech. vi. 13. The inſcription of the Syriac verſion is, "it is ſaid of Moſes and of Aaron, who dwelt in "the tabernacle, in the houſe of the Lord; and "there is an intimation in it of the perfect people," the chriſtians in goſpel-times.

ꝟ. 1. Behold, how good and how pleaſant it is, &c.] Aben Ezra thinks the word thing ſhould be ſupplied; the thing is what follows. For brethren to dwell together in unity; which the Targum interprets of Zion and Jeruſalem, as two brethren; Aben Ezra of the prieſts; Kimchi of the king Meſſiah and the prieſt; and Jarchi and Kimchi's father, of the Iſraelites; which is beſt of all, eſpecially of thoſe who are Iſraelites indeed; for this is not to be underſtood of all mankind, who are in ſome ſenſe brethren, being all of one blood, and among whom peace is to be cultivated; nor merely of thoſe of the ſame nation, under one and the ſame government, who ſhould endeavour to live peaceably and quietly; nor of brethren in a ſtrict natural ſenſe, who belong to the ſame family, and are of the ſame parents, and ſhould be kindly affectioned one to another; but rather of ſuch who are ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe, who have God for their father by adoption and regeneration, are related to Chriſt the firſtborn among many brethren, and are members one of another, in the ſame church-ſtate; all which are a reaſon why they ſhould love as brethren, and endeavour to keep the unity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace, Matt. xxiii. 8. Eph. iv. 3, 6. 1 Pet. ii. 17. and iii. 8. Heb. xiii. 1. and to dwell together in unity, even as one man, as if one ſoul actuated them all; it is not only to dwell and abide in the houſe of God, where they have all a name and a place; but to aſſociate together there, to go up to the houſe of God in company, and with delight to join together in acts of religious worſhip; to ſerve the Lord with one conſent, with one mind and mouth to glorify God, and to be of one accord, having the ſame love; and to do all kind and good offices one to another in the moſt hearty and cordial manner; ſerving each other in love, bearing one another's burdens, ſympathizing with each other in all circumſtances, forgiving each other offences committed, praying with one another, and building up each other in their moſt holy faith, ſtirring up one another to love and to good works: now this is both good and pleaſant; it is good, as being according to the will of God, the new command of Chriſt; what evidences the truth of regeneration, and of being the diſciples of Chriſt; what makes the communion of ſaints comfortable and edifying, and without which a profeſſion of religion is good for nothing: and it is pleaſant to God and Chriſt, to angels and men, to the miniſters of the goſpel, and to all about them and in a connection with them; and it is this which makes any particular diſpenſation in time delightful and agreeable; as the firſt times of the goſpel, and the latter-day-glory, the Philadelphian church-ſtate, which has its name from brotherly love; yea, it will be the glory and delight of heaven. Now this is uſhered in with a note of attention and admiration, behold, and with a note of exclamation, how; the pſalmiſt pointing at ſome inſtance or inſtances of this kind, which were very amiable, and worthy of imitation; and ſuggeſting, that ſuch a caſe is rare and wonderful, and inexpreſſibly good, profitable and pleaſant. Guſſetius [z] renders it, how good is the ſabbatiſm of brethren, even gathered together; for the exerciſe of religion, prayer, praiſe, &c.

ꝟ. 2. It is like the precious ointment upon the head, &c.] The compoſition which Moſes was ordered to make of the principal ſpices, and therefore called precious; and which was poured on the heads of kings and prieſts, when they were anointed with it, Exod. xxx. 23—25. That ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard; this was put upon the head of Aaron when he was anointed, and ſo on any other high-prieſt, and trickled down to his beard; ſee Exod. xxix. 7. The reaſons Kimchi and Ben Melech give, why the anointing of Aaron and other prieſts is mentioned, and not the anointing of a king, or of David himſelf, are, becauſe the anointing of Aaron was firſt, and alſo more public and better known by the people. That went down to the ſkirts of his garments; or, the mouth or opening of his garments [a]; not the extremity of them, as our verſion inclines to; for not ſo great a quantity of oil was poured upon him; nor would it have been decent to have his cloaths thus greaſed from top to bottom: but the upper part of his garment, the top of the coat, on which the beard lay, as Jarchi; the neck or collar of it, as Kimchi and Ben Melech; the hole in which the head went through when it was put on, about which there was a band, that it might not be rent, Exod. xxviii. 32. and xxxix. 23. where the Septuagint uſe the ſame word as here. Suidas [b] ſays, David means the ſuperior aperture of the garment, ment, that which we call the neck or collar-bone; and ſo Theodoret: and the Arabic verſion renders it, the aperture, or opening of it; and hitherto the ointment came. This was typical of the grace of the Spirit, the unction from the holy One; which has been poured on Chriſt, the head of the church, without meaſure; and with which he has been anointed above his fellows; and from him it is communicated to all his members; to every one of which is given grace, according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt; and who from his fulneſs receive, and grace for grace: and particularly brotherly love is compared to this ointment; becauſe of the preciouſneſs of it, which is true of every grace; and becauſe of the extenſiveneſs of it, reaching to head and members, to Chriſt and all his ſaints, the meaneſt and loweſt of them; and becauſe of its fragrancy and ſweet odour to all that are ſenſible of it; and becauſe of its delightful chearing and refreſhing nature; like ointment and perfume, it rejoices the heart; yea, the worſe things ſaid, or reproofs given in brotherly love, are like oil, pleaſant and uſeful, Prov. xxvii. 9. Pſal. cxli. 5. and is as neceſſary for the ſaints, who are all prieſts unto God, to offer up their ſpiritual ſacrifices; particularly that of prayer, which ſhould be without wrath, as well as without doubting; and to do all other duties of religion, which ſhould ſpring from charity or love; as the anointing oil was to Aaron and his ſons, in order to their officiating in the prieſts office.

℣. 3. As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that deſcended upon the mountains of Zion, &c.] Hermon was a very high hill beyond Jordan; the Sidonians called it Sirion, and the Amorites Shenir, Deut. iii. 8. hence Shenir and Hermon are mentioned together, Cant. iv. 8. and ſometimes Sion or Seon, Deut. iv. 48. and is the Zion here intended; for the dew of Hermon could never deſcend on the mountain of Zion near Jeruſalem, which was a hundred miles diſtant; beſides Zion was but one mountain, theſe many. Hermon was remarkable for its dew, which ſtill continues: a traveller[c], one of our own country, and whoſe fidelity is to be depended on, lying in tents near this hill one night, ſays, "we were ſufficiently inſtructed by experience, what the holy pſalmiſt means by the dew of Hermon; our tents being as wet with it, as if it had rained all night." The mountains of Zion were thoſe that were near to Zion, and not the mountain itſelf, thoſe that were round about Jeruſalem, on which the dew alſo fell in great plenty; and to which unity among brethren is here compared, becauſe it comes from God in heaven, as the dew does. Saints are taught of God to love one another; contentions and quarrels come from luſts within, but this comes from above, from the Father of lights; and becauſe of its gentle nature, this makes men pure, and peaceable, and gentle, and eaſy to be intreated; as the dew falls gently in a temperate and moderate air, not in ſtormy and bluſtering weather: and becauſe of its cooling nature; it allays the heats and animoſities in the minds of men; and becauſe it makes the ſaints fruitful, and to grow and increaſe in good works. For there the Lord commanded the bleſſing; either in the mountains of Zion; ſo Kimchi: and if mount Zion is meant by it, the church, often ſignified thereby, is the dwelling-place of the Lord; here he records his name and bleſſes; here his word is preached, which is full of bleſſings; and here ordinances are adminiſtered, which are bleſſed of God to his people. Theodoret thinks ſome reſpect is had to the pouring down of the Spirit on the apoſtles in Jeruſalem, on the day of Pentecoſt: but rather the ſenſe is, where brethren dwell together in unity, there the God of love and peace is; the goſpel of the grace of God is continued; and the ordinances of it made beneficial to the ſouls of men, they meeting together in peace and concord; ſee 2 Cor. xiii. 11. God is ſaid to command the bleſſing, when he promiſes it, and makes it known to his people, or beſtows it on them, Pſal. cv. 8. and xliv. 4. Even life for evermore; the great bleſſing of all, which includes all others, and in which they iſſue, the promiſe of the covenant, the bleſſing of the goſpel; which is in the hands of Chriſt, and comes through him to all his people; to the peace-makers particularly, that live in love and peace; theſe ſhall live for ever in a happy eternity, and never die, or be hurt of the ſecond death.

PSALM CXXXIV.

A ſong of degrees.

THIS is the laſt of the pſalms called ſongs of degrees; of which ſee Pſal. cxx. It is thought to be written by David, either when he brought the ark to Zion, 2 Sam. vi. 17, 18. or rather when he numbered the Levites, and appointed them their ſervice, 1 Chron. xxiii. 26, 30. So the Syriac inſcription, "a pſalm of David, concerning the prieſts, whom he appointed to wait on the miniſtry of the Lord in the nights; but ſpiritually, an inſtruction of life." Aben Ezra connects it with the preceding pſalm, "as the dew of Hermon ye ſhall be that bleſs; behold therefore, ye are bound to bleſs the Lord."

℣. 1. Behold, bleſs ye the Lord, all ye ſervants of the Lord, &c.] All men are of right the ſervants of God, being his creatures; and are under obligation, through his providential goodneſs, to bleſs and praiſe him; though they are not all in fact ſo: but all good men are, being made ſo by the power of divine grace; which frees them from the ſervitude of ſin, Satan, and the world, and makes them willing to ſerve the Lord; as they do in righteouſneſs and holineſs, with reverence and godly fear, heartily and willingly, and with great pleaſure; and yet have no dependence on any ſervice they perform: and as theſe are under the higheſt obligations to bleſs the Lord; that is, to aſcribe greatneſs to him, to give him the glory of his works, and thanks for his mercies temporal and ſpiritual; ſo they do in this way, and for thoſe things, bleſs and praiſe him, to which they are here excited. Which by night ſtand in the houſe of the Lord: according to Kimchi, theſe were the wiſe and holy men, that roſe from their beds in the night, and went to pray in the temple and to praiſe the Lord; and ſuch a holy perſon was Anna, Luke ii. 37. according to R. Obadiah and Arama, they were ſuch who continued in the chambers of the temple in the night-ſeaſon, to ſtudy in the law and in the expoſitions of it: but it is generally interpreted of the prieſts and Levites, who watched in the temple by night, that it might not be profaned nor plundered; and they were obliged to ſtand, for none might ſit in the temple but a king of the houſe of David[d]. The prieſts watched in three places, and the Levites in one and twenty, according to the Jewiſh Miſnah[e]. The Targum is, "who ſtand in the watch-"houſe of the ſanctuary of the Lord, and praiſe in "the nights;" which was one part of their ſervice, 1 Chron. ix. 33. and xxiii. 30. Under the goſpel-diſpenſation all the ſaints are prieſts, and they have a place in the houſe of the Lord; where they wait upon him in his ordinances, and ſerve him, and which they do continually. Some underſtand by nights, times of affliction, darkneſs and deſertion.

[c] Maundrell's Travels, p. 57. ed. 7.

℣. 2. Lift up your hands in the ſanctuary, &c.] Which Aben Ezra interprets of the prieſts lifting up their hands to bleſs the people; but Kimchi better, of lifting up of the hands to God in prayer; ſee Pſal. cxli. 2. which ſhould be done with holineſs, as the Targum renders it, in a holy manner; and is the ſame with lifting up holy hands, 1 Tim. ii. 8. or towards the holy place; the oracle in the holy of holies, and the ark of the covenant, typical of Chriſt; ſee 1 Kings viii. 29, 30. Pſal. xxviii. 2. ſo Kimchi; or rather, according to Arama, unto the holy name of God, to whom prayer is to be directed. And bleſs the Lord; which is repeated, to ſhew the importance of the work, that it might not be forgotten and neglected; this being a principal part of ſpiritual ſervice, and greatly acceptable to God.

℣. 3. The Lord that made heaven and earth, bleſs thee out of Zion.] Theſe are not the words of the prieſts bleſſing the people in this form, as ſome; but rather, as others, the wiſh of the ſervants of the Lord, that he would bleſs him that exhorted them to this ſervice; whether one of the prieſts, or the captain of the temple, or the pſalmiſt: though, according to Kimchi, and which ſeems agreeable, they are the words of the pſalmiſt, promiſing a bleſſing from the Lord to thoſe that bleſſed him; as an encouragement to them, to every one of them, to be conſtant and diligent in this ſervice. For ſo it may be rendered, the Lord ſhall bleſs thee[f]; all bleſſings come from the Lord, whether ſpiritual or temporal; and are to be aſked of him, and expected from him: and the bleſſings here promiſed or aſked for, are bleſſings out of Zion, the church, where God bleſſes his people with his word and ordinances, with his preſence, and with communion with himſelf. Wherefore it is good to be there waiting on him and worſhipping him, praying to him and praiſing of him; and he that made heaven and earth is able to bleſs both with heavenly and earthly things: and this deſcription of the Lord is no doubt given to encourage faith in him; for, what is it he cannot do?

PSALM CXXXV.

THIS pſalm was written very probably by the ſame hand as the former. It begins in much the ſame manner; it has ſome likeneſs with Pſal. cxiii. and cxv. It begins and ends with hallelujah; and is throughout an exhortation of praiſe to God, on account of his name, nature and perfections; and becauſe of his works of creation, providence and grace, many of which are enumerated. The Syriac interpreter ſays, there is an intimation in it of the converſion of the people of the Meſſiah unto the faith.

℣. 1. Praiſe ye the Lord, &c.] Or hallelujah; which may be conſidered as the title of the pſalm; as in the Targum, Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions: Praiſe ye the name of the Lord; that is, the Lord himſelf, and the perfections of his nature; his greatneſs, goodneſs, grace and mercy; his holineſs, juſtice, power, truth and faithfulneſs; and alſo his word by which he makes known himſelf, and is a diſtinguiſhing bleſſing to his people, and to be praiſed for it; ſee Pſal. xlviii. 1. and cxlvii. 19, 20. Praiſe him, O ye ſervants of the Lord; prieſts and Levites, and miniſters of the word, and all the people of God; who once were the ſervants of ſin, Satan and the world, but now by the grace of God become his ſervants; ſee Rom. vi. 17. Some obſerve, that the word praiſe is here uſed three times, which is thought not to be without a myſtery; and may have regard to the three divine perſons in the Godhead, who are each to be praiſed; the Father for electing grace, the Son for redeeming grace, and the Spirit for regenerating and ſanctifying grace.

℣. 2. Ye that ſtand in the houſe of the Lord, &c.] That have a place and ſtanding there, and go not out, being ſons as well as ſervants; ſee the note on Pſal. cxxxiv. 1. and lxxxiv. 4. In the courts of the houſe of our God; alluding to the courts in the temple, the court of the prieſts, where they ſtood and miniſtered, ſlaying and offering their ſacrifices; and the great court, where all the Iſraelites ſtood and worſhipped, 2 Chron. iv. 9. So this may deſcribe the worſhippers of God in common, who ſhould praiſe him: and happy are they that have a place here; ſee Pſal. lxxxiv. 1, 2, 10.

℣. 3. Praiſe ye the Lord, for the Lord is good, &c.] Eſſentially and communicatively; he is good, and he does good, in a providential way, to all men; and in a way of ſpecial grace to his own people; for whom he has laid up, and to whom he has promiſed good things, and on whom he beſtows them; as pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life; both grace and glory; and therefore they ſhould praiſe him. Sing praiſes unto his name, for it is pleaſant; either the work of ſinging praiſe is pleaſant, being the employment of angels and glorified ſaints; the ſubject-matter of it delightful, the bleſſings of grace flowing from the everlaſting love of God it leads unto, which is excellent and better than life; and it muſt be pleaſant work to a ſaint, becauſe it is pleaſing to God; and eſpecially when the preſence of God is enjoyed in it, and melody is made in the heart as well as with the mouth. Or the ſenſe is, his name is pleaſant; ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it: for though it is holy and reverend in itſelf, and fearful and terrible to ſinners; yet as it is proclaimed in Chriſt, it is exceeding delightful, and in whom all the perfections of God are glorified; particularly the name of God, as a covenant-God and Father in Chriſt, bleſſing, with all ſpiritual bleſſings in him, is exceeding pleaſant; as are all the names of Chriſt, and therefore to be praiſed.

[f] יברכך benedicet tibi, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 4. For the Lord hath choſen Jacob unto himſelf, &c.] To be his own ſpecial people, and not another's; for his own ſervice, and for his glory; and to be an habitation for himſelf, and to be for ever with him. This is not to be underſtood perſonally of Jacob, though a choſen veſſel of mercy; nor of his natural poſterity as ſuch, though choſen as a nation to outward favours; for not all they, only ſome of them were choſen to ſpecial grace and glory, a remnant according to the election of grace: but myſtical and ſpiritual Jacob and Iſrael are meant, even the whole church and people of God, whether Jews or Gentiles; theſe God has choſen of his own free grace and good-will, to all the bleſſings of grace and glory, and that from all eternity; which choice will remain firm and immutable, in time and for ever; and therefore is worthy of praiſe and thankſgiving, now and to all eternity. And Iſrael for his peculiar treaſure; by whom they are accounted as ſuch; even as the peculiar treaſure of kings, as ſilver, gold, jewels, and precious ſtones; as his inheritance, his portion, and peculiar people; ſee Exod. xix. 5. Mal. iii. 17.

℣. 5. For I know that the Lord is great, &c.] Jehovah the Father is great in his perfections; in his power, wiſdom, faithfulneſs, grace and goodneſs; and in his works of creation, providence and grace: and ſo is Jehovah the Son, who ſeems chiefly deſigned, who is called our Lord or Adon in the next clauſe; he is great, having the ſame perfections his Father has; and doing the ſame works, beſides the miracles he wrought here on earth, and the great work of our redemption: he is the great God and our Saviour, and a great Saviour he is; and indeed he is great in all his offices, of Prophet, Prieſt and King; and ſo is the bleſſed Spirit, who is equal to the Father and Son, and greater than he that is in the world. Now all this the pſalmiſt could ſay from his own knowledge; he knew the Lord was great, from the conſideration and meditation of his wondrous works; he knew the greatneſs of Chriſt, from the revelation made to him, of his perſon, offices and grace; he knew the greatneſs of the divine Spirit, from the inward experience of his work upon his heart, as well as from his being divinely inſpired by him; and becauſe of this greatneſs of the Lord, as well as his goodneſs, he is to be praiſed; it is mentioned as a reaſon of it. And that our Lord is above all gods; the Lord our righteouſneſs; Immanuel, God with us: our Lord, not only by right of creation, but of redemption; he is above all that the heathens called gods, even the greateſt of them; not the idols their hands made only, but the heavens and all the hoſt of them, the ſun, moon and ſtars; his glory is above them, being the maker of them, as God; and he is made higher than they, as man and Mediator: he is above civil magiſtrates, princes and kings of the earth, called gods, Pſal. lxxxii. 5. he is King of kings, and Lord of lords, he is higher than they; by him they reign, and to him they are accountable; and he is above the angels, ſometimes called Elohim or gods, Pſal. viii. 5. he has a more excellent name and nature than they; he is the Creator of them, the object of their worſhip, to whom they miniſter, whoſe ſervants they are; and he is now exalted above them in the human nature, at the right hand of God; ſee Heb. i. 4—14.

℣. 6. Whatſoever the Lord pleaſed, that did he, &c.] In creation, producing into being what creatures he thought fit; in providence, doing according to his will in heaven and in earth; in grace, predeſtinating men to grace and glory, according to the good pleaſure of his will, and calling by his grace whom he pleaſed: ſo Chriſt quickens whom he will; and the Spirit diſpenſes his gifts and grace ſeverally to men as he pleaſes. Sovereignty, or acting according to will and pleaſure, is peculiar to the Lord; the heavens, the ſun, moon and ſtars, are at his direction, and act by the laws of creation, which are at his controul; angels do his will, and not their own: the moſt arbitrary and deſpotic princes cannot do every thing they pleaſe; but the Lord can and does, even every thing. In heaven and in earth, in the ſeas and all deep places; in the formation of them, and filling them with inhabitants, and fitting them to perform the ſeveral ends and uſes for which they were deſigned; as well as performing many wonderful things in them out of the ordinary courſe of nature, as did our Lord, or as were done when he was here on earth: a wonderful ſtar appeared in the heavens, which guided the wiſe men to the place of his birth; unuſual voices were heard from heaven at his baptiſm, transfiguration, and other times; the Spirit, with his extraordinary gifts, deſcended from hence after his aſcenſion thither: ſurpriſing miracles were done by him on earth; the great work of redemption was finiſhed here, where he glorified his divine Father; and throughout it he ſent his apoſtles to publiſh his everlaſting goſpel. He did wonders in the mighty waters; more than once he made the boiſterous ſea a calm, and walked upon the ſurface of it: and as of old he broke up the fountains of the great deep, and drowned the world; and at another time dried up the ſea, and led his people through the depths, as through a wilderneſs: ſo he will hereafter bind the old ſerpent the devil, and caſt him into the abyſs, into the great deep, into the bottomleſs pit; where he will continue during the thouſand years reign of Chriſt with his ſaints.

℣. 7. He cauſeth the vapours to aſcend from the ends of the earth, &c.] Up to the heavens. Aben Ezra interprets this of the miſt which went up out of the earth, and watered it, Gen. ii. 6. and ſtill vapours are exhaled out of the earth by the force of the ſun, and carried up into the air, and form various things, as wind, rain, &c. The Targum, Kimchi and others, explain it of the clouds, ſo called from their elevation on high: theſe riſe up out of the ſea, the borders, and boundaries and uttermoſt parts of the earth; ſee 1 Kings xviii. 44. Amos v. 8. Jerom interprets theſe clouds, ſpiritually and myſtically, of the apoſtles and prophets, raiſed from a low and mean eſtate; and ſo may be applied to the miniſters of the word, who are clouds full of water; of good doctrine, which they are ſent to carry about the world, and publiſh in it; ſee Iſa. v. 6. He maketh lightnings for the rain; for the deſcent of the rain, as the Targum; by lightning oftentimes the clouds are broke, and ſo pour down rain; ſee Job xxviii. 26. Or, lightnings with the rain[g]; as Kimchi: theſe frequently come together, which is very ſurpriſing, that two ſuch different elements ſhould meet together, as fire and water; and yet the fire not quenched by the water, nor the water heated by the fire: theſe the above ancient chriſtian writer interprets of the light of knowledge, and the rain of doctrine; ſee Zech. ix. 14. Deut. xxxii. 3.

Iſa. lv. 10, 11. He bringeth the wind out of his treaſuries; as he has his treaſuries for the ſnow and hail, Job xxxviii. 22. ſo for the winds: not the caverns of the earth, thought to be the repoſitories of the wind [h]; nor are there proper repoſitories of it: but the air, as Suidas [i]; which, when without wind, is eaſily moved by the wiſe hand of God; ſo Theodoret, from whom he ſeems to have taken this hint. In ſcripture only mention is made of four winds, Ezek. xxxvii. 9. Matt. xxiv. 31. Rev. vii. 1. and ſo the ancient Greeks only reckoned four cardinal winds, but at length they added four more; and at Athens was a marble temple, built by Andronicus Cyrrheſtes, called the temple of the eight winds: this was an octagon, and on each ſide were engraven the images of every wind; and on the top of it was a Triton of braſs, with a rod in his right hand, which being moved about by the wind, pointed to that which then blew [k]: but now, through the great improvement of navigation, the winds are divided and ſubdivided in the points of the compaſs; and, beſides the four cardinal ones, there are twenty eight collateral ones, in all thirty two; but be they reckoned as many as they may, they are all in the hands of God, and diſpoſed of at his pleaſure. Jerom here interprets them of the angels; perhaps it might be better to apply them to the gifts and graces of the Spirit, ſometimes compared to wind, which are treaſured up in Chriſt; ſee John iii. 8. Acts ii. 1—4.

℣. 8. Who ſmote the firſt-born of Egypt, both of man and beaſt.] Which was the laſt of the plagues inflicted on the Egyptians; and is particularly mentioned, becauſe, by means of it, they were made willing to let the children of Iſrael go out of their land: and ſo this includes the deliverance of the Iſraelites, God's firſt-born, when he ſlew the firſt-born of Egypt; and who were typical of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven; and the deliverance of them, through the blood of the paſſover, was an emblem of the deliverance of thoſe by the blood of Chriſt; ſee Exod. xii. 22, 23, 27, 29, 30.

℣. 9. Who ſent tokens and wonders into the midſt of thee, O Egypt, &c.] Or ſigns and wonders. Meaning the other extraordinary plagues ſent among the Egyptians, before that of ſlaying their firſt-born; and which have ſome likeneſs to the vials of God's wrath, which will be poured out on the city called ſpiritually Sodom and Egypt, Rev. xi. 8. and xvi. 1. Upon Pharaoh, and upon all his ſervants; his courtiers: ſome of them are particularly obſerved to affect him and his court; as the plagues of the frogs, and ſlaying the firſt-born: and he and his princes muſt be more or leſs affected with them all, as well as the common people; who were an emblem either of Satan and his principalities, as Jerom interprets it; or rather, of Antichriſt and his followers; to whom the tokens of God's wrath and diſpleaſure will be ſent in a wonderful way and manner.

℣. 10. Who ſmote great nations, and ſlew mighty kings.] Or many nations [l]. The ſeven nations of the Hittites, Girgaſhites, Amorites, Canaanites, Perizzites, Hivites and Jebuſites; the kings of which were mighty and many, even one and thirty in number, Joſh. xii. 1—24. This the Lord did by Joſhua, a type of Chriſt; who has overcome the world by his ſufferings and death, and delivered his people from it; who went forth conquering and to conquer, into the Roman pagan empire, called the whole world, and ſubdued it by his Spirit and word; and will ſhew his power in all the kingdoms of this world, either by converting or deſtroying them; and at laſt will judge all the nations and kings of the earth. Aben Ezra interprets this of the kings of Midian, or of thoſe next mentioned, which is beſt.

℣. 11. Sihon king of the Amorites, and Og king of Baſhan, &c.] Theſe are particularly named, becauſe they were the firſt that were ſlain, and were the moſt mighty and powerful; ſee Deut. iii. 11. Amos ii. 9. Theſe the Lord ſlew by the hand of Moſes, a type of Chriſt; who has deſtroyed the god and prince of this world, that had the power of death, the devil; and has ſpoiled all his principalities and powers. And all the kingdoms of Canaan; one and thirty of them. Theſe words explain the former; as the two kings mentioned point at the mighty kings ſlain, theſe kingdoms ſhew who the great nations were that were ſmitten.

℣. 12. And gave their land for an heritage, &c.] The land of the two kings before mentioned, which was given to the Reubenites, and Gadites, and half tribe of Manaſſeh, Deut. iii. 12—17. and the lands belonging to the ſeveral kingdoms of Canaan, were given to the reſt of the tribes. An heritage unto Iſrael his people; a type of the heavenly Canaan, the glorious, incorruptible, undefiled and eternal inheritance; which is of God's free grace, choſen, prepared and given; even a right unto it, and meetneſs for it, to the true and ſpiritual Iſrael of God, to his ſpecial people, his choſen, redeemed and called ones.

℣. 13. Thy name, O Lord, endureth for ever, &c.] The Lord himſelf endures for ever, in his nature, being, and perfections; and the fame of him, the fame of thoſe acts of power and goodneſs before mentioned: the name of Chriſt endures for ever; his perſon and offices, his goſpel, which is his name; his children and people, who are called by his name, and in whom his name is perpetuated; the fame of his wondrous works in nature, providence, and grace; and eſpecially of his great work of redemption and ſalvation. And thy memorial, O Lord, throughout all generations; or the remembrance of them to generation and generation; to every age; the love of Chriſt is remembered by his people in every age, the bleſſings of his grace in redemption, juſtification, pardon, &c. and cannot be forgotten as long as his goſpel is preached, the ordinances of baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper adminiſtered, and he has a people in the world, all which will be as long as the ſun and moon endure, there will be a memorial of him.

℣. 14. For the Lord will judge his people, &c.] Rule and govern, protect and defend them; plead their cauſe and avenge them of their enemies; judge between them, diſtinguiſh them by his care and providence, make them viſible, ſo that others ſhall ſee the difference between them; eſpecially at the laſt day, when he will judge them, and as the righteous judge give them the crown of righteouſneſs. Or though the Lord judges his people [m]; chaſtizes them in a fatherly way that they may not be condemned with the world; and or yet [n] he will repent himſelf concerning his ſervants; of the evil of affliction he has brought upon them; he will change the courſe of his providential dealings with them, according to his unchangeable will; and turn their adverſity into proſperity, and their mourning into joy: ſome render it, he will be intreated for his ſervants[o]; he will hear prayer on their account, and ſave them out of their afflictions; or as others, he will comfort himſelf concerning his ſervants[p]; take pleaſure in them and their proſperity, comfort them and take delight in ſo doing. The Targum of the whole is, "for the Lord will judge the judgment "of his people by his word, and to his righteous "ſervants will return in his mercies."

℣. 15. The idols of the heathen are ſilver and gold, &c.] This, with what follows, is obſerved, to ſhew that when God judges his people, and takes vengeance on their enemies, the idols they ſerve will not be able to protect them, and deliver them out of his hands; and alſo to prove what is before aſſerted, that our Jehovah is great above all gods, ℣. 5. the matter of which they are made is at beſt gold and ſilver, which are the duſt and metals of the earth, or what the prophet calls thick clay, Hab. ii. 6. and are the creatures of Jehovah, and at his diſpoſe, who ſays, the ſilver and the gold are mine, Haggai ii. 8, 9. and who is infinitely above them in value and worth; even the knowledge of him, and the words of his mouth, doctrines and precepts, are better than gold and ſilver, Prov. iii. 14, 15. and viii. 10, 11. Pſal. xix. 10. and cxix. 72, 127. The work of mens hands; which they form out of gold and ſilver into ſuch ſhapes and figures, and therefore can never have deity in them; and a moſt ſtupid thing it is to imagine that the godhead is like to gold and ſilver, graven by art and man's device, Acts xvii. 29. ſee the note on Pſal. cxv. 4.

℣. 16. They have mouths, but they ſpeak not, &c.] Return no anſwer to the requeſt and petition of their votaries; ſee the note on Pſal. cxv. 5. Eyes have they, but they ſee not; the ſame is obſerved in the above place, which ſee.

℣. 17. They have ears, but they hear not, &c.] See the note on Pſal. cxv. 6. Neither is there any breath in their mouths; they are lifeleſs ſtatues, they have not ſo much as what the brute creatures have, breath; our Jehovah, as the living God, is rightly oppoſed to them, who gives life, and breath, and all things unto man; and yet what amazing ſtupidity is it, that any of them ſhould worſhip ſuch as gods, who have not what they themſelves have.

℣. 18. They that make them are like unto them, &c.] Are as blind, ſtupid, and ſenſeleſs as they; or let them that make them, &c.[q] ſo ſome verſions and interpreters; ſee the note on Pſal. cxv. 8. So is every one that truſteth in them; alike ignorant and ſottiſh: and ſo are all ſuch that ſet up idols and luſts in their own hearts, and ſerve them; or truſt to their own righteouſneſs; even all unregenerate and ſelf-righteous perſons: they cannot ſpeak a word for God and his grace, for Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, for the Spirit of God and his work upon their hearts, of all which they are ignorant; they are blind and have no ſight and ſenſe of their ſin and miſery, and of their need of Chriſt and his righteouſneſs; they are deaf to his goſpel and the charming voice of it; they are lifeleſs and breathleſs, are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and have no pantings and deſires after ſpiritual things.

℣. 19. Bleſs the Lord, O houſe of Iſrael, &c.] Who are choſen by the Lord to be a ſpecial people to him above all others; redeemed from Egyptian bondage; through a variety of ſurprizing providences brought into and ſettled in the land of Canaan; diſtinguiſhed by various bleſſings, favoured with the word, worſhip and ordinances of God, and not left to worſhip idols of gold and ſilver, as other nations; and therefore had great reaſon to bleſs the Lord: as alſo the ſpiritual Iſrael, or the houſhold of God and of faith, the family of Chriſt; and that becauſe they are of his family, becauſe of the love of God to them, his choice of them, his covenant with them, their redemption by Chriſt, their effectual calling; or for being made Iſraelites indeed, and the proviſions made for them in the houſe of God for their ſpiritual welfare. Bleſs the Lord, O houſe of Aaron; who were ſeparated from their brethren to miniſter in the prieſts office; to offer gifts and ſacrifices for the people, and to bleſs them, Exod. xxviii. 1. Numb. vi. 23—27. which was a very ſacred and honourable employment, and they were under obligation to bleſs the Lord who had called them to it, and put this honour on them; as are the miniſters of the goſpel, who have received gifts from Chriſt; whom he has counted faithful, and put into the miniſtry; made ſtewards of the myſteries of his grace, and ambaſſadors in his ſtead; and eſpecially if made uſeful for edification and converſion: and indeed all the Lord's people, who are all made prieſts unto God, and have nearneſs unto him, liberty and boldneſs to enter into the holieſt of all, as Aaron once a year into the moſt holy place; and who have better ſacrifices to offer than he, the living ſacrifices of their own bodies and ſouls, and not ſlain beaſts; ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe; and above all, the ſweet ſmelling ſacrifice of Chriſt they bring in the arms of faith, and ſo enter into the courts of God.

℣. 20. Bleſs the Lord, O houſe of Levi, &c.] Theſe were of the ſame tribe with the houſe of Aaron, but inferior miniſters; they miniſtered to the prieſts, and had the charge of things in the tabernacle and temple; many of them were porters in the latter, and others were ſingers, and of theſe Kimchi interprets the words; whoſe work it was to give thanks morning and evening, and ſo are with great propriety called upon to bleſs the Lord, Numb. iii. 6—8. 1 Chron. xxiii. 5, 30. and may myſtically deſign inferior officers in the church, who are helps and aſſiſtants to miniſters in the government and diſcipline of it, and have the care of its ſecular affairs; and who when they behave well purchaſe to themſelves a good degree, and boldneſs in the faith; and even doorkeepers in the houſe of the Lord have reaſon to bleſs his name for a place there; and all the ſaints are the ſweet ſingers of Iſrael, have the new ſong of electing, redeeming, and calling grace put into their mouths, and therefore ſhould bleſs the Lord. Ye that fear the Lord, bleſs the Lord; theſe are diſtinct from the Iſraelites, prieſts and Levites, and deſign the proſelytes among them of other nations that truly feared God, as Jarchi notes; and all ſuch perſons, whoever and wherever they are, have reaſon to bleſs the Lord for the fear of him they have, which is not from nature but from grace; and for the favours ſhewn them, the bleſſings beſtowed upon them, the good things laid up for them, and the guard that is about them, which the ſcriptures abundantly declare, and experience confirms.

℣. 21. Bleſſed be the Lord out of Zion, &c.] This, according to Aben Ezra, was the formula of bleſſing to be uſed by the houſes of Iſrael, Aaron and Levi, and all that feared God; or a direction to them in what manner they ſhould bleſs him; and may both point out the perſons that were to bleſs, and the place where; thoſe that were inhabitants of Zion, where praiſe waited for the Lord, and was his due; and the bleſſings and benefits he was to be praiſed for, ſuch as came out of Zion, ſtrength from the Lord there, the rod of his ſtrength, the word of the goſpel, and the Saviour himſelf. Which dwelleth at Jeruſalem; in the temple there; and which diſtinguiſhes him from the idols of the heathens before mentioned; and who dwells in the heavenly Jeruſalem, in goſpel churches; and will dwell in the new Jeruſalem, where his tabernacle will be with men, Rev. xxi. 3. Praiſe ye the Lord; or hallelujah; and ſo the pſalm ends as it begun, being from firſt to laſt an exhortation to praiſe.

PSALM CXXXVI.

THIS pſalm was very probably compoſed by David, and given to the Levites to ſing every day, 1 Chron. xvi. 41. Solomon his ſon followed his example, and made uſe of them in ſinging it at the dedication of the temple, 2 Chron. vii. 3, 6. as Jehoſhaphat ſeems to have done when he went out to war againſt his enemies, 2 Chron. xx. 21. The ſubject of it is much the ſame with the preceding pſalm; its compoſition is very ſingular, the half of every verſe in it is, for his mercy endureth for ever; this is the burden of the ſong; and the deſign of it is to ſhew, that all bleſſings of every kind flow from the grace, goodneſs, and mercy of God, which is conſtant and perpetual; and to impreſs a ſenſe of it upon the minds of men: the inſcription of the Syriac verſion is, "it is ſaid of Moſes "and Iſrael praiſing the Lord for thoſe who were "delivered; and concerning the deliverance of "ſouls out of hell from Pharaoh, the devil, by "Chriſt our Saviour, the Redeemer of them." R. Obadiah ſays it is an exhortation to the children of God in the days of the Meſſiah to praiſe the Lord.

℣. 1. O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, &c.] In himſelf, and to all his creatures; and eſpecially to his choſen people, who therefore ſhould give thanks to him daily in the name of Chriſt for all bleſſings temporal and ſpiritual, in faith and fervency, and in the ſincerity of their ſouls, with their whole heart. For his mercy endureth for ever; it is the ſame with his love, which is from everlaſting to everlaſting; and continues notwithſtanding the ſins of his people, the hidings of his face from them, and his chaſtiſements of them; the covenant which is founded on mercy, and all the bleſſings of it, which are the ſure mercies of David, laſt for ever; and hence the veſſels of mercy ſhall certainly be ſaved, and not loſt; ſee Pſalm cvi. 1. and cvii. 1.

℣. 2. O give thanks unto the God of gods, &c.] Not only of the gods of the Gentiles, who are by name and not by nature gods; or of civil magiſtrates, who are ſo called, and ſeem to be deſigned in the next verſe; but the angels, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi. Chriſt, our Immanuel, is the God of them, the object of their worſhip and adoration, being their creator and preſerver, Pſalm xcvii. 7. Heb. i. 6, 7. So the heathens ſay [r] of the maker of all things, him you may properly call the God of gods, the ſupreme and beſt; this title Janus has with them [s]. For his mercy endureth for ever; in the preſervation of thoſe excellent creatures from apoſtaſy, when many of their ſpecies fell; and in the continuance and confirmation of them in the ſtate in which they were created; and in making uſe of them as miniſtring ſpirits to the heirs of ſalvation; and as a guard about them while they live, and at death to convey their ſouls to heaven.

℣. 3. O give thanks to the Lord of lords, &c.] Which is not only the title of the God of Iſrael, as the former, Deut. x. 17. but of the Meſſiah, Rev. xix. 16. who is the Prince of the kings of the earth; under whom they are, by whom they reign, and to whom they are accountable, being higher than they; as in nature, ſo by office, Rev. i. 5. Prov. viii. 15, 16. Pſal. lxxxix. 27. For his mercy endureth for ever; in putting it into the hearts of kings and princes, which he has in his hands, to ſhew favour to his people, even to be their nurſing fathers; and in curbing the power, reſtraining the wrath of oppreſſors, and protecting his people from their rage and violence.

℣. 4. To him who alone doeth great wonders, &c.] As in the works of creation at firſt, having no help from angels or men; ſo in the works of providence, many of which are unſearchable, and paſt finding out, and in which he has no aſſiſtance from creatures; and in the works of grace, redemption, and ſalvation, which his own arm has wrought out; as well as what he did when here on earth in our nature; the miracles then wrought by his omnipotent arm alone; and even all the wonders which Moſes and Elijah did under the Old Teſtament, and the apoſtles of Chriſt under the New, were done, not by their power, but by his alone; who will do ſtill greater wonders, when he ſhall create all things new, raiſe the dead, and ſummon all nations before him, and render to every one according to his works. For his mercy endureth for ever; towards his people, for whoſe ſake all theſe wonders are wrought.

℣. 5. To him that by wiſdom made the heavens, &c.] In ſuch a curious manner, in ſuch a proper and delightful ſituation, with ſuch furniture, and for ſuch uſes, Prov. iii. 19. For his mercy endureth for ever; which appears in the continued influences of the heaven; the dew, rain, and ſnow, that deſcend from it on the earth to water and make it fruitful, and to produce thoſe rich and valuable bleſſings called the precious things of heaven, Deut. xxxiii. 13. and which are of the utmoſt importance for the ſervice of man and beaſt: and beſides, God has of his infinite mercy, which continues, provided an inheritance in the heavens, an houſe eternal in the heavens, manſions of bliſs and glory there, which Chriſt is now preparing for his ſaints, that they may dwell with him in them for evermore.

℣. 6. To him that ſtretcheth out the earth above the waters, &c.] Or beſides the waters [t], cloſe by them, and yet ſecures the earth from being covered with them; ſee Pſal. xxiv. 2. For his mercy endureth for ever; it was in mercy he cauſed the waters to go off the earth which firſt covered it; that trees, plants and herbs might ſpring up out of it, and that it might be a fit habitation for man; and though for the ſins of the old world theſe waters were let in upon it, which drowned it and deſtroyed man and beaſt upon it, except a few that were in mercy preſerved; yet the Lord has promiſed and ſwore to it, that theſe waters ſhall no more go over the earth to deſtroy it; he has ſet a bound for the ſea that it cannot paſs, by a decree of his; even the ſand on the ſhore, which as weak as it may ſeem to be is a bound unpaſſable; though they may toſs and rage and roar, they ſhall not prevail, nor paſs over it, which is a perpetual miracle of mercy, Jer. v. 22.

℣. 7. To him that made great lights, &c.] For the inhabitants of the world to walk and work by, to do all the buſineſs of life in a comfortable manner; and which is an inſtance of mercy and goodneſs; ſee Gen. i. 14—16. For his mercy endureth for ever; theſe lights continuing for the benefit of mankind.

℣. 8. The ſun, to rule by day, &c.] Which is the greater light, Gen. i. 16. For his mercy endureth for ever; this great light, ſo beneficial to the earth and the inhabitants of it, which was made near ſix thouſand years ago, ſtill continues, and will to the end of time; enlightening the world, warming the air and earth, imparting its light and heat to all creatures on it, and influencing the earth to bring forth a variety of things for the uſe and delight of mankind, called the precious things brought forth by the ſun, Deut. xxxiii. 14. an emblem of a more beneficial light, in which the rich grace and mercy of God appear, and for which we have reaſon to give thanks; even the ſun of righteouſneſs, the Meſſiah, the light of the world, the author of the light of nature, grace and glory; and who will continue as long as the ſun, and when that ſhall be no more, Mal. iv. 2. Pſal. lxxii. 17.

℣. 9. The moon and ſtars, to rule by night, &c.] The leſſer lights, and which indeed receive all their light from the ſun, Gen. i. 16. For his mercy endureth for ever; in continuing theſe lights, ſo uſeful to men, as well as in making of them; the moon and ſtars have their benign influences upon the earth, to produce things out of it uſeful to men; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 14. Job xxxviii. 31. and are of ſingular ſervice to benighted travellers, and to thoſe that go down to the ſea in ſhips; ſee Acts xxvii. 20. The moon is an emblem of the church, that receives her light from Chriſt, the ſun, and which will continue for ever; and ſtars are emblems of goſpel-miniſters, who are the means of enlightning dark ſouls, and of refreſhing diſconſolate ſaints; and are a continued mercy to an ignorant world, as well as to the church, and will be continued as long as it ſtands; ſee Cant. vi. 10. Rev. i. 20. and ii. 1. Matt. v. 14. and xxviii. 20.

℣. 10. To him that ſmote Egypt in their firſt-born, &c.] In a tender part, in the dear part of themſelves, in their ſons and heirs, and who were to inherit their lands and eſtates, and perpetuate their names; this was an act of juſtice for uſing ill the Lord's firſt-born, the people of Iſrael, ſlaying their ſons, and refuſing to let them go, Exod. i. 13, 14, 16, 22. and iv. 22, 23. and yet there was mercy in it, for which thanks were to be given to God. For his mercy endureth for ever; the Iſraelites, in a very merciful manner, were diſtinguiſhed by the blood ſprinkled on their door-poſts, when the deſtroying angel paſſed through the land of Egypt to deſtroy their firſt-born; and when they were deſtroyed, it was owing to the kind providence of God that the Egyptians did not riſe as one man to cut off the Iſraelites in vengeance; and yet not a dog was ſuffered to move his tongue againſt them when the diſmal cry was made; yea this was the means of their deliverance, which could not be obtained by all the other plagues; but now they not only bid them go, but were urgent upon them to be gone, Exod. xi. 5—7. and xii. 22, 23, 29—33.

℣. 11. And brought out Iſrael from among them, &c.] A wicked and idolatrous people, among whom they ſuffered great hardſhips; and this was done by means of God's judgments on them, and eſpecially that before related; and was an inſtance of the mercy of God, as follows, for which thanks ſhould be given. For his mercy endureth for ever; and this is a proof of it, bringing the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, the houſe of bondage; when they cried unto him by reaſon of it, and he ſent them a Saviour to deliver them out of their diſtreſs, Exod. ii. 23. and xv. 13. and xx. 1. an emblem of the grace and mercy of God, in delivering his people from a worſe than Egyptian bondage; from the bondage of ſin, Satan, the law, and through fear of death, into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

℣. 12. With a ſtrong hand, and with a ſtretched-out arm, &c.] Exerting his power in a very open manner, and continuing it till he had effected the work; bringing his people out of Egypt, which is always aſcribed to his great ſtrength and mighty power, Exod. xiii. 3, 9. and xv. 6, 16. and xxxii. 11. The redemption of the myſtical Iſrael of God, is by a mighty Redeemer, the Lord of hoſts; who has redeemed them out of the hands of their enemies, that were ſtronger than they, and too ſtrong for them: the converſion of them is by the power of the grace of God, even by the exceeding greatneſs of his power, and yet both acts of grace and mercy. For his mercy endureth for ever; it was mercy put the Lord on ſtretching out his arm, and ſhewing the ſtrength of his right hand, in delivering Iſrael out of Egypt; and in his love and in his pity he redeemed them, Iſa. lxiii. 9. It is owing to the tender mercies of our God, and is a performing the mercy promiſed to the fathers, that Chriſt, the day-ſpring from on high, was ſent to viſit and redeem us, Luke i. 68, 72, 78. and the regeneration, quickening and converſion of ſinners, are acts of mercy as well as of power, Eph. ii. 4, 5. 1 Pet. i. 3.

℣. 13. To him which divided the Red-ſea into parts, &c.] Into two parts, ſo that the waters of it ſtood as a wall on the right and left hand of the Iſraelites, as they paſſed through; this was done by means of a ſtrong eaſt-wind, Exod. xiv. 21, 22. The Jews have a tradition, which Jarchi, Kimchi and Arama, make mention of, that the ſea was divided into twelve parts, according to the twelve tribes of Iſrael, and every tribe had a path by itſelf to walk in; but for this there is no foundation: however, the dividing it into parts was a wonderful work, and a rich diſplay of mercy to Iſrael. For his mercy endureth for ever; the children of Iſrael were encompaſſed about, and in the utmoſt diſtreſs: the rocks were on each ſide, Pharaoh and his hoſt behind them, the Red-ſea before them; and ſo no viſible way of eſcape; but the Lord cut a way for them through the ſea, and ſaved them. The ſea is an emblem of this world, which is like a tempeſtuous, troubled ſea; where every thing is reſtleſs, fluctuating, and paſſing away; where the people of God are toſſed with tempeſts; and where afflictions, like the waves and billows of the ſea, come over them one after another; and through which they muſt paſs and enter the kingdom: and God that wills, orders and appoints them, ſets theſe proud waves of the ſea their bounds, or makes them a calm; and, ſooner or later, makes a way through them and out of them, which is owing to his enduring mercy, 1 Cor. x. 13.

℣. 14. And made Iſrael to paſs through the midſt of it, &c.] Willingly, without reluctance; with great ſpirit and courage, fearleſs of danger, and with the utmoſt ſafety, ſo that not one was loſt in the paſſage; ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 53. and thus the Lord makes his people willing to paſs thro' afflictions, he being with them; and able to bear them, he putting underneath the everlaſting arms, even when in the valley of the ſhadow of death; and carries ſafely through them, ſo that they are not hurt by them; the waters do not overflow them, nor the fire kindle upon them; nor are any ſuffered to be loſt, but all come ſafe to land. For his mercy endureth for ever; to which, and to his never-failing compaſſion, it is owing, that they are not conſumed, Lam. iii. 22, 23.

℣. 15. But overthrew Pharaoh and his hoſt in the Red-ſea, &c.] In the ſame ſea which was parted for the Iſraelites, and through which they paſſed ſafely as on dry land; into which Pharaoh and his army, entering in purſuit of them in their chariots, the Lord ſhook[u] him and them out of them, as the word ſignifies; and cauſing the waters to return and cover them, they were drowned in them, Exod. xiv. 28—31. This was an emblem of the deſtruction of Satan, and of his principalities and powers, by Chriſt, who thereby has ſaved his ſpiritual Iſrael out of their hands; and of the caſting of the ſins of God's people into the depths of the ſea, never to be ſeen more, or to appear any more againſt them to their condemnation; and of the everlaſting ruin and perdition of ungodly men. For his mercy endureth for ever; it was in mercy to Iſrael that Pharaoh and his hoſt were deſtroyed, who threatened them with ruin; and therefore they ſung of judgment and of mercy, and gave thanks to God for this inſtance of his vengeance on their enemies, and of goodneſs to them, Exod. xv. 1.

℣. 16. To him which led his people through the wilderneſs, &c.] Where there was no path. This the Lord did by going before them in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night, to ſhew them the way in which they ſhould go, Exod. xiii. 21, 22. ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 14. For his mercy endureth for ever; among the manifold mercies of God, ſhewn to Iſrael in the wilderneſs, this is one taken notice of by Nehemiah, chap. ix. 19. that the pillar of cloud and fire to direct them, never departed from them while in it: and this act of leading them, not only includes the guidance of them in the way, but the proviſion made for them; of water out of the rock, and of manna that fell about their tents every day; and of fleſh and feathered fowl, like duſt, ſo that they wanted nothing; and alſo the protection of them from their enemies: all which were proofs of his conſtant care over them, and continual mercy to them; ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 15, 16, 24, 25, 27.

℣. 17. To him which ſmote great kings, &c.] Either the one and thirty kings in the land of Canaan; or thoſe who are after particularly mentioned; which ſeems beſt, ſince the kings of Canaan were petty kings, when theſe were greater ones. For his mercy endureth for ever; the ſmiting of thoſe kings were in mercy to Iſrael; both to preſerve them from falling into their hands, and that they might poſſeſs their countries, as is after declared.

℣. 18. And ſlew famous kings, &c.] Famous for their power and ſtrength, their courage and valour; who were not only ſmitten and diſcomfited, but ſlain in battle. For his mercy endureth for ever; towards his own people, for whoſe ſake theſe kings were ſlain.

℣. 19. Sihon king of the Amorites, &c.] A ſtrong and warlike people, and their king a great and mighty one; ſee Pſal. cxxxv. 11. For his mercy endureth for ever; ſince this king would not ſuffer Iſrael to go through his borders, but came out and fought againſt them; and had not the Lord ſmote him, they muſt have fallen a prey into his hands, Numb. xxi. 23.

℣. 20. And Og the king of Baſhan, &c.] A country large and fruitful, and the king of it of a gigantic ſtature; ſee Pſal. cxxxv. 11. For his mercy endureth for ever; for this mighty king came out againſt Iſrael, and threatened their deſtruction, and it was of the Lord's mercies they were not conſumed by him. And it may be obſerved, whenever tyrannical princes and oppreſſors are cut off, it is in mercy to the inhabitants of the earth, and eſpecially to the people of God.

℣. 21. And gave their land for an heritage, &c.] This was taken away from them and their ſubjects by the Lord, who has the diſpoſing of kingdoms, and given to another people for an inheritance. For his mercy endureth for ever; whilſt his juſtice is exerciſed on ſome, in a ſtrict manner, with ſeverity and rigour; his mercy is ſhewn to others.

℣. 22. Even an heritage unto Iſrael his ſervant, &c.] The land of thoſe that ſerved idols, the Lord took and gave to Iſrael for an inheritance, who ſerved him, the true God. Thus the Lord rewards his ſervants in a way of grace and mercy, though not as of debt; for it follows, For his mercy endureth for ever: Aben Ezra and Kimchi make the mercy to lie in this peculiarly, that the lands of theſe kings were not in the covenant with Abraham; only the ſeven nations or kingdoms of Canaan, which are not here mentioned, as in Pſal. cxxxv. 11. but the Amorites were given in the covenant, Gen. xv. 21. and the one as the other were given as an inheritance to Iſrael, and equally owing to the mercy of God; ſee Pſal. cxxxv. 11, 12. And thus the heavenly glory, of which Canaan was a type, is an inheritance owing to the mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Jude 21.

℣. 23. Who remembered us in our low eſtate, &c.] The Iſraelites; either in Egypt, as Jarchi, when in bondage and diſtreſs there, and ſent them a deliverer; or in the times of the Judges, whom God raiſed up one after another, to ſave his people out of the hands of their enemies, by whom they were oppreſſed; or in the Babyloniſh captivity, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi: though the latter thinks their preſent captivity is rather intended; but as yet they are not remembered in a gracious way and manner. This may be applied to the people of God in a ſpiritual ſenſe; who, before converſion, are in a low eſtate through ſin, which has brought them into deep poverty, into debt they are not able to diſcharge, but are liable to a priſon; it has ſtripped them of their original righteouſneſs, inſtead of which at beſt they are cloathed with filthy rags; it has left them, ſtarving and famiſhing, to feed on aſhes, ſenſual luſts and pleaſures; it has brought them to a dunghil, from whence they are taken as beggars; yea, to a ditch, a pit wherein is no water; even an horrible pit, the mire and clay of corrupt nature. Man, that was lord of all, is by ſin reduced to the utmoſt ſlavery to it, and to Satan; and is in the greateſt diſtreſs and miſery; filled with diſeaſes, loathſome and incurable by him; quite loſt and undone, helpleſs and hopeleſs, and under the ſentence of condemnation and death: but the Lord has remembered his choſen people, and provided a Saviour for them; who has paid all their debts; brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs to clothe them; given his fleſh for the life of them; healed all their diſeaſes; delivered them from thraldom and bondage; ſaved them from condemnation and death, and raiſed them to ſit in heavenly places with him: and not only ſo but he ſends down his Spirit to convince and convert them, renew and ſanctify them; to bring them from death to life; out of darkneſs into marvellous light; from bondage to liberty; from fellowſhip with wicked men, into communion with Chriſt and his people; and to make them meet for heaven and happineſs. Theſe are ſometimes in a low eſtate after converſion; when corruptions prevail, and the temptations of Satan are ſtrong; when grace is weak; or God hides his face; or they are grown carnal and ſecure, lukewarm and indifferent to ſpiritual things; yet the Lord remembers them again, his lovingkindneſs, his covenant and promiſes; and with everlaſting kindneſs has mercy on them, heals their backſlidings, and loves them freely. The Targum is, "he hath remembered his covenant with us;" ſo Kimchi. For his mercy endureth for ever; which appears in the miſſion of his Son to ſave; in giving his Spirit to regenerate and quicken when dead in ſin, and to revive and reſtore when backſlidden.

[u] נער excuſſit, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, &c.

℣. 24. And hath redeemed us from our enemies, &c.] Temporal enemies, tyrants and oppreſſors; and ſpiritual ones, ſin, Satan, the world, the law, death and hell. For his mercy endureth for ever; as is clearly ſeen in redemption by Jeſus Chriſt, where mercy and truth have met together; and which is a diſtinguiſhing mercy to the ſons of men, not granted to angels.

℣. 25. Who giveth food to all fleſh, &c.] To all creatures; the beaſts of the field, and fowls of the air, the young ravens that cry, Pſal. cxlv. 15, 16. and cxlvii. 9. To all men their daily food; to Jews and Gentiles, good men and bad men, Matt. vi. 11. Acts xiv. 16, 17. and ſpiritual food to all that belong to Chriſt, who are fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bone; even himſelf, the bread of life, the wholſome truths of the goſpel, and its refreſhing ordinances. For his mercy endureth for ever; he continues to have compaſſion on his creatures, and opens his hand of providence, and ſupplies their wants; he is ever mindful of his covenant of grace and mercy, and therefore gives meat to them that fear him, Pſal. cxi. 5.

℣. 26. O give thanks unto the God of heaven, &c.] the maker of it, in which the glory of his wiſdom and power is diſplayed; the poſſeſſor of it, where he dwells, has his throne, and keeps his court; from whence all bleſſings, temporal and ſpiritual, come; and where he has prepared glory and happineſs for his people hereafter, an houſe eternal in the heavens, an inheritance reſerved there, a better and a more enduring ſubſtance. For his mercy endureth for ever; for though the above character is expreſſive of his ſovereignty and dominion, yet he exerciſes it in a way of grace and mercy to the ſons of men; and therefore they have reaſon to give thanks unto him, and praiſe him for his kindneſs and favours ſhewn to them on earth.

PSALM CXXXVII.

THE occaſion of this pſalm was the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, and the treatment they met with there; either as foreſeen, or as now endured. Aben Ezra aſcribes this pſalm to David; and ſo the Syriac verſion, which calls it, "a pſalm "of David; the words of the ſaints, who were carried captive into Babylon." The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, make it to be David's, and yet add the name of Jeremiah; and the Arabic verſion calls it David's, concerning Jeremiah: but, as Theodoret obſerves, Jeremiah was not carried into Babylon, but after ſome ſhort ſtay in or near Jeruſalem, was forced away into Egypt; and could neither be the writer, nor ſubject of this pſalm: and though it might be wrote by David, under a ſpirit of prophecy; who thereby might foreſee and foretel the Babyloniſh captivity, and what the Jews would ſuffer in it; as the prophets Iſaiah and Jeremiah did, many years before it came to paſs; yet it ſeems rather to have been written by one of the captivity, either whilſt in it, or immediately after it.

℣. 1. By the rivers of Babylon, there we ſat down, &c.] If by Babylon is meant the country, then the rivers of it are, Chebar, Ulai, Tigris, Euphrates, and others; ſee Ezek. i. 1. Dan. viii. 2. but if the city itſelf, then only Euphrates, which ran through it; and is expreſſed by rivers, becauſe of the largeneſs of it, and becauſe of the ſeveral canals cut out of it, for the ſervice of the city; hence Babylon is ſaid to dwell upon many waters, Jer. li. 13. upon the banks whereof the captive Jews were; either through choice, where they could be alone, and mourn their fate, indulge their ſorrows, and give vent to their grief; or by the order of thoſe who carried them captive, there to be employed, either in taking goods from ſhips here unloaded, or to repair and maintain the banks of the rivers, or to do ſome ſervile work or another; ſee Ezek. i. 1. and where they would ſometimes ſit down penſive, as mourners uſed to do, and lament their caſe, Job ii. 8, 13. Or this phraſe may expreſs their reſidence here, and the continuance and length of their captivity, which was ſeventy years: yea, Babylon itſelf may be meant by the waters of it; juſt as Thebes, in Pindar [w], is called the Dircæan waters, near to which it was. Yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion; they imitated the flowing ſtream by which they ſat, and ſwelled it with their tears; they wept for their ſins, which brought them thither; and it increaſed their ſorrow, when they called to mind what privileges they had enjoyed in Zion, the city of their ſolemnities; where they had often ſeen the tribes of Iſrael bowing before, and worſhipping the God of Iſrael; the daily ſacrifices and others offered up; the ſolemn feaſts kept; the ſongs of Zion, ſung by the Levites in delightful harmony; and above all, the beauty of the Lord their God, his power and glory, whilſt they were inquiring in his ſanctuary: and alſo when they reflected upon the ſad condition and melancholy circumſtances in which Zion now was; the city, temple and altar, lying in heaps of rubbiſh; no worſhip and ſervice performed; no ſacrifices offered, nor ſongs ſung; nor any that came to her ſolemn feaſts; ſee Lam. i. 2, 4, 7, 16. Pſal. xlii. 3, 4.

[w] Pythia, ode 9. d. v. 6.

℣. 2. We hanged our harps upon the willows, in the midſt thereof.] Theſe were muſical inſtruments, uſed in the temple-ſervice by the Levites, who ſeem to be the perſons here ſpeaking; who took care of them, and preſerved them from the plunder of the enemy; and carried them with them to Babylon, in hope of returning with them to uſe them as before, or to ſolace themſelves and others in captivity; though now they had no heart to make uſe of them, their ſorrow was ſo great, and therefore hung them upon the willows as uſeleſs things: theſe willows grew upon the banks of the rivers where they were, as ſuch trees uſually do; hence called willows of the brook [x], and willows by water-courſes, Lev. xxiii. 40. Iſa. xliv. 4. and particularly upon the banks of the river Euphrates, which ran through the midſt of Babylon, with which the phraſe here agrees; and therefore Babylon itſelf is thought to be called the brook, or valley of the willows, Iſa. xv. 7. And according to Ovid [y], not only reeds and poplars, but willows grew on the banks of the Euphrates. Now the ſtate of theſe people was an emblem of the caſe of the backſliding children of God; who, through the prevalence of corruption, the force of temptation, and the ſnares of the world, are brought into a kind of captivity to the law of ſin and death, though not willingly; nor is it pleaſing to them when ſenſible of it, Rom. vii. 23, 24. who, though they are called out of the world, and are not of it; yet ſometimes are ſo overcome with it, and immerſed in the things of it, that they are as it were in Babylon. An emblem of this world, of the confuſion in it, as its name ſignifies; of the fading glories of it, and the wickedneſs and idolatry it abounds with: and here they ſit by the rivers of carnal pleaſures in it for a while, till brought to themſelves; and then they weep over their ſins, and lament them; eſpecially when they remember what opportunities they have formerly had in Zion, and what a low condition ſhe is now in through the conduct of themſelves and others: theſe make uſe of their harps when Zion is in good and proſperous circumſtances, Rev. xiv. 1—3. and xv. 1—3. but when there are corruptions in doctrine, neglect or abuſe of ordinances, animoſities and diviſions prevail, declenſions in the life and power of religion, and the lives of profeſſors diſagreeable; then they hang their harps on willows, and drop their notes.

℣. 3. For there they that carried us away captive, required of us a ſong, &c.] Or, words of a ſong [z]. To repeat the words of one of the ſongs of Zion, as it is afterwards expreſſed: this the Babylonians did, as the Targum; who were they that carried the Jews into captivity; and this is given as a reaſon why they hung their harps on willows, and were ſo ſorrowful, becauſe ſuch a requeſt as this was made. And they that waſted us, required of us mirth; the Chaldeans, who plundered them of their ſubſtance, and reduced their city and temple to heaps of rubbiſh, as the word [a] uſed ſignifies; or who heaped reproaches upon them, as Jarchi: theſe inſiſted not only on having the words of a ſong repeated to them, but that they ſhould be ſet to ſome tune, and ſung in a manner expreſſing mirth, or would provoke unto it: or our lamentations, according to Kimchi; that is, the authors of them [b], ſo barbarous were they. Saying, Sing us one of the ſongs of Zion; which uſed to be ſung in Zion in the temple, called the ſongs of the temple, Amos viii. 3. this demand they made either out of curioſity, that they might know ſomething of the temple-ſongs and muſic they had heard of; or rather, as jeering at and inſulting the poor Jews in their miſerable and melancholy circumſtances; as if they had ſaid, Now ſing your ſongs if you can: or in order to make themſelves ſport and diverſion with them, as the Philiſtines with Samſon. The ſpiritual ſongs of Zion are the ſongs of electing, redeeming, calling, pardoning and juſtifying grace; which natural men neither underſtand, nor can learn, but ſcoff at and deſpiſe.

℣. 4. How ſhall we ſing the Lord's ſong in a ſtrange land?] This is the anſwer returned by the Jews to the above requeſt or demand; it may be, particularly by the Levites, whoſe buſineſs it was to ſing theſe ſongs: ſo the Targum, "immediately the "Levites ſaid, How ſhall we ſing the hymns of the "Lord in a ſtrange land?" This they ſaid, not merely on account of their unſuitable circumſtances, being in diſtreſs and affliction, and ſo not diſpoſed for ſuch work; nor as if unlawful to them, being forbidden: for though ſacrifices were not to be offered, but at Jeruſalem; yet ſongs of praiſe might be ſung elſewhere, on proper occaſions, as David did, Pſal. xviii. 49. and lvii. 4, 8. and lxiii. 1—3. but as wondering at their inſolence, and complaining of their cruelty and inhumanity, thus to inſult them and jeer at them: or rather, becauſe it was the Lord's ſong they required, and ſo ſacred, and not to be ſung in any place, or at any time, and in any company; which would be but caſting pearls before ſwine, and giving that which was holy to dogs, Matt. vii. 6. or it may be, they required this to be done in one of their temples, and to their idols, juſt as theſe ſongs were ſung in the temple at Jeruſalem, and to the honour of Jehovah; and therefore they refuſed to do it: for it may be rendered, or however interpreted, in the land of a ſtrange god [c]; as it is by Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech: they required them to ſing with mirth and joy, which they could not do in their preſent caſe; ſee ℣. 2.

℣. 5. If I forget thee, O Jeruſalem, &c.] This was ſaid by one or every one of the Levites; or ſingers, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi; or by the congregation of Iſrael, as Jarchi: by one of them, in the name of the reſt; or by the compoſer of the pſalm. The Targum is, "the voice of the Spirit "of God anſwered and ſaid, If I forget, &c." that is, to weep over the calamities of Jeruſalem; which might be thought, if the ſongs of Zion were ſung; or to pray for the reſtoration of her proſperity and peace; as the church of Chriſt may be ſaid to be forgotten, when men forget to mourn over its breaches, and ſhew no concern for the reparation of them; or at the death of principal perſons, which they lay not to heart; or at the great decay of religion in thoſe that ſurvive; or at the ſins of profeſſors, and their diſregard to the word and ordinances: alſo when they forget to pray for her happineſs in general; for the good of her members in particular; and eſpecially for her miniſters, that they may have aſſiſtance and ſucceſs; and for a bleſſing on the word and ordinances, and for the converſion of ſinners; and when they forget the worſhip of the Lord in it, and forſake the aſſembling of themſelves together. Let my right hand forget her cunning; her ſkill in muſic, particularly in playing on the harp; ſee 1 Sam. xvi. 16, 18. the harp was held in the left hand, and ſtruck with the right; and that more ſoftly or hardly, as the note required, in which was the ſkill or cunning of uſing it. Or let this befal me, ſhould I ſo far forget Jeruſalem, as to ſtrike the harp to one of the ſongs of Zion in a ſtrange land: or let it forget any of its works; let it be diſabled from working at all; let it be dry and withered, which Aben Ezra ſays, is the ſenſe of the word according to ſome; and Schultens[d], from the uſe of it in Arabic, renders it, let it be disjointed, or the nerve looſened; ſee Job xxxi. 22. Or the ſenſe is, let every thing that is as dear as my right hand be taken from me: or, as it may be rendered, my right hand is forgotten[e]; that is, ſhould I forget Jeruſalem, it would; for that is as my right hand; ſo Arama. Some chooſe to tranſlate the words thus, may thou (O God) forget my right hand[f]; that is, to be at my right hand; to be a preſent help to me in time of need; to hold me by it, and to be the ſhade of it.

℣. 6. If I do not remember thee, &c.] In prayer, in diſcourſe, in converſation; this is the ſame as before to forget, repeated for the confirmation of it. Let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; as is the caſe of a perſon in a fever, or in a violent thirſt, which is to be in great diſtreſs, Pſal. xvi. 22. Lam. iv. 4. the ſenſe is, let me have no uſe of my tongue; let me be dumb and ſpeechleſs, and never ſing a ſong, or ſpeak a word more, ſhould I be ſo forgetful of the deplorable ſtate of Jeruſalem, as to ſing ſongs at ſuch a ſeaſon, and in an enemy's country. If I prefer not Jeruſalem above my chief joy; meaning not God his exceeding joy, Pſalm xliii. 4. as his creator, preſerver and benefactor, and much leſs as his covenant God and Father; as having loved him with an everlaſting love; as the God of all grace unto him, and as his portion and exceeding great reward: nor Chriſt, the object of joy unſpeakable and full of glory; joy in the greatneſs, glory, and fulneſs of his perſon; in the bleſſings and promiſes of his grace; in what he has done and ſuffered; as riſen, aſcended, exalted, and who will come a ſecond time: nor the joy of the holy Ghoſt in a way of believing, and in hope of the glory of God; but all worldly joy, or matter of it; and this not in things ſinful, nor merely ſuch as worldlings have in the increaſe of their ſubſtance; but a lawful joy, ſuch as in the health, happineſs and proſperity of a man's family, wife and children, and his own; which is the greateſt outward joy a man can have; and yet the church of God and intereſt of Chriſt are preferred by a good man to theſe; ſee 1 Sam. iv. 19, 21, 22. which appears when all a man has that is matter of joy is ſacrificed for the public good and intereſt of religion; when he can take no comfort in any outward enjoyment becauſe of the ſad caſe of Zion, Mal. ii. 3. when joy for its good is uppermoſt, and is firſt in his thoughts and words; when this is the head or beginning[g] of his joy, as it may be rendered. So Pindar[h] calls the chief, principal and greateſt part of joy αγλαιας αρχα, the beginning of joy, the top and perfection of it.

℣. 7. Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom in the day of Jeruſalem, &c.] Of her viſitation, calamity and deſtruction, how they behaved then, and puniſh them for it; who, though the children of Eſau and brethren of the Jews, as well as their neighbours, yet hated them; the old grudge of their father becauſe of the birth-right and bleſſing, as well as the old enmity of the ſerpent, continuing in them; and who rejoiced at their ruin, helped forward their affliction, and were aſſiſtants to the Babylonians in the plunder and deſtruction of them, Obad. 11—14. The Targum is, "Michael the "prince of Jeruſalem ſaid, Remember, O Lord, "the people of Edom who deſtroyed Jeruſalem." Many Jewiſh writers, as Aben Ezra obſerves, interpret this of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans: who ſaid raſe it, raſe it even to the foundation thereof; or make it naked or bare[i] to the foundation; pull down its walls, lay them level with the ground; root up the very foundation of them, and let nothing be left or ſeen but the bare naked ground; ſo ſpiteful and malicious were they.

℣. 8. O daughter of Babylon, who art to be deſtroyed, &c.] By the determinate counſel and decree of God, and according to divine predictions; ſee the fiftieth and fifty-firſt chapters of Jeremiah; ſo myſtical Babylon, antichriſt, and the man of ſin, who therefore is called the ſon of perdition, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. becauſe appointed to deſtruction, and ſhall certainly go into it, Rev. xvii. 8. or O thou deſtroyer, as the Targum which paraphraſes it thus, "Gabriel, the prince of Zion, ſaid to the Babyloniſh "nation that ſpoileth or deſtroyeth;" which is true of literal Babylon, called the deſtroying mountain, Jer. li. 25. and of myſtical Babylon, the deſtroyer both of the bodies and ſouls of men, Rev. xi. 18. Happy ſhall he be that rewardeth thee as thou haſt ſerved us; meaning Darius the Mede, as Kimchi; or rather, or however who muſt be added, Cyrus the Perſian, as R. Obadiah; who were ordered by the Lord to retaliate her, and do as ſhe had done to others, Jer. l. 15, 29. and in ſo doing pronounced happy, being the Lord's ſhepherd, raiſed up in righteouſneſs to perform his pleaſure, Iſa. xliv. 28. and xlv. 13. and here wiſhed ſucceſs by the godly Jews. In like manner the chriſtian princes will reward myſtical Babylon, and be the happy inſtruments of her ruin, Rev. xviii. 6.

℣. 9. Happy ſhall he be that taketh and daſheth thy little ones againſt the ſtones.] That takes the infants from their mothers breaſts, or out of their arms, and daſhes out their brains againſt a rock, as the word[k] ſignifies; which, though it may ſeem a piece of cruelty, was but a juſt retaliation; the Babylonians having done the ſame to the Jewiſh children, and is foretold elſewhere ſhould be done to theirs, Iſa. xiii. 16. Nor is this deſired from a ſpirit of revenge, but for the glory of divine juſtice, and that ſuch a generation of cruel creatures might be rooted out of the earth; ſee Rev. ii. 23. Some allegorically underſtand this of cruſhing and mortifying the firſt motions of ſin in the heart; but ſuch a ſenſe ſeems to have no place here.

PSALM CXXXVIII.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm is generally thought to have been written by David upon his being advanced to the throne; on account of which he praiſes the Lord, who had ſupported him under many exerciſes, and had made good his promiſe to him, at leaſt in part; and he firmly believed the accompliſhment of the reſt, that he would perfect what concerned him, ℣. 8. It ſeems as if this pſalm was compoſed between his being king over Judah and over all Iſrael. Though Theodoret underſtands the pſalm as a thankſgiving of the Jews upon their return from Babylon, which David propheſied of. The Syriac verſion calls it a thankſgiving with a prophecy; as indeed it is a prophecy of the Meſſiah's kingdom, and of the calling of the Gentiles in the latter day, as appears from ℣. 4.

℣. 1. I will praiſe thee with my whole heart, &c.] Cordially and ſincerely, in the uprightneſs and integrity of his heart; which denotes not the perfection of his ſervice, but the ſincerity of it; his heart was in it, and his whole heart; all the powers and faculties of his ſoul were engaged in it, being deeply ſenſible of the great favours and high honours beſtowed upon him: and though the object of praiſe, to whom he was obliged for them, is not ſo fully expreſſed; yet is eaſily underſtood to be Jehovah, the being of beings, the father of mercies, even Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit, and eſpecially the Meſſiah; ſee Pſal. cxi. 1. Before the gods will I ſing praiſe unto thee; before the princes, as Jarchi; before the kings, as the Syriac verſion; with which agrees Pſal. cxix. 46. and who would join therein, ℣. 4. or before the judges, as the Targum, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech; or civil magiſtrates, who are ſometimes called gods, Pſal. lxxxii. 1, 6. and they are the powers ordained of God, and repreſent him on earth; or the ſanhedrin, as the Midraſh; or before the gods of the Gentiles, thoſe fictitious deities, above whom Jehovah is; and over whom the pſalmiſt triumphs, having conquered the nations where they were worſhipped; and therefore in their preſence, and notwithſtanding them, or in oppoſition to them, praiſed the Lord; ſee Pſal. xviii. 49. or rather before the ark, the ſymbol of the preſence of the true God; or as Guſſetius[l] interprets it, before thee, O God, will I ſing praiſe; or I will ſing praiſe to thee, the Son the Meſſiah, one divine perſon before another; the Son before God the Father, and it may be added before God the holy Spirit, the two other divine perſons; the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions render it, before the angels, who are ſometimes called gods, Pſal. viii. 5. and xcvii. 7. and who attend the aſſemblies of the ſaints, and churches of Chriſt, 1 Cor. xi. 10. Eph. iii. 10.

℣. 2. I will worſhip towards thy holy temple, &c.] Not the temple at Jeruſalem, which was not yet built, though when it was, the Jews in their devotions at a diſtance looked towards it, 1 Kings viii. 38, 42. but rather the tabernacle of Moſes in which was the ark, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi obſerve; and over that the mercy-ſeat and cherubim, between which Jehovah dwelt; and this being a type of Chriſt's human nature, which was perfectly holy, and is called by himſelf a temple, and is the true tabernacle God pitched and not man, John ii. 19. Heb. viii. 2. he may be deſigned, and to him, as Mediator, ſhould we look, and with him deal in all our devotions for acceptance with God; ſee Jonah ii. 4. unleſs heaven itſelf is meant, which is the palace of Jehovah, the habitation of his holineſs, his temple where he dwells, Pſal. xi. 4. Hab. ii. 20. And praiſe thy name, for thy loving-kindneſs and for thy truth; which may primarily regard the goodneſs and grace of God in promiſing David the kingdom, and his faithfulneſs in making good the promiſe, and for both which he was under obligation to praiſe the name of the Lord; and holds good with reſpect to all other promiſes: and it may alſo ſignify the free favour and love of God to his people, which is from everlaſting, is the ſource of all bleſſings, and is better than life; and the faithfulneſs of God to himſelf, his perfections, purpoſes and promiſes, council and covenant: it may be rendered, for thy grace, and for thy truth[m], which both come by Chriſt, John i. 17. grace may intend both the doctrine of grace, the goſpel of the grace of God preached by Chriſt, and the bleſſings of grace which come through him; as juſtification, pardon, adoption, ſanctification and eternal life, which are all of grace, and by Chriſt: and truth alſo may ſignify the word of truth, or ſolid ſubſtantial bleſſings in diſtinction from typical ones; or the good things that come by Chriſt our high-prieſt, of which the law was only a ſhadow; and theſe are all of them things the name of the Lord is to be praiſed for. For thou haſt magnified thy word above all thy name; or above every name of thine[n]; which Aben Ezra interprets of the glorious name Jehovah; the word God ſpake to Moſes, the name in which he made himſelf known to him, and to the Iſraelites, he had not to their fathers, Exod. iii. 14. and vi. 3. but rather it is to be underſtood of God's word of promiſe, and his faithfulneſs in fulfilling it; which, though not a greater attribute than any other, yet is made more known and more illuſtrious than the reſt; and particularly may regard the promiſe of the coming of the Meſſiah, and of the bleſſings of grace by him; Jarchi interprets it particularly of the pardon of ſin. It may with propriety be applied to Chriſt, the eſſential Word, that was made fleſh and dwelt among men; whom God has highly exalted, and not only given him a name above every name of men on earth, but alſo above any particular name or attribute of his: or however he has magnified him according[o] to every name of his, it being his will that men ſhould honour the Son as they honour the Father; or with[p] every name, along with each of them; or beſides[q] every name; for all theſe ſenſes the word will bear. Some render them, as Ben Melech, thou haſt magnified above all things thy name and thy word; or as others, thy name by thy word[r]; ſee Pſalm viii. 1. and lvii. 10, 11. The Targum is, "the words of thy praiſe above all thy "name;"

" name;" or over all thy name; every thing by which he has made himſelf known in creation and providence; thou haſt magnified thy word, all being done according to the word ſaid in himſelf, his decrees and purpoſes; or declared in his word and promiſes, whereby he has glorified it.

℣. 3. In the day when I cried thou anſweredſt me, &c.] When in diſtreſs through Saul's perſecution, he cried to the Lord and he immediately anſwered him and delivered him out of his troubles; and ſuch immediate anſwers of prayer are to be remembered with thankfulneſs; ſee Pſalm xviii. 6. Iſa. lxv. 24. And ſtrengthenedſt me with ſtrength in my ſoul; put him in good heart and ſpirit, when before ready to faint; ſtrengthened his heart and grace in it, particularly faith, and drew it forth into lively act and exerciſe; ſo that he ſunk not under the weight of affliction and trouble, but was filled with courage to withſtand his enemies, and with ſtrength to do the will and work of God; this is to be underſtood of inward ſpiritual ſtrength; ſee Epheſ. iii. 16.

℣. 4. All the kings of the earth ſhall praiſe thee, O Lord, &c.] Or let them confeſs, or praiſe thee[s]; a wiſh or prayer. Not only the kings known to David, as Kimchi limits it; or that lived in his days, as Hiram and others; but in the latter day, when they ſhall come to Zion, the church, and be nurſing fathers to it, and ſhall ſerve and worſhip the King Meſſiah, Iſa. xlix. 23. and lx. 3, 11, 16. Pſal. lxxii. 10, 11. When they hear the words of thy mouth; either the promiſes of it fulfilled, not only with reſpect to David; but the Meſſiah, and his church and people in the latter day, even the glorious things ſpoken thereof: or the doctrines of the goſpel, which are the words of his mouth, and more deſirable than thouſands of gold and ſilver; and which, when kings ſhall hear ſo as to underſtand, they will praiſe the Lord for them; ſee Iſa. lii. 15. The Targum is, " the words of thy praiſe."

℣. 5. Yea, they ſhall ſing in the ways of the Lord, &c.] Which are all mercy and truth; ways of pleaſantneſs, and paths of peace: ſo the eunuch went on his way, and in the ways of the Lord rejoicing, Acts viii. 39. Or, they ſhall ſing of the ways of the Lord[t]; of the excellency, pleaſure and uſefulneſs of them. For great is the glory of the Lord; ſhewn in the works of creation; more eſpecially in the perſon of Chriſt, and in the glorious work of redemption and ſalvation by him; and of which there will be a great diſplay throughout the earth in the latter day, by means of the goſpel, the great ſpread of it, and the multitude of perſons converted by it; which will make the ways of the Lord ſtill more pleaſant; ſee Iſa. vi. 3.

℣. 6. Though the Lord be high, &c.] Above all the earth, and all the nations of it, and the higheſt of men in it; above the heavens and the angels there, who are his creatures and at his command; above all the bleſſings and praiſes of his ſaints: the perfect knowledge of him is ſo high as not to be attained; and his thoughts and ways are higher than ours, as the heavens are higher than the earth; he is indeed the moſt High, higher than the higheſt; ſee Pſal. cxiii. 4, 5. According to Arama, here begins the ſong, " the kings of the earth ſhall ſing in " the ways of the Lord." Yet hath he reſpect unto the lowly; for good, as the Targum; that are low in their own eyes, humbled under a ſenſe of ſin, convinced of the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs to juſtify them, and made to ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; aſcribe the whole of their ſalvation to the free grace of God; patiently and quietly bear every afflictive providence; think the worſt of themſelves, and the beſt of others; and, being the followers of the lowly Jeſus, learn of him, imitate him, and become like unto him: theſe the Lord has a gracious reſpect unto; he looks upon them with a look of love; he has reſpect to their perſons in Chriſt, and to their ſacrifices for his ſake, which are thoſe of a broken and contrite heart; he regards their prayers, though low and deſtitute, and gives more grace unto them; yea, he condeſcends to dwell with them, and in due time highly exalts them; ſee Iſa. lvii. 15. and lxvi. 2. Luke xiv. 11. David may have in view his own low ſtate and condition as a ſhepherd, in which he was when the Lord took him, and raiſed him to the throne of Iſrael. But the proud he knoweth afar off; the Targum adds, " to deſtroy them:" ſuch who are proud of themſelves and what they have; of their wiſdom and knowledge, of their ſtrength or beauty, of their wealth and riches; or of their righteouſneſs and holineſs; of the purity and goodneſs of their hearts, and power of their free-will, they vainly think themſelves poſſeſſed of; and deſpiſe others below them in theſe things, or the practice of them: theſe the Lord takes notice of, and looks upon them at a diſtance with ſcorn and contempt; nor will he admit them to nearneſs to him, nay, oppoſes himſelf to them, and ſooner or later abaſes them; ſee Prov. iii. 34. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, high things he knoweth afar off; things too high for creatures, that are out of their reach; he ſees and knows all perſons and things, whether in heaven or in earth. Others render them, and the high one knoweth afar off[u]; knows the lowly, owns and acknowledges them for his own; takes care of them, provides for them, and protects them: and then the ſenſe is the ſame with the preceding clauſe.

℣. 7. Though I walk in the midſt of trouble, &c.] Trouble attends the beſt of men; both outward and inward trouble, from ſin, Satan, and the world; yea, they are in the midſt of it, ſurrounded with it; and it is a way in which they walk through this world, and enter the kingdom of heaven; it is continued unto them; it is a long walk, and yet will have an end; ſee Pſal. xxiii. 4. Thou wilt revive me; preſerve his life amidſt all his troubles, ſupport him under them, make him chearful and fearleſs; revive his work of grace in him, quicken him to the lively exerciſe of grace, and fervent diſcharge of duty: this the Lord does by his gracious preſence, by the diſcoveries of his love, and by the application of precious promiſes. Thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thine hand againſt the wrath of mine enemies; to ſtop and reſtrain it; which he can eaſily do, when moſt violent and outrageous, Pſal. lxxvi. 10. Or, againſt the noſe of mine enemies[w]; ſtrike them on the noſe, as men do unruly horſes to ſtop them: or give a ſlap on their face with the left hand, as Arama obſerves, the right being after mentioned. And thy right hand ſhall ſave me; for that has ſaving ſtrength in it, Pſal. xx. 6. This may be underſtood of Chriſt, who is not only the man of his right hand, but is the right hand of his righteouſneſs; by whom he ſaves his people with a ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, as well as with a temporal one, Iſa: xli. 10. Hoſ. i. 7.

℣. 8. The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me, &c.] Or will, or may the Lord perform for me[x]: all things in providence; all that he had appointed for him, that would be for his good and his own glory, Pſal. lvii. 2. and particularly what concerned him as a king. He had made him king over the houſe of Judah; he had begun to fulfil his promiſe concerning the kingdom, and he would perfect it, by ſetting him over all the tribes of Iſrael. Alſo he believed he would perfect what concerned him as a ſaint, even the good work of grace upon his heart; which is but a begun work, is imperfect, is gradually carried on, and will be completed: God is able to do it, and none can hinder him; he has promiſed to do it, and he is faithful who will do it; and his glory is concerned in it; and it may be depended on it will be finiſhed; he is a rock, and his work is perfect; ſee Phil. i. 6. Thy mercy, O Lord, endureth for ever; a phraſe often uſed by the pſalmiſt, with which his heart was affected; and here uſed, both as an argument by which he concluded God would perfect his begun work, and as an encouragement to make the following requeſt: Forſake not the works of thine own hands; as are all the works of providence and grace: the work of grace upon the heart may be expreſſed in the plural number, becauſe of the ſeveral branches of it; which are all ſo many works, as the work of faith, labour of love, &c. 1 Theſſ. i. 3. and which is the Lord's handy work; and a curious work it is, a new creation-work, a work of almighty power; and which he will never ceaſe from, or be remiſs in, as the word[y] ſignifies, until he has accompliſhed it, 2 Theſſ. i. 11. It is a prayer of faith, and may be moſt confidently believed: and ſome indeed render it as an expreſſion of faith, Thou wilt not forſake the works of thine hands[z]; David himſelf was the work of God's hands, as Kimchi obſerves, as a creature, as a king, and as a ſaint; and ſo are all the people of God, Iſa. xlv. 11. and whom he will never leave nor forſake; for they are his church, his choſen, his children, his portion and inheritance, Pſal. xciv. 14.

PSALM CXXXIX.

To the chief muſician, A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm was written by David, when he lay under the reproach and calumnies of men, who laid falſe things to his charge; things he was not conſcious of, either in the time of Saul's perſecution of him, or when his ſon Abſalom rebelled againſt him: and herein he appeals to the heart-ſearching and rein-trying God for his innocence; and, when ſettled on his throne, delivered it to the maſter of muſic, to make uſe of it on proper occaſions. According to the Syriac title of the pſalm, the occaſion of it was Shimei, the ſon of Gera, reproaching and curſing him as a bloody man, 2 Sam. xvi. 5, 6, 7. Theodoret takes it to be a prophecy of Joſiah, and ſuppoſes that he is repreſented as ſpeaking throughout the pſalm. Aben Ezra obſerves, that this is the moſt glorious and excellent pſalm in all the book: a very excellent one it is; but whether the moſt excellent, it is hard to ſay. It treats of ſome of the moſt glorious of the divine perfections; omniſcience, omnipreſence, and omnipotence. Arama ſays, the argument of it is God's particular knowledge of men, and his providence over their affairs.

℣. 1. O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me, and known me.] The omniſcience of God reaches to all perſons and things; but the pſalmiſt only takes notice of it as reſpecting himſelf. God knows all men in general, and whatever belongs to them; he knows his own people in an eſpecial manner; and he knows their particular perſons, as David and others: and this knowledge of God is conſidered after the manner of men, as if it was the fruit of ſearch, to denote the exquiſiteneſs of it; as a judge ſearches out a cauſe, a phyſician the nature of a diſeaſe, a philoſopher the reaſon of things; who many times, after all their inquiries, fail in their knowledge; but the Lord never does: his elect lie in the ruins of the fall, and among the men of the world; he ſearches them out and finds them; for he knows where they are and the time of finding them, and can diſtinguiſh them in a croud of men from others; and notwithſtanding the ſad caſe they are in, and ſeparates them from them; and he ſearches into them, into their moſt inward part, and knows them infinitely better than their neareſt relations, friends and acquaintance do; he knows that of them and in them, which none but they themſelves know; their thoughts, and the ſin that dwells in them: yea, he knows more of them and of them, than they themſelves, Jer. xvii. 9, 10. And he knows them after another manner than he does other men: there are ſome whom in a ſenſe he knows not; but theſe he knows, as he did David, ſo as to approve of, love and delight in, Matt. vii. 23. 2 Tim. ii. 19.

℣. 2. Thou knoweſt my down-ſitting, and mine upriſing, &c.] Here the pſalmiſt proceeds to obſerve the particular circumſtances and actions of his life, which were known to God; as his down-ſitting, either to take reſt, as weary perſons do. Schultens[a] explains it of the quiet reſt in ſleep; this the Lord knew when he betook himſelf to it, and to whoſe care he committed himſelf and family; under whoſe protection he laid himſelf down, and on whom he depended for ſafety, Pſal. iv. 8. Or, ſince lying down to ſleep is afterwards mentioned, this may reſpect ſitting down at table to eat and drink; when the Lord knows whether men uſe the creatures aright, or abuſe them; whether they receive their food with thankfulneſs, and eat and drink to the glory of God: or elſe this down-ſitting was to read the word of God, and meditate upon it; ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "my ſitting down to ſtudy the "law." When men do this, the Lord knows whether in reading they underſtand what they read, or read attentively and with affection; whether it is to their comfort and edification, and for doctrine, reproof, correction, and inſtruction in righteouſneſs; whether their meditation on it is ſweet, and is attended with profit and pleaſure. Up-riſing may reſpect either riſing from bed, when the Lord knows whether the heart is ſtill with him, ℣. 18. what ſenſe is had of the divine protection and ſuſtentation, and what thankfulneſs there is for the mercies of the night paſt; and whether the voice of prayer and praiſe is directed to him in the morning, as it ſhould be, Pſal. iii. 5. and v. 3. or elſe riſing from the table, when the Lord knows whether a man's table has been his ſnare, and with what thankfulneſs he riſes from it for the favours he has received. The Targum interprets this of riſing up to go to war; which David did, in the name and ſtrength, and by the direction of the Lord. Thou underſtandeſt my thought afar off; God knows not only his own thoughts, but the thoughts of men, which none but themſelves know; by this Chriſt appears to be truly God, the omniſcient God, being a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, Matt. ix. 3, 4. Heb. iv. 12. God knows what thoughts his people have of him, and of his loving-kindneſs in Chriſt; what thoughts they have of Chriſt himſelf, his perſon, offices and grace; what thoughts they have of themſelves, their ſtate and condition: he knows all their vain thoughts, and complains of them, and which alſo they hate; and all their good thoughts, for they come from him. And he knows them afar off, or of old [b], even before they are; ſo Aben Ezra interprets it a long time paſt, and compares it with Jer. xxxi. 3. where the ſame word is rendered of old: God knows the thoughts of his people, as well as his own, from all eternity; ſee Iſa. xxv. 1. as he knew what they would ſay and do, ſo what they would think; he knows thoughts that are paſt long ago, and forgotten by men, or were unobſerved when thought; how elſe ſhould he bring them into judgment? or though he is afar off in the higheſt heavens, yet he ſees into the hearts of men, and is privy to all their thoughts.

℣. 3. Thou compaſſeſt my path, and my lying down, &c.] The Targum adds, "to ſtudy in the law." His walk in the day-time, and every ſtep he took, and his lying down at night. It denotes his perfect knowledge of all his actions, day and night; he ſurrounds every path of man, that they cannot eſcape his knowledge. Or thou winnoweſt, as ſome render the word [c]; he diſtinguiſhes actions; he diſcerns and ſeparates the good from the bad, or the goodneſs of an action from the evil and imperfection of it, as in winnowing the wheat is ſeparated from the chaff. Or, thou meaſureſt my ſquaring [d]; all his dimenſions, his length and breadth, as he lay down in his bed. And art acquainted with all my ways; the whole of his life and converſation, all his works and doings: God knows all the evil ways and works of his people; he takes notice of them, and chaſtiſes for them; and all their good works, and approves and accepts of them; he knows from what principles of faith and love they ſpring, in what manner they are performed, and with what views, aims and ends; ſee Rev. ii. 2, 19. Pſal. i. 6.

℣. 4. For there is not a word in my tongue, &c.] Expreſſed by it or upon it, juſt ready to be ſpoken; or, as the Targum, "when there is no word in my "tongue;" ſo Aben Ezra, "before it was perfect "in my tongue:" before it is formed there; while it is in the mind and not expreſſed, and even before that. But lo, O Lord, thou knoweſt it altogether; the whole of it, from whence it ſprings; the reaſon of it, what is deſigned, or the ends to be anſwered by it. The Lord knows the good words of his people, which they ſpeak to him in prayer, even before and while they are ſpeaking them; and what they ſay to one another in private converſation, Iſa. lxv. 24. Mal. iii. 16. See an inſtance of words known by Chriſt before ſpoken, in Luke xix. 31, 33.

℣. 5. Thou haſt beſet me behind and before, &c.] Art on every ſide of me, all around me, like one beſieged in a ſtrait place; ſo that there is nothing I can think, ſay or do, but what is known unto thee. The two Kimchi's, father and ſon, render the word, thou haſt formed me; and interpret it of the formation of his body, of which in ℣. 14—16. ſee Job x. 8, 10, 11. but it denotes how God compaſſes men with his preſence and providence, ſo that nothing eſcapes his knowledge. And laid thine hand upon me; not his afflicting hand, which ſometimes preſſes hard; though the Targum thus paraphraſes it, "and "ſtirred againſt me the ſtroke of thine hand:" but rather, his hand of power and providence, to preſerve, protect and defend him. Or it ſignifies that he was ſo near to him, that his hand was upon him, and he was perfectly known; as any thing is that is before a man, and he has his hand upon.

℣. 6. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me, &c.] Meaning either the knowledge of himſelf, ſuch as God had of him, which was vaſtly ſuperior to what he had of himſelf; and eſpecially the knowledge of other perſons and things, whether viſible or inviſible, in heaven, earth or hell; things paſt, preſent, and to come: or elſe the manner in which God knew all this was amazing to him, and quite impenetrable by him; that he did know him, his thoughts, his words and actions, and ſo thoſe of all others, was eaſy of belief; but how he ſhould know all this was paſt his conception, and ſtruck him with the profoundeſt admiration. It is high; ſublime, out of his reach, beyond his comprehenſion. I cannot attain unto it; neither to ſuch knowledge, nor to comprehend what it is in God; and how he ſhould have it, and in what manner he exerciſes it. Kimchi, Jarchi and Aben Ezra, connect the words with the following, as if the matter of his wonder and aſtoniſhment was the omnipreſence of God, or where he ſhould find a place to flee from him.

℣. 7. Whither ſhall I go from thy ſpirit? &c.] Or, from thy wind; which ſome interpret literally, the wind being God's creature; which he brings out of his treaſures, and holds in his fiſts, and diſpoſes of as he pleaſes; this takes its circuit through all the points of the heavens, and blows every where more or leſs. Rather God himſelf is meant, who is a ſpirit, John iv. 24. not a body, or conſiſting of corporeal parts, which are only aſcribed to him in a figurative ſenſe; and who has ſomething analogous to ſpirit, being ſimple and uncompounded, inviſible, incorruptible, immaterial and immortal; but is different from all other ſpirits, being uncreated, eternal, infinite and immenſe; ſo that there is no going from him, as to be out of his ſight; nor to any place out of his reach, nor from his wrath and juſtice, nor ſo as to eſcape his righteous judgment. It may ſignify his all-conſcious mind, his all-comprehending underſtanding and knowledge, which reaches to all perſons, places and things; compare Iſa. xl. 13. with Rom. xi. 34. and 1 Cor. ii. 16. tho' it ſeems beſt of all to underſtand it of the third perſon, the bleſſed Spirit, which proceeds from the Father and the Son; and who is poſſeſſed of the ſame perfections, of omniſcience, omnipreſence and immenſity, as they are; who is the creator of the heavens and the earth, and pervades them all; and is the maker of all men, and is preſent with them to uphold their ſouls in life, and there is no going from him; particularly he is in all believers, and dwells with them; nor do they deſire to go from him, but deprecate his departure from them. Or whither ſhall I flee from thy preſence? which is every where, for God's preſence is omnipreſence; his powerful preſence and providence are with all his creatures, to ſupport and uphold them in being; he is not far from, but near to them; in him they live, move and have their being; and ſo there is no fleeing from him or that: and as to his gracious preſence, which is with all his people, in all places at the ſame time, they do not deſire to flee from it, but always to have it; and are concerned for it, if at any time it is removed from them, as to their apprehenſion of it. Or, from thy face[e]; that is, from Chriſt, who is the face of Jehovah; the image of the inviſible God, the expreſs image of his perſon, in whom all the perfections of God are diſplayed; and ſuch a likeneſs, that he that has ſeen the one, has ſeen the other; he is the angel of his face or preſence, and who always appears before him, and in whom he is ſeen. Now there is no fleeing from him, for he is every where; where God is, his face is: and a ſenſible ſinner deſires to flee to him, and not from him; for there is no other refuge to flee unto for life and ſalvation, but to him; and gracious ſouls deſire to be always with him now, and hope to be for ever with him hereafter; they ſeek him, the face of God now, and expect to ſee it more clearly in the world to come.

℣. 8. If I aſcend up into heaven, thou art there, &c.] No man hath aſcended or can aſcend to heaven of himſelf; it is an hyperbolical expreſſion, as are thoſe that follow; none but Chriſt has aſcended to heaven by his own power, who deſcended from it; ſaints hope to go there at death, and when they do, they find God there; that is his habitation, his throne is there, yea that is his throne; here he keeps court and has his attendants, and here he will be ſeen and enjoyed by his people to all eternity. If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there; which if underſtood of the place of the damned, is a place of torment, and a very unfit one to make a bed in, being a lake burning with fire and brimſtone; and where the ſmoke of their torment aſcends for ever, and they have no reſt day nor night; their worm never dies, and their fire is not quenched; and even here God is: hell is not only naked before him, and all its inhabitants in his view; but he is here in his powerful preſence, keeping the devils in chains of darkneſs; turning wicked men daily into it, pouring out his wrath upon them, placing and continuing an unpaſſable gulph between them and happy ſouls: though rather this is to be underſtood of the grave, in which ſenſe the word is often uſed; and ſo Kimchi, Aben Ezra and Arama interpret it of the loweſt parts of the earth, as oppoſed to heaven; the grave is a bed to the ſaints, where they lie down and reſt, and ſleep till the reſurrection-morn, Job xiv. 12. and xvii. 13, 16. Iſa. lvii. 2. and here the Lord is watching over and keeping their duſt, and will raiſe it up again at the laſt day. The Targum is, "there "is thy Word."

℣. 9. If I take the wings of the morning, &c.] And fly as ſwift as the morning-light to the eaſt, to the extremity of it, as Ben Melech; as far as he could go that way, as ſwiftly as the wings of the morning could carry him thither; ſo the morning is repreſented by the heathens as having wings[f]; or as the rays of the riſing ſun, called wings for the ſwiftneſs of them, Mal. iv. 2. And dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the ſea; in the moſt diſtant iſles of it, in the fartheſt parts of the world, the ſea being ſuppoſed the boundary of it; or in the uttermoſt parts of the weſt[g], as oppoſed to the morning-light and riſing-ſun, which appear in the eaſt; and the ſea is often in ſcripture put for the weſt, the mediterranean ſea being to the weſt of the land of Paleſtine; and could he go from eaſt to weſt in a moment, as the above writer obſerves, there would God be. The heathens repreſent Jupiter, their ſupreme God, as having three eyes, becauſe he reigns in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth[h].

℣. 10. Even there ſhall thy hand lead me, &c.] For he could not get there with all the aſſiſtance of the wings of the morning, could they be had, without the leadings of divine providence; and when there, being a good man, ſhould experience the leadings of divine grace; let the people of God be where they will, he leads them as a parent his child, teaching him to go; and as a ſhepherd his flock, into green paſtures, and to fountains of living water; he leads to himſelf, and to his Son by his Spirit; into communion and fellowſhip with them, and to a participation of all bleſſings of grace; guides them with his counſel, and directs all their ways and goings. And thy right hand ſhall hold me; the Lord lays hold on his people and apprehends them for himſelf, and claims his intereſt in them; he holds them in his ways that they ſlip and fall not; he upholds them with the right hand of his righteouſneſs and they are ſafe; and he holds them from going into or on in wrong ways to their hurt.

℣. 11. If I ſay, Surely the darkneſs ſhall cover me, &c.] The darkneſs of a cloud or of the night, ſo that my actions ſhall not be ſeen; that is, if I entertain ſuch a thought in my mind, that what I do in the dark will eſcape the ſight and knowledge of God, and ſo be emboldened to commit it. Even the night ſhall be light about me; and make all my works manifeſt, as light does.

℣. 12. Yea, the darkneſs hideth not from thee, &c.] Any thing that is done by men in it; or darkeneth not from thee[i], or cauſeth ſuch darkneſs as to hinder the ſight of any action committed. The Targum is, "from thy Word;" ſee Heb. iv. 12, 13. But the night ſhineth as the day; or enlightens as the day[k], gives as much light with reſpect to God as the day does. The darkneſs and the light are both alike to thee; as is the one, ſo is the other; the day gives him no more light than the night, and the night no more darkneſs than the day; he ſees as well, as clearly and diſtinctly in the one as in the other. The pſalmiſt expreſſes the ſame thing in different words three or four times, as Kimchi obſerves, to ſhew that ſo the Lord is, that thus it is with him; he has as clear a diſcerning of all things done in the darkeſt night as at bright noon-day; ſee Job xxxiv. 21, 22.

℣. 13. For thou haſt poſſeſſed my reins, &c.] His thoughts and counſels, the reins being the ſeat of inſtruction and counſel; hence God is called the trier of the reins, and ſearcher of the hearts of the children of men; he is the poſſeſſor or maſter of their moſt ſecret thoughts, and thoroughly knows them; ſee Pſal. vii. 9. and xvi. 7. they are alſo the ſeat of the affections, which are naturally ſinful and inordinate, and ſet upon carnal and earthly things; but the Lord poſſeſſes and engroſſes the affections of his people in the beſt ſenſe, Pſalm lxxiii. 25. moreover the reins are the ſeat of luſt, the bed in which it is conceived and brought forth, and God knows the firſt motions of it there; and that the imagination of the thought of man's heart is evil continually, Gen. vi. 5. Thou haſt covered me in my mother's womb; with the ſecundine, or after-birth, in which he carefully wrapped him, a proof of his knowledge of him, and care for him in the womb; or with ſkin and fleſh, he covered his bones with as they grew there; ſee Job x. 11. or the ſenſe is, he protected and defended him in his embryo-ſtate, and when ripe for birth took him out from thence and held him up ever ſince, Pſal. xxii. 9. and lxxi. 6. he had his eye on him when no other eye could ſee him, not even his mother that bare him, and before ever he himſelf ſaw light. The Targum is, "thou haſt founded me in my "mother's womb."

℣. 14. I will praiſe thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made, &c.] The formation of man is not of himſelf, nor of his parents, but of God, and is very wonderful in all its parts; it has been matter of aſtoniſhment to many heathens, as Galen and others, who have, with any carefulneſs, examined the ſtructure and texture of the human body, the exact ſymmetry and juſt proportion of all its parts, their poſition and uſefulneſs; how every bone, muſcle, artery, nerve and fibre, are nicely framed and placed to anſwer their deſigned end; particularly the eye and ear, the exquiſite make of them for ſight and ſound, have filled the moſt diligent inquirers into nature with amazement and wonder, and are a full proof of the wiſdom and knowledge of God; ſee Pſal. xciv. 9. no man has cauſe to reproach his parents, nor blame the former of all things for making him thus, but on the contrary ſhould praiſe the Lord, as David did, who has given him life, and breath, and all things; or own and confeſs[l], as the word may be rendered, that he is in various ſurpriſing inſtances a wonder of nature; ſee Iſa. xlv. 9, 10. Rom. ix. 20. Pſal. c. 3. R. Moſes in Aben Ezra thinks David is ſpeaking of the firſt father, or the firſt Adam; who was wonfully made of the duſt of the earth, and had a living ſoul breathed into him; was made after the image of God, holy and upright: but rather he ſpeaks of Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, his antitype, who as man is a creature of God's make, and was wonderfully made, even of a virgin, without the uſe and knowledge of man; is the ſtone cut out of the mountain without hands, the tabernacle which God pitched and not man; was produced by the power of the holy Ghoſt, was born without ſin, which no man is, and united perſonally to the Son of God, and is the great myſtery of godlineſs; and his name is juſtly called Wonderful. Cocceius interprets this paſſage of God's ſeparating act of David, and ſo of others in election; which is a wonderful ſetting apart of man for himſelf, as the word is uſed Pſal. iv. 3. it is the effect of amazing love, and to be aſcribed to the ſovereignty of God, and the unſearchable riches of his grace; but this ſeems not to be intended here, though it is a marvellous act, as all the works of God are, as follows; rather, ſince the word may be rendered, I am wonderfully ſeparated[m], it may be interpreted of his being ſeparated in his mother's womb from the reſt of the maſs and matter of her blood, and formed from thence; which was done in a ſecret, unknown and marvellous way and manner. Marvellous are thy works; of creation, providence, ſuſtentation of all creatures, the government of the world, the redemption of mankind, the work of grace and converſion, the perſeverance of the ſaints, and their eternal ſalvation. And that my ſoul knoweth right well; having diligently ſought them out, and having ſuch a diſtinct knowledge of them as to be capable of talking of them, and of ſhewing them to others, and pointing out the wonders, beauties, and excellencies of them; ſee Pſal. cxi. 2. and cxlv. 5. and ix. 1. however, he well and perfectly knew, or knew ſo much of them that they were very wonderful and amazing: ſome connect the word rendered right well, which ſignifies greatly, or exceedingly, not with his knowledge, but with the marvellous works known; and take the ſenſe to be, that he knew them to be greatly or exceedingly wonderful; ſo R. Moſes in Aben Ezra, Kimchi and Ben Melech.

℣. 15. My ſubſtance was not hid from thee, when I was made in ſecret, &c.] Or my bone[n]; every one of his bones, which are the ſubſtantial parts of the body, the ſtrength of it; and ſo ſome render it my ſtrength[o]; thoſe, though covered with ſkin and fleſh, yet being done by the Lord himſelf, were not hid from him; nor the manner of their production and growth, which being done in ſecret is a ſecret to men; for they know not how the bones grow in the womb of her that is with child, Eccl. xi. 5. but God does. And curiouſly wrought in the loweſt parts of the earth; or formed in my mother's womb, as the Targum, and ſo Jarchi, like a curious piece of needle-work or embroidery, as the word[p] ſignifies; and ſuch is the contexture of the human body, and ſo nicely and curiouſly are all its parts put together, bones, muſcles, arteries, veins, nerves and fibres as exceed the moſt curious piece of needle-work, or the fineſt embroidery that ever was made by the hands of men; and all this done in the dark ſhop of nature, in the ovarium, where there is no more light to work by than in the loweſt parts of the earth. The ſame phraſe is uſed of Chriſt's deſcent into this world, into the womb of the virgin, where his human nature was curiouſly wrought by the finger of the bleſſed Spirit, Eph. iv. 9.

℣. 16. Thine eyes did ſee my ſubſtance, yet being unperfect, &c.] The word[q] for ſubſtance ſignifies a bottom of yarn wound up, or any rude or unformed lump; and deſigns that conglomerated maſs of matter ſeparated in the womb, containing all the eſſentials of the human frame, but not yet diſtinguiſhed or reduced into any form or order; yet even when in this ſtate, the eyes of the Lord ſee it, and all its parts diſtinctly. And in thy book all my members were written; which in continuance were faſhioned, when as yet there was none of them; in the book of God's eternal mind, and deſigns, the plan of the human body was drawn, all the parts of it deſcribed, and their form, places, and uſes fixed, even when as yet not one of them was in actual being; but in due time they are all exactly formed and faſhioned according to the model of them in the mind of God; who has as perfect knowledge of them beforehand, as if they were written down in a book before him. Or in thy book are written all of them, what days they ſhould be faſhioned; not only the ſeveral members of the body were put down in this book, but the ſeveral days on which they ſhould be formed and come into order; when as yet there was none of them; none of thoſe days, before they took place, even before all time; the Targum is, "in the book "of thy memory all my days are written, in the "day the world was created, from the beginning "that all creatures were created."

℣. 17. How precious alſo are thy thoughts unto me, O God! &c.] The word[r] ſignifies that which is ſcarce and rare, and not to be attained and enjoyed; ſee 1 Sam. iii. 1. Pſal. xlix. 8. the thoughts and counſels of God are impenetrable and unſearchable; he knows our thoughts, as Aben Ezra obſerves, but we do not know his, ℣. 2. as well as it likewiſe ſignifies the worth and value of them; God's thoughts are infinitely beyond ours, and infinitely more valuable and more important, and are concerning our welfare and happineſs: it is marvellous that God ſhould think of us at all; it is more ſo that his thoughts ſhould not be thoughts of evil, to bring that evil upon us we deſerve, but thoughts of peace and reconciliation in and by his Son, in whom he was reconciling the world to himſelf; thoughts of ſalvation and eternal life, and of the way and means of bringing it about; thoughts to provide for our preſent ſupply in this world, and to lay up for us for the world to come; ſee Jer. xxix. 11. Pſal. xl. 17. and xxxi. 19. It may be interpreted of the thoughts which David had of God in his meditations of him, which were ſweet, precious, and comfortable to him; of his loving-kindneſs to him, covenant-grace, precious promiſes, and gracious dealings with him; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt. The Targum is, "to me how "precious they that love thee, the righteous, O "God;" and ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, thy friends. How great is the ſum of them! or the heads of them; that is, not the chief of thy friends, but the ſum of thy thoughts, theſe in the bulk, in the general are not to be counted; and much leſs the particulars of them, theſe are not to be entered into or deſcribed.

℣. 18. If I ſhould count them, they are more in number than the ſand, &c.] That is, if I ſhould attempt to do it, it would be as vain and fruitleſs as to attempt to count the ſands upon the ſea-ſhore, which are innumerable; Pſal. xl. 5. So Pindar ſays[s], that ſand flies number, that is, is not to be numbered; though the Pythian oracle boaſtingly ſaid[t], I know the number of the ſand, and the meaſures of the ſea; to which Lucan[u] may have reſpect when he ſays, meaſure is not wanting to the ocean, nor number to the ſand; hence geometricians affect to know them; ſo Archytas the mathematician, ſkilled in geometry and arithmetic, is deſcribed and derided by Horace[w] as the meaſurer of the earth and ſea, and of the ſand without number; and Archimedes wrote a book called ψαμμίτης[x], of the number of the ſand, ſtill extant[y], in which he proves that it is not infinite, but that if even the whole world was ſand it might be numbered; but the thoughts of God are infinite. When I wake, I am ſtill with thee; after I have been reckoning them up all the day, and then fall aſleep at night to refreſh nature after ſuch fatiguing reſearches; when I awake in the morning and go to it again, I am juſt where I was, and have got no farther knowledge of God and his thoughts, and have as many to count as at firſt ſetting out, and far from coming to the end of them: or elſe the ſenſe is, as I was under thine eye and care even in the womb, before I was born, ſo I have been ever ſince, and always am whether ſleeping or waking; I lay myſelf down and ſleep in ſafety, and riſe in the morning refreſhed and healthful, and ſtill continue the care of thy providence: it would be well if we always awaked with God in our thoughts, ſenſible of his favours, thankful for them, and enjoying his gracious preſence; as it will be the happineſs of the ſaints, that when they ſhall awake in the reſurrection-morn they ſhall be with God, and for ever enjoy him.

℣. 19. Surely thou wilt ſlay the wicked, O God, &c.] Since he is God omniſcient, and knows where they are, what they have done, are doing, and deſign to do; and God omnipreſent, at hand to lay hold upon them; and God omnipotent, to hold them and inflict due puniſhment on them; this is a conſequence rightly drawn from the above perfections of God. Or if thou wilt ſlay the wicked[z], then, when I awake, I ſhall be with thee, as Kimchi connects the words; that is, be at leiſure to attend to thy works and wonders, and daily employ myſelf in the contemplation of them, having no wicked perſons near me to moleſt and diſturb me. The word is ſingular in the original text, the wicked one; meaning either Saul, who was David's enemy without a cauſe, and did very wickedly and injuriouſly by him, whom he might expect God in due time would take out of the world; though he did not chooſe to lay his hand on the Lord's anointed, when he was in his power. Jarchi interprets it of Eſau, by whom he means Edom or Rome, in the Rabbinic language, that is, the Chriſtians; if he meant no more than the papal chriſtians, he may be much in the right; the man of ſin, the ſon of perdition, the wicked one, whom the Lord will ſlay with the breath of his lips, may be intended, the common enemy of Chriſt and his cauſe, Iſa. xi. 4. 2 Theſſ. ii. 3, 8. Though it may deſign a collective body of wicked men; all the followers of Antichriſt, all the antichriſtian ſtates, on whom the vials of God's wrath will be poured; and even all the wicked of the earth, all Chriſt's enemies that would not have him to reign over them, and none but they; the juſtice of God will not admit of it to ſlay the righteous with the wicked, and the omniſcience of God will diſtinguiſh the one from the other, and ſeparate the precious from the vile. Depart from me therefore, ye bloody men; men guilty of ſhedding innocent blood, and therefore by the law of God ſhould have their blood ſhed; ſuch particularly are antichriſt and his followers, who deſerve to have blood given them to drink, becauſe they have ſhed the blood of the ſaints, Rev. xvi. 6, 7. and xvii. 6. and xviii. 24. theſe and ſuch as theſe the pſalmiſt would have no company or fellowſhip with, leſt he ſhould be corrupted by them, fall into ſin, and partake of deſerved plagues with them, Rev. xviii. 4. Some conſider theſe as the words of God, and in connection with the former, and by way of wiſh, thus, O that thou wouldſt ſlay the wicked, O God[a]; and wouldſt ſay, Depart from me, ye bloody men; which will be ſaid to the wicked at the laſt day, and even to ſuch who have made a profeſſion of the name of Chriſt, Matt. vii. 23. and xxv. 34.

℣. 20. For they ſpeak againſt thee wickedly, &c.] Againſt his being, his perfections, his purpoſes, his providences, his doctrines, ordinances, miniſters, and people; or they ſpeak of thee for wickedneſs[b], they made mention of the name of God to cover their wickedneſs, pretending to fear God and love him, to have a reverence of him and ſerve him, putting on a form of godlineſs but denying the power thereof. And thine enemies take thy name in vain; either by profane ſwearing or by falſe ſwearing. The Targum interprets both clauſes of ſwearing deceitfully and vainly; or he, that is, every one that is lifted up to vanity are thine enemies[c], whoſe hearts are lifted up to vanity, idols, riches, ſelf-righteouſneſs, ſenſual luſts and pleaſures; theſe are the enemies of God, are eſtranged from him, hold friendſhip with the world, harbour his enemies, love what he hates, hate what he loves, and commit acts of hoſtility againſt him. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, they take thy cities in vain.

℣. 21. Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate thee, &c.] Wicked men are haters of God; of his word, both law and goſpel; of his ordinances, ways and worſhip; of his people, cauſe and intereſt; and therefore good men hate them: not as men, as the creatures of God, and as their fellow-creatures, whom they are taught by the goſpel to love, to do good unto, and pray for; but as haters of God, and becauſe they are ſo; not their perſons, but their works; and for the truth of this, the omniſcient God is appealed unto. And am not I grieved with thoſe that riſe up againſt thee; as wicked men do, in their hearts, in their words, and in their actions. They rebel againſt God, and contend with him, which is folly and madneſs; and this is grieving to good men, becauſe of their inſolence and impudence, the ruin and deſtruction they expoſe themſelves to, and the diſhonour done to God: and this ariſes from their great love and ſtrong affection for him, not being able to bear ſuch behaviour to him; as a man is filled with grief and indignation, when another riſes up againſt his father or his friend; ſee Pſal. cxix. 136, 158.

℣. 22. I hate them with perfect hatred, &c.] Heartily and really; not in word only, but in deed and in truth; odio vatiniano, with conſummate hatred: this is an anſwer to his own queſtion. I count them mine enemies; being the enemies of God: the friends of God were David's friends, as angels and good men, and God's enemies were his; their friends and enemies were common; ſo cloſely allied and attached were they to each other, as God and all good men are.

℣. 23. Search me, O God, and know my heart, &c.] He had ſearched him, and knew his heart thoroughly. Try me, and know my thoughts; he had tried him, and knew every thought in him, ℣. 1, 2. This therefore is not ſaid for the ſake of God; who, though he is the trier of hearts, and the ſearcher of the reins, is indeed a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart at once, and knows immediately what is in man; and needs no teſtimony of him, nor to make uſe of any means, in order to know him and what is within him: but David ſaid this for his own ſake, that God would ſearch and make known to him what was in his heart, and try him by his word, as gold is tried in the fire; or by any thing difficult and ſelf-denying, as he tried Abraham; or by any afflictive providence; or in any way he thought fit to make him acquainted thoroughly with himſelf. His ſenſe is this, that if he knew his own heart and thoughts, and the inward frame and diſpoſition of his ſoul, it was as he had expreſſed it; that he was grieved with ſinners, and hated thoſe that hated the Lord, even with a perfect hatred, and reckoned them as his enemies; but if it was otherwiſe, he deſired to be ſearched and tried thoroughly, that it might be diſcovered: and he might ſay this alſo on account of others, who charged him falſely with things he was not conſcious of; that never entered into his thoughts, and his heart knew nothing of, and could not accuſe him with; and therefore he appeals to the heart-ſearching God, that he would ſo lay open things that his integrity and innocence might appear to all; ſee Gen. xxii. 1, 12. Deut. viii. 2. 2 Chron. xxxii. 31.

℣. 24. And ſee if there be any wicked way in me, &c.] Not that David thought himſelf free from wickedneſs, or that there was none to be found in his heart and life; and therefore ſaid this in a boaſting way, he knew otherwiſe; ſee Pſal. xix. 12, 13. and cxix. 96. but he is deſirous it might be thoroughly looked into and ſeen, whether there was any ſuch wicked way in him he was charged with; as that he had a deſign upon the life of Saul, and to ſeize his throne and kingdom, which never entered into his mind, 1 Sam. xxiv. 9. Or, any way of grief[d]; what tended to wound and grieve his own ſoul, or to grieve the hearts of God's people; or to grieve the holy Spirit of God; and which he ought to grieve for and repent of: ſuggeſting, that upon the firſt conviction, he was ready to relinquiſh any ſuch wicked way, and expreſs his abhorrence of it, and teſtify true repentance for it. Some render it, the way of an idol[e]; becauſe a word from the ſame root ſignifies an idol: every carnal luſt in a man's heart is an idol; and whatſoever engroſſes the affections, or has more of them than God himſelf has, or is preferred to him, Ezek. xiv. 4. The Targum is, "and ſee if the way of thoſe that err is "in me." And lead me in the way everlaſting; or, in the way of old[f]: the good old way, the ancient path, in which the patriarchs before and after the flood walked. Or, in the perpetual way[g]; the way that endures for ever; in oppoſition to the way of the wicked that periſhes, Pſal. i. 6. or in the way that leads to everlaſting life, to eternal peace and reſt, and endleſs pleaſures; as oppoſed to the way of grief and ſorrow. It deſigns Chriſt, the true and only way to eternal life, the path of faith, truth and godlineſs, Matt. vii. 13, 14. John xiv. 6. in which the Lord leads his people, as a father does his child, and as the ſhepherd his flock. The Jewiſh commentators, Aben Ezra and Kimchi, interpret it the way of the world; and take it to be the ſame with the way of all fleſh, death, or the grave; which is called man's world or home, Joſh. xxiii. 14. Eccl. xii. 5. and make the ſenſe to be this: If thou ſeeſt any evil in me, take me out of the world; kill me at once, let me die. But this ſeems to be foreign from the text; for the word lead deſigns a bleſſing or benefit, as Calvin well obſerves. The Targum is, "lead me in the way of the up-"right of the world;" the way in which upright men walk.

PSALM CXL.

To the chief muſician, A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm, Aben Ezra ſays, was compoſed by David before he was king; and Kimchi ſays, it is concerning Doeg and the Ziphites, who calumniated him to Saul; and, according to our Engliſh contents, it is a prayer of David to be delivered from Saul and Doeg. The Syriac inſcription is, "ſaid by David, when Saul threw a javelin "at him to kill him, but it ſtruck the wall; but "ſpiritually, the words of him that cleaves to God, "and contends with his enemies." R. Obadiah ſays, it was made at the perſecution of David by Saul, which was before the kingdom of David; as the perſecution (of Gog) is before the coming of the Meſſiah. It is indeed before his ſpiritual coming, but not before his coming in the fleſh; and David may be very well conſidered in the pſalm as a type of Chriſt, for he was particularly ſo in his ſufferings, as well as in other things.

℣. 1. Deliver me, O Lord, from the evil man, &c.] Either Saul; ſo Theodoret; or rather Doeg, according to R. Obadiah: but Jarchi interprets it of Eſau; by whom he means Edom or Rome, or rather the Chriſtians in general. Were his ſenſe confined to the papiſts, he might be thought to be much in the right; for this is applicable enough to the man of ſin, and his followers: for it may be underſtood collectively of a body of evil men; all men are evil by nature, their hearts, thoughts, words, works and ways. David's enemies were evil men; and ſo were Chriſt's; as Herod, Judas in particular, and the Jews in general: and ſuch are the enemies of God's people; the world, profane ſinners, perſecutors and falſe teachers; and to be delivered from ſuch is deſirable, and to be prayed for, and an happineſs when enjoyed; ſee 2 Theſſ. iii. 2. Preſerve me from the violent man; or, the man of violences[h]; of a violent ſpirit, that breathes out ſlaughter and death; of a fierce countenance, of bluſtering words and furious actions. Such a man was Doeg; who loved evil and all devouring words, deviſed miſchief, and boaſted in it, Pſal. lii. 1—4. and Herod, who, in his wrath being diſappointed, ordered all the infants in and about Bethlehem to be ſlain; and the Jews, who were violently ſet on the death of Chriſt, and vehemently deſired it: and ſuch are all violent perſecutors of the church of God, who clothe themſelves with the garment of violence, and drink the wine of it; and to be preſerved from ſuch is a great mercy.

℣. 2. Which imagine miſchiefs in their heart, &c.] This ſhews that not a ſingle perſon barely is meant, but more, as Saul's courtiers; who were ſecretly and continually meditating miſchief againſt David, traducing him to Saul, and deviſing things to take away his life. Such were the Jews to Chriſt, who were always plotting to entangle him, or contriving to kill him; and ſo wicked men are ever deviſing miſchief againſt the quiet in the land, which is very abominable to God; and rightly obſerved here, to prevail upon the Lord to preſerve from them, Pſal. ii. 1. Prov. vi. 18. Continually are they gathered together for war; ſo Saul gathered together three thouſand men, and went in purſuit of David, as an enemy to take him. So Herod and Pontius Pilate joined together, though before enemies, in the proſecution of Chriſt; and Jews and Gentiles gathered together againſt him: ſo the ſaints, being in a warfare-ſtate, have their enemies, who often combine againſt them and attack them, and will not ſuffer them to be at reſt and peace; as ſin, Satan, the world, and falſe teachers; ſee Pſal. cxx. 7.

℣. 3. They have ſharpened their tongues like a ſerpent, &c.] Which Kimchi ſays, it does before it bites. Ariſtotle[i] obſerves, that the tip or extreme point of a ſerpent's tongue is as ſmall as an hair, and ſo exceeding ſharp and piercing. Arama interprets this of the ſharpneſs and cunning of the ſerpent; and particularly the ſerpent that deceived Eve, and ſpake cunningly to her. For God knoweth, &c. and may deſign the calumnies and detractions, which were ſharp as a razor; as ſwords, and ſpears and arrows, and as the tongue of a ſerpent, Pſal. lvii. 4. and lxiv. 3. and the ſubtilty of falſe teachers and deceitful workers; and the ſharp and cutting words of wicked men againſt Chriſt and his people, Jude 15. Adders poiſon is under their lips. Selah. Which may ſignify the malignity of ſin in wicked men, which comes from the old ſerpent the devil; is latent in men; very infectious, like poiſon, and deadly and incurable, but by the grace of God and blood of Chriſt: and may deſcribe particularly the miſchief of the tongue, which is a little member, as the aſp is a little creature; but very miſchievous, full of deadly poiſon, which lurks in it, lies under it, and which ſpitting out, it ſtupifies and kills inſenſibly; as do the calumnies of wicked men, and the doctrines of falſe teachers; ſee Rom. iii. 13. The Targum is, "the poiſon of "the ſpider;" though it is ſaid[k], the ſpider is not venomous.

℣. 4. Keep me, O Lord, from the hands of the wicked, &c.] From falling into their hands, and the weight of them; and from their laying hands on him, being men of power and authority. Preſerve me from the violent man; or men, every one of them; ſee the note on ℣. 1. Who have purpoſed to overthrow my goings; to ſupplant him; to cauſe him to ſtumble and fall, to his diſgrace and reproach; and that they might take an advantage of him, and an occaſion againſt him. Arama interprets it, to drive me out of the land of Iſrael; ſee 1 Sam. xxvi. 19. So Chriſt's enemies thought to have ſupplanted him, and have found ſomething againſt him to accuſe him of to Cæſar, Matt. xxii. 15—22.

℣. 5. The proud have hid a ſnare for me, and cords, &c.] Theſe were the Ziphites, according to Arama; ſee Pſal. cxix. 85. the character well agrees with the ſcribes and phariſees, who were proud boaſters, and deſpiſed others, and often laid ſnares for Chriſt to take away his life; and with the enemies of the church and people of God; who, thro' their pride, perſecute them, and are inſidious, and uſe artful methods to enſnare them; as the fowler lays his ſnare for the bird, and has his cords to draw it to him when it is taken in the ſnare, to which the alluſion is. They have ſpread a net by the way ſide; they way-laid him; knowing the way he would go, they lay in wait for him, to ſeize him at once as he went along; ſee John xviii. 1, 2. the word cords in the preceding clauſe ſhould be connected with this, and be read, and with cords they have ſpread a net by the way-ſide; it being uſual, as Jarchi obſerves, to faſten a long cord at the top of the net; and when the fowler ſees the birds under the net, he draws the cord, and the net falls upon the fowls. They have ſet gins for me; all theſe expreſſions deſign the inſidiouſneſs, and the private, ſecret, artful methods, the enemies of David, of Chriſt and his people, took and do take to enſnare them. Arama interprets the ſnare and cords, of the watching of David's houſe; the net by the way-ſide, of poſting themſelves at the gates of the city, and ſurrounding it; and gins, of ſpies; ſee 1 Sam. xix. 11—24. Of ſelah, ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 2.

℣. 6. I ſaid unto the Lord, Thou art my God, &c.] He ſaid this to the Lord himſelf; claimed his covenant-intereſt in him, and expreſſed it in the ſtrength of faith: and this he did when in the midſt of trouble and diſtreſs; in danger of falling into the hands of evil and violent men; they imagined miſchief againſt him; were bent on his ruin, and laid nets, ſnares, gins and traps for him; when he applied to his God, who only could deliver him; and being his covenant-God, he had reaſon to believe he would; ſee Pſal. xxxi. 14. Hear the voice of my ſupplications, O Lord; the requeſts he put up in an humble manner for deliverance and ſalvation; and which he expreſſed vocally, and intreated they might be heard and anſwered: and nothing could tend more to ſtrengthen his faith in this, than that it was his own God and Father he prayed unto; ſee Pſal. xxviii. 2. Thus Chriſt, in the days of his fleſh, offered up prayers and ſupplications with ſtrong crying; and in the midſt of his troubles, and ſurrounded with enemies, declared his faith in God as his God, Heb. v. 7. Pſal. xxii. 10, 11. Matt. xxvii. 46.

℣. 7. O God the Lord, the ſtrength of my ſalvation, &c.] Temporal and ſpiritual, which he was able to effect; the mighty God and mighty Saviour: and this encouraged David to believe he ſhould have deliverance; and this ſecured, confirmed and eſtabliſhed it to him; and to which he was the more induced by what experience he had had of the divine goodneſs to him, as follows: Thou haſt covered my head in the day of battle; with the helmet of ſalvation, as Kimchi, Aben Ezra, and Arama obſerve; which, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, is to a believer the hope of ſalvation, Eph. vi. 17. 1 Theſſ. v. 8. a defenſive weapon to him; and protects him whilſt he is engaging with his ſpiritual enemies in this his ſtate of warfare, ſin, Satan, and the world. Perhaps David may have reſpect to the divine protection of him, when he fought with Goliath. Salvation was Chriſt's helmet, when he engaged with all his and our enemies; even with all the powers of darkneſs, and obtained deliverance for us, Iſa. lix. 16, 17.

℣. 8. Grant not, O Lord, the deſires of the wicked, &c.] Of Doeg, as the Targum; and of other wicked men, who were deſirous both of taking him, and of taking away his life: but the deſires of ſuch men are under the reſtraints of the Lord; nor can they fulfil them, unleſs they have leave from him, which is here deprecated. The pſalmiſt intreats he might not be delivered up to their will, or they have their will of him; ſee Pſal. xxvii. 12. Jarchi interprets it of Eſau, as in ℣. 1. and it is applicable enough to Antichriſt and his wicked followers; who, could they have their deſires, would root the goſpel, and the intereſt of Chriſt, and his people out of the world. Further not his wicked device; or, let not his wicked device come forth[l], or proceed to execution, or be brought to perfection; let him be diſappointed in it, that he may not be able to perform his enterprize, or execute his deſigns; which cannot be done without the divine permiſſion. The Rabbins, as Jarchi and others, render it, let not his bridle come out[m]; the bridle out of his jaws, with which he was held by the Lord, and reſtrained from doing his will; let him not be left to his liberty, and freed from the reſtraints of divine providence; ſee Iſa. xxxvii. 29. Leſt they exalt themſelves. Selah. Grow proud, haughty and inſolent to God and man; ſee Deut. xxxii. 27. Or, let them not be exalted[n]; upon the ruin of me and my friends.

℣. 9. As for the head of thoſe that compaſs me about, &c.] Meaning either their natural head, put for their whole perſons; and the ſenſe is, let the miſchief they have contrived for others fall upon themſelves; ſee Ezek. ix. 10. Pſal. vii. 16. or ſome principal perſon, the head and leader of them, as the word is ſometimes uſed, Iſa. ix. 14, 15. and vii. 8. and deſigns either Saul, who, at the head of three thouſand men, ſurrounded the hill where David and his men were; or Doeg the Edomite, who was over the ſervants of Saul, and accuſed David to him; ſo Kimchi: or Ahithophel, who was at the head of the conſpirators againſt him; ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "Ahithophel, the head of the "ſanhedrim of the diſciples of wickedneſs." If we underſtand this clauſe of Chriſt, the antitype of David, it may deſign Judas; who was the guide to them that ſought Jeſus, and, at the head of a band of men, incloſed and took him: or if of the church and people of God, the man of ſin may be intended, the pope of Rome; the head over many countries, the antichriſtian nations, Pſal. cx. 6. The word is uſed of the gall and poiſon of aſps, Job xx. 14. and if ſo taken here, as Arama interprets it, it will make the ſenſe agree with ℣. 3. and may be read in connection with the following clauſe, thus: Let the poiſon of thoſe that compaſs me about, even the miſchief of their lips cover them[o]; or the labour of them[p]: let the lies and calumnies they have ſo induſtriouſly ſpread, and took ſo much pains to propagate to the hurt of others, like deadly poiſon, cover them with ſhame and confuſion; and the miſchief chief they have boaſted of, and gave out that they would do, let it come upon them on all ſides, and utterly ruin and deſtroy them.

℣. 10. Let burning coals fall upon them, &c.] From heaven, as the Targum, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi, by way of explanation; alluding to the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah with fire from thence: and may deſign both the terrible judgments of God in this life, and everlaſting burnings in hell; ſo Jarchi interprets it of the coals of hell; ſee Pſal. xi. 6. and xviii. 8, 12, 13. and cxx. 3, 4. Let them be caſt into the fire; into the fire of divine wrath, and have ſevere puniſhment inflicted on them in this world; and into the fire of hell hereafter, as the Targum, which is unquenchable and everlaſting; and into which all wicked men, carnal profeſſors, the followers of Antichriſt, the devil and his angels, will be caſt: of the phraſe of caſting into hell, ſee Matt. v. 29, 30. Mark ix. 45, 47. Into deep pits, that they riſe not up again; meaning either the grave, the pit of corruption; from whence the wicked will not riſe to eternal life, as the Targum adds; for though they will riſe again, it will be to everlaſting ſhame and damnation, Dan. xii. 2. John v. 28, 29. or elſe the pit of hell, the bottomleſs pit, from whence there will be no deliverance; where they muſt lie till the uttermoſt farthing is paid, and that will be for ever. Arama refers this to Korah, who was burnt and ſwallowed up, and roſe not again in Iſrael.

℣. 11. Let not an evil ſpeaker be eſtabliſhed in the earth, &c.] One that ſets his mouth againſt the heavens, and ſpeaks evil of God; of his being, perfections, purpoſes and providences: whoſe tongue walks through the earth, and ſpeaks evil of all men, even of dignities; and eſpecially of the ſaints of the moſt High, and of the goſpel and ways of Chriſt. Or, a man of tongue [q]; that uſes his tongue in an ill way, in detractions and ſlanders [r]; in blaſpheming God, his name and tabernacle, and thoſe that dwell therein, as Antichriſt, Rev. xiii. 5. a man that calumniates with a triple tongue, ſo the Targum; like a ſerpent, whoſe tongue ſeems to be ſo ſometimes. Kimchi applies this to Doeg, and Jarchi to Eſau. The requeſt is, that ſuch an one might not be eſtabliſhed in the earth; in the land of the living, as the Targum; might not increaſe and flouriſh in worldly ſubſtance, or be continued in his poſterity; but be rooted out of the earth, and he and his be no more; ſee Pſal. lii. 4, 5. Evil ſhall hunt the violent man to overthrow him; or to impulſions [s]: to drive him from evil to evil, as Kimchi. The ſenſe is, that the evil of puniſhment ſhall hunt him, as a beaſt of prey is hunted; it ſhall cloſely purſue him and overtake him, and ſeize on him and thruſt him down to utter ruin and deſtruction. The Targum is, "the injurious wicked man, let the angel "of death hunt, and drive into hell." Of the violent man, ſee ℣. 1, 4. he who purpoſed to overthrow David, he was perſuaded would be overthrown himſelf. This clauſe teaches us how to underſtand the reſt; for though they are delivered out as wiſhes and imprecations, yet are prophetic, and are ſtrongly expreſſive of the certainty of the things imprecated.

℣. 12. I know, &c.] Here is a double reading: the keri, or marginal reading is, thou knoweſt; an appeal of the pſalmiſt to God, who knew the thoughts of the wicked concerning him, and their devices againſt him; as Kimchi: but the ſcripture-reading is, I know; expreſſing his full perſuaſion and aſſurance, That the Lord will maintain the cauſe of the afflicted, and the right of the poor; of his poor and afflicted people, that are afflicted within and without, by men and devils; and who are poor as to the things of this world, and poor in ſpirit, and ſenſible of their ſpiritual poverty, but rich in grace: the cauſe of theſe God will maintain againſt their oppreſſors, and right their wrongs, and avenge their injuries; this the pſalmiſt knew, and was aſſured of from the word of God, from inſtances and examples in former times, and from his own experience, Pſal. ix. 4.

℣. 13. Surely the righteous ſhall give thanks unto thy name, &c.] The ſame with the poor and the afflicted; who, though traduced by men, and evil ſpoken of and ill uſed by them, are righteous in the ſight of God; being juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is imputed to them, and received by faith, in conſequence of which they live ſoberly and righteouſly: theſe the pſalmiſt knew and was aſſured they would give thanks to the Lord, and praiſe his holy name, for the righteouſneſs by which they are made righteous, and for every other bleſſing of grace and mercy of life; for maintaining their cauſe and their right, and for the ruin and deſtruction of their enemies; ſee Rev. xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2. The upright ſhall dwell in thy preſence; under his care and protection; in his gracious preſence, enjoying the light of his countenance here; and in his glorious preſence hereafter, where is fulneſs of joy: theſe upright ones are ſuch who are upright in heart; whoſe hearts are right with God, ſincere in his ſervice and worſhip, and walk uprightly according to the rule of his word. Theſe, as ſome render it, ſhall ſit before him [t], or in his preſence; as children before a father, in whom he delights; or as diſciples before a maſter, to be taught and inſtructed. The Targum is, "ſhall return to "pray before thee:" and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it of their dwelling, or ſitting before God, in the houſe of prayer; and Kimchi adds, by way of explanation, "to ſeek thee, and know thy ways." Jerom reads it, ſhall dwell with thy countenance or face [u]; and underſtands it of dwelling with Chriſt, the face of God, Heb. i. 3. with whom they ſhall dwell for evermore.

PSALM CXLI.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm was written about the ſame time, and upon the ſame occaſion, as that going before and what follows after; even when David was perſecuted by Saul, and when he was in great danger of his enemies, and ſnares were laid for his life.

℣. 1. Lord, I cry unto thee, &c.] With great earneſtneſs, importunity and fervency, being in diſtreſs; and knowing vain was the help of man, and that none could deliver him but the Lord, and therefore continued crying unto him for help[w]. Make haſte unto me; which ſhews he was in a deſperate condition; that he could not help himſelf, nor could any creature, only the Lord; and he was at a diſtance from him, as it ſeemed to him, and he delayed aſſiſtance; and therefore deſires he would immediately draw nigh, and be a preſent help in his time of need, and work ſpeedy deliverance for him, his caſe requiring haſte. Give ear unto my voice, when I cry unto thee; a requeſt the pſalmiſt frequently makes, not contenting himſelf with prayer, without deſiring and looking for an anſwer to it.

℣. 2. Let my prayer be ſet forth before thee as incenſe, &c.] Which was offered every morning on the altar of incenſe, at which time the people were praying, Exod. xxx. 1, 7, 8. Luke i. 10. and was an emblem of it, even of pure, holy and fervent prayer; which being offered on the altar, Chriſt, which ſanctifies every gift, and by him the high-prieſt; through whom every ſacrifice is acceptable unto God; and through whoſe blood and righteouſneſs, and the ſweet incenſe of his mediation and interceſſion, it becomes fragrant and a ſweet odour to the Lord; and being directed to him, it goes upwards, is regarded by him, and continues before him as ſweet incenſe; which is what the pſalmiſt prays for; ſee Mal. i. 11. Rev. viii. 3, 4. And the lifting up of my hands, as the evening-ſacrifice; the burnt-ſacrifice of the evening, according to Ben Melech, the lamb ſlain every evening; or elſe the minchah, as the word is; the meat, or rather the bread-offering made of fine flour, with oil and frankincenſe on it, which went along with the former, Exod. xxix. 38—41. and ſo the Targum, "as the "ſweet gift offered in the evening." This only is mentioned, as being put for both the morning and the evening-ſacrifice; or becauſe the incenſe was offered in the morning, from which it is diſtinguiſhed: or it may be, as Kimchi thinks, this pſalm was compoſed in the evening; and ſo the inſcription in the Syriac verſion is, "a pſalm of David, when he "meditated the evening-ſervice." Or becauſe this was the laſt ſacrifice of the day; there was no other after it, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and the moſt acceptable; to which may be added, that this was the hour for prayer, Acts iii. 1. and x. 3. Wherefore lifting up of the hands, was a prayer-geſture, and a very ancient one both among Jews and Gentiles[x]; Ariſtotle[y] ſays, all men, when we pray, lift up our hands to heaven; and it is put for that itſelf, 1 Tim. ii. 8. and is deſired to be, like that, acceptable unto God; as it is, when the heart is lifted up with the hands, and prayer is made in the name and faith of Chriſt.

℣. 3. Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, &c.] Whilſt praying, as Jarchi and Kimchi; that he might not utter any raſh, unguarded and unbecoming word; but take and uſe the words which God gives, even the taught words of the holy Ghoſt: or leſt, being under affliction and oppreſſion, he ſhould ſpeak unadviſedly with his lips, and utter any impatient, murmuring, and repining word againſt God; or expreſs any fretfulneſs at the proſperity of the wicked, or ſpeak evil of them; eſpecially of Saul, the Lord's anointed, for the ill uſage of him. Keep the door of my lips; which are as a door that opens and ſhuts: this he deſires might be kept as with a bridle, eſpecially while the wicked were before him; leſt he ſhould ſay any thing they would make a handle of againſt him, and to the reproach of religion; and that no corrupt communication, or any fooliſh and filthy talk, or idle and unprofitable words, might proceed from them. The phraſe ſignifies the ſame as the other; he was ſenſible of his own inability to keep a proper watch and guard over his words, as was neceſſary, and therefore prays the Lord to do it; ſee Pſal. xxxix. 1.

℣. 4. Incline not my heart to any evil thing, &c.] Or evil word[z], as the Targum; ſince out of the abundance of that the mouth ſpeaketh, Matt. xii. 34, 35. or to any ſinful thing, to the commiſſion of any evil action: not that God ever inclines mens hearts to ſin by any phyſical influence, it being what is repugnant to his nature and will, and what he hates and abhors; for though he hardens the hearts of wicked men, and gives them up to the luſts of them; yet he does not move, incline, or tempt any man to ſin, James i. 13, 14. but he may be ſaid to do this, when he ſuffers them to follow their own ſinful inclinations, and leaves them to be inclined by the power and prevalency of their own corruptions, and by the temptations of Satan, which is here deprecated; ſee Pſal. cxix. 36. Matt. vi. 13. So as to practiſe wicked works with men that work iniquity; to join with thoſe that make a trade of ſinning; the courſe of whoſe life is evil, in their unfruitful works of darkneſs; and do as they do, even commit crimes the moſt flagicious and enormous: he ſeems to have reſpect to great perſons, whoſe examples are very forcible and enſnaring; and therefore it requires an exertion of the powerful and efficacious grace of God, to preſerve ſuch from the influence of them, whoſe buſineſs is much with them. And let me not eat of their dainties; ſince their table was a ſnare to themſelves, it might be ſo to him; and be a means of betraying him unawares into the commiſſion of ſome ſins, which would be diſhonourable and grieving to him: the pſalmiſt deſires not to partake with them at their table; but choſe rather a meaner table and coarſer fare, where he might be more free from temptation; ſee Prov. xxiii. 1—6. Or this may be underſtood of the dainties and ſweet morſels of ſin; which are like ſtolen waters, and bread eaten in ſecret, to a carnal heart: though the pleaſures of it are but imaginary, and laſt but for a ſeaſon, and therefore are avoided by a gracious man; by whom, even afflictions with the people of God, are preferred unto them, Heb. xi. 25. The Targum interprets it of the ſong of the houſe of their feaſts; which is enſnaring.

℣. 5. Let the righteous ſmite me, it ſhall be a kindneſs, &c.] Or, ſmite me in kindneſs[a]. In love; in a loving and friendly manner, which makes reproofs the more agreeable and effectual. Not the righteous God, as Arama; though he does ſometimes ſmite his people for their ſins, Iſa. lvii. 17. that is, reproves, corrects and chaſtiſes them, and that in love and for their good; and therefore ſuch ſmitings and corrections ſhould be taken in good part by them, and received as fatherly chaſtiſements, and as inſtances of his paternal care of them, and love to them: but rather righteous and good men; who, when there is occaſion for it, ſhould reprove and rebuke one another; but then it ſhould be in a kind and tender manner, and with the ſpirit of meekneſs; and ſuch reproofs ſhould be as kindly received; for faithful are the wounds of a friend, but the kiſſes of an enemy are deceitful, Prov. xxvii. 6. Or, let the righteous beat me with kindneſs or goodneſs[b]; with precepts of goodneſs, by inculcating good things into him; which he ſhould take, as if he overwhelmed and loaded him with benefits; even though it was like ſtriking with a hammer, as the word ſignifies. And let him reprove me; which explains what is meant by ſmiting. It ſhall be an excellent oil, which ſhall not break my head; give no pain nor uneaſineſs to his head or his heart, but rather ſupple and heal the wounds ſin reproved for has made. The Targum is, "the oil of the anointing "of the ſanctuary ſhall not ceaſe from my head;" with which he was anointed king; and ſignifies that he ſhould enjoy the dignity, and continue in it. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions, render it, the oil of the ungodly, or ſinners; meaning their flattering words, which, though ſmooth as oil, were deceitful; and therefore he deprecates them, let not the oil of the wicked, &c. as being hurtful and pernicious. For yet my prayer alſo ſhall be in their calamities; that is, when the righteous, that ſmote and reproved him for his good, ſhould be in any diſtreſs; ſuch a grateful ſenſe ſhould he retain of their favour in reproving him, that he would pray for them, that they might be delivered out of it; which would ſhew that he took it kindly at their hand. Or, in their evils, or againſt them[c]; which ſome underſtand of the evil practices of wicked men; which the pſalmiſt prayed againſt, and that he might be kept and delivered from.

℣. 6. When their judges are overthrown in ſtony places, &c.] The judges of David's adverſaries, the workers of iniquity; meaning Saul, Abner, &c. Arama refers this to Saul and his ſons being ſlain on the mountains of Gilboa, 1 Sam. xxxi. 1, 8. which might be here prophetically ſpoken of. Or, as it is by ſome rendered, when their judges are let down by the ſides of the rock[d]; or let go free, as Saul was by David more than once; when it was in the power of his hands to have taken away his life, which his principal friends urged him to do, 1 Sam. xxiv. 2—7. and xxvi. 3—12. Some render the words as an imprecation or wiſh, let their judges be caſt down[e]; or as a prophecy, they ſhall be caſt down in ſtony places, or by the ſides of a rock: ſo the word is uſed of caſting or throwing down, 2 Kings ix. 33. and may allude to the manner of puniſhment uſed in ſome places, by caſting down from a precipice, from rocks and hills; ſee 2 Chron. xxv. 12. Luke iv. 29. Or, when they ſlip by the ſides of the rock[f]; endeavouring to get up it; as ambitious men are deſirous of getting to the top of honour, power and authority, but ſtand in ſlippery places, and often ſlip and fall. And when this ſhould be the caſe of theſe judges, then ſhould David be raiſed up on high; the anointed of the God of Jacob, the ſweet pſalmiſt of Iſrael. And then they ſhall hear my words, for they are ſweet; that is, the common people ſhould hear them, and be pleaſed with them, who had been ſet againſt him by their judges; by which they would eaſily perceive, that he had no enmity nor malice, nor ill deſign againſt Saul. This may reſpect either his very affectionate lamentation at the death of Saul and his ſons, 2 Sam. i. 17—27. or what he delivered at the ſeveral times he ſpared the life of Saul, when he could have taken it away, 1 Sam. xxiv. 9—19. and xxvi. 17—25. and it is eſpecially true of all the words which David ſpoke by inſpiration, or the Spirit of God ſpake to him; particularly in his book of Pſalms, concerning the Meſſiah, the covenant of grace, and the bleſſings of it; of the rich experiences of grace he had, and the ſeveral doctrines of the goſpel declared by him; which were ſweet, delightful, and entertaining to thoſe who have ears to hear ſuch things; or whoſe ears are opened to hear them, ſo as to underſtand them and diſtinguiſh them; but to others not.

℣. 7. Our bones are ſcattered at the grave's mouth, &c.] Into which they were not ſuffered to be put, but lay unburied; or from whence they were dug up, and lay ſcattered about; which is to be underſtood of ſuch of David's friends as fell into the hands of Saul and his men, and were ſlain: perhaps it may refer to the fourſcore and five prieſts, and the inhabitants of Nob, ſlain by the order of Saul, 1 Sam. xxii. 18, 19. Though the phraſe may be only proverbial, and be expreſſive of the danger David and his men were in, and their ſenſe of it, who looked upon themſelves like dry bones, hopeleſs and helpleſs, and had the ſentence of death in themſelves, and were as it were at the mouth of the grave, on the brink of ruin. As when one cutteth and cleaveth wood upon the earth; and the chips fly here and there and are diſregarded; ſuch was their caſe: or as men cut and cleave the earth with the plough, and it is tore up by it, and falls on each ſide of it, ſo are we perſecuted, afflicted, and diſtreſſed by our enemies, and have no mercy ſhewn us; ſo the Targum, "as a man that cuts and "cleaves with plow-ſhares in the earth, ſo our "members are ſcattered at the grave's mouth." The Syriac and Arabic verſions underſtand it of the plow-ſhare cutting the earth.

℣. 8. But mine eyes are unto thee, O God the Lord, &c.] Not only the eyes of his body, lifted up to God in prayer, this being a prayer-geſture, John xi. 41. and xvii. 1. but the eyes of his mind, or underſtanding, eſpecially the eyes of faith and love; for it is expreſſive of his affection to God, his holy confidence in him, and humble hope and expectation of good things from him, in this his time of diſtreſs: his eyes were to him and him only, both for temporal food for himſelf and his men; and for ſpiritual food, for all ſupplies of grace, for wiſdom and direction, for ſtrength and aſſiſtance, for protection and deliverance. In thee is my truſt; not in himſelf, nor in his friends, nor in any creature, prince or potentate, but in the Lord, as the God of nature, providence and grace; to which he was encouraged by his loving kindneſs to him; by the everlaſting ſtrength in him; by what he had done for others and for him in times paſt; by the proviſions he has made in his covenant and promiſes for thoſe that truſt in him, who are of all men moſt happy. Leave not my ſoul deſtitute; of daily food, of help and aſſiſtance, of the preſence, Spirit, and grace of God; or naked[g], and defenceleſs, PSALM CXLII.

Maſchil of David; a prayer, when he was in the cave.

OF the word maſchil ſee the note on the title of Pſalm xxxii. This pſalm is called a prayer, as ſome others are, Pſalm xc. and cii. and was compoſed by David when either in the cave of Adullam, 1 Sam. xxii. 1. or rather in the cave at Engedi, where he cut off Saul's ſkirt, 1 Sam. xxiv. 3. as Jarchi and Kimchi think. The pſalm repreſents the troubles of David, and of the Meſſiah his antitype, and is applicable to the church of God, or to any particular ſoul when in diſtreſs.

℣. 1. I cried unto the Lord with my voice, &c.] With the voice of his ſoul, in the language of his mind, mentally, as Moſes and Hannah cried unto the Lord when no voice was heard, or articulate ſounds expreſſed, ſince this prayer was put up to the Lord in the cave where Saul was; though it might have been delivered before he came into it, whilſt he and his men were at the mouth of it, which threw David into this diſtreſs; beſides the cave was ſo large as to hold David and his ſix hundred men without being ſeen by Saul, and who could diſcourſe together as David and his men did, without being heard by Saul whilſt he was in it; and ſo this pſalm or prayer might be ſpoken vocally, though he was there. With my voice unto the Lord did I make my ſupplication; the ſame thing in other words; crying is explained by making ſupplication, which is praying to the Lord in an humble manner for grace and mercy, and not pleading merit and worthineſs.

℣. 2. I poured out my complaint before him, &c.] Not a complaint of the Lord and of his providences, but of himſelf; of his ſins, and particularly his unbelief; and alſo of them that perſecuted and afflicted him; which he poured out from the abundance of his heart, and in the bitterneſs of his ſoul; denoting the fulneſs of his prayer, his freedom in it, the power and fervency of it, and which he left before the Lord, and ſubmitted to his will; ſee Pſal. cii. title. I ſhewed before him my trouble; the preſent trouble he was in, being purſued and ſurrounded by Saul and his army; not as if the Lord was ignorant of it, and did not ſee and obſerve it, but to affect his own ſoul with it, to exerciſe grace under it, and eaſe his burdened and diſtreſſed mind; the beſt of men have their troubles both within and without, and the way to be rid of them is to carry them to the Lord.

℣. 3. When my ſpirit was overwhelmed within me, &c.] Ready to ſink and faint under the preſent affliction, being attended with the hidings of God's face, and with unbelieving frames; which is ſometimes the caſe of God's people, and with which they are as it were covered and overwhelmed, as well as with a ſenſe of ſin, and with ſhame and ſorrow for it; ſee Pſal. lxi. 2. and lxxvii. 3. Then thou kneweſt my path; the eyes of the Lord are upon all men, and he knows their goings, none of them are hid from him; and he ſees and approves of the way, of the life and converſation of his people in general; and particularly obſerves what way they take under affliction, which is to apply to him for help and deliverance, Pſal. i. 6. Job xxiii. 10. R. Moſes in Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it of the path he walked in, which was right and not evil, for which he could appeal to God that knows all things; it may literally intend the path David took to eſcape the fury of Saul that purſued him from place to place. In the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a ſnare for me; let him take which way he would there were ſpies upon him, or men that were in ambuſcade to take him; and ſnares were every where laid for him to entrap him; ſee Pſal. cxl. 5. and cxli. 9.

℣. 4. I looked on my right hand, and beheld, &c.] On the left, ſo Kimchi ſupplies it, and after him Piſcator; he looked about him every way to the right and left, to ſee if he could get any help, or find out any way of deliverance. To this ſenſe the Targum, Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions render the words; and ſo Kimchi and Aben Ezra underſtand them: but ſome render them in the imperative, look on the right hand, and behold[n]; and conſider them; either as ſpoken to his own ſoul, to ſtir up himſelf to look around him for ſuccour and relief; or as an addreſs to God to look and behold, as in Pſal. lxxx. 14. and R. Obadiah reads them, look, O right hand; O right hand of God that does valiantly; but looking cannot properly be aſcribed to the right hand; and beſides it is not the Lord the pſalmiſt is ſpeaking to, or looking after, but men, as follows. But there was no man that would know me; take notice of him, and acknowledge and own him, or ſhew him any favour, or even own that they had any knowledge of him; which is often the caſe when men are in affliction and diſtreſs, their former friends, acquaintance, yea relations, keep at a diſtance from them; ſo it was with Job, the Meſſiah, and others; ſee Job xix. 13. Pſal. lxix. 8. Refuge failed me; as he could get no help from men, ſo there was no way open for his eſcape, or by which he could flee and get out of the hands and reach of his enemies; in theſe circumſtances he was when in the cave. No man cared for my ſoul; or life[o]; to ſave it, protect and defend it, that is, very few; otherwiſe there were ſome that were concerned for him, as the men that were with him, and Jonathan, Saul's ſon; but none of Saul's courtiers, they were not ſolicitous for his welfare, but on the contrary ſought his life to take it away. This is an emblem of a ſoul under firſt awakenings and convictions, enquiring the way of ſalvation and where to find help, but at a loſs for it in the creature.

℣. 5. I cried unto thee, O Lord, &c.] Finding no ſuccour from man, he turns to the Lord, and directs his prayer to him in his diſtreſs. I ſaid, Thou art my refuge; as he was, from all his enemies that were in purſuit of him, and from the ſtorm of calamities he apprehended was coming upon him: and a refuge the Lord is to all his people in time of trouble; and where they always meet with ſuſtenance, protection and ſafety; he being a ſtrong habitation, a ſtronghold, a ſtrong refuge, to which they may reſort at all times; and ſuch is Chriſt to all ſenſible ſinners that flee unto him, Heb. vi. 18. And my portion in the land of the living; and a moſt excellent one he is, a large, immenſe and inconceivable portion; he and all his perfections, purpoſes, promiſes and bleſſings, being included in it; a ſoul-ſatisfying one, and which will never be taken away nor conſumed; it is a portion in the preſent life; it will laſt as long as life laſts, and continues unto death, and at death, and for evermore, Pſalm lxxiii. 26.

℣. 6. Attend unto my cry, &c.] His prayer and ſupplication for help in his diſtreſs, which he deſires might be hearkened unto and anſwered. For I am brought very low; in his ſpirit, in the exerciſe of grace, being in great affliction, and reduced to the utmoſt extremity, weakened, impoveriſhed and exhauſted; wanting both men and money to aſſiſt him, Pſal. lxxix. 8. and cxvi. 6. Deliver me from my perſecutors; Saul and his men, who were in purſuit of him with great warmth and eagerneſs. For they are ſtronger than I; more in number, and greater in ſtrength; Saul had with him three thouſand choſen men out of all Iſrael, able bodied men, and expert in war; veteran troops, and in high ſpirits, with their king at the head of them; David had about ſix hundred men, and theſe poor mean creatures, ſuch as were in diſtreſs, in debt, and diſcontented, and in want of proviſions, and diſpirited; ſee 1 Sam. xxii. 2. and xxiii. 13. and xxiv. 2. Pſal. xviii. 16. So the ſpiritual enemies of the Lord's people are ſtronger than they, Jer. xxxi. 11. Eph. vi. 12.

℣. 7. Bring my ſoul out of priſon, &c.] Not out of purgatory, to which ſome popiſh writers wreſt theſe words very abſurdly; nor out of the priſon of his body, as Joſeph Ben Gorion[p]; knowing that none but God had a power of removing it from thence; but out of the cave, where he was detained as in a priſon, whilſt Saul and his men were about the mouth of it; or rather out of all his ſtraits, diſtreſſes, and difficulties, which ſurrounded and preſſed him on all ſides, as if he was in a priſon. That I may praiſe thy name; this releaſe he deſired not ſo much for his own ſake, that he might be at eaſe and liberty, but that he might have freſh occaſion to praiſe the Lord, and an opportunity of doing it publicly, in the aſſembly and congregation of the people. The righteous ſhall compaſs me about; in a circle, like a crown, as the word[q] ſignifies; when delivered, they ſhould flock to him and come about him, to ſee him and look at him, as a miracle of mercy, whoſe deliverance was marvellous; and to congratulate him upon it, and to join with him in praiſes unto God for it. The Targum is, "for my ſake the righteous will make "to thee a crown of praiſe." And to the ſame purpoſe Jarchi, "for my ſake the righteous ſhall "ſurround thee, and praiſe thy name." Aben Ezra interprets it, "they ſhall glory as if the royal crown "was on their heads." For thou ſhalt deal bountifully with me; in delivering him from his enemies, ſettling him on the throne, and beſtowing upon him all the bleſſings of providence and grace; ſee Pſal. cxvi. 7. and thus the pſalm is concluded with a ſtrong expreſſion of faith in the Lord, though in ſuch a low eſtate.

PSALM CXLIII.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm was compoſed by David when he fled from Abſalom his ſon, according to the title of it in Apollinarius, the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions; ſo R. Obadiah Gaon: and of the ſame opinion is Theodoret and others. The ſenſe he had of his ſins, and his deprecating God's entering into judgment with him for them, ſeems to confirm it; affliction from his own family for them being threatned him, 2 Sam. xii. 9—11. though Kimchi thinks it was written on the ſame account as the former, and at the ſame time, namely, when he was perſecuted by Saul; and what is ſaid in ℣. 3, 4. ſeems to agree with it. The Syriac inſcription is, "when the "Edomites came againſt him;" which is very foreign, ſince theſe were ſubdued by him.

℣. 1. Hear my prayer, O Lord, give ear to my ſupplications, &c.] With theſe requeſts David begins the pſalm; for it was to no purpoſe to pray and ſupplicate for grace and mercy, unleſs his prayers were heard; and for which he always appears to be concerned, as every good man will, and not to be heard only, but to be anſwered, as follows. In thy faithfulneſs anſwer me, and in thy righteouſneſs; he does not plead his own faith with which he believed in God, as Arama interprets it; tho' the prayer of faith is very effectual; but the faithfulneſs of God to his promiſes: he had promiſed to hear, anſwer, and deliver ſuch as called on him in a time of trouble; and he is faithful that has promiſed, nor will he ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail; he cannot deny himſelf; and on this the pſalmiſt relied for an anſwer, as well as deſired and expected it; not on account of his own righteouſneſs, but either on account of the goodneſs and grace of God, ſometimes deſigned by righteouſneſs, or becauſe of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, or for the ſake of Chriſt, the Lord our righteouſneſs; on whoſe account God is juſt and faithful to forgive ſin, the bleſſing the pſalmiſt wanted, as appears from the following verſe.

℣. 2. And enter not into judgment with thy ſervant, &c.] The houſe of judgment, as the Targum, or court of judicature; God is a judge, and there is and will be a judgment, univerſal, righteous, and eternal; and there is a day fixed for it, and a judgment-ſeat before which all muſt ſtand, and a law according to which all muſt be judged; but the pſalmiſt knew he was but a man, and could not contend with God; and a ſinful creature, and could not anſwer him for one of a thouſand faults committed by him; and though his ſervant, yet an unprofitable one; his nature, his heart, his thoughts, words and actions, would not bear examining, nor ſtand the teſt of the holy law of God; nor was he able to anſwer the demands of divine juſtice in his own perſon; and therefore pleads for pardon and acceptance through Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, and intreats that God would not proceed againſt him in a judicial way, now nor hereafter. For in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified; in a law-ſenſe, ſo as to be acquitted in open court, and not condemned; that is, by the deeds of the law, as the apoſtle explains it, Rom. iii. 20. by obedience to it, by a man's own works of righteouſneſs; becauſe theſe are imperfect, are oppoſed to the grace of God, and would diſannul the death of Chriſt, and encourage boaſting; and much leſs in the ſight of God; for however men may be juſtified hereby in their own ſight, and before men, in their eſteem and account, yet not before God, the omniſcient God; who ſees not as man ſees, and judges not according to the outward appearance, and is perfectly holy and ſtrictly juſt; and none but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt can make men righteous or juſtify them before him; and this can and does, and preſents men unblameable and irreproveable in his ſight.

℣. 3. For the enemy hath perſecuted my ſoul, &c.] Which is to be connected with ℣. 1. and is a reaſon why he deſires his prayer might be anſwered, ſeeing his enemy, either Saul or Abſalom his own ſon, perſecuted him, or purſued him in order to take away his ſoul, or life; or Satan, the enemy and avenger, who goes about like a roaring lion ſeeking whom he may devour; or perſecuting men, who are his emiſſaries and inſtruments, whom he inſtigates to perſecute the Lord's people, and employs them therein. He hath ſmitten my life down to the ground; brought him into a low, mean and abject ſtate, and near to death; had with a blow ſtruck him to the ground, and left him wallowing in the mire and dirt, juſt ready to expire. The phraſe is expreſſive of a very diſtreſſing ſtate and condition. Some render it my company[r]; meaning the men that were with him, his ſoldiers, who were reduced to a low condition with him, and greatly enfeebled and diſpirited. He hath made me to dwell in darkneſs; in the ſides of the cave, as Kimchi; ſee 2 Sam. xxiv. 3. or in great affliction of body and mind, frequently ſignified by darkneſs, as proſperity is by light; he was not only obliged by his enemy to hide himſelf in woods and wilderneſſes, and in caves and dens, but was filled with gloomy apprehenſions of things, Pſalm lxxxviii. 6. As thoſe that have been long dead; or of old[s], an age or two ago, who are out of mind and forgotten, and of whom there is no hope of their coming to life again until the reſurrection: or who are dead for ever[t]; will remain ſo till that time comes; ſignifying hereby his hopeleſs, helpleſs, and forlorn ſtate and condition; ſee Pſal. xxxi. 12. and lxxxviii. 4, 5.

℣. 4. Therefore is my ſpirit overwhelmed within me, &c.] Covered over with grief, born down with ſorrow, ready to ſink and fail; ſee the note on Pſal. cxlii. 3. My heart within me is deſolate; deſtitute of the ſpirit and preſence of God, and with reſpect to the exerciſe of grace, and filled with fears and miſgivings; or aſtoniſhed[u], at the providence he was under, like one ſtunned and filled with ſore amazement, not knowing what to make of things, or what the iſſue of them would be; ſo David's antitype was ſore amazed in the garden, when his troubles and agonies came upon him, Mark xiv. 33.

℣. 5. I remember the days of old, &c.] Former times, he had read and heard of, in which the Lord appeared for his people that truſted in him; or the former part of his own life, his younger days, when the Lord delivered him from the lion and bear, and from the uncircumciſed Philiſtine whom he ſlew; and made him victorious in battles, and preſerved him from the rage and malice of Saul. If this was written on account of Abſalom; thoſe times of deliverance he called to mind, in order to encourage his faith and hope, and chear his drooping ſpirits. I meditate on all thy works; I muſe on the work of thy hands; the works of creation and providence, in order to obſerve the inſtances of divine power, wiſdom and goodneſs in them; and from thence fetch arguments, to engage his truſt and confidence in the Lord: he both thought of theſe things within himſelf, and he talked[w] of them to his friends that were with him, as the laſt of theſe words uſed may ſignify; and all this he did to chear his own ſpirit, and the ſpirits of the men that were with him, in the time of diſtreſs and danger.

℣. 6. I ſtretch forth my hands unto thee, &c.] In prayer, as the Targum adds; for this is a prayer-geſture, 1 Kings viii. 38. Iſa. i. 15. both hands were ſtretched forth, earneſtly imploring help, and ready to receive and embrace every bleſſing beſtowed with thankfulneſs. My ſoul thirſteth after thee, as a thirſty land. Selah. As a dry land which wants water gapes, and as it were thirſts for rain, which is very refreſhing to it; ſo his ſoul thirſted after God, after his word and ordinances, after communion with him in them, after his grace and freſh ſupplies of it; particularly after pardoning grace and mercy, after the coming of Chriſt, and the bleſſings of grace by him; as reconciliation, atonement, righteouſneſs and ſalvation; after more knowledge of God and Chriſt, and divine truths; and after the enjoyment of them in heaven to all eternity. Some copies read, in a thirſty land[x], and ſo ſome verſions; ſee Pſal. xlii. 1, 2. and lxiii. 1. and lxxxiv. 2. Of the word ſelah, ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 2.

℣. 7. Hear me ſpeedily, O Lord, my ſpirit faileth, &c.] Ready to ſink, ſwoon and faint away, thro' the weight of the affliction on him; by reaſon of the perſecution of his enemy, and for want of the divine preſence; hence the Targum renders it, "my "ſpirit deſireth thee;" ſee Cant. v. 6. Iſa. lvii. 16. and therefore intreats that God would hear and anſwer him quickly; or, make haſte to anſwer him, and not delay, leſt he ſhould be quite gone. Wherefore it follows, Hide not thy face from me; nothing is more deſirable to a good man than the face or preſence of God, the light of his countenance, and ſenſible communion with him; which may be ſaid to be hid, when he withdraws his gracious preſence, and withholds the diſcoveries of his love, and the manifeſtations of his free grace and favour; which he ſometimes does on account of ſin, and is the caſe at times of the beſt of ſaints; and is conſiſtent with the love of God, though very grieving to them, and therefore here deprecated: the Targum is, "cauſe not thy ſhekinah to remove from me." Leſt I be like unto them that go down into the pit; either the houſe of the grave, as the Targum; look wan and pale, become lifeleſs and ſpiritleſs, or like a dead man; for as in the favour of God is life, his abſence is as death: or the pit of hell, the pit of deſtruction; that is, be in ſuch horror and deſpair, and under ſuch apprehenſions of divine wrath as the damned feel.

℣. 8. Cauſe me to hear thy loving kindneſs in the morning, &c.] Not only externally in the miniſtry of the word; but internally by the Spirit, ſo as to feel and perceive, and have ſome ſenſible experience of it; which he deſired he might have in the morning, early, ſpeedily, by the next morning; it being now night perhaps when he was in this diſtreſs, and put up this prayer; ſee 2 Sam. xviii. 1. Jarchi interprets it, when the redemption ariſes or ſprings out; meaning the deliverance of the Jews from their preſent captivity: and ſo Kimchi, of the time of ſalvation; as a time of diſtreſs is called the evening. For in thee do I truſt; alone for ſalvation; being encouraged by his loving kindneſs, and the goodneſs of God being for ſuch that truſt in him, Pſal. xxxvi. 7. and xxxi. 19. the Targum is, "in thy Word do I hope." Cauſe me to know the way wherein I ſhould walk; either literally, which way he ſhould take to eſcape his enemies, and get out of danger; or the way and courſe of his life and converſation, according to the will of God; the way of truth, and path of faith; the way of righteouſneſs and holineſs, the way of God's commandments and ordinances; which he deſired to have a more diſtinct knowledge of, and grace to enable him to walk therein. For I lift up my ſoul unto thee; in prayer, as the Targum adds, which this phraſe is expreſſive of; and unleſs the heart is lift up to God, and the affections of the ſoul, and the deſires of it are drawn out unto him, and grace is in exerciſe on him in prayer, the lifting up of the hands will be of no avail; ſee Pſal. xxv. 1, 4. Lam. iii. 41.

℣. 9. Deliver me, O Lord, from mine enemies, &c.] Either Saul and his courtiers, or Abſalom and the conſpirators along with him; who were many, and lively and ſtrong, ſtronger than he; and therefore God only could deliver him, and to him he ſought for it, and not to men; and ſo deliverance from ſpiritual enemies is only from the Lord. I flee unto thee to hide me; from their rage and fury; who was the only aſylum or place of refuge for him, where he could be ſafe. It may be rendered, with thee have I hid[y]; that is, myſelf: ſo Arama gives the ſenſe, "I have hid myſelf with thee." Jarchi, Aben Ezra and Kimchi, interpret it to this purpoſe, "I have hid my affairs, my ſtraits and troubles, "my difficulties and neceſſities from men; and "have revealed them unto thee, who alone can "ſave." The Targum is, "I have appointed thy "Word to be (my) Redeemer."

℣. 10. Teach me to do thy will, &c.] Revealed in the word; which ſaints deſire a greater knowledge of in order to do it, and in which they delight; and alſo are deſirous of being taught, and to practiſe ſubmiſſion to the will of God under afflictions; which was now the caſe of the pſalmiſt. For thou art my God; his covenant-God; and from whom all his afflictions came in a covenant-way, and therefore deſires to be inſtructed by him in them; ſee Jer. xxxi. 18. Thy ſpirit is good; thy holy good Spirit, as the Targum; the Spirit of thy holineſs, as the Arabic verſion: the holy Spirit of God is meant, the third perſon in the Trinity; who is good eſſentially, being of the ſame nature and eſſence with the Father and Son, with God, who is only good; and effectively is the author of the good work of grace upon the heart, and of the ſeveral particular graces there implanted, and who performs many good offices to the ſaints. Lead me into the land of uprightneſs; or, let thy good ſpirit lead me into the land of uprightneſs[z]: either into a right land, as the Targum, where honeſty prevails, and honeſt and upright men live; or, through a plain way[a], eaſy to be found, in which he ſhould not err, and where would be no occaſion of ſtumbling; or, through the way of life, as the Syriac verſion; the way to eternal life, to heaven and happineſs; the land where only truly righteous and upright perſons dwell: ſuch will be the new heavens and the new earth, as well as the ultimate ſtate of glory, 2 Pet. iii. 13. and to this the Spirit of God is the leader and guide of his people, Pſal. xlviii. 14.

℣. 11. Quicken me, O Lord, for thy names ſake, &c.] Being like one dead, ℣. 3. that is, revive and chear his drooping ſpirit, ready to fail, being overwhelmed within him, ℣. 4, 7. as well as revive the work of grace in him; and quicken his ſoul to the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty; and this he deſires not only for his own ſoul's good, but for the glory of God, that his name might be honoured, and not blaſphemed. For thy righteouſneſs ſake bring my ſoul out of trouble; for as he had his bodily troubles and other outward afflictions, he had ſoul-troubles, through the corruptions of his nature, the temptations of Satan, and the hidings of God's face; which beſet him around, and greatly ſtraitened and afflicted him, and filled him with doubts and fears; from all which he deſires deliverance, verance, for the ſake of the righteouſneſs of God, or his faithfulneſs to his promiſe, that he would deliver his people in diſtreſs when they called upon him; ſee the note on ℣. 1. This interprets the meaning of the petition in Pſal. cxlii. 7.

℣. 12. And of thy mercy cut off thine enemies, &c.] Which, though an act of vindictive juſtice, and terrible righteouſneſs to them, would be an act of grace and mercy to him, who thereby would be delivered from them: or, for thy grace [b]; for the ſake of it, for the honour of it, do this; thoſe being, as Cocceius thinks, deſpiſers of the grace of God. And deſtroy all them that afflict my ſoul; by their perſecutions, reproaches and blaſphemies. Theſe clauſes, with thoſe in the preceding verſe, are read in the future tenſe, thou ſhalt quicken— bring out— cut off — deſtroy, in the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions; and ſo may be conſidered as a prophecy of what would be the caſe of David and his enemies, or of the Meſſiah and his, here typified; as well as a prayer for thoſe things. For I am thy ſervant; by creation, by redemption and grace; and by office, being ſet upon the throne for the ſervice of God and his people, and therefore pleads for his protection and ſuccour; and the rather, as he was the ſervant of God; and not they, his enemies, as Kimchi obſerves.

PSALM CXLIV.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm was written by David; not on account of the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, by a ſpirit of prophecy, as Theodoret; but on his own account, after he was come to the throne, and was king over all Iſrael; and was delivered from the war between him and Iſrael, and from the war of the Philiſtines, as Kimchi obſerves, having gained two victories over them: or it was written between the two victories, and before he had conquered all his enemies; ſince he prays to be delivered from the hand of ſtrange children, ℣. 7, 11. R. Obadiah thinks it was written on the account of his deliverance from Abſalom and Sheba; but the former is beſt. Some copies of the Septuagint, and alſo the Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions, have in their titles theſe words, "againſt Goliath;" and ſo Apollinarius; as if it was written on account of his combat with him, and victory over him: but this clauſe is not in the Hebrew Bibles; nor could Theodoret find it in the Septuagint in the Hexapla in his time. The Syriac inſcription is ſtill more foreign to the purpoſe, "a pſalm of David, when he ſlew Aſaph the "brother of Goliath." R. Saadiah Gaon interprets this pſalm of the times of the Meſſiah; and there are ſeveral things in it which are applicable to him.

℣. 1. Bleſſed be the Lord my ſtrength, &c.] The author and giver of his natural ſtrength of body, and of the fortitude of his mind, and of all the ſpiritual ſtrength he had, to exerciſe grace, to bear up under afflictions and trials, to perform duty, and withſtand enemies. It may be applied to Chriſt, the antitype of David, the man of God's right hand, he has made ſtrong for himſelf. It may be rendered, my rock [c]; to whom the pſalmiſt fled for ſhelter, when in diſtreſs and overwhelmed; and on whom he built his faith, and hope of eternal ſalvation, as well as depended on him for all ſupplies of grace and ſtrength, and for help and ſuccour in all times of need. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions render it, my God; and ſo the word rock is uſed for God, Deut. xxxii. 30, 31. Which teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight; he took him from being a ſhepherd, and made him a ſoldier; and from being the leader of a flock of ſheep, to be a general of armies; and all his military ſkill in marſhalling of troops, in leading them on to battle, and bringing them off, as well as all his courage and ſucceſs, were from the Lord: he whoſe hands and fingers had been uſed to the ſhepherd's crook, and to the handling of the harp and lyre, were taught how to handle the ſword, the bow, the ſhield and ſpear. God is a man of war himſelf; and he teaches the art of war, as he does huſbandry and other things; ſee Exod. xv. 3. Pſal. xviii. 34 and ſo the Lord furniſhes his people, who are here in a militant ſtate, with ſpiritual armour, to fight againſt their ſpiritual enemies; he teaches them how to put it on, and directs them how to make uſe of every piece of it; as well as gives them boldneſs to face their enemies, and victory over them.

℣. 2. My goodneſs, &c.] Not only good, but goodneſs itſelf; the donor of all the bleſſings of goodneſs to him; the author of all goodneſs in him; the provider of all goodneſs for him, laid up to be uſed hereafter. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, my mercy, properly enough; that is, the God of my mercy, as in Pſal. lix. 10, 17. who is all mercy, full of mercy, rich and plenteous in it; which is abundant, and from everlaſting to everlaſting. Or, my grace [d]; the God of all grace, the giver of every grace, and who is able to make all grace to abound; and from whom every bleſſing of grace, and every particular grace, as faith, hope and love, and all the ſupplies of grace, as well as every good and perfect gift, come: Chriſt is prevented with all the bleſſings of goodneſs; in him all fulneſs of grace dwells, and with him God keeps his mercy for evermore. And my fortreſs; garriſon or ſtrong-hold: what fortreſſes or fortifications are to cities, whether natural or artificial, that is God to his people; all his perfections are on their ſide; and particularly they are kept by his power, as in a garriſon, through faith unto ſalvation, 1 Pet. i. 5. My high tower; the name of the Lord, which is himſelf, is a ſtrong tower, where his righteous ones that flee to him are ſafe; and is an high one, where they are out of the reach of all their enemies, Prov. xviii. 10. And my deliverer; that delivered him from his temporal enemies; and from his ſpiritual ones, from ſin, Satan, and the world; from all afflictions and temptations, from wrath and ruin, death and hell. My ſhield; that protected him from all evil and danger; whoſe favour encompaſſed him as a ſhield; whoſe ſalvation was a ſhield to him; and more particularly the perſon, blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice of his Son, called the ſhield of faith, Eph. vi. 16. And he in whom I truſt; not in men, no not in princes; but in the Lord only; in his Word, as the Targum; for things temporal and ſpiritual; for the bleſſings of grace here, and glory hereafter; of theſe ſeveral titles, ſee more on Pſal. xviii. 2. Who ſubdueth my people under me; the people of Iſrael, all the tribes; whoſe hearts the Lord inclined to make him king over them all, 2 Sam. v. 1—3. Or, the people[f]; ſo the Targum, Syriac and Arabic verſions; the heathen people, the Philiſtines, Ammonites, Edomites, Moabites and Syrians; ſee 2 Sam. viii. Pſal. xviii. 47. The former reading ſeems beſt, and is followed by the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and other verſions: and this may be typical of the ſubduing of Chriſt's people under him; who are made willing, in the day of his power, to receive and own him as their King; profeſs ſubjection to his goſpel, and ſubmit to his ordinances.

℣. 3. Lord, what is man, that thou takeſt knowledge of him? &c.] Man that is at moſt and beſt but a creature, made of the duſt of the earth, is but duſt and aſhes; yea, a ſinful creature, that drinks up iniquity like water: and yet the Lord not only knows him, as he is the omniſcient God, but takes notice of him in a way of providence, and in a way of grace. His choſen people are no other nor better than others, of the ſame original, and of the ſame character; and yet he owns and acknowledges them as his peculiar people, and makes himſelf known unto them: and ſo it is rendered by the Septuagint verſion, that thou ſhouldſt be known unto him? or, appear to him? as the Arabic; reveal thyſelf to him, not only by the light of nature and works of creation, but in Chriſt, and by the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him. Or the ſon of man, that thou makeſt account of him? as the Lord does, eſpecially of ſome of the ſons of men; whom he reckons as his portion and inheritance, his jewels and peculiar treaſure, and who are as dear to him as the apple of his eye; whom he magnifies, as in Job vii. 17. makes them kings and prieſts; raiſes them from the dunghil, and ſets them among princes, to inherit the throne of glory; on whom he ſets his heart, and loves them with an everlaſting love: or, that thou ſhouldſt think of him[g]? thoughts of peace, and not of evil; ſo as to provide a Saviour for men, and ſend down the Spirit of his Son into their hearts to quicken them; ſo as to bleſs them with all ſpiritual bleſſings, and at laſt to glorify them. David no doubt had a ſpecial reſpect to himſelf; and wondered at the goodneſs of God to him, in taking him from a family of little or no account, from a mean employ, from a ſhepherd's cottage, and raiſing him to the throne of Iſrael; and eſpecially in making him a partaker of grace, and an heir of glory; ſee Pſal. viii. 4. which is applied to Chriſt, Heb. ii. 6, 7, 8, 9.

℣. 4. Man is like to vanity, &c.] Is vanity itſelf, in every age, ſtate and condition; yea, in his beſt eſtate, Pſal. xxxix. 5. or, to the breath[h] of the mouth, as Kimchi; which is gone as ſoon as ſeen almoſt: or, to a vapour[i]; to which the life of man is compared, James iv. 14. His days are as a ſhadow that paſſeth away; as the former denotes the frailty and mortality of man, this the ſhortneſs of his duration; his days fleeing away, and of no more continuance than the ſhadow caſt by the ſun, which preſently declines and is gone.

℣. 5. Bow thy heavens, O Lord, and come down, &c.] The heavens which the Lord has made, and where he dwells; and which are under his influence, and he can cauſe to incline or bow at his pleaſure: and which literally may be ſaid to bow, particularly the airy heavens; when theſe are filled with clouds heavy with rain, and hang low, ready to fall upon the earth, and being rent, let down ſhowers on it: and myſtically may deſign ſtorms of wrath gathering over the heads of ungodly men, and revealed from heaven againſt them. Or rather, as connected with the phraſe, and come down, denotes ſome appearance or manifeſtation of God; either for the help and aſſiſtance of his people; or in a way of vengeance againſt their enemies; or both: and which deſcent muſt be underſtood in conſiſtence with the omnipreſence of God; and ſuppoſes his habitation to be on high, and is expreſſive of regard to the perſons and affairs of men on earth; and is by ſome conſidered as a prayer for the incarnation of Chriſt, which is ſometimes ſignified by coming down from heaven; not by change of place, nor by bringing an human nature, ſoul or body, down with him from heaven; but by the aſſumption of our nature; and which was greatly wiſhed, prayed and longed for, by the Old-Teſtament-ſaints. The Targum is, "O Lord, bow the "heavens, and manifeſt thyſelf;" ſee Pſal. xviii 9. Iſa. lxiv. 1. Touch the mountains, and they ſhall ſmoke; as mount Sinai did when the Lord deſcended on it, Exod. xix. 18. ſee Pſal. cii. 32. Theſe, according to Kimchi, ſignify mighty kings, ſtrong as mountains: ſo kingdoms are ſometimes called; as the Babylonian empire is called a mountain, a deſtroying and burnt mountain, Zech. iv. 7. Jer. li. 25. Such kings and kingdoms roſe up like mountains againſt Chriſt, when here incarnate; and againſt his goſpel, and the miniſtry of it by his apoſtles; as the kingdom and nation of the Jews, and the whole pagan empire: but theſe, by a touch of his almighty power, have vaniſhed into ſmoke, Pſal. ii. 1, 2. Rev. viii. 8.

℣. 6. Caſt forth lightning, and ſcatter them, &c.] The mountains, the kings and kingdoms of the earth; the enemies of David, and of Chriſt, and of his people; particularly the Jews, who have been ſcattered all over the earth by the judgments of God upon them; caſt forth like lightning, which is ſwift, piercing, penetrating and deſtructive. Shoot out thine arrows, and deſtroy them; or, trouble them[k], as the Targum, Septuagint and Arabic verſions, nearer to the Hebrew: theſe alſo deſign the ſore judgments of God, the arrows of famine, peſtilence and ſword; which fly ſwiftly, pierce deeply, cut ſharply, and, like fiery darts, give great pain and trouble. So Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret them of the decrees which come down from heaven, as Aben Ezra does the preceding verſe: by lightning, Arama underſtands the flame of fire which comes out with thunder; and by arrows, the thunderbolt, which he calls a ſtone hardened in the air like iron.

℣. 7. Send thine hand from above, &c.] From the high heavens, as the Targum; that is, exert and diſplay thy power in my deliverance, and in the deſtruction of my enemies; as follows: Rid me, and deliver deliver me out of great waters; out of great afflictions, which, for quantity and quality, are like many waters, overflowing and overwhelming; ſee Iſaiah xliii. 2. or out of the hands of enemies, many, mighty and ſtrong, whom he compares to waters; as Aben Ezra, Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve: and ſo the Targum, "deliver me from the multitudes "or armies, that are like to many waters;" ſee Rev. xvii. 1, 15. Iſa. viii. 7, 8. Jer. li. 42. It may be applied to the ſorrows and ſufferings of Chriſt, the antitype of David, with which he was overwhelmed; to the billows of divine wrath which went over him; to the floods of ungodly men that encompaſſed him; and to the whole poſſe of devils, Satan, and his principalities and powers, that attacked him; ſee Pſal. xviii. 4. and lxix. 1, 2. From the hand of ſtrange children; which explains what is meant by great waters: wicked men chiefly; either Gentiles, the children of a people of a ſtrange nation, and of a ſtrange language, and of ſtrange ſentiments of religion, and that worſhip a ſtrange god: ſuch as the Edomites, Moabites, Philiſtines, &c. who were aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe: or elſe the Iſraelites, who were degenerated from their anceſtors, ſuch of David's ſubjects that rebelled againſt him; ſo the Ziphim are called ſtrangers that roſe up againſt him, Pſal. liv. 3. and ſuch were the enemies of Chriſt, both the Romans, who were heathens and aliens; and the people of the Jews, his own countrymen, who were a generation of vipers; ſee Acts iv. 27, 28. Matt. xxiii. 33. ſuch as Juvenal calls [l] filii morum, who inherited the vices of their fathers.

℣. 8. Whoſe mouth ſpeaketh vanity, &c.] Vain words, lies, flatteries and deceit, Pſal. xii. 2. when they ſpeak loftily of themſelves, and contemptuouſly of others; when they deliver out threatenings againſt ſome, and make fair promiſes to others; it is all vanity, and comes to nothing. And their right hand is a right hand of falſhood; their ſtrength and power to perform what they boaſt of, threaten or promiſe, is fallacious, is mere weakneſs, and cannot effect any thing; or their treaties, contracts and covenants, they enter into and ſign with their right hand, are not kept by them; they act the treacherous and deceitful part. The Latin interpreter of the Arabic verſion renders it, their oath is an oath of iniquity; and Ben Balaam in Aben Ezra, and R. Adnim in Ben Melech, ſay, the word ſo ſignifies in the Arabic language; and Schultens [m] has obſerved the ſame: but the word in that language, ſignifies the right hand as well as an oath, and need not be reſtrained to that; it is better to take it in the large ſenſe as Cocceius [n] does; whether they lifted up the hand to pray, or to ſwear; or gave it to covenant with, to make contracts and agreements; or ſtretched it out to work with; it was a right hand of falſhood.

℣. 9. I will ſing a new ſong unto thee, O God, &c.] The author of his being, the father of mercies temporal and ſpiritual, and therefore to him praiſe is always due; a new ſong of praiſe is to be ſung for new mercies; and as theſe are new every morning, and are renewed day by day, new ſongs ſhould be ſung continually: or this is a ſong ſuited to New-Teſtament-times, in which all things are become new; there is a new covenant of grace; and a new and living way to the throne of grace; a new-ſlain ſacrifice; redemption newly wrought out, and therefore the new ſong of redeeming grace muſt be ſung. Arama ſuggeſts, that this refers to the days of the Meſſiah. Upon a pſaltery, and an inſtrument of ten ſtrings, will I ſing praiſes unto thee; ſuch inſtruments of muſic were uſed in the Old-Teſtament-diſpenſation, and were typical of the hearts of God's people; which are the harps they now ſtrike upon, and where they make melody to the Lord; ſee Pſal. xxxiii. 2. and xcii. 3.

℣. 10. It is he that giveth ſalvation to kings, &c] Which is the reaſon of ſinging the new ſong to the Lord, or this is the matter of it. The Lord is the preſerver of men and beaſts, the Saviour of all men, and eſpecially of them that believe; who are in a ſpiritual ſenſe kings and prieſts unto God; and in a temporal ſenſe, he ſaves high and low, rich and poor: but there is a particular providence reſpecting kings; who, as they are the powers ordained of God, and are his vicegerents on earth, and repreſent him, ſo they are preſerved by him; were they not, there would ſoon be an end to all public order and government: they cannot ſave themſelves; nor are they ſaved by their life-guards about them; nor is any king ſaved by the multitude of his hoſt, but by the Lord, Pſal. xxxiii. 16. Or, he that giveth victory to kings; over their enemies; which is not obtained by the ſtrength and force of their armies, and by their military ſkill and valour; but by the right hand and arm of the Lord: and therefore, whenever this is the caſe, a new ſong ſhould be ſung to him; ſee Pſal. xcviii. 1, 2. David no doubt has regard to himſelf, and to the many ſalvations God had wrought for him, and the victories he had given him; as alſo to the King Meſſiah, whom God heard and helped, as man and Mediator, in the day of ſalvation, and gave it to him, and in which he rejoiced, Iſa. xlix. 8. Pſal. xxi. 1. Who delivereth David his ſervant from the hurtful ſword; David literally, the ſervant of the Lord by creation, redemption and grace, as well as by his office, as king of Iſrael; him the Lord delivered from the ſword of Goliath, as the Targum; from the ſword of Saul, as Jarchi and Kimchi; and from the ſword of ſtrange children, as Arama; of all his enemies he had been or was engaged with in war: and David myſtically, Chriſt the ſon of David, God's righteous ſervant, he choſe, called, upheld; and in whom he was glorified, by doing his work diligently, faithfully and completely; him he delivered from the ſword of juſtice, when he had ſatisfied it; and from wicked men, like a ſword; and from all his enemies, and death itſelf, when he raiſed him from the dead, and gave him glory; ſee Pſal. xxii. 20. and xvii. 13. Zech. xiii. 7. Iſa. liii. 8. Aben Ezra thinks there is a defect of the copulative and; and that it ſhould be read, from the ſword and evil, every evil perſon or thing; and obſerves, that ſome take it for an adjective, and underſtand it of an evil camp or company.

℣. 11. Rid me, and deliver me from the hand of ſtrange children, &c.] This is repeated from ℣. 7, 8. and is done to ſhew the vehemency and importunity of the requeſt, and the danger David was in, and his ſenſe of it.

℣. 12. That our ſons may be as plants grown up in their youth, &c.] The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, Syriac and Arabic verſions read whoſe ſons are as plants, &c. as if this and what follows were a deſcription of the families, eſtates, ſubſtance, and outward happineſs of wicked men, the enemies of David, the ſtrange children he deſired to be delivered from, agreeable to Job xxi. 7—13. Pſalm lxxiii. 4, 5, 7, 12. and if the word ſaying, or who ſay, be ſupplied, as by ſome [o], and connected with that our ſons are, &c. they may expreſs the vain boaſtings of theſe men, and explain what is meant by the vanity their mouth ſpake; as well as furniſh out another reaſon for the repetition of the above requeſts, namely, for the ſake of introducing thoſe vain boaſts to which the happineſs of good men is oppoſed, who have an intereſt in God as their God, ỷ. 15. but we with other verſions take them to be a petition of the pſalmiſt; that as he would deliver him perſonally out of the hands of his enemies, ſo he would bleſs his ſubjects with all proſperity and happineſs in their families and eſtates; like a good prince concerned for the real welfare of his people, and wiſhes that their ſons might be as plants, young, tender, well nurſed, and taken care of, that were healthful, thriving, flouriſhing, and promiſing much fruit; ſo they might be of healthful conſtitutions, well educated in all uſeful knowledge, natural and religious, and grow both in wiſdom and ſtature, and appear to be of promiſing parts for uſefulneſs in the church and ſtate; and eſpecially that they might be the plants of the Lord, pleaſant ones to him and profitable to others; be planted in Chriſt, and in his houſe, and grow in grace and in the knowledge of him, and grow up to him their head in all things. The Targum is, "that our ſons may be as plants of the dactyles "(or palm-trees, Pſal. xcii. 12.) nouriſhed up in "the doctrine of the law from their youth;" ſee Pſal. cxxviii. 3. That our daughters may be as corner-ſtones, poliſhed after the ſimilitude of a palace; or temple; tall, beautiful, and in good proportion; children have their name in Hebrew from a word which ſignifies to build[p], becauſe by them families are built up, Ruth iv. 11. and by marriage, divers families are connected together, ſo that they are as corner-ſtones to them; thus Plautus[q] ſpeaks of children as a building, and parents as the fabricators of them; laying the foundation of them, raiſing them up and poliſhing them, and ſparing no coſt to make them uſeful to the commonwealth: or as corner pillars[r], which ſupport the houſe and continue in it; ſo they guide the houſe, take care of the affairs of it, and be keepers at home, 1 Tim. v. 14. Tit. ii. 5. and like ſuch as are in temples or in kings palaces, finely graved and beautifully poliſhed, be adorned with grace and good works, particularly with modeſty, meekneſs, and humility, 1 Tim. ii. 9, 10. 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4. and grow up into an holy temple in the Lord, being parts of the ſpiritual building, and being laid on the foundation, of which Jeſus Chriſt is the corner-ſtone. The Targum is, "our daughters ſplendid and fit for the "prieſts that miniſter in the midſt of the temple." The Syriac verſion, "their daughters as ſpouſes "adorned like temples."

ỷ. 13. That our garners may be full, affording all manner of ſtore, &c.] Or our corners[s], the corners of their houſes, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi; the nooks that were in them might be full of proviſions for the ſupply of the family; or that their barns and granaries might be full of all kind of corn, as wheat, rye, barley, &c. which might be ſufficient from year to year, as the Targum; plenty of all food is intended, in oppoſition to a ſcarcity, dearth and famine, Prov. iii. 9, 10. Joel i. 17. that ſo there might be enough for increaſing families. Spiritually it may deſign that large proviſion of grace in the churches of Chriſt, and the fulneſs of the bleſſings of the goſpel the miniſters of it come forth with, bringing out of their treaſure things new and old, in the miniſtration of the word and adminiſtration of ordinances. That our ſheep may bring forth thouſands and ten thouſands in our ſtreets; or millions; in which lay the riches of men formerly, and indeed in our nation now, where wool is the ſtaple commodity of it; and theſe are creatures that breed and increaſe much; when they ſtand well a few ſoon become a thouſand, and theſe thouſands produce ten thouſands, or millions more. The Hebrew word צאן ſheep, ſeems to be derived from the Arabic word tzana, which ſignifies to be fruitful, whether in men or beaſts: tzana: fœcunda fuit, & multos liberos habuit mulier—idem ſignificat, & multa habuit pecora, Golius, col. 1428. and tho' for the moſt part they bring but one at a time, yet Ariſtotle[t] ſays, ſometimes two, three, and four; and in India, Ælianus[u] ſays, they bring four, and never leſs than three. It is a beautiful ſight to ſee them driven in ſuch numbers through the ſtreets of cities to markets, or to paſture. Or rather, this may deſign the country-towns and villages, where large flocks of them are kept. The people of God reſemble theſe in their meekneſs, harmleſſneſs, innocence, and other things; and who not only increaſe in grace and gifts, and ſpiritual knowledge, and in all goodneſs, which is deſirable, but alſo in numbers, as they did in the firſt times of the goſpel, and will in the laſt, when they ſhall be increaſed as a flock; the fulneſs of the Gentiles, the other ſheep, ſhall be brought in, and the nation of the Jews called at once.

ỷ. 14. That our oxen may be ſtrong to labour, &c.] To draw carriages, to plow with, and to tread out the corn: or may be burdened[w]; fit to carry burdens; or burdened with fleſh, be plump and fat, and in good condition to work; or burdened with young, as ſome[x] underſtand it, and then it muſt be meant of cows, as the word is uſed Deut. vii. 13. and ſo here an increaſe of kine is wiſhed for, as of ſheep before. Miniſters of the word are compared to oxen for their patience in ſuffering, and their laborIouſneſs in working, 1 Cor. ix. 9, 10. 1 Tim. v. 17. and happy is it for the churches of Chriſt when their miniſters are laborious ones, are ſtrong to labour, and do labour in the word and doctrine; ſtand faſt in the faith, and quit themſelves like men, and are ſtrong. That there be no breaking-in; of the enemy into the land to invade it, into cities and houſes to plunder and ſpoil them. Nor going out; of the city to meet the enemy and fight with him, peace and not war is deſirable; or no going out of one's nation into captivity into a foreign country, as Kimchi; or no breaking in to folds and herds, and leading out and driving away cattle, to the loſs of the owners thereof. Some[y] underſtand both theſe of abortion, of any violent rupture of the womb, and an immature birth. That there be no complaining in our ſtreets; on account of famine, peſtilence, the ſword, violence and oppreſſion; or no crying[z], no mournful cry or howling and ſhriking on account of the enemy being at hand, and juſt ready to enter in, or being there, killing, plundering and ſpoiling.

℣. 15. Happy is that people that is in ſuch a caſe, &c.] Whoſe families are in good order and behave well; who enjoy plenty of all good things; whoſe flocks and herds increaſe, and who live in peace and proſperity; theſe are temporal bleſſings highly valuable, and for which thoſe who have them ſhould be thankful, as being happy in compariſon of others that are deſtitute of them, Deut. xxviii. 3—6. and eſpecially who beſides theſe are bleſſed with ſpiritual bleſſings, ſignified by them, and of which theſe were typical. Yea, happy is that people, whoſe God is the Lord; whoſe God the Lord is, not only by creation, and as he is a common benefactor and preſerver, but as their God in covenant, their covenant-God and Father in Chriſt; whom he has loved, choſen, redeemed, adopted, juſtified, pardoned, regenerated and ſanctified; all which appears to them in effectual vocation, is manifeſted by the application of covenant-grace to them, and is witneſſed to their ſpirits by the Spirit of God, and which their faith claims an intereſt in: and theſe are happy, thrice happy perſons; for all that God has are theirs; all his perfections are on their ſide and for their good; he is their portion, ſhield, reward, and their all in all; his covenant, its bleſſings and promiſes are all theirs; they have enough, having all things, and can want no good thing; nor need they fear any enemy; the Lord takes care of them, ſets a guard about them, reſents all injuries done them, prevents the deſigns of their enemies, makes all things work together for their good, provides all things neceſſary for them for time and eternity, and will be their God and guide even unto death; covenant-intereſt always continues, and therefore ſuch muſt be ever happy.

PSALM CXLV.

David's pſalm of praiſe.

THIS pſalm is rendered by Ainſworth, An hymn of David; and the whole book of pſalms is from hence called the book of hymns; ſee Eph. v. 19. It ſeems to have been a pſalm David took great delight in, and it may be that he often repeated and ſung it, as it was made by him with great care and contrivance, in a very curious manner, as well as he was aſſiſted in it by divine inſpiration; for it is wrote in an alphabetical order, each verſe beginning with the letter of the alphabet in courſe, and goes through the whole, excepting one letter; and very probably it was compoſed in this form that it might be the more eaſily committed to memory, and retained in it. The Jews have a very high opinion of it; their Rabbins ſay, that whoever ſays this pſalm thrice every day may be ſure of being a child of the world to come. This is mentioned by Arama and Kimchi; and which the latter explains thus, not he that ſays it any way, but with his mouth, and with his heart, and with his tongue. It ſeems to have been written by David after the Lord had granted him all his requeſts put up in the preceding pſalms, and had given him reſt from all his enemies; and when he turned his prayers into praiſes; for this pſalm is wholly praiſe from one end to the other; and ſo are all the five following ones; they begin and end with hallelujah; nor is there a ſingle petition in them, as I remember; ſo that it may in ſome ſenſe be ſaid, here the prayers of David the ſon of Jeſſe are ended. It no doubt, as Cocceius obſerves, belongs to the Meſſiah and his kingdom, which is everlaſting, ℣. 13.

℣. 1. I will extol thee, my God, O King, &c.] Or the King[a], the king Meſſiah, who is by way of eminency called the King, as in Pſalm xxi. 1. and xlv. 1. This is the foundation of this whole pſalm, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and ſhews who is intended and who is the ſubject of it that is ſpoken of thro'out, even the Meſſiah, who is the King of the world, the King of the kings of it, the King of Zion, of his church and people, the King of ſaints, of all believers in him, by the appointment of God, by the conqueſt of his grace, over whom he reigns by his Spirit and grace; for this his kingdom is ſpiritual, is in righteouſneſs, and everlaſting: and this great King is not a creature, but God, the mighty God, David's Lord and God, and the Lord and God of every ſaint; whom David loved as ſuch, believed in, looked unto for ſalvation; from whom he received grace and expected glory, and knew and claimed his intereſt in him, which is the great privilege of believers in him; ſee John xx. 28. and therefore they, as David, will extol him above all created beings, he being God over all; extol him above all men, even the beſt and greateſt, Moſes, Joſhua, Aaron, Abraham, or any other, who are his creatures, his children, and his ſubjects; and even as man he is to be extolled above all men; being choſen out from among the people, fairer than the children of men, and the chiefeſt among ten thouſand; and above the angels, having a more excellent name and nature than they; they being his creatures and ſervants, and he their creator and the object of their worſhip: Chriſt is extolled by his people when they aſcribe deity to him, magnify him in his offices, and make uſe of him in them all; attribute their whole ſalvation to him, think and ſpeak highly of him, and declare him extolled and exalted at the right hand of God as he now is, and as the Old Teſtament-ſaints, as David and others, had a foreſight of and rejoiced in, Pſal. cx. 1. Iſa. lii. 13. the Septuagint, Syriac, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions have it, my King; ſee Zech. ix. 9. And I will bleſs thy name for ever and ever; by pronouncing him the ſon of the bleſſed, God over all bleſſed for ever; and by aſcribing bleſſing, honour, glory and power unto him; by adoring and celebrating the perfections of his nature, which are his name, by which he is known; by expreſſing a high value and eſteem for every precious name of his, as Immanuel, God with us; Jeſus, a Saviour, &c. and a regard to his everlaſting goſpel, which is his name, bore by his miniſtring ſervants throughout the world; ſee Pſal. viii. 1. Acts ix. 15.

℣. 2. Every day will I bleſs thee, &c.] For new mercies had every morning; for freſh ſupplies of grace every day, which all come from the fulneſs of Chriſt, to whom all grace is given, and from whence it is received, and in whom all ſpiritual bleſſings are, and by whom they are beſtowed. And I will praiſe thy name for ever and ever; as long as he lived in this world, and to all eternity in the world to come. David underſtood the doctrine of the ſaints perſeverance, and knew he ſhould not be an apoſtate and blaſphemer of the name of Chriſt, but a praiſer of it as long as he had a being; and that his principal ſervice, and that of all the ſaints in the other world, will be praiſe; not praying, nor preaching, nor hearing the word, and attendance on other ordinances, which will be no more, but adoring and magnifying the riches of divine grace, Pſal. civ. 34. and cxlvi. 2.

ỳ. 3. Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed, &c.] Chriſt is the great God as well as our Saviour; great in all the perfections of his nature, of great wiſdom, power, faithfulneſs, holineſs, grace and goodneſs; great in his perſon as God-man, God manifeſt in the fleſh; great in all his offices and relations he bears and ſtands in to his people; and great in all his works of creation, providence, and redemption, in which he is concerned; and upon all which accounts he is to be praiſed, and greatly to be praiſed by his people, even to the utmoſt of their capacities, here and hereafter; ſee Pſal. xlviii. 1. And his greatneſs is unſearchable; the greatneſs of his nature, and the perfections of it, theſe are paſt finding out; and ſo are his ways and works, and the riches of his grace, John xi. 7. and v. 9. Eph. iii. 8. The Targum is, "and of "his greatneſs there is no end." So the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions.

ỳ. 4. One generation ſhall praiſe thy works to another, &c.] The works of providence done in one age ſhall be told by the father to the ſon with praiſe to the great performer of them, and ſo be tranſmitted to the lateſt poſterity; for in every age there are new and ſtrange things done in providence, the memory of which is not loſt, but they are recorded for the glory of God and the uſe of men; and the works of grace and ſalvation wrought by Chriſt, ſhould be, have been, and will be told from age to age; and publiſhed in every age by his faithful miniſtring ſervants to the glory of his grace, and the praiſe of his great name; ſee Pſal. xxii. 30, 31. and cii. 12, 18. And ſhall declare thy mighty acts; his mighty acts of nature, in creating all things out of nothing, and upholding all things by the word of his power; his mighty acts of grace, in redeeming his people out of the hands of him that is ſtronger than they; and from all their ſins, and from the curſe and condemnation of the law, and wrath to come; and the victories which he has obtained over ſin, Satan, the world and death: or thy powers[b]; the powers of the world to come, Heb. vi. 5. the miracles wrought by Chriſt on earth, and by his diſciples in goſpel-times, ſometimes called mighty works; as the raiſing of the dead, &c. Matt. xi. 5, 20, 21.

ỳ. 5. I will ſpeak of the glorious honour of thy majeſty, &c.] Of the majeſty of the divine perſon of Chriſt; of the honour due unto him; of the glory of him as of the only begotten of the Father, as he is the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; of his glory as Mediator, and the honour that belongs to him as ſuch, with which he is now crowned at the right hand of the majeſty on high, angels, authorities, and powers, being ſubject unto him as the Lord and King of glory. And of thy wondrous works; in becoming incarnate, in dying for the ſins of his people, in riſing from the dead the third day, in aſcending to heaven and receiving gifts for men; in pouring down the Spirit on them, in governing his church throughout all ages of the world, and judging the world at laſt.

ỳ. 6. And men ſhall ſpeak of the might of thy terrible acts, &c.] The terrible things of Chriſt, which his right hand has taught him, and his mighty power has performed; ſuch as the deſtruction of a diſobedient and ungodly world by a flood, to whom he preached by his Spirit in the days of Noah; the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah by raining on them fire and brimſtone from the Lord out of heaven; and the dreadful things he did in Egypt and at the Red-ſea by the hands of Moſes; theſe, men or ſaints of the former diſpenſation, in, before, and after the times of David, could ſpeak of: there are others done by him on the croſs, as the bruiſing the ſerpent's head, deſtroying his works, and him himſelf with his principalities and powers; and at the time of his ſufferings, when the ſun was darkened at noon-day, the earth quaked, the rocks were ſplit, the vail of the temple rent in twain, and graves opened, which threw the centurion and his ſoldiers into a panic that watched Jeſus on the croſs; and at his reſurrection, when was a great earthquake alſo, and angels appeared, which made the keepers ſhake and tremble; and in a few years followed the terrible deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, city and temple, for the rejection of the Meſſiah; as alſo of Rome pagan in a few ages after that; which are things beſides the others that men under the goſpel-diſpenſation can ſpeak of: and there are others yet to be done, terrible to the kings of the earth, as the deſtruction of Antichriſt and all the antichriſtian ſtates, the burning of Rome, the fall of the tenth part of the great city, or Romiſh juriſdiction, and alſo of the cities of the nations by an earthquake, and the downfal of all kingdoms and ſtates to make way for the everlaſting kingdom of Chriſt. Now the power of Chriſt, as the mighty God, is ſeen in all theſe things, which ſhew his eternal power and godhead, and that with him is terrible majeſty; and theſe are to be ſpoken of by good men to the terror of the wicked, and to command a proper awe and reverence of Chriſt in the minds of others. And I will declare thy greatneſs; the greatneſs of his perſon, offices, and grace, as well as he could, being unſearchable, ỳ. 3. ſee the note there.

ỳ. 7. They ſhall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodneſs, &c.] Not only his eſſential goodneſs, or the perfections of his nature; nor his providential goodneſs only; but his ſpecial grace and goodneſs to his own people in becoming their ſurety, in aſſuming their nature, in laying down his life for them, in working out their ſalvation, in paying their debts, and providing for them food and raiment, and all things pertaining to life and godlineſs: which goodneſs is great, inexpreſſibly great and paſſing knowledge; if we conſider the ſpring of it, his good-will and free favour, and not the works and merits of men; the multitude of perſons it reaches to, all the elect of God, a number which no man can number, out of every people and nation; and the many benefits beſtowed on them through it, all the bleſſings of goodneſs he himſelf is prevented with, even all ſpiritual bleſſings that are in him. Now this will be remembered by the ſaints, and not forgotten; in the memory of which they are aſſiſted by the Spirit of God, who brings this goodneſs to their remembrance; and under the goſpel-diſpenſation an ordinance is appointed to refreſh the memory of the ſaints with it; and with ſuch helps they are enabled at times abundantly to utter it, or to ſpeak of it in a very free and flowing manner; it comes from them like water from a flowing fountain, as the word [c] ſignifies; out of the abundance of their hearts, and the great ſenſe they have of his goodneſs, their mouth ſpeaketh. And ſhall ſing of thy righteouſneſs; his eſſential righteouſneſs as God, the ſame with his divine Father's; his righteouſneſs as Mediator, or his righteous and faithful performance of his office, as ſuch; and his juſtifying righteouſneſs, which he undertook to work out and bring in: and thoſe that know it, and have an intereſt in it, have great reaſon to ſing, becauſe it is commenſurate to the demands of law and juſtice; and ſo large a robe of righteouſneſs as to enwrap and cover all their perſons, and juſtify them from all things; and becauſe it is ſo beautiful, rich and glorious, and makes them appear ſo; and becauſe it is ſo well pleaſing to God, and ſo comfortable and beneficial to them; ſecuring them from wrath, and entitling them to eternal life. Aben Ezra adds the word ſaying, as if what follows was the ſubject-matter of the ſong.

℣. 8. The Lord is gracious, &c.] Theſe are the epithets of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and may be truly and with great propriety ſaid of him; he is gracious, kind and good, in the inſtances before mentioned; he is full of grace, and readily diſtributes it; his words are words of grace; his goſpel, and the doctrines of it, are doctrines of grace; his works are works of grace, all flowing from his wondrous grace and mercy. And full of compaſſion; or merciful [d], in the moſt tender manner; hence he came into the world to ſave ſinners, and in his pity redeemed them; and when on earth ſhewed his compaſſion both to the bodies and ſouls of men, by healing the one and inſtructing the other; and particularly had compaſſion on the ignorant, and them that were out of the way; pitying thoſe that were as ſheep without a ſhepherd, as the blind Jews under their blind guides were; and is very compaſſionate to his people under all their temptations, afflictions, trials and exerciſes; ſee Heb. ii. 17, 18. and iv. 15. and v. 2. Matt. v. 36, 37. Mark v. 19. Iſa. lxiii. 9. Slow to anger; to the wicked Jews, though often provoked by their calumnies and reproaches, and by their ill behaviour to him in various inſtances; yet we never read but once of his being angry, and that was through grief at the hardneſs of their hearts, Mark iii. 5. and likewiſe to his own diſciples, who were often froward and perverſe, and of bad ſpirits, very troubleſome and afflictive to him, yet he patiently bore with them. And of great mercy; a merciful high-prieſt, typified by the mercy-ſeat, where we may find grace and mercy at all times; through whom God is merciful to ſinners, and to whoſe mercy we are to look for eternal life.

℣. 9. The Lord is good to all, &c.] Which is to be underſtood not of the general and providential goodneſs of God to all men, to all his creatures, and the works of his hands; but of the ſpecial goodneſs of Chriſt before mentioned, ℣. 7. which extends to all the choſen people of God; who are all loved by Chriſt, redeemed by him, juſtified and glorified by him; and to Gentiles as well as Jews; for whom he taſted death, laid down his life a ranſom for them, and became the propitiation for their ſins. Hence his goſpel has been ſent to both; and ſome of each have been effectually called by his grace, and more will. This ſhews this pſalm belongs to goſpel-times, in which the grace of Chriſt appears more large and extenſive. And his tender mercies are over all his works; meaning not all the creatures his hands have made; though he has a tender regard to them, and is kind and merciful to them all; but ſuch as are made new creatures in him and by him, who are eminently called his workmanſhip, the work of his hands; theſe, all of them, ſhare in his ſpecial mercy and goodneſs; ſee Eph. ii. 10. Iſa. xxix. 23. and xlv. 11.

℣. 10. All thy works ſhall praiſe thee, O Lord, &c.] Not all his works or creatures in general; though theſe do objectively praiſe him, or are the cauſe rather of others praiſing him on their account: but thoſe who are in a ſpecial manner the works of his hands, of his powerful and efficacious grace; whom he has formed for himſelf, that they may ſhew forth his praiſe; ſuch as are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people: theſe in an eminent ſenſe, in the beſt way and manner, praiſe their bleſſed Saviour and Redeemer; ſee Iſa. xliii. 21. 1 Pet. ii. 9. And thy ſaints ſhall bleſs thee; which are mentioned laſt, not as diſtinct from the former; but as explanative of them, as well as of their work: theſe are they that are ſet apart by the Lord, on whom his favours are beſtowed; to whom Chriſt is made ſanctification, and who are ſanctified by his blood, and alſo by his Spirit; and being ſenſible of the bleſſings of grace they receive from him, riſe up and call him bleſſed, and aſcribe bleſſing, honour, glory, and praiſe to him, for ever and ever.

℣. 11. They ſhall ſpeak of the glory of thy kingdom, &c.] That is, the ſaints who are his ſpecial workmanſhip, in the celebration of his praiſe; and while they are bleſſing him, will take particular notice, and make particular mention of his kingdom, and the glory of it; not only his kingdom of nature and providence, which ruleth over all, angels and men, good and bad; which deſerves the notice of the ſaints, and is matter of great joy unto them, that their king reigns in the world: but alſo and rather, his kingdom of grace, in which he rules by his Spirit and grace in the hearts of his people; which is not worldly, but ſpiritual; is not with outward obſervation, but lies within the heart, and makes the Lord's people all-glorious within; conſiſting of peace, righteouſneſs, and joy in the holy Ghoſt, and is what can never be removed. The church is Chriſt's kingdom, in which he reigns; and all the ſubjects of it are kings and prieſts unto God: here proper laws are made and obſerved, and officers appointed to explain them, and ſee them put in execution; glorious ordinances are adminiſtered, in which Chriſt the King is ſeen in his beauty; and the glorious goſpel, which is his ſceptre, is held forth, and by which he rules in the midſt of his enemies. More eſpecially this may regard the glorious kingdom of Chriſt in the latter day; both in his ſpiritual reign, in which there will be a great diſplay of glory; as a large effuſion of the Spirit; much ſpiritual light and knowledge; great holineſs of heart and life; an abundance of peace, temporal and ſpiritual; great purity of goſpel-doctrine, worſhip and ordinances: and alſo in his perſonal reign; when he will appear glorious, and reign before his ancients gloriouſly, and his ſaints will appear with him in glory; the new Jeruſalem will have the glory of God upon her; a glory there will be then both upon the bodies and ſouls of the ſaints, Chriſt will have with him in that ſtate.

Ind talk of thy power; not only as exerted in creaon and providence; but of his power in working ut the ſalvation of men; and in conquering and ubduing all the ſpiritual enemies of his people, in, Satan, the world, and death; in raiſing himlf from the dead, as he will all his ſaints by the ame power at the laſt day; in going forth into the Gentile world in the miniſtry of the word, conquerng and to conquer, making it powerful and effecual to the converſion of thouſands: and alſo of is power in heaven and in earth, given him as Mediator; and which he has exerciſed, and does exerciſe on the behalf of his church, and for its protection and welfare: and eſpecially of the more open diſplay of it in the latter day, when he ſhall take to himſelf his great power and reign; then will his ſaints talk of it with great pleaſure and thankfulneſs; ſee Rev. xi. 15—17.

℣. 12. To make known to the ſons of men his mighty acts, &c.] As in ℣. 4. the acts of his power in providence and grace; in the ſalvation of his people, and the deſtruction of their enemies; which, with others, are made known in the miniſtry of the word, to thoſe who were ſtrangers to them, to thoſe without the church, who wait at wiſdom's gates, and at the poſts of her door; Aben Ezra interprets it of little ones, or children that knew them not, whoſe parents would make them known to them: rather it deſigns the common people, inſtructed by the word and the miniſters of it. And the glorious majeſty of his kingdom; the majeſty of him as King, and the glory of his kingdom, ℣. 5, 11. and the perpetuity of it, as follows.

℣. 13. Thy kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, &c.] So it is oppoſed to all other kingdoms and monarchies, which have had or will have an end; as the Babylonian, Perſian, Grecian and Roman; with all other ſtates which will be on the ſpot when this kingdom is ſet up in its glory, and will continue for ever, Dan. ii. 44. and the King of it is oppoſed to all other kings who die, and their kingdoms are no more to them; but he never dies, he lives for evermore; he is the living God, and ſo an everlaſting King: nor will his kingdom ceaſe at the end of the thouſand years, nor when delivered to the Father; only it ſhall be in a different place and form, and ſhall remain for ever; for his ſaints will reign for ever and ever, and he with them. Or it may be rendered, a kingdom of all worlds[e], or ages; Chriſt's kingdom reaching to all worlds; heaven, earth, and hell: or which, according to Arama, takes in the world above, below, and middle; and regards all times paſt, preſent, and to come. And thy dominion endureth throughout all generations; in this world, and that to come; there is no end of it, Iſa. ix. 7. Luke i. 32, 33.

This pſalm is written alphabetically, as is obſerved on the title of it; but the letter Nun is here wanting, the reaſon of which Kimchi profeſſes his ignorance of: but Jarchi gives a reaſon for it, ſuch a one as it is, which he has from the Talmud[f]; becauſe David, by a ſpirit of prophecy, foreſaw the grievous fall of the people of Iſrael, the prophecy of which begins with this letter, Amos v. 2. Nor is the order always ſtrictly obſerved in alphabetical pſalms; in Pſal. xxxvii. the letter Ain is wanting, and three in Pſal. xxv. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, ſupply this defect here, by inſerting theſe words, The Lord is faithful in all his words, and holy in all his works, as if they were begun with the word נאמן but they ſeem to be taken from ℣. 17. with a little alteration.
